WE WANT YOU to distribute circulars, samples, etc., in your locality for our syndicate of big advertisers. $3 to $5 per thousand. CASH PAID. No canvassing. Enclose stamp. DISTRIBUTING BUREAU, P.O. Box 1925, New York City.

charge a description of the annual feather gathering. The first year a bird is plucked he can be easily caught and thrown by one man. The feathers are then wrenched, bleeding, from his tortured body, after which the marabout and down are torn off. After one experience the birds can only be caught with the utmost difficulty, and it takes six or eight men to throw an old bird. 'It is very hard work plucking,' we are told, 'the feathers are bedded so tight in the flesh.' I asked if it would not do as well to clip off the feathers close, and was told that dealers will only buy those with the perfect quill. All the undressed feathers offered for sale on the farm had blood on the quills, and we were told that when the annual plucking takes place the shrieks of the birds can be heard to a great distance in the still desert air. If you can induce your lady readers to bar ostrich feathers, even if they indulge in a 'wing' manufactured from the discarded plumage of a well-fed chicken, you will indeed add another to the many good turns you have already done to the cause of humanity."

MARY F. LOVELL,
Supt. Dept. of Mercy.

Bryn Mawr, Pa.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

The action of the International Sunday-school Convention, September 2, 1893, at St. Louis, in regard to the quarterly temperance lessons, confirming the decision of the Pittsburg convention of 1890, and thus retaining these lessons, distinct and uncomplicated with other subjects, in the regular course of the International Sunday-school Lesson Series, crowns with success the labor of the years that lie behind us. It has been truly said: "Unquestionably this is the greatest victory that temperance has gained in the grand ranks of the Sunday-school army." It is estimated that 17,000,000 are reached through these Bible lessons.

It gives me great joy that our department work is thus established, since the ill-health of a sister beloved, who has been my inspiration and helper in all these sixteen years, and to whom it is my first duty and privilege to minister, makes it imperative that I give up the superintendency of this department.

It gives me equal joy that the faithful and efficient department secretary, Mrs. Julia A. Bidwell, is amply fitted, if the convention so appoint, to stand at the head of the department and direct its work. Mrs. Bidwell has also been superintendent of the state work in New York, and under her leadership that has been and is the "banner" state in this department. The hearts of the women can safely trust in her and should she be your leader I am confident that you will give her the same loyal support and help that has been given me.

The word of the Lord by His prophet, Haggai, has been our department motto during the past year: "Be strong, saith the Lord, and work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts." This promise has been graciously verified unto us and will continue to be, if we follow the injunction upon which it is conditioned.

. . . . . .

Since writing the above, which was printed for the convention, Mrs. Bidwell has been appointed by that body superintendent of this department. Her address is Deposit, New York. Workers will kindly address communications regarding the department to her and thus avoid delay. In behalf of this department which I have so loved and for which I have labored so long, may I urge every state to do its utmost to hold fast that which we have gained, and to secure the results possible with the vantage ground we now have. To this end an active, efficient state superintendent is absolutely necessary, and an equally active and efficient local superintendent in every union, both of which shall labor to secure the best results and report the same to state and National superintendents.

Statistics seem dry and dull, but they are the exponent of things accomplished, and this fact illumines them and makes them radiant with good cheer. However difficult to obtain, figures are eloquent to me because of what lies back of them. I desire to thank most heartily these state superintendents who have so tirelessly sought to bring their states to the figurative point and have succeeded, as all will who work steadily and patiently in securing the same in so large a degree.

The convention was held so much earlier this year it has been difficult to secure full statistics, but cheering reports have come from most of the states. Those desiring special mention for statistical reports and securing autograph pledge cards are, New York, Maine, Minnesota, Michigan, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Vermont, Texas, Connecticut, Virginia, California, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland and Utah Territory, which latter should have large credit for its fine statistical report.

Twenty states report three million six hundred and twenty-six thousand and seventy-five pages of temperance literature used. The department secretary and superintendent have sent out over half a million, making over four million reported as used in this department during the year, and some of the largest states failed to give figures on this point. Three million pages were reported as used last year. The largest number ever reported before was one million seventy-six thousand two hundred and ninety-nine. Again we give thanks that this index of the quickened thought, and consequently the demand for more light through helpful temperance literature, holds the logic of substantial fact as to the value of the Quarterly Temperance Lesson.

I trust all those who have helped secure the temperance lessons and to make the facts referred to possible, will take their share in this onward progress, along with those who at the convention so nobly stood for practical and aggressive gospel temperance. I render them most sincere thanks.

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL, Ex-Supt.

Woodfords, Me.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

The progress of this department, as it directly concerns our organization, has been greatly retarded, because we have lacked suitable literature through which our women might become intelligent advocates. As one marked result of the past two years' work, with the assistance of prominent specialists, we are now able to report the following leaflets and pamphlets, which will be helpful in presenting the subject before district and county conventions, as well as local conferences:

1. Is American Stamina Declining? (12 pages.) Dr. William Blaikie, N. Y.
2. Physical Education for Women. (4 pages.) Dr. Wm. Anderson, Yale University, New Haven.
3. A New Field for Educators. (8 pages.) Bertha Morris Smith.
4. Health and Woman's Dress. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore.
5. Health and Grace. Mrs. Emily Bishop, New York.
6. Physical Education; Its Connection with the Temperance Question. Frances W. Leiter.
7. Nature's Teaching. (14 pages.) Annie Payson Call.
8. Training for Rest. (20 pages.) Annie Payson Call.
9. The Pedigree of the Corset. (26 pages.) Mrs. Helen Gilbert Ecob.
10. Business Suit for Women. (Illustrated; 10 pages.) Bertha Morris Smith.
11. Artistic Hygienic Dress. (Illustrated; 16 pages.) Mrs. George Archibald.
12. The Bicycle in its Relation to the Physician. (11 pages.) Dr. Seneca Egbert, Drexel Institute, Philadelphia.
13. The Influence of Dress in Producing the Physical Decadence of Women. (Illustrated; 40 pages.) Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich.
14. The Corset. (Illustrated; 30 pages.) Dr. Robert L. Dickinson, Brooklyn, N. Y.
15. Obesity; Its Causes and Cure. (21 pages.) Dr. J. H. Kellogg.
16. Plan of work.

These leaflets and pamphlets number, in the aggregate, two hundred and fifty pages. The department envelope contains one of each, and will be mailed on receipt of fifty cents, by addressing the National superintendent. This literature has been distributed in large quantities, regardless of expense, when the opportunity has seemed a favorable one. During the Woman's Congress at Chicago, last May, thousands of pages were at hand for free distribution, and were received eagerly by the multitude in attendance. With the limited funds at the command of the department, during the past two years, it has required some business ingenuity and persistency to command one million and eighty-eight thousand pages of literature. I desire publicly to thank Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., and Dr. Robert Dickinson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for their interest in our need for helps.

Ohio is yet the only state which has made physical training compulsory. The cities that come under the provision are gradually, with varying degrees of proficiency, providing for the enforcement of the law. Able specialists have been called to conduct regular instruction at some of the county institutes, thus giving the teachers in rural districts the advantage of this discipline.

Two states, one in the extreme East, and the other in the extreme West, considered bills during the last session of the general assembly, which failed to become law.

To South Dakota, through the indefatigable labors of Mrs. Cranmer, belongs the honor of first introducing a measure providing for physical discipline in the public schools, which was supported actively by our organization. Hon. H. L. Sheldon successfully championed the bill in the House, the vote standing 80 to 3. It was lost in the Senate by a small majority.

The ultimate aim of the department is to secure legislation making systematic physical discipline compulsory in all schools under public control. A careful study of the laws proposed, in their practical operations through the public school system, brings out some facts which cannot be ignored in our plans to secure compulsory legislation. We may find General Assemblies ready to provide for cities and larger towns, where the employment of a specialist is practicable; but to declare the same for smaller towns, villages and rural districts, where this discipline must be under the supervision of the regular teacher, will doubtless be regarded as impracticable. Here is a problem to be solved. The pupils in the district schools need systematic physical training as seriously as does the city boy or girl, if the "all around" development is to be secured. To accomplish this, some preparatory legislation may be necessary. To carry this training successfully into the village and district schools, it must become a part of the required discipline which shall make the applicant for a position eligible. Teachers are not all trained in Normals. The time is coming, however, when such will be the case, even if it necessitates a training school in each county. Then can the average school-master and school-mistress be as successfully prepared in the rudiments of physical education as he or she is in the rudiments of other required branches.

As a preparatory step to the solution of the difficulty mentioned the department has been compiling a list of the public and private Normals throughout the states, addressing the following questions to the president or principal of each:

1. Is physical training a part of your curriculum?
2. If so, is it introduced as a required preparation of the student for school-room service; or, is it designed more particularly for personal benefit?
3. Do you think physical discipline should become a part of the education provided by the state for its children?

Responses to these inquiries are most encouraging. Sooner or later these students will become instructors, which promises much for the physical condition of the children who will come under their care. Teachers who are already established in the profession without thorough training for this work, can, by persistent effort, acquire it in normal classes which are gradually becoming a part of institutes. The various summer "Chautauquas" afford fine opportunities under some of the best specialists of the country.

W. C. T. unions can render timely service in an important direction by aiding institute executives to secure competent instructors, sharing the expense, if circumstances require it. Organizing a citizens' class in connection will aid financially and extend the work.

Of the various highways and byways leading to the redemption of the people from the curse of drink, this one is yet in its formative stage. The "right of way" has been carefully surveyed, and preparation of the road bed begun, over which the shining steel rails of law will, eventually, conduct an impoverished people to enlarged usefulness, and more perfect happiness, through improved mental as well as physical conditions.

FRANCES W. LEITER,
Supt. Physical Culture Dept.

Mansfield, O.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE MANUALS FREE.

For the next three months, Sabbath Observance Manual, price twenty-five cents, will be given free with each dollar's worth of Sabbath observance literature ordered of the undersigned, if this offer is mentioned.

Times are hard but this liberal offer should help nearly every local union in the land to provide leaflets for distribution the first week of April, and dollar bills always come safely. Number 62, the call for a prayer week with sermons is ready.

Order all of Mrs. J. C. Bateham, National Supt., Williamsburg, Ky.

HON. NEAL DOW SAID THE CHRISTIAN is "very, very good; worth far more than the price" (only $1.00 a year.) "The best paper that comes to me."—C. H. SPURGEON. Agents wanted! Good pay! Sample free! H. L. HASTINGS, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

WHAT IS THE CHRISTIAN?

It is the "BEST PAPER that comes to me." —C. H. SPURGEON.

It is an Illustrated Semi-Monthly, Religious, Temperance, Family paper; comprising four 4-page papers: The Christian, Safeguard, Armory, and the Common People.

$1.00 a year. Send for a Sample Copy Free!

It is filled with true stories, music, poetry, religion and common sense. It is free from sectarianism, politics, pills and patent medicines. The young read it eagerly as well as the old. It is a safe paper to have about the house.

It is "about the BEST PAPER in the country." —D. L. MOODY.

AGENTS WANTED! Good Pay! Send for Terms!

H. L. HASTINGS, 47 & 49 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

Free to You, Ladies!

We will assist you to secure this handsomest of all Ladies' Bicycles entirely without cash outlay; or if you wish to buy a wheel outright, we can save you money! Try us! Wheels for Men and Youths on the same terms. J. K. HASTINGS, Manager of THE CHRISTIAN, 47 and 49 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

You Dye in 30 minutes Turkey red on cotton that won't freeze, boil or wash out. No other will do it. Package to color 2 lbs., by mail, 10 cts.; 6, any color—for wool or cotton, 40c. Big pay Agents. Write quick. Mention this paper. FRENCH DYE CO. Vassar, Mich

Alaska Stove Lifter,
NICKEL PLATED.

ALWAYS COLD, even if left in Stove Lid.

Sold by all Stove and Hardware Dealers and House Furnishers, or sent by mail, postpaid, for 30 CENTS.

TROY NICKEL WORKS, TROY, N. Y.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

We are overwhelmed with good news. A column is all too small to contain it. New Jersey's report from Mrs. Bourne, her W. C. T. U. president, stirs one to the depths. Scientific temperance instruction in their public schools is the ultimatum of the winter's labor, and their hope and faith are such that they cannot be denied. Churches, pastors, Endeavorers are heartily enlisted. The bill has been prepared under the wise supervision of Mrs. Hunt, the indefatigable and successful National superintendent. Representatives have been reached by personal interview or letters and there is an interest on all sides, while there is good reason to hope that finance will be forthcoming to meet all demands. "In every part of the state there is a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees and a stirring in all the camps."

The bill prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors has become a law in Iowa. The penalty for violation being one hundred dollars fine or thirty days imprisonment.

The National Woman's Suffrage Association has just closed its annual meeting at Washington, D. C. The National W. C. T. U. telegraphed greetings with assurance of deep interest and hearty sympathy in the proceedings. The following reply was received:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The N. A. W. S. A. recognizes the franchise department of the W. C. T. U. as a strong ally in securing the ballot, without which women will be politically powerless in the future as in the past.

RACHEL FOSTER AVERY, Sec.

Mrs. Harford, recording secretary, Oregon W. C. T. U., writes of Portland and the W. C. T. U.: "Our active membership numbers 110 and our honorary members are fifty. We have a magnificent body of men and women

GRANŪLA

"The Perfect Health Food."

"Granūla" is one of the most concentrated forms of food, and contains in proper proportions all the elements of nutrition needed by the human body.

It is made from the best White Winter Wheat grown in the famous Genesee Valley wheat-growing region.

It contains every needed constituent of the grain, and, as wheat is considered the best single article of food, "Granūla" supplies in a palatable form the best and most highly nutritive alimentary principle.

SEND FOR FREE BOOK OF RECIPES. It is ready for immediate table use by simply soaking it in milk or hot or cold water, as it is twice cooked in its manufacture. It may be made the constituent of many palatable dishes. It will keep for years unchanged as to value if stored in a dry place.

Trial package 25c. by mail postpaid. Address, OUR HOME GRANŪLA CO., Box 100, Dansville, N.Y.

in this city who are making themselves felt. There is no saloon, nor gambling-house, nor house of infamy in the town; not one place of business is open on the Sabbath, and at the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting on Christmas morning there were nearly, if not quite, two hundred persons present, and by far the larger number gave vocal testimony of God's love in their hearts. The hour before sunrise was thus given to the Lord's service. Our Pacific College is also a helpful institution." What a blessed country is this, with Neal Dow in the Portland of the far East and such condition is found in the Portland of the West.

Mrs. Mattie L. Spencer, of Alabama, writes, she believes there is but one or two if any president of a local W. C. T. U. of her state who is not a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL, and by Mrs. Spencer's request, the Birmingham union has, for five years, placed that paper in the Public Library and in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., and they are now hoping to send it to every minister of the city. Mrs. Hoffman will soon visit the state, and her way is opened by a magnificent temperance address from a Presbyterian pastor of Birmingham.

We could but exclaim, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," as we opened The White Ribbon of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of India, published by Mrs. Jeannette G. Hauser, president of the India union. Though small, it is full of richness, giving most encouraging report of the work.

A temperance congress will be held at San Francisco during the Midwinter Fair, May 18 being W. C. T. U. date.

Mrs. John Pharr, of Mississippi, is an enthusiastic, yet thoroughly practical, district president, whom no one doubts is called to the work; and in her husband, the union has an appreciative "friend in need."

Miss Frances E. Griffin and Mrs. Mary McGee Snell are busily at work under Mrs. Pharr's direction, each having a month's engagement in the district. That portion of the South will surely have a thorough stirring when these able women are followed by Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Lathrap, as now arranged.

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president Texas W. C. T. U., sends statistics that emphasize the need of funds and set the heart afire with desire for the "sinews of war." She says their "membership is three thousand, but dues are paid only by five hundred," thus by our National constitution Texas can be credited upon our books with but five hundred members; L. T. L. membership, 2,128, of whom 1,434 are pledged. The W. C. T. U. has a state organ, The White Ribbon, and the L. T. L. publishes The Blue Violet. Who will give Texas a lift?

We regret to announce that Mrs. Sarah C. Harris, Franklin, Va., whose name appears among our National organizers, is obliged to resign her office, having taken charge of the "Mountain View Faith Home," at Mountain Lake Park, Md. She writes hopefully of the work in Virginia, and says "prohibition is gaining among the people."

Mrs. Kirkland, National superintendent of evangelistic work in New Zealand, writes: "The individual work of National superintendents and evangelists and our round-the-world missionaries, would make a volume of consecrated effort, thrilling romance and God-given victory."

Kansas is alive in the suffrage interest. From the state teachers' association, lately assembled at Topeka, came no uncertain sound. Resolutions indorsing the proposed constitutional amendment giving women the ballot for prohibition and scientific temperance instruction, were unanimously adopted.

Mrs. Beauchamp, of Kentucky, tells us of John G. Woolley's visit to Lexington, and says: "He spoke with power, and 'as one having authority.'" Forty-four were added to the union, and we were established in the most holy faith."

A sentence from a letter of Mrs. D. W. Shinn, corresponding secretary of the N. Dakota W. C. T. U., encourages us: "In spite of the cold winter and the unprecedented hard times, we never at this season of the year have had greater reason for hope and encouragement. Our president is almost constantly 'on the wing,' and wherever she goes reports full houses, increased membership and a general awakening in interest in all departments of work."

Mrs. Ella B. Gittings, corresponding secretary of Colorado W. C. T. U., writes: "I am trying to cultivate a personal acquaintance with the unions as far as I may by correspondence and establish, if possible, a bond between us more intimate than that of mere business correspondence." These words give the keynote of success. We may be true humanitarians and have a general interest in all about us, but let us come into individual touch, and henceforth "one is our Father, even God, and all we are brothers and sisters." Mrs. Gittings' proposition cannot fail to do good. We wish her success, as well as every other state corresponding secretary who will do likewise.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

A GLIMPSE INTO THE MAIL-BAG.

We have had many anonymous contributions, and of course could not receipt for them, neither could we mention them all in our column, but we wish to acknowledge fifty cents from "a friend" from Pierson Station, Ill.

We have sent two receipts to Mrs. Minnie Rogers, Muskegon, Mich., for two dollars, but our cards have each time been returned to us. Also a receipt for one dollar is returned addressed to Mrs. S. Jamieson, Waterloo, Iowa.

A breath of hope comes wafted to us on a breeze from the sunset. "We think we see brighter times in the future, so we are trusting and working."

A young colored minister from Mississippi sends us a dime for himself and one for "his girl." No champagne bottle will be broken at the launching of their matrimonial ship.

A sister in Vermont writes: "Our pastor called; I asked him if he sympathized with the work of the W. C. T. U. He said, 'Certainly I do.' I told him they were in need of money, and asked him for ten cents. I did not ask twice. He knew, none better, that we are fighting against that enemy that sweeps all his work aside at a blow."

Another letter says, "We, from the mountains of Tennessee, have heard the call of our beloved President, and our hearts answered most loyally and most royally, but our purses were not sufficient. God bless you, and our dear Miss Willard, and all the host"; and with this letter came a generous gift.

"God bless the National and save its queen," a Pennsylvanian says, and we echo, "So say we all of us."

"The white ribbon has been a great help in our family and in our precinct; as a result three drinking men have been influenced to live temperate lives." This encouraging report comes from a faithful worker in California.

Some unions send out cards semi-annually or quarterly to every member reminding them that dues are due. If every local treasurer would be faithful and make it a point to collect every individual fee this year, our reported membership would be greatly increased, to say nothing of the good the money would do. Then if dues could be promptly forwarded to district, state and National treasuries, what an impetus it would give to our work all along the line, and how it would increase our apparent membership.

The dimes are still coming in, and will help us to meet a $500 note due the 20th—money loaned by one of our state presidents to tide us over the months when dues are not coming in freely.

Rhode Island, always helpful, sends this gentle benediction: "We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers." HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

[It is the desire of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL that this Corner should serve the National Organizers as a sort of Lecture Bureau, and to that end they are invited to send their calendar of appointments long enough ahead to secure engagements in the territory to which they are called.]

The following is the list of National organizers for the present year, and whether W's or Y's they are all accredited public speakers and fully prepared to organize W's, Y's, L. T. L's, or speak to the general public and add to the membership of unions.

For terms and dates address as below:

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.

Mrs. L. H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.

Miss Frances E. Griffin, 69 Maple street, Chicago.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.

Mrs. E. A. Blair, 936 Cottage Place, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mrs. Maude L. Green, Manitou Springs, Col.

Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.

Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.

Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Newberg, Ore.

Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, 132 McAllister street, San Francisco, Cal.

Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.

Miss Frances Ensign, Madison, O.

Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.

I do not want to seem to monopolize this valuable corner; but I so often feel inclined to drop a word of greeting to the other organizers. I think of you trudging along, meeting with the many obstacles that come in our way, and wondering how you get over them. Some especially good things have happened along the way the past few weeks. That God is still on our side, is proven by the results of late meetings.

One Y, two W. C. T. Unions, four Loyal Temperance Legions, are the result of one of my recent trips. One union was organized in a typical new lumbering town. If you have ever had any experience with these towns you will know what that means. They said when I first arrived in the place that I could not get a hearing, and that there could not three women be found who would join a W. C. T. U. However, I was not discouraged, for I had met with similar conditions before. Result, large crowds of people out the last two nights, and a W. C. T. U. of nearly thirty members. All of which proves that our work will succeed if we "Trust in God and keep our powder dry."

But I did not mind that rough town half so much as another I visited on the same trip, where the ministers were opposed to having a Y organized (there already being a W. C. T. U.) We had to act just as if "they were not," and go ahead and organize anyway, because we knew it was just the thing needed. They thought, too, there was no need of organizing a Loyal Temperance Legion. But we thought there was, because hundreds of boys were running the streets, smoking and chewing tobacco; drinking beer and cider, so we succeeded in getting a large gathering of children and started an L. T. L. I will be off in a few days elsewhere in this Upper Peninsula of Michigan to continue just this kind of work. E. NORINNE LAW.

During four and a half weeks since Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, National organizer, has been in the state of Washington, she has delivered thirty-three lectures, held nine meetings among women, organized two new unions, resuscitated several and taken into regular membership one hundred and ten, with eighty honorary members. She will remain in Washington, speaking every night, until the last of March. Mrs. Cox's experience is so unique we cannot refrain from giving it to others. She writes: "I traveled over the Sound for more than a week, my first experience on the water, which was very rough most of the time. On my passage from Port Townsend to Coupeville on Whitby Island, the steamer found it impossible to land and the captain and a deck hand lowered me and my baggage into a surf boat and started for shore, but the tide was rising rapidly and the waves beat us back till I thought we should not be able to land at all. The captain told me to be all ready and making a strong pull at the oars called to the sailor, 'Take the lady,' whereupon he lifted me in his arms and wading through the dashing surf placed me safely upon the sand. I felt grateful for once that I am not so weighty a speaker as are most of our women."

OUR NEW LEAFLETS.

Have you seen our new

Busy Day Leaflets?

Good paper, good, clear type, and so to the point you can afford to give a moment to them on a busy day. There are nine of them.

Per 100..... $ .15
" 1,000..... 1.00

Teach your children temperance and order series of seven for Our Little Folks.

Per 100..... $ .15
" 1,000..... 1.00

Series of eight picture leaflets. Send for a hundred, price only fifteen cents, and you will use many hundreds of them.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; Endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

"Does the furnishing of a room in the hospital entitle us to any privileges in naming patients?" is a question frequently asked. The negative reply is always made. The placing of a patient in the hospital involves nursing, food, and more or less of medical attendance, and the furnishing of a room does not meet these expenses; that can only be done by the endowment of beds.

The graduating exercises of the training school for nurses will be held at the hospital early in March. By special request, one of the four nurses completing the course this spring goes to Indiana to take charge of a hospital.

A bequest of a hundred dollars has just been received from a white-ribboner in Michigan. This suggests a line of help that we hope will be followed. Send to the hospital for directions as to the proper form to be observed.

Illinois, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Wyoming and Washington report state superintendents of hospital interests, and several others promise to appoint such an official at once.

A little five-year-old is now in the hospital, though the pretty L. T. L. room is not yet ready. The poor child has been deformed from birth, and amputation of one leg has been necessary. If the bright, active boys and girls of our Legions could once think what such a sorrow means to a boy, they would hasten in their pennies yet more earnestly, that all possible cheer might be given the little sufferer.

ALICE M. GUERNSEY,
Assistant Secretary.

PETITION OF THE
WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
FOR THE
PROTECTION OF THE HOME.
Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Miss Alice Briggs, The Temple, Chicago, for the regular form, and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Briggs. Use separate blanks for men and women.

Our Library Table.

AMONG THE BOOKS.

EBENEZER. A paper-bound volume of nearly four hundred pages, containing records of remarkable answers to prayer, a faith-inspiring book.

Published by H. L. Hastings, 47 and 49 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

AROUND THE FIRESIDE AND OTHER POEMS. By Howard Carleton Tripp. Published by the Times Publishing Company, Kingsley, Iowa.

The author has chosen for his themes those touching and attractive subjects that find a ready response in every heart. There is a true poetical ring in the author's work. Illustrations of prominent people appear in the book, with accompanying dedicatory lines.

HUMANICS. By John Staples White. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York City.

This might be called a volume of disconnections. The author terms it in his preface, a "thought-diary or journal," and goes on to say that "the thoughts have not been recorded daily, but at longer intervals for a number of years." Each chapter is devoted to a subject, such as "Life," "The Will," "Man," "Immortality," "Knowledge," and kindred themes. The chapters are composed of brief "comments, aphorisms and essays," duly numbered and paragraphed. The author says in humorous vein that its "latent idea" was to present to the public a work "that absolutely could not be read"—and he has done it!

THE BOOK OF THE FAIR gains in favor as the consecutive issues reach the subscribers. Part VII. continues the description and illustration of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building, with its wonderful displays. Pictures of the exhibits from Germany, Canada, England, New South Wales, France, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, Mexico and many other foreign countries lend richness and variety to illustrations which seem to grow in artistic merit and value. One of the finest full-page pictures, of which there are three, is that of the largest telescope in the world, the Yerkes telescope, which was destined to find a permanent home in the Geneva observatory, in connection with the University of Chicago. Chapter XI is begun in this issue, the topic being the Woman's Department, and of all the illustrations those which will touch woman's beauty-loving eye the most generally, and, perhaps, the most tenderly, are those of the laces—Italian and Mexican.

The Bancroft Company, Chicago, Ill.

THE TRAFFIC IN GIRLS, AND FLORENCE CRITTENTON MISSIONS, by Charlton Edholm. Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago.

This book can be recommended for perusal only by those who want to put hand and heart to the work of reclaiming such of our "little sisters" as are lost—it is too heart-breaking and too plain-spoken for the gaze of any others than these. The first part of the book is compiled from W. T. Stead's famous exposé, and the reader is glad to turn from the dark portrayal to the cheer that lies in the records of the noble work done by Charles N. Crittenton, in establishing the Florence Missions whence so many date their salvation. The Florence Crittenton Anchorage, Chicago, maintained by the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., takes its name from this good man, who by a generous gift in a time of need saved it from going down in a time of wide bankruptcy. The volume in question gives brief sketches of these missions and prints touching letters of gratitude from saved ones to Mr. Crittenton.

THE TRUE WOMAN: Elements of Character drawn from the Life of Mary Lyon and others. By the Rev. W. M. Thayer, author of "The Farmer Boy," "Nelson," etc.

Mary Lyon was the founder of Mt. Holyoke Female Seminary, and its principal for twelve years. Indeed, her whole life, after she, through her own exertions, acquired an education, was devoted to teaching, and upwards of three thousand pupils learned to love and admire her sterling character and her wonderful ability. As a pioneer in the cause of female education her career is typical and deserves to be studied.

Dr. Thayer has made it the text of a valuable series of lessons, enriched by anecdote and precept. Dr. Thayer declares in his preface that the design of the book is to show girls how to succeed in life. "Mary Lyon," he says, "is the leading character, around which are grouped a large number of incidents from the lives of other distinguished women, both for the purpose of illustrating certain elements of female character and of making the book more attractive to the young."

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston.

WITHIN COLLEGE WALLS, by Charles Franklin Thwing, president of Adelbert College, and of Western Reserve University. This compact little volume contains ten chapters, somewhat after the style of essays, which discuss various phases of college life and experiences. It ought to have a wide reading by the heads of families and by collegians themselves. The topics presented are:

1. The College and the Home. 2. The Good of Being in College. 3. The College Forming Character. 4. Certain College Temptations. 5. College Government. 6. Play in College. 7. Simplicity and Enrichment of Life in College. 8. The College and the Church. 9. The College Fitting for Business. 10. The Preëminence of the College Graduate.

The book is instructive as well as entertaining.

The Baker & Taylor Company, 740 and 742 Broadway, New York.

OUR NEW HYMNAL, by Philip Phillips and Philip Phillips, Jr. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York City.

This hymnal has many points of excellence out of the common order. Aside from a list of over five hundred hymns, a large proportion of which are those that have stood the test of time and have become woven into the heart experiences and memories of Christians for decades past, there are carefully prepared services for special occasions; these services scattered through the book and the order of hymns arranged in reference thereto. The services in question contain responsive Scripture readings, chants and anthems. The authors have shown ingenuity in the arrangement of indices, there being what is termed a Concordance index, which enables the ready finding of hymns or verses upon specific topics. The mechanical work upon the book is of the best and helps out other good features in making a volume that will find a ready acceptation with the public.

THROUGH THE FLOOD. The Story of an Out-of-the-Way-Place. By Esmè Stuart. Published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York City.

A quietly interesting story, simple in construction and well carried out, with characters that harmonize well with their surroundings: "It certainly was an out-of-the-way place! There was no railway nearer than eight miles, no country town within six, and even the village was half-an-hour's walk from 'River Bank' as the farm was called." The author has made a strong point in her delineation of character in the two sisters, Letty and Joan, who possessed widely distinctive hereditary traits and developed accordingly. The incidents that gave one sister pain and drove her to a more assiduous performance of her monotonous daily duties, but awakened restless desires and pretty rebellions in the heart of the other until their paths lay far apart. Without drawing attention to the fact Esmè Stuart has touched skillfully upon the question of which is the stronger, environment or heredity, in the development of character.

A STANDARD DICTIONARY of the English Language. It is said of one of the most prominent divines of New York City, that among the books of his daily study was an unabridged dictionary to which he devoted one hour's close attention. Dictionaries used to be regarded as tomes for only occasional use, to be consulted when all other authorities failed, but now they are in constant requisition in the homes where education takes young and old alike, of both sexes, and leads them where they will in the paths of investigation. Thus, it has come about that "Webster's Unabridged" stands no longer peer of dictionary realms.

With a corps of over two hundred editors and specialists who were selected from the foremost ranks of English and American scholarship, and whose work has covered a period of almost four years, Funk & Wagnalls' STANDARD DICTIONARY has reached the completion of Vol. I. In this day of achievements the appearance of such a volume as the one in question does not at first sight awaken overmuch awe or surprise, yet to consider somewhat in detail the actual work needed to complete so perfect a reference book of words and phrases, is to intensify, to say the least, one's admiration of the possibilities contained in the human brain, as well as in the English language. This dictionary (Vols. I. and II.) contains nearly 300,000 words and terms (Johnson's dictionary contained but 45,000). Each word of these three hundred thousand has been subjected to a scrutiny that has laid bare its origin, growth (or deterioration), and final attainment in the ranks of our noble mother tongue. The work is put into a dress handsome and enduring, and the arrangement from cover to cover is to facilitate search, condense facts, and broaden and generalize information.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York City.

ABBE CONSTANTIN, by Ludovic Halévy, of the French Academy, illustrated by Madame Madeline Lemaire. This dainty little volume contains a thoroughly original story of two American women, young, beautiful and each millionaires, who, through their wealth were able to buy an old estate in France. Monsieur le Curé, who for years had depended upon the bounty of the old mistress of Longueval for the donations for his poor, is broken-hearted at the thought that these young American women—no doubt Protestants—will come and do away with old and blessed customs. But a pleasant surprise awaits him, and the newcomers prove to be "good Catholics" who fill his hands with gold and his heart with prayers of joy and benediction. The story then takes a sharp turn and becomes a love-tale of most unusual features, the French author unconsciously making his American heroines French, and evidently priding himself on having well portrayed the American spirit of independence by causing these two charming sisters each to offer her fair hand to the man of her selection. The situations are delicately dramatic and deliciously serio-comic.

T. Y. Crowell & Company, 46 East 14th St., New York; 100 Purchase St., Boston.

PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS. By Grover Pease Osborn. Published by Robert Clarke & Company, Cincinnati.

This is perhaps one of the clearest and most satisfactory books on this much belabored topic, that has been written. Its simplicity of proposition and reasoning is its strength. The author takes for his starting point the consideration "of the satisfaction of human wants, so far as this satisfaction depends on material resources, or the labor of human beings," and keeps this in view throughout the lengthy but not wearisome discussion. The titles of the various divisions of the book give the best outline of the treatise: Resources for the Satisfaction of Wants,—Resources of Nature, Ability to Labor, Productions of Human Industry, Society; Population,—Its Relation to the Resources of Nature, Population and Labor, Produced Wealth, Society, Increase of Population; Ownership and Control of Resources,—Private Property or Socialism, Ownership and Control of Labor and of the Resources of Nature, of those produced by Human Industry, Control of Society; Economical Use of the Resources; Exchange; Distribution of Produced Wealth. The book contains over four hundred pages of most valuable material arranged in such form as to be easily mastered.

THE HALLOWED DAY. By Rev. George Guirey. This volume contains the Fletcher Prize Essay of Dartmouth College, 1892. The late Hon. Richard Fletcher made in his will provision for a biennial prize essay, "setting forth truths and reasoning calculated to counteract worldly influences, and impressing on the minds of all Christians a solemn sense of their duty to exhibit in their godly lives and conversation the beneficent effects of the religion they profess, and thus increase the efficiency of Christianity in Christian countries and recommend its acceptance to the heathen nations of the world." The essay by Rev. Guirey fully meets the requirements, and is a book that may well take honored place in well-chosen libraries. The author pursues his argument under three general heads—"The Right Observance of the Lord's Day," "Reasons for the Right Observance of the Lord's Day," "Applications of the Principles that Govern the Observance of the Lord's Day." There is need that Christian people look well to the defences of this sacred institution of the Sabbath, and sharpen well the intellectual weapons with which to meet the subtle arguments put forward to sustain indifference to and outrage of the Holy Day. Such a book as the above can be most heartily recommended for perusal by all who would thus strengthen their position on one of the most vital points of Christian observance.

The Baker & Taylor Co., 740 and 742 Broadway, New York City.

BEAUTIFUL JOE. An Autobiography. By Marshall Saunders. Introduction by Hezekiah Butterworth, Editor of Youth's Companion.

The author states that "Beautiful Joe is a real dog, and 'Beautiful Joe' is his real name," that the story is a rehearsal from real life and that the character of Laura—one of the strongest in the book—"is drawn from life and to the smallest detail is truthfully depicted." Perhaps no other plea for kindness to the brutes has had so wide a circulation or so favorable a hearing as "Black Beauty," and BEAUTIFUL JOE is well fitted to follow its remarkable predecessor. Bearing the impress of truth, as it does, its testimony is strong and clear. The narrative has no unnatural features that wrest the dog-hero from his plane among the four-footed friends of man, but is simply made to narrate in the first person the story of his life as it played its own part among human lives. Joe was at first owned by a milkman and the reader shudders at the revelations made of the possible conditions of the homes and barnyards of those who furnish the daily supply of this staple. Joe's experience was not unusual but was one of misery until rescued by one of "the Morris boys" and taken to the home of Miss Laura. His unhappiness is at an end but he continues the narrative by telling the story of the Morris family, the part dumb pets played in the social economy, and the opportunities that come to all who are humanely inclined to lessen animal suffering and develop the sagacity in animal intellect. Every boy and girl who loves dumb animals should read this book. Woven into the story are the most valuable hints on the care and training of animals—cats, horses, parrots, canary birds, dogs. It seems to the reader as if Marshall Saunders must by some means have really been able to read the thoughts of Laura's and her brother's protégés to record in so remarkable a way these minute observances concerning them. Bands of Mercy will welcome this book for their reading, and humane societies will advocate it heartily.

Charles H. Banes, 1420 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penn.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICES FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP. Prepared by Rev. Reuen Thomas, D. D. Published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

"These services," writes the publisher of the book under consideration, "are intended to give variety and richness to that part of the Sanctuary Service which has too often been made to depend solely on the spiritual mood of the minister." It patterns closely after the style of the ritual in use by the Episcopalian church, but as the Episcopalians are careful to use the beautiful services in the ritual and leave but little room for the dangers that might accrue when depending "solely on the spiritual mood of the minister," the book must be prepared for use in other congregations than those in question. The responsive prayers are most thoughtfully prepared and the responsive Scripture readings which cover over fifty pages would be found of use in many gatherings. Yet the need for such a book might be questioned, since the tendency is more and more to free expression in all devotional gatherings, the most conservative of the so-called dissenting churches now training the young men and young women in their midst as leaders of services where related experiences, impromptu appeals and testimonies and voluntary prayers are leading features. Besides prayers, responsive services and readings, the book contains the "Ancient Creeds," collects, a communion service, baptismal service, the Commandments, beatitudes and litanies.

Among the rarely beautiful stories which one can take up, read at a sitting and turn away from with no other thoughts than those of tenderness and uplift is A SPINSTER'S LEAFLETS, by Alyn Yates Keith. The pen-artist furnished her palette with only the most exquisite tints and wrought out her exquisite conception with a bright success. Her "spinster" lived in one of those story-haunted houses whose "roof is mossy, and the shingles that protect its sides curl and fringe raggedly at the edges." "My sitting-room," goes on the sunny-faced heroine, (for such she must have been,) "lifted one step above the kitchen, like a sort of higher life, holds my fireplace, my cat, my corner cupboard, and my books." Her description of her cats—Kittery and Cattery—is irresistibly humorous, and the picture of her "good corner cupboard" befits a critically chosen "light" in a select art gallery. And then the Spinster wanders a little in her descriptions and drawing aside a curtain shows a sacred corner in her heart, where the mother-love which lives immortal in woman is enshrined, though no "household voices" call its music into being. "If I ever find a baby on my doorstep, ..." she says, and the unadorned little sentence comprehends a volume. Well,—she did, not on her doorstep, it is true, but at her heart's door, and she took him in, and the Spinster became a woman as she never was before. "My boy was not born to me; it was I who was born to him, by every holy tie a mother, with the love all on my side. Whatever his future might be, that way my life lay." Her baby grew up and his life touched others and the Spinster's story grows, the plot thickening and the characters multiplying, but through it all the central figure shines—a spinster-mother, strong, self-sacrificing, tender, suffering for her boy's waywardness, wrestling with her own heart, rejoicing at last to see him conquer, until on the last pages, the Spinster, grown old, steps aside a little to let another stand with her beside her Philip—the choice of his heart, the one figure needed to make the picture perfect and the story complete.

Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk St., Boston.

(Continued from page 5.)

ically from Miss Clay, yet she liked her and liked her speech, and she walked up and presented her with a five dollar bill.

Mrs. Claflin, of Massachusetts, made a hearty speech, in which she touched upon the points of unity among the members. "Southern women are advocating our cause," she said, "and intend to put an educational qualification in the very forefront of their propositions. Our work in the South may mean finally not only the extension of the franchise to white women, but to all women and the attainment of education for all voters, and the effect of our work will be such that it will no longer remain the 'solid South.' One of the best results of our organization is the union which it brings about between the women of the different sections of our country."

Mrs. Virginia D. Young was escorted to the platform. She is a timid little Southern woman, and said her heart was fairly taken out of her by the warmth of the friends in Washington, and those in the convention.

Miss Anthony said: "We know no North, no South, no East, no West, no Kansas, no New York, as above each and every state is the Union. Our object is not localism, nor stateism, but to put out a hand to help each other and to help the cause, and that has been the pride of the association. We have not been Democrats nor Republicans, nor members of any old-fashioned or new-fashioned party. We have known no creed, nor asked any questions about anybody's religion."

Miss C. H. Spence, of Australia, said she was born in the birthplace of woman suffrage, for they had municipal suffrage six years before it was given to the women of England. Miss Spence came here in the summer to attend the congresses in Chicago, and has since been lecturing in this country on "Electoral Reform." Miss Spence likes us, and praises our country in glowing terms; she likes everything about us but our politics, which she condemns, and says it is in our own hands to correct them.

Large and tenderly attentive was the audience that assembled on Friday afternoon to hold the memorial services for Lucy Stone, Leland Stanford, Elizabeth Peabody, George W. Childs, Elizabeth Oakes Smith, and others.

The beautiful portrait of Lucy Stone, which had been on the platform since the beginning of the convention, was moved to the front, and draped with flowers, vines, and the flag which had been presented to Miss Anthony.

Miss Anthony, in opening the meeting, said the most fitting person to say the first word in memory of Lucy Stone was Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who had come from Boston for that purpose. Mrs. Howe has aged since she was last here, and seemed feeble, but her inspiring recollections of her dear friend, Lucy Stone, gave no evidence of any but continued mental strength and vigor.

A letter from Wm. Dudley Foulke was read, in which he stated he was proud to stand as president of the W. S. A., of which Lucy Stone was the founder and the inspiration.

Josephine K. Henry rendered the tribute of a southern woman, which was tender and full of exquisite pathos as she dwelt upon the beautiful life of Henry Blackwell and his wife, saying that their lovely character had helped and inspired her in many trying hours.

Miss Laura Clay, of Kentucky, the next speaker, told how she was uplifted and encouraged by the reading of the Journal. Kentucky owes much to her for her sacrifices and words for woman's freedom.

Mr. Henry B. Blackwell spoke with hesitancy, as he at first declared, but feeling that everything connected with his promoted wife was more than a personal matter.

Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake added her tribute, which was beautifully expressed, recalling her last meeting with Lucy Stone, which was at the Congress of Women at Chicago.

Mrs. Lucretia Mott Blackenburg, of Philadelphia, namesake and relative of Lucretia Mott, spoke of George W. Childs, telling of his character as a philanthropist, He had said to her one day, "I will not allow in my paper, women to be ridiculed in their efforts to help their sex to a better and a freer life," and it is probable that this feature in the Public Ledger exerted a widespread influence in favor of the advancement of women. He was always helping individual women to fit themselves for some vocation. In his death the women of America have lost a true friend.

Hon. Frederick Douglass was introduced by Miss Anthony, and he thanked her for mentioning the fact that he had stood by Mrs. Stanton in the first convention when she alone believed that women should have the ballot. His tribute to Lucy Stone was a glowing and an eloquent one.

Miss Anthony added to the memorial service the names of Col. Thompson, one of the founders of the Patrons of Husbandry, the first organization of men to indorse woman's suffrage. Also of Mary Seymour, founder of the Business Woman's Journal, and of Mrs. Myra Bradwell, one of the oldest woman lawyers of the United States and editor of the Legal News.

LUCY PAGE STELLE.

(To be continued.)

IMPORTANT LEGISLATIVE WORK IN IOWA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Since last Thursday my sitting-room has looked like the storage-room of a printing-house, or rather the mailing-room, for it has been filled with packages and from two to half a dozen persons are busy nearly all the days and until late at night preparing the letters, circulars, petitions, and papers for the Iowa legislators and newspapers in the interests of our "age of consent" bill.

It is but simple justice to say that this immense amount of work with its expense, about $200, could not have been carried on, would not have been even begun, without the encouragement and assistance of Mr. Jarvis, to whom well belongs the Arab title of "Brother of Girls," for more than any other man in this city he has stood for the purity of the home and the protection of the children from the great array of contaminating influences. I should not say "stood." Others have done that; he has been active in their behalf.

To show that we have not made too great an effort in behalf of the bill, a letter from Senator Rowen, who is championing all our causes in the Senate—like the true-hearted man he is—informs me that "the committee took summary action upon it, without my knowledge, recommending it for indefinite postponement." He adds: "Every drop of Irish blood in my veins grew hot at the action and I went to the chairman and made things exceedingly interesting for a little while, and he got it referred back to the committee to give me a hearing."

He urges deluging the legislature with petitions—as we are—and promises that if the bill is not recommended by the committee, he will change the phraseology and introduce another.

In the House a bill fixing it at sixteen years has been introduced. So the battle is on, but we believe it will end in victory for us. If not, we shall continue the campaign and two years from now ask for the raising to twenty-one years, as we probably will in any case. I am in receipt of letters from members of the assembly saying they think eighteen years is too low, so I look forward to a day when there shall be no such thing as a "legal consent" to a crime.

This bill is one of ours, prepared by us, petitions circulated by us and no other society, to my knowledge, has taken any steps toward the introduction of any similar one. Our other special bills are the one to prohibit the sale of tobacco to boys under sixteen years of age, which has already passed, and only awaits the governor's signature to become a law, and a bill for a woman's reformatory.

We join the state suffrage association in asking for municipal suffrage and the constitutional amendment for full suffrage, but finding that the passage of these was doubtful, we have introduced a bill for school suffrage and have strong hopes of its passing. This is the barest outline of our work; your experience will fill in the details.

Our work for the passage of the "Age of Consent" bill means far more than merely that result, great as that will be. It has brought the whole question of social purity to the thought of six thousand men of the state who are in public positions of various kinds—ministers, editors and officials, the men who represent morality, intelligence, power and progress—and makes an onward movement comparatively easy, which we shall be swift to improve. My convention work this spring and summer will be directed to this end. Mr. Jarvis, and others, will push the work of the White Cross throughout the state.

Through the coöperation of the Hon. L. S. Coffin, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, the author of the "White Button" work, we are sending circulars and petitions to the one hundred and ten lodges of the respective brotherhoods of railroad engineers, firemen, trainmen, switchmen and conductors, accompanied by a personal letter from Mr. Coffin. Mr. Coffin has a very wide acquaintance among railroad men all over the country, in connection with his temperance and Sunday rest work, and he is also profoundly interested in the movement to raise the age of consent; and I have no doubt but that, with his aid, we could enlist the most hearty support of all the railroad lodges throughout the country for any legislation that might be sought on that point.

"Thanking God and taking courage" the banners we have set up "in His name," shall go forward in this holy war.

MARION H. DUNHAM,
President Iowa W. C. T. U.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.—I John 5: 4.

In continuation of the answer to the charges made by the president of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. that Willard Hall is not large enough to accommodate the National Convention when it meets in Chicago, we desire to say: The temple is so constructed that by pulling down an inside wall Willard Hall can be made to double its capacity. This, however, would cut off one of our banks, for which we are now receiving $10,000 yearly rental.

The hall now seats six hundred, and is sufficiently large for what it was intended, a place for holding daily gospel temperance meetings, and a center for the W. C. T. U. school of methods, which it is the intention of the National president at no distant day to inaugurate. The National W. C. T. U. have the free use of the hall whenever they desire it. In regard to a National Convention, it is not likely to occur in Chicago more than once or twice in a decade; it would, therefore, be much cheaper to hire quarters for such occasions.

Our sister says: "To raise $100 for the Temple means long, hard work for every union that attempts it, and it means for the time a cessation of temperance work." As to its being hard work for the unions to raise a hundred dollars for the Temple, we must beg to differ. If one woman in each union would raise a baby band fund, and no better temperance work was ever done, it would bring in $10. Then let twenty-four members each take a mite-box, with their own penny savings and the donations of friends $3.65 could be easily secured within a year or two without any one feeling it. Even if other temperance work had to be suspended for a time—which I don't think ever has been the case—it would be good work done. It would return after the building was paid for a perpetual income to the state forever after.

We heartily thank the white-ribboners of Wisconsin for their loyalty to the Temple. They have given, according to the number of unions, on an average as much as any state in the country. The names of nine unions appear on the Wisconsin tablet in Willard Hall. I am sure if these unions could be heard from they would say, "Our work has not been crippled in the least by giving to the Temple," and if the truth were known these same unions have sent more to the "Wisconsin Home" (which, in another column of the Motor, Mrs. Campbell makes an appeal for,) than those that have not given to the Temple.

***

Our Wisconsin sister says: "There was no vindication of the Temple by the National Convention at Chicago; neither the Temple nor its founder were on trial; the management was simply questioned. . . . . A vote to receive the report did not indorse the management, and the Temple was not indorsed by the executive committee." The above is a most extraordinary statement. To say that a vote to adopt a most important report given before a great national body without being referred back to any committee, is not an indorsement of the measure is sheer nonsense. I find on page 24, National W. C. T. U. Minutes for 1893 in regard to the Temple report the following: "The vote on the adoption of the report was taken, and not a dissenting voice was heard; the report was adopted. Mrs. Stevens moved that Mrs. Harris sing 'Victory,' which was sung." "Not indorsed by the executive committee," says our sister. It would indeed be a most unheard of procedure in parliamentary usage for the executive committee of any body to presume to undo what that body had indorsed and accepted. In this, as in every other case, the greater includes the less. Such a point, however, never came up in the National executive in regard to the Temple, as can be proved from the printed National Minutes. The following resolution can be found on page 46, National Minutes, 1893: "Since we have had a full statement of the condition of the Temperance Temple enterprise, we recommend that our sisters take up individually the work of enlisting aid in completing it." What means the adoption of the Temple report by the Convention, and the above resolution? What meant the call for the song of "Victory" after almost a whole day had been spent by a few delegates in cross-questioning the Temple trustees and its founder in regard to the management of the enterprise?

Why did all the newspapers of Chicago, after the adoption of the Temple report by the Convention, come out in lengthy articles with glaring headlines, announcing that the founder of the Temple had been vindicated in her management of the enterprise? If this is not a vindication we would like to know what is.

***

The president of Wisconsin says: "Mrs. Carse told us at the Denver Convention that she would not come before us again to ask our help, but would appeal to other sources. If she forgot her promise those who listened to her did not." I would refer my sister to my printed report which is to be found in the National Minutes for 1893, commencing with page 432; by reading it she will find that I uttered not one word of appeal to the Chicago Convention for aid for the Temple. I did not forget the promise at Denver when I said, "Now is the day of your opportunity to help pay for the Temple; let not the privilege pass you by, for depend upon it, I will come no more to a National Convention to plead with you for aid for this great enterprise." Neither have I nor shall I. I am going in future to plead with outsiders, and also with the rank and file of the white-ribboners. Many of our leaders have not lifted a voice to aid in the great enterprise. They have been influenced probably by the same motive which moved our Wisconsin sister to write her constituency: "My sisters, Wisconsin work needs every dollar that we can raise, and every dollar sent out of the state cripples us just that much." Our leaders too often forget, in their zeal for their own state work, that "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly." . . "To withhold more than is meet tendeth to poverty." . . "The generous soul shall be made fat." . . "He that watereth shall himself also be watered."

***

Mrs. Hanchett, the corresponding secretary of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., writes that she thinks I have been a little severe on Mrs. Campbell, in hinting that some blame might be attached to her administration in allowing unions in the state to die out. I had no such thought. I merely in refutation to her charge that we had sent Temple documents to places where no unions existed, thought she was more to blame for allowing them to die out than we were in sending to such unions when their names were still to be found on the Wisconsin roster. Personally, I consider Mrs. Campbell a bright, alert woman full of zeal for the success of W. C. T. U. work in her own state.

***

The Temple souvenir spoon is of solid silver and weighs eight ounces to the dozen. A beautiful cut of the Temple is in the bowl of the spoon. The handle is decorated at the top with the globe bound by the white ribbon, and on the center of the handle is a fine profile of Miss Willard. The spoons are not oxidized but are finished in their own bright silver lustre. All persons who place during the year 1894 $3.65 in a mite-box will receive one of these beautiful spoons. This, however, does not hold good when the box is to be credited on the pledge of a union. In such cases we give the beautiful Columbian souvenir, of which Mrs. F. M. Chandler, St. Albans, Me., says: "The Columbian souvenir is a gem which I shall always cherish." Mrs. H. W. Green, Perris, Cal., writes, "The beautiful Temple souvenir is received. I am delighted with it; it is lovelier than I expected."

***

All orders for mite boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. All postoffice orders and checks should be made out in the name of Wm. D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago.

THE W. C. T. U. of Freeport, Stephenson county, Ill., has offered prizes of L. T. L. souvenir spoons for the best two essays offered by children under fifteen years of age in the public schools, on the effects of alcohol and tobacco on the human system. A public meeting is to be held, with addresses on alcohol and narcotics, at the close of which the prizes will be awarded.

Everything Connected with Butter—churns, patters, tubs, firkins—ought to be washed with Pearline. That gets at the soaked-in grease as nothing else in the world can.

Things may seem to be clean when you've washed them in the usual way; but use Pearline, and they really are clean. It might make all the difference, sometimes, between good butter and bad. Wherever you want thorough cleanliness, or want to save your labor, the best thing to do is to use Pearline. 383

Beware of imitations. JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

ATTENTION BOYS!

FOR SIX NEW SUBSCRIBERS

to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send this watch to your address, postpaid.

FOR FOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Fifty Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Seventy-five Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

THIS OFFER IS

FOR BOYS ONLY

Boys who will thank us for this generous offer to own the best pocket time-piece yet made by any Clock Company. Extreme diameter of case 2¼ inches.

As soon as your mind is made up to secure one of these Watches, write to us. Address

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

What folly! To be without BEECHAM'S PILLS.

Publisher's Notes.

ONLY TEN CENTS.

See what we offer you for ten cents:
Fine picture of Neal Dow (ninety years).
Exquisite poem by Mary Lathbury.
Prohibition symposium by forty-six well-known contributors.
Neal Dow. By a fellow townsman.
Neal Dow's Library. By Frances E. Willard.
Poem: A Song for the New Revolution. By Katharine Lente Stevenson.
The Maine Law. By Neal Dow.
The Original Maine Law.
Opinions of Adherents of Prohibition.
Editorial Articles: Prohibition as a Principle—The Provinces of Gospel Temperance and Prohibition—The Licensed Saloon from an Economic Standpoint—Local Option vs Prohibition.

All for TEN CENTS! Think of it! And order 100 copies of THE UNION SIGNAL for distribution, $3 per 100.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ills.

DON'T

Send to us two weeks from now an order for four or five hundred copies of Neal Dow Prohibition Number. We cannot promise them in large quantities longer than two weeks. Remember how early our Crusade edition was exhausted, and send at once.

Single copy	$ .10
5 copies	.25
25 "	.75
100 "	3.00

These are our cash prices.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

YOUR OPPORTUNITY

To make money for your union. Why not order 500 copies of our Neal Dow Prohibition Number at $3 per hundred? Hundreds of your members will gladly pay 5 cents apiece for a copy of this number, giving you an opportunity to make $2.00 per 100.

Then the Souvenir Letter, a reproduction of Neal Dow's own handwriting, will cost you $1 per 100, and you can readily sell them at 2 cents apiece. The beautiful Souvenir Card in several colors would be cheap at 3 cents, but we offer it at $1 per 100.

Send for samples, inclosing 2 cents for postage.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ills.

WIDELY CIRCULATED.

THE UNION SIGNAL has many friends. One of the members of our union writes me that she reads every word of her copy, then lends it to her neighbors, then sends it quite a distance to a niece, who reads it and sends to another friend by mail. This is the history of one copy.

JUST ONCE MORE.

We wish to impress upon you the importance of ordering the Neal Dow Prohibition Number before our edition is exhausted. See prices elsewhere.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

DID YOU OBSERVE

Our Gladstone offer on page 19 of this week's UNION SIGNAL? It is the best premium for the money we have ever offered.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FLOWER MISSION!

FLOWER MISSION!

Oak and Ivy Leaf

Will issue its special

Flower Mission Number

bright and early in March.

It will contain a variety of interesting reading on this favorite and beautiful work of the white-ribboners.

Letters of Jennie Casseday to a Y friend will be printed for the first time.

Tried and Proved Plans

of work will be furnished, with pointed suggestions.

Incidents of flower missioner's labors and aue among its contents.

Special prices for this number for distribution.

Per 100 copies, $1.50.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SOUND ABROAD THE FAME OF
THE UNIVERSAL FAVORITE

CRAB-APPLE ∴ BLOSSOM ∴ PERFUME

AND THE WORLD RENOWNED

CROWN ∴ LAVENDER ∴ SALTS

EXCLUSIVE PRODUCTIONS OF

THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.,
177 New Bond Street, London.

Asked For all Over the World. Annual Sales More than Half a Million Bottles.
Sold only in Crown Stoppered Bottles as shown above.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

CHEAP LEAFLETS.

We are constantly having a demand for cheap leaflets. Order our Busy Day leaflets, 15c. a hundred; $1 per thousand. Good paper, clear type, and so to the point you can afford to give a moment to them on a busy day. Here are the titles. There are nine of them:

No. 1. A $200,000 glass of beer.
" 2. Liquid Bread.
" 3. Freedom or Slavery.
" 4. New Method of Training.
" 5. Home vs. the Saloon.
" 6. Intemperance and the Catholic Church.
" 7. Catholics and Prohibition.
" 8. The Yellow Flag.
" 9. An Accommodating Business.

Price 15c. per hundred; $1 per thousand.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY Songs of the Pentecost.

Edited by CHAS. H. GABRIEL and Rev. ISAAC NAYLOR.
224 Pages, Single Copy, 30c., postpaid.
Per doz., $3, not prepaid; per hundred, $25, not prepaid.
GEO. HUGHES & CO. Publishers, 62 & 64 Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED—Young women to train for nurses. Inclose stamp. People's Health Journal, Chicago.

CARDS Send 2c. stamp for Sample Book of all the FINEST and Latest Style Cards for 1894. We sell GENUINE CARDS NOT TRASH. UNION CARD CO., COLUMBUS, OHIO.

LADIES' FANCY WORK MANUEL.
A new book, just out, with all the latest ideas in Needle Work, Crochet, Knitting and Embroidery. Contains 500 patterns of Knitted Laces, Charming Crochet patterns, and directions to make articles for home decorations, tidies, chair-scarfs, doylies, purses, table mats, shopping bags, lamp shades, shawls, Afghans, toilet sets, counterpanes, sofa-cushions, chair-covers, pin-cushions, dressing slippers, babies' socks. Complete instructions with each design. Illustrated with 95 engravings. I send this Great Book Free to any one sending 10 cents to pay postage.
Mme. TOUISSART, Box 3139, Boston, Mass

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN or label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

CANCER Its cure by scientific local treatment. 20 Years Experience. Book Free. Drs. McLeish and Weber, 123 John Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalog free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 26, Chicago, Ill.

$18.50 Carriage for	$9.25.
$12.00 " "	$5.95.
$5.00 " "	$2.75.

$3.50 HUNTING CASE GENTS OR LADIES SIZE

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price, $3.50 and express charges, and it is yours. Guarantee for 5 Years sent with every watch, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you One Free. Write at once, as we shall send out samples for 60 days only. Address
THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

PREMIUM FOR MOTHERS

JUST PUBLISHED.

...Mr. Gladstone in Hawarden Chapel...

AN IMPORTED ART REPRODUCTION FROM THE ORIGINAL PAINTING BY SIDNEY HALL.

Original Price, in Oak Frame, Glass and Mat, - $8.00
" " Gilt Frame, represented below, 5.00

The picture which we offer you, and of which the above cut can give only a meager idea, is an imported art reproduction of Mr. Hall's painting, faithful to the original, even to the brush marks, and admirably preserving its exquisite coloring in the flesh tints of the face, and the light that comes through the stained window.

The picture is on canvas, mounted on stretchers, after the manner of the best oil paintings, and is fitted in a heavy 4-inch frame of the pattern seen in the cut, of the best gilt. It will not tarnish.

Outside measure of frame 23x28 inches.

It can also be furnished in polished oak frame with glass mat.

Outside measure, 30x36.

Can also be furnished without frame.

Size of picture alone 15x21 inches.

●●●●●●●●●●●●

We want to get OUR paper into YOUR hands, and into the hands of your friends. We are willing to sacrifice the picture to build up the circulation of the paper. The price at which we offer the picture is NOT the measure of its value.

We offer the $8 picture (in oak frame) for 20 new subscribers at $1 each.
" " $5 " gilt " " 8 " " " $1 "
" " picture unframed 5 " " " $1 "

If you cannot get the subscribers send us the names of 20 persons of your acquaintance who MIGHT subscribe, together with $5, and we will send you the $8 picture.

Or send the names of 8 persons who MIGHT subscribe, together with $3, and we will send you the $5 picture.

Or send the name of 1 person who MIGHT subscribe, together with $1.25, and we will send you the unframed picture.

Express prepaid in each instance. Address

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASS'N
...The Temple, Chicago...

PICTURE LEAFLETS

1 What the Robins told the Apple Blossoms.
2 A Bible Story.
3 Hands out, Young Man.
4 My Soldier Boy.
5 How to use Money.
6 Daisy's Letter.
7 Story of a Temperance Block.
8 Jack.
9 The Boy's Promise.
10 One Room in House Beautiful.
11 Phil's Pony.
12 The Boy's Victory.
13 Teddy.

PRICE, 15c. per 100; $1 per 1,000.

BUSY DAY LEAFLETS

1 A $200,000 Glass of Beer
2 Liquid Bread
3 Freedom or Slavery
4 A New Method
5 Home vs the Saloon
6 Intemperance and the Catholic Church
7 Catholics and Prohibition
8 The Yellow Flag
9 An Accommodating Business
10 Gospel of Song

PRICE, 15c. per 100; $1 per 1,000.

DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS.

Short, Spicy, Strong.

Just what you need in your department work, and only fifteen cents per 100. $1.25 per 1,000.

Order at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TEACH THE MASSES.

This is your opportunity to teach the masses the effects of prohibition as illustrated by the life and works of Neal Dow. Send for our Prohibition number.

See prices.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

LONG LOOKED FOR, COME AT LAST, OR COMING!

The first chapters of

A GREAT MOTHER

The Long-Promised Biography of

MADAM WILLARD

Are already in type. The book will be ideal, both in matter and style, and is one which all white-ribboners will hail with delight.

Begin planning at once for its purchase, and watch these columns from week to week for announcements concerning its price and date of publication. It is confidently expected to be ready about Easter.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION.

Send for specimens of our Neal Dow birthday card. Samples two cents each; $1.50 per hundred.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS

Attention!

HURRY in your orders for the QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON, which is issued as a

Supplement to the

March Young Crusader

NOTICE OUR TERMS:

Supplement without Crusader.

100	$ .65
500	2.75
1,000	5.00

Supplement and Crusader.

100	$ 1.00
500	4.75
1,000	9.00
2,000	15.00
5,000	35.00
8,000	48.00

Postage paid by us. All orders between numbers named at the rate immediately preceding.

Send order in time to distribute in your schools on the Sunday preceding the date of the lesson, which is March 18.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Signal Notes.

THERE are twenty-six women voters in Ireland.

NEARLY one thousand children are born annually in London workhouses.

MAINE has no breweries or distilleries, but it has thirty loan and building associations in active operation.

EVEN if prohibition does not prohibit in Kansas, the penitentiary population has fallen off sixty per cent since 1880.

THE floating population of the Thames numbers some three hundred thousand souls, over twenty thousand sleeping in that part called the port of London.

MISS GOOLD, of the Women's Help Society, London, says that drink more than anything else puts women wage-earners at the mercy of the sweaters.

KITCHEN refuse in Berlin is being carted to factories, dried, ground and pressed into bricks for fuel. A novel way, surely, of solving that sanitary question.

IN Belfast, Ireland, the average mortality of children of sober parents is eight per cent, whilst the average for those of drinking parents is seventy per cent.

"TOTAL Abstinence vs. Moderate Drinking," was the subject recently for debate by one of the literary societies in Glasgow University. The former won by sixty-six to thirty-two.

So many accidents have been traced to drunken employés on the Trans-Andes line in Chili that the directors have decided to discharge any one who shall be caught under the influence of liquor. Good for Chili!

A NEW plan now on foot in Kansas will strengthen the cause of prohibition in the larger cities. The plan is to secure a bill through the next legislature which will provide for the payment of metropolitan police out of the state treasury instead of the city, as now. It is also stated that there are more prosecutions against the liquor men pending to-day than ever before, and the president of the state temperance union, Rev. D. C. Miller, does not hesitate to attack men in high places.

ON the 20th of March a great meeting is to be held in Exeter Hall, London, to celebrate Neal Dow's 90th birthday, on which occasion Lady Henry Somerset, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the two leaders in Great Britain, will speak, and James H. Raper, than whom the movement has not produced a finer speaker, will pronounce a eulogy upon his honored friend and comrade, who in England did hardly less than in America to set the key-note for the total separation of the state from the manufacture and sale of that which is the supreme curse of humanity.

"I NEVER saw a larger or more impressive funeral. It was a personal sorrow to hundreds, and the sight of the crowds of every creed and class from the Sisters of Charity to the Salvation Army workers, high and low, babes in their mothers' arms, toddling children and gray-haired men and women who flocked to gaze on his dear face showed the deep love in which he was held." This extract is from a letter about that good man, Major Howland, of Toronto. Any funeral service that called out Sisters of Charity and Salvation Army ought to be commended.

FROM Tabor, Iowa, comes word of a new plan of Christian helpfulness, in the form of a benefit fund. Each church member is asked to contribute to this fund a small sum of money yearly and in return the benefits received are, regular sanitary inspection of homes, free medical care in case of sickness, the receipt of three dollars per week while disabled, free burial in case of death, and for those who must travel a certificate equivalent to a letter of credit, most valuable in case of emergency. Such a plan systematizes work among that hardest of all classes to help—the respectable poor—and it might well be widely adopted.

AN ASTHMA CURE AT LAST.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

Keep Up With the Times,

don't cling to the imperfect things. Do you use cereal foods on your breakfast table? Then you need cream. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream is decidedly superior in richness and flavor to ordinary milk or cream.

IVORY SOAP
IVORY
IT FLOATS
FORTY MILLION CAKES YEARLY.
THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

"A bright home makes a merry heart"—
JOY TRAVELS ALONG with SAPOLIO.

It is a solid cake of scouring soap. Try it in your next house-cleaning.
All work should be so done as to give joy to the worker. Perhaps you have never felt joyful when cleaning house? You never will till you use SAPOLIO to assist you. House-cleaning has been revolutionized since housewives first learned its value. Why shouldn't you find joy in your work? All Grocers sell SAPOLIO.

A Beautiful Home.
Why Not Have One?
Our handsomely illustrated book tells you all about it. Shows Designs of many Beautiful Homes, also designs for laying out and beautifying your grounds, sent for 20c. in postage or silver, or WILL SEND IT FREE to any one ordering our 1894 book. (Just out.)
"NEW MODEL DWELLINGS,"
And How Best to Build Them.
This beautiful book contains Designs, Plans and Interior Views of over 100 Beautiful Homes costing $400 to $15,000, with correct estimates of cost. For Convenience and Artistic Merit, the houses shown in this book far surpass anything yet published. Price, $1.00.
GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

EVERY WOMAN SHOULD KNOW About ZOA-PHORA—
A True Nerve Tonic.
Not a Stimulant or Narcotic.
Expressly for Weakly Women.
Full information and testimonials sent sealed.
Address ZOA-PHORA MEDICINE CO., H. G. COLMAN, SEC'Y, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

SCHOLARSHIP AND EXPERIENCE GUARANTEE EXCELLENCE.
LITERARY BUREAU.
Data Furnished for Lectures, Essays, Speeches, Articles, Pamphlets, Compilations or written in full.
Manuscripts Corrected, Revised, Reviewed, Edited.
Specialties—Education, Economics, Statistics, Politics, Law.
J. W. C. JONES, Sec., Room 96, 234 La Salle St., CHICAGO.
Chicago's Great Libraries afford superior facilities for Reference and Research.

AGENTS $10 a day at home selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating Jewelry, Watches, Tableware, Bicycles, etc. Plates finest jewelry good as new, and on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. Anyone can plate the first effort. Goods need plating at every house. Outfits complete. Different sizes, all warranted. Wholesale to agents $5 up. Big profits, good seller. Circulars free.
H. F. Delno & Co. Dept. No. 6, Columbus, O.

THE LATEST. THE MINSTREL SHOW. A book full of fun. Contains Comic Songs, End Men's Jokes and Stories, Conundrums, Darkey Dialogues, Stump Speeches, Burlesque Lectures and Plantation Sketches, Farces, Afterpieces, Negro Songs and Dances, Banjo Solos, Songs and Marches. It is the largest and best collection of Minstrel wit ever published, and all who enjoy a good laugh will find it just the book. We send this Great Book Free to any one sending us 10 cents to pay postage. Also our Catalogue Guns, Revolvers, Musical Instruments, Magic Tricks. All for 10c. Order quick.
BATES & CO., 74 Pearl St., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED for MOTHER STEWART'S new book, "THE CRUSADER IN GREAT BRITAIN." Is creating great interest on both sides of the water. Crowded full of humor, fun, pathos and valuable history. Just the book that agents like to handle. Price $1. Address
M. CAMPBELL, Springfield, Ohio.

Now is the time to make money by raising early chickens. Get a INVINCIBLE HATCHER for $17, and start out right. Send 4c. in stamps for No. 76 Catalogue to BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO., Springfield, O.

WANTED—INTELLIGENT LADY in every town to introduce the new "Youths Cyclopedia," prepared expressly for Teachers Pupils and Students. This is the one book that in these close times is bringing large profits to capable agents. Our school and installment plan makes quick work and brings big results. No capital required. Address
C. B. BEACH & CO., 216 Clark St., Chicago.

CANCER permanently cured. No plaster. No knife. No poison. No
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama

High Arm FREE TRIAL in your own home for 30 days without paying one cent in advance; machine to be returned at our expense if unsatisfactory. We take all risks, pay freight, ship anywhere, to anyone, in any quantity at wholesale prices. $65 Kenwood machine, $24.50; $55 Arlington, $20.50; $45 Arlington, $17.50; $35 High Arm Gem, $12. We sell all makes and styles, from cheapest $7.95 to best "Kenwood," $24.50. All attachments free. THREE HIGHEST WORLD'S FAIR MEDALS AWARDED. Over 100,000 now in use. Buy direct from factory. Save agents large profits. Catalogue and testimonials free. Write at once. Address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 W. VanBuren St., Dept. A 151, Chicago, Ill.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT. $14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair.
OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo.

DOUBLE Breech-Loader $6.00. RIFLES $2.00 WATCHES GUNS BICYCLES $15 All kinds cheaper than elsewhere. Before you buy, send stamp for catalogue to POWELL & CLEMENT CO. 166 Main St., Cincinnati, O.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc. List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

LITHOGRAPH LETTER FROM NEAL DOW.

Every temperance boy and every temperance girl will prize a souvenir of Neal Dow's Birthday, and you can give it to them for just one cent. Think of it, a letter in Neal Dow's own handwriting with a vignette of his face on the outside of the letter, all for one cent! $1 per hundred. Cash must accompany order. Send for 100, and distribute in your Loyal Temperance Legion. Do not delay. We can fill your orders at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FROM OUR BOYS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10, 1894.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I am a boy eight years old. I'm the youngest boy in the Second Grammar School. I'm also a temperance boy. I do not swear. I shall not use tobacco nor liquor. I am pleased with my watch, and I carry it to school, and I'm very glad that I got it, and I thank you.

LINCOLN, VA., Feb. 13, 1894.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASS'N:

I received in good order the watch you sent me, and I like it very much. It meets my expectations, and I hope the four new subscribers I sent you will be pleased with THE UNION SIGNAL, and be permanent ones in the future, and embrace and practice the principles advocated therein. As ever your little temperance boy. —— ——.

FOR THE GIRLS.

An appeal comes for a premium watch for the girls. We cannot recommend our watch offer to the girls unless it is to be used in the school-room or at home as a clock. It is too large for the use of girls, but if you wish to see for yourselves, we will send one postpaid for $1.50.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NEAL DOW CARD.

The Neal Dow Card, printed in colors, with excellent likeness in vignette of this noble man, is one of the prettiest souvenirs ever issued from our press. You will not be disappointed when you see it, and however large your order, you will wish you had doubled it.

Price $1 per 100.

Cash must accompany order.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NEAL DOW PROHIBITION NUMBER.

Have you seen our fine Neal Dow Prohibition Number? If so, you will indorse our opinion that the beautiful reproduction of Neal Dow on the cover page is alone worth the price of the number.

Single copies, 10 cents.

Only $3 a 100.

Orders must be accompanied by cash.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

DO

Send at once for our Neal Dow Prohibition Number if you really wish it at all. We are receiving large orders, and it is important for your own sake and ours you should order at once. We do not wish to disappoint you. The very finest issue of THE UNION SIGNAL ten cents only. 100 copies for $ are our cash prices.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

WHO WILL START THE BOYS?

KENNEBUNK, ME., Feb. 17, 1894.

A young girl in this place wishes a watch. Cannot you give the girls a chance as well as the boys? I have started out one boy and hope he may succeed, for if he does I think others may try to do the same, and thus your good paper will, as it ought, have more readers in this place.

MUST HAVE THE SIGNAL.

An "Old Crusader," in renewing her subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, says:

"I have been without butter since last September to get THE UNION SIGNAL. Am an old subscriber, and feel I must have it."

Watch for our coupon advertisement in next week's issue. It will interest you.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 10.] CHICAGO, March 8, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Illinois equal suffragists held their twenty-first annual convention at Danville, Ill., last week.

According to the United States comptroller of the currency, the financial situation is greatly improved.

Armed guards now patrol the World's Fair buildings at Jackson Park as a protection against incendiaries.

The proposed amendment to the constitution of Iowa, giving women the full ballot, was lost in the Senate by six votes.

Gifts amounting to three hundred thousand dollars have been received by the Western Reserve University, Cleveland, O.

Board of trade members representing eleven of the largest cities in the United States have protested against anti-option legislation.

Women have been appointed by the governor of Colorado to act as trustees of the state industrial school and the state institute for the deaf, mute and blind, under the new equal suffrage law.

Senhor Prudente de Moraes was elected president of Brazil at the elections last week, which passed off quietly, and it is hoped the change in the administration will put an end to the protracted war.

The former owner of the Pall Mall Gazette has offered two hundred thousand dollars to build a monumental chapel connected with Westminster Abbey, by a cloister from the famous poets' corner.

The seigniorage bill, which has been delayed by its opponents in the House of Representatives, was finally passed, March 1. The bill provides for the coining of all silver bullion in the treasury and the issue of silver certificates thereon.

Florida has been well named the "promised land of the prize-fighters," in view of the recent disgraceful encounter in which one champion (?) was permitted to expend his brute strength in pommeling another, for which illegal act he has since been arrested and acquitted by a cowardly Jacksonville jury.

The election laws in Colorado have been amended by the special session of the state legislature, which adjourned March 2, to provide for house to house registration for women. The names of candidates on the ballots are grouped under the offices for which they stand instead of under party columns.

A bill to extend the precincts of New York to include Brooklyn and many outlying counties has been passed by the state legislature, and only awaits the sanction of the resident voters next fall. The additions will give the eastern metropolis a population of nearly three millions, and make it the second largest city in the world.

THE W. C. T. U. protest to Congress on behalf of the proposed increased whisky tax has, much to our rejoicing, met with hearty approval on the part of the religious press and Christian people of the country.

WE are rejoiced to learn that the mayor of Lincoln, Neb., Mr. A. H. Weir, meant what he said when he ordered the houses of ill-fame in his city closed and not only the inmates arrested, but every man who was seen entering such places. As we have previously mentioned, the mayor issued a six weeks' notice, thus enabling all to either reform their ways or leave the town. The W. C. T. U. of Lincoln has been instrumental, through the experienced services of Mrs. Major French, of Omaha, a Salvation Army worker, in reaching a large number of the erring women and placing them under wholesome influence. Every white-ribboner should express to Mayor Weir her personal gratitude for his righteous administration of the city government.

VICTORIA WOODHULL and her sister, Tennie C. Claflin, are well remembered in America and no one will be surprised that the latter (now Lady Cook) is writing articles for the British press in favor of the liquor traffic and strongly against the temperance people and their "total abstinence fanaticism."

SUNDAY rest has been adopted by the great Erie railway in an order from the receivers which took effect last Saturday at midnight. By the new arrangement no common freight trains will be started hereafter between the hours of twelve o'clock Saturday night and twelve o'clock Sunday night, and only necessary trains will be run. The order affects about eight thousand men and it is hoped that other roads will quickly follow the excellent example set by the Erie system, which cannot but react beneficially to the company.

THE Polyglot Petition has been introduced into several colleges since the Minnesota state university began circulating it so extensively. These colleges are at North Chili, N. Y., Delaware, O., Lebanon, Ill., Lowell, Ind., Valley City, N. Dak., and Marysville, Mo. This is a work which the W. C. T. U. in college towns can prosecute most appropriately and effectively during the remainder of this year, as up to the time of our annual Convention in Cleveland next fall, names will be received and attached to the great Petition in the order in which they arrive.

DOUBTLESS every local union is now in the midst of preparations for the celebration of Neal Dow's birthday, March 20. Judging from the large number of orders already received for our Neal Dow number, the observance will be universal. Many are asking for the best literature to distribute. While nothing is better than the special number of THE UNION SIGNAL issued February 22, price three dollars a hundred, we would also advise a free distribution of our prohibition leaflets, such as Timely Talks, Nos. 1, 12, 13, 29, 30 and 32, which cost only thirty cents a hundred, the Neal Dow souvenir card, one dollar and fifty cents per hundred, and the lithograph letter for the boys and girls at one dollar a hundred.

A CASE of attempted evasion of the prohibitory law has just been ended in Vermont after dragging its slow length for twelve years through the various courts. In 1882 the plaintiff, a liquor dealer, sent liquor to Rutland in jugs for which he was convicted, receiving a fine of 28,836 days, or seventy-nine years in the house of correction. In the county court he pleaded guilty to 307 offenses, reducing the penalty to sixty years. The United States Supreme Court decided that it had no jurisdiction and the state supreme court has just supported the law by a fine of $6,160 (to be served out at the rate of fifty cents a day). May every law breaker find it equally as impossible to evade his penalty, and realize that "though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceedingly small."

AN editorial in the Inter Ocean of Chicago, upon Mrs. Cleveland's refusal to receive Miss Anthony and her associates of the Woman Suffrage convention closes with the following words which will be heartily indorsed by the W. C. T. U.: "The cause of woman's suffrage will not, however, suffer from this little episode. Miss Anthony and her associates may be assured that the public has no sympathy with it. It will be recalled that of all the visitors to the World's Fair none received more consideration than Miss Anthony. She was a general favorite wherever she went, and in the Woman's Building her marble shadow occupied the dais of honor. In innumerable ways the especial champions of the cause to which her life has been devoted were recognized as worthy of all commendation, for there is something grand in devotion to any unselfish purpose."

THE Advance Guard for February is a special Neal Dow number, which will be found of great value to the Senior L. T. L. and leaders of juvenile temperance bands. The story of his life is attractively told by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National L. T. L. superintendent, and by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, the editor, who also furnishes a good program for L. T. L. meetings on General Dow's birthday, March 20. The letter of the "father of prohibition" to the boys and girls, fac simile of his own handwriting, is found here, and it can also be obtained for distribution in letter form, with the Portland stamp, at one cent each, from our publishing house.

THE daily papers report that most disgraceful scenes were enacted in the House of Representatives on Washington's birthday. This day is usually a holiday but a session was ordered to consider the Bland bill, which at present is the bone of contention. In order to secure the necessary quorum a number of members had been arrested which caused great indignation and the session, if the reports are even partially true, was bedlam let loose. We are very far from exulting over such scenes; on the contrary they fill us with mortification and sorrow, but the question will creep into our minds, whether the character of this august body would be seriously lowered by the admission of women.

THE political topic of last week in Great Britain and in America, as well, was the retirement of Mr. Gladstone from the British Premiership. His resignation to the Queen was privately presented at Windsor Castle on Friday, March 2, and circulated publicly the following day. For sixty-one years Mr. Gladstone has been a prominent member of the House of Commons, and for the last decade, at least, his leadership of the Liberal party has placed him practically at the head of the government. His eloquence and zeal in the advocacy of the humble and oppressed has increased rather than diminished as old age crept on, until now at eighty-five he stands without a rival in the realms of oratory in the House of Commons. Apparently his retirement is purely from personal motives, superinduced by a temporary difficulty of the eyes, and his abdication of the real scepter of the greatest power of Europe is without parallel in history. Women have cause to feel that Mr. Gladstone might have advocated their interests far more than he has, particularly by indorsing woman's suffrage, and still we would not detract in his old age from the title that is peculiarly his—"The Grand Old Man."

THE city of Detroit, Mich., was last week the scene of a most significant meeting—that of the Student Volunteer missionaries. Nearly two thousand young men and women in earnest conclave with aged ministers of the Gospel and experienced missionaries as to the ways and means for bringing the world to Christ is a sight to encourage the faintest Christian heart. These students represented over three hundred colleges in the United States and Canada, and almost every foreign missionary field was represented by a returned missionary. Dr. A. T. Pierson, the father of the volunteer movement, which originated in 1886, at Mount Herman, Mass., was present and gave a powerful address on the necessary sacrifices of work for Christ. He declared that the greatest sin of the ministry of to-day is avarice, but he could not have had the vast majority of low-salaried, devoted ministers in mind. Addresses were made by practical missionaries on the great need of preparation, intellectually as well as spiritually. All hearts were touched by the tender and solemn words of the aged Dr. J. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China inland mission, in which there are six hundred missionaries with eight hundred native helpers and four thousand communicants. Dr. Taylor's central thought was, "The missionary should be able to see God."

MEADOW LARKS UPON THE SNOW.

BY D. L. P.

In the winter storm and cold,
Far from sheltered branch or wold,
With their crescent plumaged breast
Shadowed on the drifted crest,
Showering round the silver spray.
Thus I saw these birds to-day.
In the evening's sombre glow,
Meadow larks upon the snow.

Blithely from each swelling throat,
Rang a clear and joyous note—
Short, but passing sweet, the strain,
Leaving till it rose again.
Ever strong desire to be Flooded with that minstrelsy;
As they fluttered to and fro—
Meadow larks upon the snow.

In the spirit's counterpart
Of the winter of the heart,
When it lieth bleak and chill,
Sorrow-fettered, dark and still,
When the icy breath of doubt
Gathers all its strings about.
Would it then might see and know
Meadow larks upon the snow.

Every outward waving wing
Heralds earth's fair blossoming.
So upon the inward ear
Breaks the whisper, "Spring is near."
And the songs of gladness roll
O'er the dim wastes of the soul,
As around it come and go
Meadow larks upon the snow.

Wawa, Pa.

THE PARSON'S CRUSADE.

BY J. F. COWAN.

Parson Ironsides had just cleverly settled down in the new parsonage at Idlersville, when he observed a drunken man reeling past his front gate.

"Well, I declare!" he exclaimed to his wife, "that isn't a very encouraging spectacle; and as we have come here to make our home and do good unto this people, I mean to find out before I make my garden or patch up the hen-house, where that man got his drink and under what authority it was sold him."

"Yes," said his wife with a smile, "there you go at your old practices. I am afraid you will get into trouble again, dear. You know how bitter such people are about any interference with what they call their business."

"Well," said the parson, "I am just as jealous about their interference with my business, or rather my Father's business. They shan't make drunkards here, if I can help it. And as to getting into trouble, I'll be sure to keep on God's side of the question, and then I shall get out of it again."

He came back a little later, with his face a trifle pale and his lips set and hands clenched. "I tell you what, wife," said he, "this little village is one of the worst sinks of iniquity we have ever dropped down into. There are no less than a dozen vile places which are making drunkards and doing worse. They are patronized largely by the oil men. There'll have to be some hard work done here to break it up."

"Break it up? Why, Jeremiah, you wouldn't think of trying such a thing, would you—a dozen whisky shops with all their supporters and friends? They'll drive you out of town inside of a week."

"Not if I have the law on my side," said he, decisively—"and God; and that's precisely what I am going to have. Listen, little woman, I have a scheme to unfold to you."

There was a few moments of whispered conversation, during which his wife did the part of a listener, shaking her head doubtingly now and then; but, at the close, she reluctantly gave her assent to the plan, and for the next few moments the Rev. Jeremiah Ironsides was busy at his writing table with pen and ink and several sheets of foolscap paper.

"Are you going at it right away, dear?" she asked anxiously, as though dreading the impending conflict.

"No, it might excite inquiry, and if they discovered my plan of attack it would give them an opportunity to defeat me. I must get the signatures before they know what I am driving at."

In the dusk of the evening, with his little wife by his side, the new preacher set out to make his rounds of visitation. His calls were sharp, short and decisive. After talking a few moments about the affairs of the church and its plans and prospects for the future, he said: "What a nice little village this would be if it were only incorporated, and so had authority to build a few sidewalks and put lamps at its street corners and regulate a few other things, which, as long as they are everybody's business are attended to by no one and degenerate into nuisances."

"Why, certainly," was the usual response, "we had never thought of that before. Why not incorporate the community?"

"Easy enough," was the parson's answer; "all you want is so many petitioners. You see I have slightly anticipated you; just sign this and I'll warrant there'll be enough of us and the thing is done."

He did not find it a difficult task to secure the requisite number of signers. Some were surprised to find that the community was not already a corporated village; others had been thinking about the very same thing and were glad to put their thoughts into action. And so, before many evenings passed, the requisite number of signatures had been obtained for the incorporation of the community as a village.

"Now, wife," said the parson the next morning; "I am going to harness up old Gray and drive over to the county seat and have this petition duly presented to the court. I don't know exactly how long it will take to get it through but I intend to stay by it until it is safe. I may not be back for several days. Good-by."

His first step was to consult a lawyer. He chose a bright young man who was a prominent working member in one of the churches, and had already made a record for himself on the temperance question.

"Mr. Ironsides," said the lawyer, "this petition will have to wait over until the second term of the court, as due notice will have to be given for one term in advance."

This was a staggerer to the parson of Idlersville. He was afraid of nothing but delay, but he did not know what harm that might work to his plans.

"Are you sure that is in the law books?" he asked.

"Oh, certainly," said the young man smiling, "here it is, read for yourself."

He did read, and did not stop his reading with that reference. He pored on and on over the dry, musty book. The lawyer looked up from his work several times in amused surprise. Finally, seeing that the parson had paused in his reading, he remarked: "You must have mistaken your calling, parson; you seem to be a great deal interested in the law."

"I tell you," said Parson Ironsides, bringing his fist down upon the table with a resounding whack, "there's only one other way to do it. We must have the court appoint special constables at its present session, and give the people a taste of clean, wholesome administration before the time comes for acting on the petition."

"What do you mean?" queried the lawyer in surprise.

"I mean this," said the parson, "that if my petition has to go over for three months, some one will smell a rat and get up a counter-petition against the incorporation, which will defeat my plan, unless I can in the meantime take the bull by the horn and show the people of Idlersville what a blessing it will be to have their streets free from drunkards and harlots, and their town purged of the curse of dramshops and wicked places."

"But," said the lawyer, "I don't see how it can be done; there's no law for it."

"There ought to be law for it," replied the parson, "and I believe there is, and mean to find it."

From one law office he went to another, making his inquiry; but in every one he met the same answer: "No law for it; no law for it."

But among his counselors in the church at Idlersville was one shrewd old brother who years ago, under the old régime, had officiated for a long time as a county judge. "If you hunt long enough, and go far enough back," he had told him, "you will find somewhere on the statute books an unrepealed law which gives the courts authority to appoint county constables."

And so he searched and searched, until finally, after a week's absence from home, during which his little wife had become quite anxious about him, he sallied into the court-room one morning his face wreathed in smiles.

"Mr. Lawyer," he said, laying down the book in which his forefinger was inserted as a mark, "I want you now to present my petition for the appointment of county constables for Idlersville, and here's the authority for it."

The lawyer looked surprised, but in a moment nodded his head.

"Now, if it please your honor," he said, rising to his feet as soon as an opportunity was presented, "I have here a petition of a citizen of our county, asking for the appointment of an excise constable for Idlersville. It is in the oil region, and licentiousness and drunkenness are rife there; and your petitioner asks relief from the court."

"Who is to pay this constable?" asked the judge thoughtfully.

"Your honor," replied the lawyer, "the expense would of course devolve upon the county, as there is no other provision."

"I don't see what authority there is to do it," replied the judge.

"Your honor," said the lawyer, "I doubted myself if there was any such authority, and so, I presume, would every lawyer in court; but the petitioner has perseveringly unearthed an old statute providing for what he asks. Shall I read?"

The upshot of the matter was that Parson Ironsides went home with a copy of the judge's order for a constable in his pocket.

Next week the crusade began in earnest. The illicit whisky shops were closed up by prosecutions and heavy fines. Notorious characters were driven out of town, drunkards and brawlers upon the streets were made to feel that the strong arm of the law had been invoked against them. Idlersville was stirred all over its surface, which is only another way of saying it was stirred to its deepest depths.

It was not long until shrewd guesses and rumors began to connect the new parson with this changed order of things; and many and fierce were the maledictions called down upon his head and—his horse's tail. The last named on this wise.

One morning the stable door was noticed opened. On hastening out to see what it meant, there stood poor old Gray, the most ludicrous looking object, minus tail and mane. Around his neck was tied a paper bearing the notice: "Bee Wair, if you don't stop arresting people you will be kild."

"This is dreadful!" said his wife.

"It would be dreadful if I should not do my duty," said the parson, solemnly. And his wife knew what that meant.

His ecclesiastical advisers waited on him, and cautiously advised him to be politic.

"I used to write in my old copy-book 'Honesty is the best policy,'" said he, grimly.

"You'll bring their wrath down upon your head. They'll injure, if not kill you."

"I'm only a poor, weak instrument of the Almighty. He has plenty more. I don't think they can make much headway against Him!"

And so the crusade went on, until the place was purged of its lawlessness, and the people who had feared to speak against it, lest they lose patronage, or friendship, or political influence, came out and acknowledged it was a good thing, and either patted the brave old man on the back patronizingly, or claimed a share of the credit.

Of course the place was incorporated, and got sidewalks and street lamps and police officers; and, of course, it might have laid twenty-five years longer in the mire of its own degradation, had it not been for the plucky parson.

Pittsburg, Pa.

THE FIRST TIME I SAW NEAL DOW.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The Crusade cyclone of 1874, when it struck the Illinois prairies in one of its outermost eddies, caught me up and drew me in. After that, strange to say, my first thought was not of those modern Joan of Arcs, who, for God and country had done and dared against such mighty odds, but I determined to see Dr. Dio Lewis, of Boston, whose books on hygiene I had known for years, and who, as everybody knows, was like the "hand on the rocking stone" that started the movement called "The Women's Crusade." To me this good man incarnated the educational and moral suasion forces of the temperance reform, while Gen. Neal Dow, of Maine, was the embodiment of those legal measures by which, in the last analysis, public sentiment is crystallized upon the statute book.

And so, in the summer of 1874, I sought an interview with each of these true men, so different in physique, temperament, outlook and achievement. I found Dr. Dio Lewis in his Turkish bath hotel and home on Beacon street, a famous institution, which shed forth no end of wholesome influences throughout the nation. I soon saw that if he had made the study of health his lifelong topic, it was because he himself largely lacked that supreme earthly blessing. From evident tokens I knew he was not a well man, and his death many years ago, there is reason to believe, was only delayed so long (I think he was somewhat over sixty) by obedience on his part to those simple principles of hygiene which he has so wisely and attractively inculcated in his books.

He told me the story of his childhood home, his mother's devotion, her Bible reading and prayer in the saloon frequented by his father; the revolution wrought by this heroic action on that father and in that home, and that he knew no other way by which the dramshops of the nation could be closed. He gloried in the work of the women in the West, and hoped it would become universal. This was his message, and the whole of it.

Passing on to Portland, Me., I learned that Gen. Neal Dow was to speak at Old Orchard Beach near by, at the first gospel temperance camp meeting known to history. It was convened by Francis Murphy, then recently reformed, and was my first general introduction to the public as a temperance worker.

On a balmy summer day, with the breath of the pine woods making the air fragrant, the distant roll of the waves booming straight across three thousand miles of sea, and before a great audience of sturdy New England men and women, I first saw Neal Dow. It was a moment of exceeding interest, for in my Wisconsin home my father and mother had idealized this brave chieftain to my thought, and when in 1851 he had secured the "Maine Law," since then famous the world around, my father, himself a legislator, had said to my mother, "When will poor, rum-cursed Wisconsin get a law like that?" and she had dared to answer gently, "When women vote!"

General Neal Dow did not know with what thoughtful and affectionate eyes he was watched that morning from the hard bench in the great tree-canopied auditorium by a woman from the West who had just resigned her relations to a university and who hoped a call might come to her to cast in her lot henceforward with the temperance movement of the time. "There he comes, the grand old warrior!" said a man in front of me, and with a light, springing step the well knit and alert figure of "prohibition's father" came up the steps of the pretty rustic platform and stood before us amid universal applause in which no pair of hands beat time with more enthusiasm than mine. He was then seventy years of age, but seemed much less than sixty. His hair was white; his fine intellectual head with broad, full brow, his keen, steady, gray eyes, his strong nose and pleasant smiling mouth, equally full of determination and good cheer, his quick, incisive utterances and vigorous but graceful gestures, all made an indelible impression upon my mind. As there were many of us present from the West, General Dow told the story of how the thought of legal ostracism for the dram-shop originated in his mind, and I was deeply touched when I learnt that his loyalty to a woman's home and little children had nerved the arm of the prohibition chief.

The General told us that one evening he and his wife were cozily seated for the evening and he was reading aloud, when the sad figure and despairing face of one near and dear to them entered with the words: "I cannot keep my secret longer, and I have come to you for help." Dear lady, she thought as many another has done, that the shame and misery of her home were secrets, when they were the gossip of the unfriendly and the tender regret of the loyal and true. Her husband was a government official, and in every way a worthy and upright citizen "when he was himself," but the moderate drinking customs of those days had, in his case, continued to their logical, or perhaps I should say, their physiological sequence, and his appetite was fast becoming uncontrollable. His wife had received notice from his employers, who had repeatedly condoned previous offenses of a like character, that unless he were in his place the next day he would lose his situation. In her poverty, anxiety and agony, she told her story, and said to General Dow: "I beg you to go out and find my husband and to bring him home to his little ones and me."

General Dow was of Quaker ancestry and training. He had never in his life crossed the threshold of a saloon, but he is one of those practical men who "suit the action to the word," so he took his hat and started at once for the place indicated by the distressed neighbor. Pushing back its swinging door he went directly to the proprietor and told him what had occurred, adding, "I have a carriage here, and if you will help me we can soon convey Mr. — to his home"; but the saloon-keeper not only declined to help, but would not admit that the gentleman was there, and gave General Dow to understand that "the sooner he went about his business the better it would be for him." Seeing another door at the lower end of the saloon General Dow turned, and passing through it, found his friend lying drunk on a lounge out of sight. He then returned to the proprietor and renewed his request with urgency, but he was repulsed with even stronger opposition than before. "Do you mean," said General Dow, "that you will go on selling to this man when you know what the result will be to his wife and children?" "Certainly I shall, as long as he has money to pay for his drink," was the answer. General Dow turned to leave the place, but before doing so he fired this Parthian arrow at the saloon-keeper: "You intend to go on selling, do you? Very well, my friend, the people of the state of Maine will see how long you will go on selling." From that hour "he stayed not for brake and he stopped not for stone," but threw himself with the wonderful vigor of body and mind that have carried him triumphant to his ninetieth birthday, into the cause of home protection and saloon destruction.

All this he told us that balmy day in the grove, not confining himself to narration, but laying down a clear-cut line of argument for total abstinence and total prohibition, while with deepening enthusiasm his thirty-five-year-old apprentice from the West listened to the master whom she had come so far to see. I shall always thank God that thus early in my novitiate I had the good fortune to hear an expounder who neglected neither of the two great cardinal principles on which the temperance reform is founded, but carried them forward like the two rails of the iron track which is bedded and ballasted in character and education, and which alone is fitted to carry the engine of progress and the mighty train of humanity along its steady course to the great central station of Brotherhood in the kingdom of the Golden Rule. Eighteen years later, as president of the World's W. C. T. U., I was a guest in the home of General Dow who had then been candidate for the Prohibition party for President of the United States, and had come to witness the spilling of illicit liquors that occurs from time to time at the Portland city hall.

I am writing these reminiscences in England with bundles of literature around me which is being sent to all quarters of Christendom, and is made up of the life of General Dow, his epigrammatic utterances concerning prohibition and other vital themes, and the priceless tributes of the best men and women in this and other countries to his work and worth. I cannot express the solid satisfaction I have felt in doing what I could to forward this celebration. General Neal Dow has lived a life that requires no apology; if his record could be known (not that "dress parade" record which the great public sees, but that of everyday life not only in its "public walks" but "secret ways") he would be found to be, and to have been always, a man thoroughly loyal to womanhood and the home; clean from the use of alcoholics, tobacco and other deleterious drugs, and fighting like a dauntless soldier in the forefront of that great battle for liberty which involves the emancipation of women, the downfall of the liquor traffic, and the realization of the poet's splendid utterance:

"Oh, Freedom, deepen thou a grave,
Where every king and every slave
Shall drop in crown and chain,
Till only Man remain."

Reigate, Eng.

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

INTRODUCTION.

In the fifteenth century man began to study the globe upon which he lived. Kings pawned their crowns; princes exhausted their resources in fitting out ships to explore distant lands.

Gold and silver were then supposed to be the only form of wealth; and so, wild dreams of discovering a golden El Dorado, with inexhaustible treasures, fired the heart; and this zeal, coupled with a religious enthusiasm, gave the movement the impetus of a new crusade.

The sixteenth century was devoted to colonizing, or taking possession of these newly discovered countries. Meeting with little resistance among the natives, the greed of each nation culminated in wars for the possession of land; each demanding it in the name of their king or pope; planting the cross of Christ in the wilderness, not as a symbol of human brotherhood and dependence upon a common Father, but as a symbol of might, in the hands of the few; who, in His name, plundered, conquered and took possession.

Much as a farmer owns his farm, and is lord over his possessions, so the king owned the land and the people upon it, which his lords were allowed to control and govern, as his agents. Civil liberty rested only in the hands of the few. The many were born with backs upon which the few were born to ride.

In the seventeenth century man began studying more closely his relations to his Creator. Speculations over salvation, faith, election, the state of the damned, engaged the minds of some of the deepest thinkers; while others, students of the ancient classics, not only questioned the very existence of God, but of the external world about them. Meanwhile, the great mass of mankind lived on unconscious of these speculations and the tremendous bearing they had upon everyday life and the evolution of society. Here, again, was seen the doctrine that the good things of life were intended only for the few. Salvation was free, but by election only a few could be saved.

In the eighteenth century man began to study nature. To find a force in steam that could be utilized; to analyze substances; learn the composition of plants; of his own body; and, as his knowledge of nature advanced, to find that, within a certain range, he was lord of it and could use, mould, refashion at will.

In the nineteenth century a passion for the study of nature disclosed law, order, unity, harmony everywhere. It was discovered that gravitation, working throughout space, upholds all things; evolution, working throughout time, has created all things. What need was there for Spirit? Nature was cold, cruel, relentless, permitting only a survival of the fittest. Faith alone kept alive a reliance upon wisdom and love, because of man's unsatisfied need and hope in a glorious hereafter. Whoever will look back fifty years will be astonished at the evolution of ideas, in science, government, industry, philosophy and religion. Earth, air, sea, sky, remote stars, language, ancient ruins, religious, historical events, every animate and inanimate thing has been searched and its secret wrung from its silent lips, until sufficient data has been obtained and classified, and the result is, such a flood of light has been thrown upon all things great and small, near and remote that it has transformed the thinking of mankind, and added, almost beyond computing, to the possible comfort and happiness of every human being.

People no longer believe that kings and princes rule by divine right; though it is still imagined that only a few are born with brains, who, by that divine right ought to rule the many, failing to see that the progress of civilization depends upon the steady uplifting of the lowest class in society, and that this progress has been in the past and will be in the future, dependent upon and in proportion to their civil, religious, and industrial liberty.

People no longer believe in the salvation of only a few. The door to divine love has widened until there is some danger that knowledge of sin and its deadly consequences may be forgotten under devout forms and ceremonies.

The age is not only a scientific, but an industrial one; and because the advance in the science of political economy has not kept pace with its sister sciences, the world still believes that the many were born to labor for the few who only have the brains to get and to keep. "The poor ye have always with you," they cry, and though the many are granted civil and religious liberty, yet they are industrial slaves.

In political economy, the same fundamental principles are taught in our schools to-day, as fifty years ago. Since Ricardo discovered the great "law of rent" there has hardly been a change, until Henry George, by his thorough review of the whole field of economic thought, proved that the law of wages correlates with the law of rent; breathed new life into the cold, dismal science; showing not only the great cause of poverty, but, its remedy, proving that the spectacle of want in the midst of plenty is but a mal-adjustment of forces at our command, which if rightly used, would give abundance to all who are willing to labor. But the debt of gratitude we owe to one who has solved this problem, great as it is, is slight compared to the light these truths throw upon those of religion.

As gravitation reveals God's power throughout space; as evolution reveals His wisdom throughout time; so these social laws reveal His love and care for mankind, bringing us suddenly into the Presence—not of a cruel, relentless force, but of wisdom, benevolence and love.

Materialistic thought has reached flood-tide. These new truths, like a revelation of God's love, will turn back the age of skepticism, and the next century is sure to be one of spiritual advance, as well as of industrial liberty.

May God hasten the day lest many perish!

Wollaston, Mass.

(To be continued.)

*Copyrighted.

MEMORIES OF THE WHITE CITY.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

V.

It tears my heart thinking of the burned peristyle. One July evening, sitting beneath it with old friends, I watched the day vail itself in the mysterious shadows of night, and, as the stars shone out, beheld the great court flashing with lines of fire, and high up over all the crown of the Administration dome glimmered in the zenith. The electric fountains were playing, now crimson, now ghostly blue, now, most beautiful of all, fairy white, and we spoke of the old times, the dear old times, but secretly all the while I was rejoicing that I was alive in these good, new times, the best times, after all.

Another vision of the Court of Honor rises before me as I write. The golden October day was suddenly full of garlands of mist, which drifted about the Administration Building and hung upon it like banners as strident strains proclaimed the approach of the procession in honor of Italia. I hurried into the plaza, thanking my ancestors that I am tall, and prayed the sun to shine. Perhaps he heard me, for he came out in glory just as the head of the column drew near. First I saw a golden eagle and our own flag. Then the mist lifted, and beside it floated the red, white and green of Italia. I never paraded, but somehow, parading seems to fill men with tremendous dignity. Each swarthy Italian-American appeared to be marching for a lofty purpose. If bananas and peanuts filled his mind other days, they did not that day. The blam! blam! blam! of the bass drums sounded heroic. Women in petticoats of vivid blue, or purple, and yellow, rose-wreathed handkerchiefs tied over their glossy black hair, big golden hoops swinging in their ears, and a fire not to be mistaken snapping in their eyes, fluttered about, and now and then fell into line with the men and made long steps keeping time.

One company wore picturesque short cloaks, and bronze feathers on their hats that must have cost three roosters their tails for every man so decked. There was a company of lads, little fellows in velvet jackets, sugar-loaf hats, white blouses, and curiously banded shanks. It was a sight to see them put out their legs. Some of the musicians looked German, but they blew the strains of "O vive la Garibaldi!" with generous ardor. On, on, they swept down toward the white peristyle and a golden mist hid them, and on they came with the air of assisting at some high and solemn public function. It was a high and solemn public function. In it these sons of Italia did honor to America, the land to which they have elected to give hand and head and heart. What can a man give more? Oh, if they only knew all that means! God bless them every one!

. . . . . .

The person "who wanted to know" was in every corner of every building. "Now, I'd desire to know what those woolly things are!" exclaimed a voice at my elbow among the shells and drawf palmettoes in the Florida Building. The accent was that of my own New York, and I turned about to see a dear old lady peering at a glass can of cotton seeds. I explained what they were, and the uses to which they are devoted, outside of renewing the cotton crop. "Well, I'd asked six people, and I'd given it up," she replied, gratefully. "I,—well, I really thought they were a sort of useful bug."

"How I'd like to know what that means!" exclaimed a young man who was gazing at the expanse of Correlli's "Angelus on St. Peter's Day." I ventured to point out the western light, the distant dome, the prayerful attitude, and to repeat the story that when St. Peter was brought with bruised and bleeding feet across the Campana to suffer martyrdom at Rome, he caused the barren soil to spring into bloom and harvest beneath his feet. I had to make the round of the room with him and his wife after that, and to exhaust all my little store of knowledge. "There's simply bushels I want to know," he said at parting. "Everywhere we've been we're brought standing by what we don't know."

An old couple stood before the two exquisite marble figures beneath which was traced the word, Pereat. I do not recollect the sculptor or his nationality. The most beautiful of the women bent half forward, her delicate hand extended, thumb downward, her nostrils fairly quivering with cruel excitement as she gave her verdict upon the unseen combatant, "Let him die!" for this was a bit of ancient Rome, and meant to picture a young matron and her friend at the amphitheatre. "She's awful pretty," commented the lady, indicating the principal figure with the down-pointing thumb. "Seems to me she looks some like our Jenny. I s'pose that's foreign talk of some sort."

"Come away, ma," said the old gentleman. "I don't know why, but I don't like it. I wouldn't want our Jenny looking that way."

"But I wish I knew," protested the old lady. "I'd so like to know what Pereat means."

I moved a step forward. Then my heart failed me. Ignorance is often bliss. I let her pass on, and I trust she'll never know the woman who "looked like her Jenny" had voted, "Let him die."

. . . . . .

The utilitarian wasted much shoe-leather and I suspect some temper at the Fair. "I'd like to know what they are good for?" I heard him asking before the carved ivory of the Siam exhibit, and the Benares brass, the Sevres vases, and the Chinese cabinets, and he fairly reveled in the uselessness displayed in the Art Building and the Woman's Building. Even in the Transportation Building he found occasion, and I saw one of the species thumping the model of the first locomotive, while he exclaimed: "Humph! Wooden dummy! Now if they was a going to show something, why didn't they, in the name of sense!" He found fault with the big tree in the rotunda of the Government Building because it was "holler," and complained bitterly of the miles he had to walk to see what he held as worth seeing. The world would be hardly off without the bread and beans, the potatoes and pork of life, and the utilitarian has his uses, but I, for one, had moments when I would have rejoiced to have seen the whole lot of utilitarians attending the Fair, put into the curious machine "for grinding rubber and other tough substances" on exhibition at Machinery Hall, and the belt applied. I like best to think of the stout, unromantic looking farmer, who pausing on a bridge in Wooded Island, spread out his arms with a sweeping gesture and turning to his tired wife, said joyously: "Oh, Maria, take in the scene! We can't afford to take in all the details, but we can take in the scene," and a rapt look came into his rugged, sun-burned face. Life will never be quite the same to him and to thousands of others equally toilworn, who "took in the scene," of the White City, and during those last weeks of the Fair, when the crowd billowed and surged everywhere, a crowd that turned neither to the right nor the left, but rolled on, and on straight over you. I was glad to be buffeted thinking of the unspendable wealth each comer must carry away with him, even in the most meager receptacle of a head.

South Evanston, Ill.

WILLARD HALL NOON MEETING.

BY JANE E. ZIMMERMAN, SUPT.

No part of our exercises is more inspiring than our song service, led by the magnificent voice of that noble Christian layman, Mr. A. W. Shaffer, who freely gives his services to the cause of his Master in this meeting. Standing before that audience of wrecked and ruined men, a perfect specimen of clean Christian manhood, he is an object lesson from day to day, which they will not forget. By his exquisite rendering of the gospel message all hearts are uplifted to a higher plane, and drawn nearer to the divine Master.

This week a man who has been almost in despair, has found peace. For a long time he was unable to understand how God's offer of mercy could apply to himself, so deeply did he feel the weight of sin. One gentleman was asked to sign the pledge. He refused, saying he could not keep it if he did. "God can give you strength to keep it, and peace and rest," was the reply. "If you've got any peace and rest for me, I'll come in Monday and see if I can get it," he replied. He did come, and has found peace and rest and happiness. He is with us every day testifying to God's power to save when all else had failed.

A young man, whom I had instructed and encouraged in our meetings in Lower Farwell Hall, more than ten years ago, came into the meetings in Willard Hall, soon after I took charge of them. He raised his hand for prayer. I went down after the meeting to talk to him. His eyes looked so familiar that I asked his name. "My name is H——," he answered, not recognizing me. "Well, now, Charlie," I replied, "is it not strange that after all these years of wandering, when I thought you lost, you should run right into my arms, as it were, as soon as I take the meetings again?" He had thought I was dead. He has become a most earnest, active Christian worker, and will enter evangelistic work.

Martin F., who came forward more than a week ago, weeping, because an allusion was made to Christian mothers, saying he had a good Christian mother praying for him in the north of Ireland, has found his Saviour. The change in this man is marvelous.

As I passed along the aisle one day this week, a young man sat there weeping, and saying softly as if to himself, "Oh, somebody talk to me, please." A year and a half ago, he had, under a conviction of sin, pulled off his apron, in one of the gilded palaces of ruin in Chicago, and has been seeking the light ever since.

As I repeated,

"Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do,"

he said, "Yes, I can do that. It's all I have to give." He, too, has found the Lord.

Chicago, Ill.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Although not exactly in the line of W. C. T. U. work, a little incident recently came to my notice which is "too good to keep." Into a certain store of this city there sometimes comes a well-to-do old German to sit for an hour and talk with any one who will listen. One day not long ago mention was made in his hearing of the village of Monticello, in Wright county, whereupon the old German roused up and began an indignant tirade upon the village and its inhabitants.

"Ach, dey vos so mean! Vy, I vent up dere, and I dells dem I puild dem a vine hotel, cost five thousand dollars. Und dey say all right, und dey dreats me so vine, und dakes off dare hats, und dakes me to ride in dare vine carriages, und it vas so nice; und dey haf big meeting von night, und I say: 'Vriends, I puilt dat hotel,' und dey say: 'Dot vos so goot,' und I say: 'You shall gif me vranchise vor twenty years to sell de viskey.' Und den dey drops me like von hot cake, und say dey vos demp'rance und not vant de viskey! Ach, dem Monticello volks! dey all schurch volks."

So they are, and have a live W. C. T. U., too, bless them! Long may they continue "demp'rance."

In direct contrast with the above is an incident that occurred in St. Paul not long since. On a Sunday afternoon several students of Hamline University attempted to distribute dodgers announcing the Gospel temperance meetings being held weekly in the People's Theatre by the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of the city. Scarcely had they begun when a burly policeman stopped them, informing them that there was a city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of hand-bills upon the street. Temperance workers are indignant, not that they object to the enforcement of the ordinance, if such a one exists, but because, since there were plenty of saloons on the same policeman's beat running wide open that Sabbath afternoon contrary to state law, it looks very much as though the city administration was "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel" in the shape of the law breaking saloons.

AMY A. GREEN.

Minneapolis, Minn.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

(Concluded.)

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Mrs. Josephine K. Henry delivered a fervent and eloquent address Friday evening full of facts that were glowingly expressed. She described the three classes of women in the South, and their attitude toward suffrage. Those who did not care for it, and those who stand behind the door waiting to see whether those who are fighting for it will get it. Mrs. Henry thinks it is time for the Democratic party to become Democratic. Southern women love chivalry, but they would rather have one ounce of justice than a ship load of chivalry.

Closing with this fervid sentiment, Mrs. Henry kept her audience in a state of enthusiasm throughout, and brought a shower of applause at this, "Forever in thine eyes, oh, Liberty, shines the bright light by which the world is saved, and though thou slay me I will trust in thee!"

"Now, doesn't that sound like Patrick Henry?" said Miss Anthony, as she arose to announce a change in the program.

Mrs. Blake told of the N. W. S. headquarters at 10 East Fourteenth street, and of the great New England society, in that city, that meets on the 22d day of December, and has done so for years past, to celebrate the landing of the Pilgrim fathers. "You'd never suppose that a Pilgrim mother or daughter ever existed in the world. So the association got up some Pilgrim mother dinners, and invited the Pilgrim fathers to come and look on, silent and hungry in the gallery, as they had invited the women, and in their speeches they made as little allusion as possible to the men, which would have been a just retaliation, had not the more tender-hearted wives carried some dinner up to them," explained Miss Anthony in an aside.

"In New York City," Miss Anthony told the audience, "Mrs. Blake has organized thirty assembly districts and many voting precincts. and she is holding ward meetings and assembly meetings and appointing committees to make house to house campaigns. We will get all the names of men and women in each voting precinct, and when the parties assemble we shall take these lists and show them these names, and do you suppose there is a politician that will decline to put a woman's suffrage plank in their platform? We have 2,400,000 men in New York over twenty-one years, and when you add to these voters the women over twenty-one, do you suppose there will be a politician that will think of refusing?"

Mrs. Ora Langhorn next read a paper entitled, "House-cleaning in Old Virginia." She presented a doleful picture which illustrates the crying need of woman's active participation in politics. "We have in Virginia," she said, "a body called the General Assembly, which meets once in two years to regulate the affairs of the commonwealth. It used to meet every year, but somehow things seemed so much worse after the session of the assembly, that the people thought it better to take one year off to see if we could get over the effects of what the assembly had done before trying again."

Madame Korany, a beautiful and highly educated woman from Syria, was seated on the platform, her dress and the white veil that enveloped her head caught by roses on her bosom, a modification of the oriental dress she used to wear at the World's Fair.

In her simple and captivating way Madame Korany referred to Miss Anthony as "she, whose lover I am." Her broken English was very fascinating. "Woman's suffrage," she said, "seems to have made a great progress if a woman from the Orient, from the land where woman was held for ages in veiled seclusion, and was considered as an inferior being, good only for housework, advocates the cause, and stands up to defend it, even in this land of liberty. I know of many good reasons why woman should vote, but I cannot see one single reason why she should not vote. As an Oriental, I would like so much to become an American citizen, but I shall never be one until woman's citizenship shall be proclaimed all through this land."

Mary Lowe Dickinson, secretary of the King's Daughters, made her maiden suffrage speech before the convention after Madame Korany had finished.

She began with the quotation, "The bravest battle ever fought was fought by the mothers of men." She compared the way to suffrage to the way to the Arctic Sea, and believed it was beset with almost as many difficulties, but these she disposed of before the completion of her address.

A number of delegates had expressed a desire that next year the convention should be held in some other place than Washington, where it has convened for twenty-six years. This radical suggestion gave rise to the liveliest discussion on Saturday morning, and finally the vote was taken by states, each state casting its quota for the choice of three cities as follows: Washington, 39; Cincinnati, 57; Atlanta, 67. Enough votes cast for Washington or Cincinnati were turned over to Atlanta to give the Southern city a majority of the whole vote, and Atlanta was pronounced the choice of the association for the place of the next meeting.

The hours of Saturday afternoon were devoted to an exposition and object lesson of the improved Australian ballot system entitled the Hare-Spence system, which has been formulated by the well known political economist and his co-adjutrix, Miss Spence. As Miss Spence has been lecturing in many cities since the Woman's Congresses held in Chicago, and leagues have been formed for the purpose of electoral reform, the subject is probably familiar to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. Miss Spence is an active, energetic little woman of sixty, or thereabouts, and has had the acquaintance of John Stuart Mill, George Eliot, and many persons of distinction.

The largest audience that had greeted the convention so far was present at the Saturday evening session. The interesting program was opened with a speech on "Some Georgia Curiosities," by Mrs. Miriam Howard Du Bose, of Atlanta, Ga. Among the curiosities she classed the chivalrous men whose sensibilities would not countenance the presence of women at the polls, but allow them to pay taxes, other samples being editors of the state, who pour ridicule upon the subject, and women who are employed in business capacities, who are so short-sighted as not to see it is to their advantage to get the justice due them.

The second address was on woman's suffrage from a business woman's standpoint, by Mrs. Harriet A. Shinn, president of the National Association of Women Stenographers. (Miss Anthony interpolated that the women stenographers of America had had $71,000,000 paid them in wages during the last year.)

Mrs. Shinn said in substance: "Of the many problems confronting the world to-day, the most important is not the disposition of the pauper population, nor the silver question, nor the temperance question, nor even the tariff, but the little hinge on which is to spring open the door to a better brighter, truer, and more prosperous era, when women shall have equal rights with men. A seed that has once burst its shell, and started a root for itself, can never be crowded back again into that shell, and a woman who has once gained her independence, will not again become dependent, even though she may have to stand in the street cars. A quarter of a century ago there were laws on the statute books of the land prohibiting marriage between a slave-holder and his bond maid. Now the law is a dead one but the spirit of it still lives, and to-day as then there can be no true marriage between a franchised man and a disfranchised woman. The business woman is really the rank and file of the army that is marching on to victory."

Miss Elizabeth U. Yates, of Maine, made a splendid address upon "Fashionable Thinking." It abounded in witty sallies and logical statements. "Americans," she said, "always adopt the latest fads, whether it be blue glass, balloon sleeves, foot-ball, or what not. Now it is souvenir spoons with pictures of everything and everybody from Christopher Columbus to Susan B. Anthony. It used to be fashionable for men to think women were all angels but that fashion has passed away. The changes of fashion in thought opened new avenues and occupations to women. Since last fall's silver debate in the United States Senate, the fashion of calling women the champion talkers had gone out, and the silver debate cast in the shade all the sewing societies and woman's conventions ever held. It was a case where silence was golden and speech silver. It can now be said, 'Silence, thy name is woman.'"

More applause greeted Miss Yates than any other speaker, her youth and intellectual beauty contributing to this end, as well as her happy effort in oratory. Miss Anthony remarked, "This is one of our sour old maids you have read about. Sour old maids and discontented wives, you know."

Madame Korany was again introduced; more lovely than ever was she in a white brocaded dress and veil of white over her hair. "I am glad you love our little Korany," said Miss Anthony to the audience. "Mrs. May Wright Sewall and I were rivals for her affections at the World's Fair."

Madame Korany told of her visit to the White House which had impressed her greatly. She felt indeed that she was breathing the air of liberty in America when she could enter the home of our sovereign, and be welcomed there. That facing the place she had seen the statue of liberty and that statue was a woman, and she felt that soon women would be as that statue.

Rev. Anna Shaw was the last to speak. She said she had been called the vivisector of doctors of divinity, and to-night she would take Dr. Talmage, who two years ago preached a sermon in favor of woman's suffrage, and it is the only one of his sermons she could read, though she had tried many. He recently wrote an article against suffrage in which he wanted to know the distance between the cradle and the ballot. It is not nearly so far for the mother to cast her vote for the protection of the baby after it leaves the cradle, as for a minister of the gospel to compromise with the creditors of his church on a basis of thirty-two cents on the dollar. As to whether it is better for a woman to be the power on the throne, or the power behind it, Miss Shaw said from the recent experience of a woman who had been on the throne but was now behind it, she thought she would rather be on the throne.

In closing, Miss Shaw referred to the forty-seven senators who voted to refuse suffrage to the women of Oklahoma a few days ago, and said these senators had deprived these women of their rights, although they were obliged to bear all the hardships and burdens of the men in that newly opened territory.

On Sunday, Carrie Lane Chapman preached at the eleven o'clock service, at the People's church, on the "Present Duty of the Church."

In the afternoon there were religious services at Metzerott Hall, and Rev. Anna H. Shaw preached upon the text, "Let no man take that crown," Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and Elizabeth Yates, who has been a missionary in China, assisted in the exercises.

Mrs. Ellen Battelle Dietrick delivered an address on Sunday evening at All Souls' Unitarian church, her subject being, "Is the enfranchisement of the women of the United States a moral question?"

Monday evening short addresses were made by the presidents of the various organizations, Miss Laura Clay, of Kentucky, leading. Miss Clay viewed the subject from a Scriptural standpoint, declaring that the subjection of women is due to the transgression of Eve. Our Lord set us free at His coming, but man does not so interpret it.

In "A Message from Michigan," Emily B. Ketchum told how Senator Clapp in the state legislature changed his vote for the despairing cry of a woman, and thus municipal suffrage was gained in that state. Newspapers are changing their attitude, politicians urging women to study and understand their new acquisition. And this is only a small part of what is being done in Michigan.

Mrs. Clara B. Colby, in a strong, logical and finely written address, said that woman's right to vote was pretty well established. Mrs. Colby touched upon the Indian question, upon which she is so well qualified to speak, and proved that even the Indian woman has more voice in her government than do her sisters of the pale face.

James L. Hughes, of Toronto, Canada, was sent by the women of his district to the convention, and expressed his hearty support of the cause.

Mrs. Stansbury, of Colorado, said the principal ground of woman's suffrage was in the west, in Colorado and Wyoming, and now when a woman addresses an audience in either of those states she says "fellow citizens." The liquor dealers sent a remonstrance to suffrage, there, but these are the only class of men who are dissatisfied with it. The audience was so pleased with Mrs. Stansbury's able remarks that they recalled her, when Miss Anthony said: "You shall have your own sweet will," as she led her back to the front of the stage.

The death of Miss Anna Ella Carroll in Washington, on Monday was noted, and a resolution passed expressing the following sentiments:

"That in the death of Anna Ella Carroll, the originator of the campaign, whereby the Union was saved, the country has lost an illustrious benefactor, whose services have been unrecognized by the United States government solely because she was a woman. She has passed away in poverty and virtual neglect, but her name will go down in history with that of Joan of Arc. Her fate is the latest illustration of the proverbial ingratitude of republics."

A collection was raised for her sister.

The resolutions passed embodied protests against the continued autocracy of sex; rights of equal pay for equal work for both sexes were also urged, also that all women who are in sympathy with equal suffrage should affiliate with the association so as to give strength to the cause. It was recommended that suffrage clubs be formed whenever and wherever practicable.

The resolution causing the most discussion was in regard to Sunday meetings, and read,

"That, believing our work to be sacred, religious, and patriotic, we recommend that irrespective of our views on the Sunday question Sunday suffrage meetings be held whenever practicable."

The final public session of the convention on Tuesday night was largely attended. Senator Peffer, Representatives Simpson, Davis, Broderick, Curtis, and Baker, of Kansas, and Representative Coffeen, of Wyoming, were on the stage, also Hon. Simon Wolf, of this city, and ex-Senator Bruce all of these gentlemen made remarks expressive of sympathy with the suffragists.

Rev. Ida C. Hultin, of Illinois, delivered a powerful address on the "Coming Race," which she said would be morally, physically and politically superior, when there was equality. Grace Greenwood, and Miss Windier, a daughter of Lady Windier, of Australia, also made a few remarks.

A reception given to the delegates at Willard's hotel Wednesday evening closed the interesting events of the week. LUCY PAGE STELLE.

Washington, D. C.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight. And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight. Thy faith hath saved thee.—Luke 18: 41, 42.

Let our aim in life be ever so high, following faithfully our ideal, giving ourselves unreservedly without fee or reward to the work God has called us to do, yet after all is done there is much of self left in the best of us. It hurts and deeply wounds to be constantly misunderstood and found fault with, to have the very ones we have been trying to serve seem utterly blind to our endeavors as well as to their own best interests. A friendly word of appreciation and cheer at such times is most helpful. It is like a bugle blast to a foot-sore, weary and dejected soldier. Thus thought the writer, when smarting under just such wounds, the following resolution was received enclosed in a most kind letter from Mrs. A. B. Wilson, president Central W. C. T. U., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Resolved, That this convention (Erie county, New York,) uphold Mrs. Carse in her administration of Temple affairs. We hereby express our confidence in her as its manager, and as soon as the financial situation warrants we will press for the $65 yet unpaid on the hundred dollar pledge of Erie county W. C. T. U. Adopted unanimously.

Another word of cheer comes from the noble president of Texas W. C. T. U., Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard. She writes: "My mother received the beautiful medallion and is so glad over it! I do hope you are succeeding. Although we have the hardest times ever known, for a general failure of crops visited our state last year, which, added to the present stringent times, makes money very difficult to get, yet in spite of this I do believe Texas will send more to the Temple than any year yet. Every one of our women who visited the Fair, saw our 'House Beautiful' and have returned with increased love in their hearts. We are loyal to you and shall be as long as you are loyal to the cause."

***

Here is another bugle blast from Mrs. W. D. Knowles, Dallas, state superintendent of Temple work for Texas, which we would like to hear resound through every state in the Union. It was published in the Texas White Ribboner for January, and is addressed to the members of local unions. Mrs. Knowles writes: "Once more I beg you to send a two cent stamp, get a Temple mite-box, and commence the year right by putting in a penny a day to help pay for our beautiful Temple. If you could only have stood at its grand base and looked upon its fine proportions, you would have been thrilled as I was with delight, and inspired with new zeal to work for our 'House Beautiful.' This wonderful building marks an epoch in human history as distinctly as did Solomon's Temple. Every Christian, especially every white-ribboner and local union, should be proud of an opportunity to invest a few dollars in it; hence, I urge you to send me two cents to pay postage on a neat little model of the Temple to use as a savings bank. A penny a day deposited in it will give you $3.65 at the end of the year." We will add, that all who send this amount during the year 1894 will receive the beautiful solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon described in last week's UNION SIGNAL. Old Vermont sends back a refrain (through the official organ of the W. C. T. U., Our Home Guards) to her young sister, Texas, in the following loyal words: "As we now glory in the progressive position ever taken in the past, by sturdy Vermont, so we shall rejoice by and by to say that we stood bravely for the Temperance Temple during its early, stormy days. And as we expect to add this proud boast to our list, let us now stand firm and help as we have never helped before."

***

Mrs. P. R. Maloy, Council Grove, Kan., writes as follows: "I desire to enter my name for one of the Temple souvenir spoons, and enclose two cents for a mite-box. If the $3.65 is in the box before the year is out, can it be sent? Answer in column in THE UNION SIGNAL." Whenever $3.65 has been secured the money should be forwarded, and the spoon will be returned to the donor of the money. We are now ready to deliver the spoons. Mrs. H. C. Dean, Jamestown, O., suggests a thought worthy of consideration in the following letter. She sends a stamp for a mite-box, and says: "I wish the souvenir spoon for my little daughter, hoping by it she may become interested in the W. C. T. U. work as she grows older. I will fill the box, and return the money as soon as possible. I think it was a very happy thought giving these souvenir spoons, for even those who did not care so much for the other things will be proud of the spoon, and it will help to keep the cause more before the people, especially the young." Never in the history of the Temple enterprise has there been such large orders for mite-boxes, both from individuals and unions. The Columbian souvenir is sent to all persons sending a dollar to the Temple, and is presented to all white-ribboners who fill a mite-box, which is to be credited to their union for the purpose of securing to the Temple one hundred dollars. Mrs. Rockwood, of Lexington, Neb., says: "I am glad to say the souvenir was received. It is so beautiful I wish I could buy a dozen for friends; it is something to be prized." "The beautiful souvenir came to me in its perfect little silken nest," writes Mrs. M. K. Sanderson, Chicopee Falls, Mass; "it is a gem, fitted to inspire one to a nobler life."

***

All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

STAR MOTTO, 1894.

Blessed be God who daily beareth our burden.—Ps. 68:19 (Rv. Ver.)

I have nothing to do with to-morrow,
My Saviour will make that His share,
Its grace and its strength I can't borrow,
So why should I borrow its care?

BABY'S RIGHTS.
I.

BY MARY C. GLASS.

Every baby which comes into this world has a right to be well born, well used and welcome. To be well born it must have healthy, moral, sensible, pure-blooded parents, and no baby born of any other kind is truly well born, although it be a "prince royal."

I verily believe if the young women and girls of America were taught the secrets of heredity, as they should be taught, they would arise as one woman and demand "purity for purity," and would pledge themselves to marry no whisky-soaked, tobacco-poisoned, impure creature, calling himself a "lord of creation," and I also believe that if they would so pledge themselves it would have a greater effect on the morals of the men of this generation than anything that could be done. I believe if the tobacco-using men of our country understood what legacy they are preparing for their children that there is enough manhood yet left to outlaw it, along with its twin brother, liquor.

Heredity simply means "reaping as some one else has sown." The father in his young days "sows to the wind," and his son "reaps the whirlwind." Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson, an eminent London physician, says:

> The parent who is addicted to the use of tobacco must transmit to his children elements of a distempered body and an irate mind, a deranged condition of organic atoms which elevate the animal nature at the expense of the moral and intellectual.

Dr. Pidduck, another celebrated physician of London, said, away back in 1856, before the day of the W. C. T. U. and its "department of heredity":

> In no instance is the "sin of the fathers" more strikingly "visited upon the children" than in the sin of tobacco smoking. The enervation, the hysteria, the insanity, the dwarfish deformities, the consumption, the suffering lives and early deaths of the children of inveterate smokers bear ample testimony to the feebleness and unsoundness of the constitution transmitted by this pernicious habit.

Poor little pitiful, sickly, poisoned babies! How can they ever fight their way through all the troubles of babyhood—colics, rash, eye-teeth and second summers? Don't blame them for being cross; they are not to blame that "the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children." Oh, no, they have not even the privilege of selecting their fathers, or they would use more judgment and common sense than some of their mothers do when they make the selection for them.

I think it the duty of every mother to cultivate the mother instinct in the hearts of her daughters. I never allow my baby girl to abuse her doll, not because it will hurt the doll, but because of the sure hurt the mother instinct in my child will receive. I have a little invalid daughter, who said to me one day: "When I go to heaven I am going to ask God to please give me two little baby angels to take care of all myself."

A good way to welcome your baby is: first, burn your corsets, for if you simply lay them aside you may be tempted to wear them again. Then sew all of your skirts to loose, comfortable waists, dress in perfect comfort, live simply and stay out of doors as much as possible. Ask God to fill your heart with love and your head with common sense; then buy a copy of "Tokology"—that wonderful book for mothers which has been a God-send to so many—and remember, if you want your baby to be good, sweet and sunny-hearted, you must be all these yourself, for the pre-natal influence of the mother is potent in forming temperament for the little child. I know of a little boy who is cross, headstrong, impudent, almost incorrigible, whose mother says she knows it is all her own fault, because before his birth she was so angry that he was coming. He is now paying her compound interest. I also knew a lovely young lady whose mother, before her birth, scarcely slept at all, in grieving for the death of a little son. This young lady is now taking a long sea voyage, hoping that it may make her sleep. Pardon a personal illustration. I come of musical people on both sides; have always been intensely fond of music, but always disliked a violin, no matter who played it. I asked my mother not long since why she thought I disliked it so much. She smiled, and told me that before my birth my father had three violin pupils who came to the house several evenings each week; they tried to learn to play but succeeded only in nearly driving my mother crazy and in shaping my antipathy for the most human-voiced instrument in the world.

Pasadena, Cal.

MOTHERS' CLUBS.
II.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

Mrs. Ellis called on Mrs. Stacy that very evening and succeeded in interesting her in the thought of a Mothers' Club, and in a few days the women of the village were talking over cards of invitation just received which read: "Mrs. L. D. Stacy requests the pleasure of your presence at her residence on Wednesday next, at three p. m., to organize a Mothers' Club, for the purpose of systematically studying child-nature and the philosophy of child-training."

Much curiosity was expressed as to what this all meant, and when asked, Mrs. Stacy's reply was, "Come and see for yourself."

The result of all this curious inquiry was a full attendance on the afternoon mentioned. The pleasant parlors were filled, and at the appointed hour Mrs. Norwood, Mrs. Ellis and Mrs. Ames, a self-appointed executive committee, pro tem, took charge of the exercises.

Mrs. Ellis called the meeting to order, then Mrs. Ames conducted the devotional exercises, which were very short but appropriate, and then Mrs. Norwood was called on to state the purpose of the meeting. She said, in brief: "We have called you together this afternoon to discuss the advisability of uniting as mothers in an effort to promote the welfare of humanity by studying our responsibility in the training of the future men and women. It has seemed to some of us that if the thoughtful women could meet together with a definite plan of study and discussion, we could make our experiences and acquirements common property, and therefore of common benefit. We have thought that we would take up the ideas of education as taught by the philosophers of the day, and learn how best to coöperate with the schools in fostering the highest moral qualities in our children. More than that, as we have the children in our hands before they are put into the hands of teachers, we could lessen the labors of teachers by our better methods of home training. It is thought by those who are studying child-nature that we train our children into wrong ways of doing and thinking, for which we punish them in after days, and that if we understood them better, we could so train them from the beginning that they would be saved much of punishment and of unhappiness.

"Again, our purpose is not only to help ourselves in the training of the children already living, but to furnish opportunities for young women to study with us in regard to the duties that will be theirs when they become wives and mothers. How many women are here to-day who are interested in such a plan, and who would like to become students with us?"

The ladies looked at one another as if they would like to ask some questions before committing themselves. At length Mrs. Stacy spoke: "For one, I am greatly interested in this idea. I see every day the need of more definite knowledge of child nature. I am more and more impressed with the thought that we are unjust to our children because we do not understand them. We teach them to disobey us and then whip them for it; we teach them untruthfulness and then are greatly surprised when they lie to us; we teach them vanity, and jealousy, and cruelty, and immorality, and then call them little reprobates because they learn the lessons too well."

Some of the ladies seemed to be a little aroused by these statements and inclined to question them, seeing which Mrs. Stacy said, smilingly, "You see, now, that you do want to join our club, for you want to argue against my position. Now, if Mrs. Norwood will tell us more particularly about the way such a club can be conducted we can decide more easily whether we will join."

"In the first place," said Mrs. Norwood, "we purpose to have a club that shall involve no expense of money, unless its members shall vote to expend some for a certain object. We will have no constitution, no by-laws, no fees, no fines, and no officers."

"Well," said one visitor, "I don't see how you could keep it going."

"Our plan is as follows: We will have an executive committee of three persons, and their whole duty shall be to see that some one will read a paper at each meeting. This paper may be original, or it may be a selection from any printed matter which has appeared to some member as full of instruction. The reader of the paper at one meeting shall preside at the next meeting, and so the presiding officer is provided for without taxing any one individual.

"It is intended that particular lines of study shall be taken up, and this could be found in some book, such as Trumbull's 'Hints on child training,' a chapter to be read at each meeting and discussed. The reading of a chapter from the book should count the same as an original paper, and, indeed, I am not sure but we would better confine ourselves for some time to the well-considered and well-expressed thoughts of practical educators, instead of trying to furnish original papers. If we were to vote a tax of five or ten cents a member we could buy one book and after reading it in the club, it would be a nucleus of a circulating library to be taken home and studied by members while the club would take up some other book. In this way we would collect a considerable number of most excellent books with which we could do missionary work, charging a small fee for their reading by those who were not members of the club."

"If there is no constitution and no officers how can there be any membership?" asked one lady.

"In one sense, there would be no membership, but I have no doubt we should soon find that a certain number of women would come each time and consider themselves as members, and be perfectly willing to do all in their power to sustain and continue our club."

"Well," said Mrs. Stacy, "I want to announce myself as a member, and offer to the club the use of my parlors until some one else is anxious to have the club meet with her."

"How many will express by a vote their opinion that such a club would be desirable?" asked Mrs. Ellis.

Every hand was raised.

"That settles it," said she; "the club is organized. It remains now only to select your executive committee, decide on day and frequency of meeting. Thanks to Mrs. Stacy the place of meeting is assured."

It was voted to continue the self-appointed executive committee for the first six months. Dr. Lois Ashley, who was present, agreed to give a paper at the next meeting on "The Education of Infants," after which it was decided to take up the study of Miss Harrison's book on Child-nature, to be followed by Abbott's book, "Gentle Measures in the Management of the Young."

If an interest is taken in the success of this club we may at some future time have a report of subsequent meetings.

Toledo, O.

(To be continued.)

TYPICAL LESSONS FOR LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION TEACHERS.
XI.
The Rainbow.

BY MARY E. RUDD.

Opening Exercises, 25 minutes:—Use "Exercise Song" as opening prayer. Repeat Scripture texts about springs and rain. Sing "Dewdrops." Choose from finger plays. Sing "Our Wonderful House," and repeat texts in connection. In the line of the "whatsoevers" suggest the care of the hair. Give moral thoughts suggested by the words, "And strong men walk his ways"; also ways in which the "harp" may praise God.

Rhythmical Exercises, 15 minutes:—Rain coming down; the stream; swimming of fishes; flying of birds, clapping the hands; rising on the toes, running and jumping over the brook.

Lesson, 25 minutes:—Use prism to-day, and show the sunbeam fairies in their colored dresses. When the excitement is over ask the children what they think appeared in the sky when the rain was nearly over. They will probably be able to tell about a great many rainbows and their pretty colors. Show the spectrum again, and tell them the colors are the same as the rainbow. Usually the sunbeams dance about so fast that the pretty colored dresses get all mixed up together and look white. But when they pass through the glass they are separated, and all the fairies with red dresses on stand side by side, and all the fairies with blue dresses on stand side by side, etc.

Tell them how the little round drops of water produce the same effect, and that is what makes the rainbow. Embody in story form all the thoughts given on the evaporation of water—the brook drying away and the need of rain, the cloud appearing, the rain coming down, and finally the rainbow. Tell the story of Noah, and teach the first phrase of Genesis 9:13.

Games, 20 minutes:—Represent the wind by motion of the hands back and forth, making a whistling sound with the lips, the rain by the motion of the hands up and down. As the rain almost ceases, let the sun appear, represented by a child standing on a chair, who covers his face with his hands during the storm, but takes them away when the sun is supposed to look out again. Seven children to represent the rainbow may join hands and skip back and forth, accompanied by appropriate music. If you have access to a kindergarten song book, edited by Gertrude Walker, you will find in it just the music you need for this in the "Rainbow Song." It is not indispensable, however.

Closing:—Offering of pennies, while singing, 'Only a drop in the bucket."

Chicago, Ill.

EASTER PROGRAM FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS, LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGIONS, ETC.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

SINGING.—(from hymn book by the congregation.)

Lift your glad voices in triumph on high,
For Jesus hath risen and man shall not die;
Vain were the terrors that gathered around Him,
And short the dominion of death and the grave.
He burst from the fetters of darkness that bound Him,
Resplendent in glory, to live and to save.
Loud was the chorus of angels on high,
The Saviour hath risen and man shall not die.

Glory to God, in full anthems of joy.
The being He gave us death cannot destroy;
Sad were the life we may part with to-morrow
If tears were our birthright and death were our end;
But Jesus hath cheered the dark valley of sorrow
And bade us, immortal, to heaven ascend.
Lift then your voices in triumph on high,
For Jesus hath risen, and man shall not die.

SCRIPTURE—RESPONSIVE READING.

Leader.—Now, late on the Sabbath day, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.

Response.—And behold there was a great earthquake; for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled away the stone and sat upon it.

L.—His appearance was as lightning, and His raiment white as snow; and for fear of Him the watchers did quake and became as dead men.

R.—And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not, ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which hath been crucified.

L.—He is not here; for He is risen, even as He said.

R.—And go quickly, and tell His disciples He is risen from the dead; and lo, He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him; lo, I have told you.

L.—The eleven disciples went into Galilee, unto the mountain, where Jesus had appointed them.

R.—And when they saw Him they worshiped Him; but some doubted.

L.—And Jesus came to them and spake unto them, saying, All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth.

R.—Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.

All.—Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

PRAYER.

L.—But Mary was standing without at the tomb weeping; so, as she wept, she stooped and looked into the tomb:

R.—And she beholdeth two angels in white sitting, one at the head, and one at the feet where the body of Jesus had lain.

L.—And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him.

R.—And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

L.—Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou?

R.—She, supposing Him to be the gardener, saith unto Him, Sir, if thou have borne Him hence tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away.

L.—Jesus saith unto her, Mary.

R.—She turned herself and saith unto Him, Rabboni: which is to say, Master.

RECITATION (by a young girl).

Oh, the sun shone bright and the birds gaily sang
That first glad Easter day
When the women came with their last sad gifts,
To the place where their Master lay,
But their hearts were as hushed as the silent tomb,
The soft light to them was but deepest gloom.

Oh, the little birds caroled their blithest songs,
When Mary, in sad surprise
Cried, "Sir, if thou'st borne him hence away
Tell me now where my Master lies";
And they wondered, the birds, that she did not rejoice,
That she needed to hear her Master's voice.

But the scales fell swift from her tear-bound eyes
And her heart gave the answer sweet,
When her Lord struck softly that loved, lost chord,
Which brought her in tears to His feet;
Then her doubts were all merged in her heart's glad creed,
As she sang with the birds, "He is risen, indeed!"

Oh, the sun shines bright, and the birds gaily sing
On this glad Easter day,
For the anthem-swell of that wondrous hymn,
It abides in the world alway.
E'en the green earth tells of a riven tomb.
Of a victor, crowned in its deepest gloom.

But we stand without, blind as Mary stood,
And our tears dull our ears to the voice;
Oh, speak to us now one low, sweet word,
Let our hearts with the birds rejoice;
Make it more on our lips than an idle creed,
This glad Easter song, "He is risen, indeed!"

EXERCISE.

(Band of children bearing flowers—Easter lilies, crocuses, etc.)

FIRST CHILD:—

Oh I've learned such a wonderful secret
From the heart of the woodland to-day!
I wonder if any can guess it?
'Tis the reason for Easter day.

SECOND CHILD:—

I know where you learned the lesson;
From the tiny blue egg hid away,
And it told you that life's sure triumph,
Is the secret of Easter day.

THIRD CHILD:—

No, no, 'twas the soft grass springing,
And the glimpse of the sky so blue,
Which told you that death had been conquered,
That the earth shall again be made new.

FOURTH CHILD:—

I think 'twas the glimmer of sunshine,
And the robin's note clear from the sky,
Which opened your eyes to the wonder
Of the glorious spring-time nigh.

FIFTH CHILD:—

I think 'twas that big snowdrift melting
Which told you that winter had fled;
That light and life conquer death ever,
That the earth's heart can never be dead.

SIXTH CHILD:

I think that you read the old story
Of how Jesus rose from the tomb,
Till you saw through its darkness and shadow,
And light pierced forever its gloom.

SEVENTH CHILD:—

I believe 'twas this white lily bursting
Heavenward from the dark, gloomy sod,
Which taught you the meaning of Easter,—
The secret of life and of God.

EIGHTH CHILD:—

I think 'twas the glad chime of music,
As the bells pealed their anthem so gay,
Which taught you that heaven's own concord
Is the meaning of each Easter day.

FIRST CHILD:—

You are each of you right in your answer,
The universe joined in the Psalm;
Let us sing it with glad hearts and voices,
In the hush of God's infinite calm.

(Clasp hands and sing. Air.—"Ring the Bells of Heaven.")

Ring the bells of Easter,
Ring them glad to-day,
Tell the glorious tidings far and wide,
Day o'er night has triumphed,
Life has conquered death,
Heaven and earth again are reconciled.

CHORUS (whole school joins):

Glory, glory, how the glad bells ring!
Glory, glory, how the children sing!
Death's forever vanquished; life's forever free;
Man shall live throughout eternity.

Ring the bells of Easter,
Ring them out alway,
Till our Christ shall reign o'er every soul.
Bands can never bind Him,
"Word of God," indeed;
He shall make the earth's redemption whole.

CHORUS.—

RECITATION (by a boy).

The meaning of that Easter,
When Christ rose from the tomb,
Can never be completed
Till light has banished gloom.

So long as earth knows sinning,
So long as man knows crime,
The Christ life is imprisoned
From its full Easter time.

But, oh, the day is coming,
When man's last foe shall flee,
Victorious over sin and death,
He'll stand forever free.

Our Christ breaks every fetter,
His sun shall know no night;
This sin-stained earth shall flooded be
With resurrection light.

All hail, glad, glorious morning!
All hail, each Easter day!
You bring life's golden promise,
Fulfillment's on the way.

BRIEF ADDRESS.

COLLECTION.

SINGING.—Easter hymn (from hymn book).

BENEDICTION.

Cnicago' Ill.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Here is a letter that I want to share with you this week. It is from the young lady superintendent of the L. T. L., connected with the First Y. W. C. T. U. of Philadelphia, a union which does more good work than I could tell you about in a long while. She writes:

DEAR AUNT JANE:—I always turn to your Cozy Corner as soon as I receive THE UNION SIGNAL. I have the boys and girls named that crowd close up to you every week. I like the look on the face of that boy standing on his tiptoes looking over the head of one of the girls. He seems brimful of fun and smiles. Well, when I opened the paper this eve I read about your valentine and I just "hurry off" a letter to tell you and nephews and nieces that I received two of the same kind, only better—for mine were made by one of my girls. The pledge words were cut out and the names of our president and vice-president of the L. T. L. signed. Gold paper and lace fringe are around the card and a tiny bow of blue in the corner. On the other side of the card perch three birds on a bough—snow on it—but one is singing away. I am very proud of my valentines and they speak words of love to me and cheer me in our beautiful L. T. L. work. I shall put them among my treasures, praying God to make these girls messengers of love and help. H. FRANCES JONES.

Wasn't that a sweet thought on the part of these Loyal Legioners? Let us remember this idea for next Valentine day and send pledge valentines to those we love. Your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I hope that you will let me be one of your little nieces and a cousin of all the girls and boys who write you. I wish some of my little cousins would write me letters; I would do my best to reply to them and I enjoy writing very much. My motto for the new year is Ex. 14:14.

MAY C. BIDWELL.

Box 276, Deposit, N. Y.

Cultivate your taste for writing, little niece. I wish that many a pleasant correspondence might be enjoyed by our Cozy Cornerers.

As I am a little boy about twelve years of age. And belong to the Temperance Loyal Legion. And hearing Miss Margaret Eastburn speaking about boys and girls writing to you I thought I would. I love to go to the Loyal Temperance Legion and to learn about liquors and tobacco. I have signed the pledge now and I am going to keep it. Our teacher showed us how alcohol turns the white of an egg. And how cigarettes are made and we saw camphor burning. It burns the alcohol and leaves the camphor.

ROBERT H. MCCLURE.

Pleasant Hill, Del.

P. S.—Alcohol burns with a blue flame.

There's nothing like knowing, Robert, and may your knowledge prove ever a benefit to yourself and others.

I am a little temperance girl. I never tasted of wine nor cider. I have two yellow kittens, and they are temperance cats, like Toots Willard. I have five dolls. Will you please put my letter in THE UNION SIGNAL?

Hope, N. J. FLORENCE WILDRICK.

Your request is granted, dear little niece.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

274.

TRANSPOSITION.

Our election is on and we hope for the best,
But "no-license" we can't hope to win.
When the rich saloon-keeper will not take a rest,
'Till he's bo't all the wholes of the men.

SOLON.

275.

ALPHABETICAL ENIGMA.

My 12, 1, 4, 25 8, 5, 14, 18, 25 19, 15, 13, 5, 18, 19, 5, 20 is a lady's name.

My 5, 14, 7, 12, 1, 14, 4 is the place of her home.

My 1 20, 5, 13, 16, 5, 18, 1, 14, 3, 5 12, 5, 1, 4, 5, 18 is what she is. MAUD DALY.

276.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of nine letters.
My 5, 1, 4 means cunning.
My 3, 2, 6 is a gash or an incision.
My 7, 8, 9 is a unit.
My whole is a prominent woman suffragist who has died recently. NORMA A. EVANS.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED FEBRUARY 15.

269. Valentine.

270. Trusting in God's help, I solemnly promise to abstain from the use of alcoholic drinks, including wine, beer and cider, from the use of tobacco in any form, and from profanity.

Correct answers: Clara R. Bradford; Ethel Hiles; Faye M. Stewart; Lillian Gribble; Mildred K. Howe; Nellie F. McMechan; Eva F. Roberts; Caroline MacMinn; Lulu Lemmon; Wm. H. Coye; Edward A. Sparks; Walter Whitman; Edna Gleason; Lennie Emery.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIFT B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

red at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Meadow Larks Upon the Snow. By D. L. P. 2
The Parson's Crusade. By J. F. Cowan 2
The First Time I Saw Neal Dow. By Frances E. Willard 2
Economic Principles. By Eliza Stowe Twitchell 3
Memories of the White City. V. By Elizabeth Cumings 3
Willard Hall Noon Meetings. By Mrs. Jane E. Zimmerman 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Minnesota Items 4
National Woman Suffrage Convention 4
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Star Motto, 1894 6
Baby's Rights. I. By Mary C. Glass 6
Mothers' Clubs. II. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D. 6
Typical Lessons for Loyal Temperance Legion Teachers. XI. By Mary E. Rudd 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Easter Program for Sunday-Schools, Loyal Temperance Legions. By Katharine Lente Stevenson 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The "Packthreads" 8
Hints for Local Work 8
The Indispensable Factor in Our Work 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Western Washington—Massachusetts—South Carolina—Michigan—Oklahoma—Connecticut 10-12
News in a Nutshell 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Social Purity—School Savings Banks—Department of Proportionate and Systematic Giving 12, 13
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
TREASURER'S CORNER 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 14, 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.—John 16:23.

THE "PACKTHREADS."

"How are the packthreads to be broken?" is the burden of a cry called forth by recent words of ours concerning the sacrifices of married women to their Juggernaut—housekeeping. To answer the question helpfully would rejoice us, for we know that it is a problem over which many women have struggled despairingly. In some minds it has resolved itself into the form of "to marry or not to marry," while more than one married woman has grieved to the end of her life over unused powers, disappointed hopes and frustrated plans. Nor has the grief been that of merely disappointed selfish ambition. It has been rather the just recriminations of conscience because of wasted talents, of having done so little where one was capable of doing so much. Often it is the anguish of the mother heart because, while by nature and education she was fitted to give her children invaluable assistance along the higher lines of their mental and spiritual culture, she has been forced to confine her ministry largely to the physical, and has been first and chiefly their cook and seamstress; all of which some one, with not a tithe of her gifts and acquirements, could have been quite as well as she.

The problem is very much complicated by our existing social system. Some of the difficulties in the way of married women developing their powers and carrying on congenial work are not peculiar to married women, nor, indeed, to any women, but are common to every individual of our society. They are elements in the labor problem, and can be solved only when that is solved. One of the objections urged against Bellamy's ideal system is that it leaves the ultimate decision of the individual's life-work to others. It is astonishing that people who use their eyes and their brains at all, should suggest such a criticism. It is really one of the strong points of this proposed system. The objections count entirely against the present social condition. Under Bellamy's system where the field is surveyed from a single point of view, and the demand for work and the preferences of the workers are placed side by side, the individual stands at least ten chances to where he now stands one, of entering the vocation of his choice.

In our rough-and-tumble system every one, theoretically, chooses his own work; practically, the vast majority are obliged to snatch up any kind of work that comes along; few even stop to inquire for what they are fitted, or which they prefer. This is universally true in the lower pursuits; in the ranks of skilled labor, also, the individual often finds his particular skill a drug in the market, and is forced, temporarily at least, at great loss, into other work for which he has had no training. Even in the professions, the most favored of all vocations, similar instances are not unknown. It is essential that women recognize these facts that they may not ascribe blame where it does not belong.

It is true of men and women alike that those in moderate circumstances cannot afford to spend much time in occupations which bring no money return. Hence, unless a woman's tastes run along lines which command a market value, she stands small chance of gratifying them to a large extent. But, after full allowance has been made for all this, it still remains true that there are disabilities peculiar to married women and that a woman more than a man is called upon to sacrifice her tastes and her abilities at the matrimonial altar. Part of this is unavoidable but we believe that there is a vast amount of unnecessary and harmful sacrifice of this kind.

To begin with, we would say so plainly that we cannot be misunderstood, we believe a mother's first duty is to her children, that whatever clashes with their best interests should be unhesitatingly sacrificed. More, every woman who marries should do so with this fully in mind. The married woman to whom children come as a surprise and a disappointment, a frustration of her plans, has a false view of marriage itself. And when the children have come they are the mother's most sacred duty. We confess that we do not believe in nurses as they are commonly employed. A nurse under the close and watchful surveillance of the mother may not be objectionable, but the extent to which the care and education of children is left in the hands of young, ignorant, inefficient nurse girls, we consider a betrayal of the child's highest good.

But even should the children monopolize the entire time and thought of the mother during their childhood, children grow up and, as one of our white-ribboners has said, "A life work lasts a lifetime," and after "the little ones are fledged and flown" the woman who has wisely conserved her physical and mental powers may carry out her plans along other lines and accomplish a far nobler life work than she would have been capable of doing had she missed the development of mind and heart which the rearing of her children has brought to her. In very few instances is it necessary that women in moderate circumstances should be the bond slaves that many of them are and should so exhaust their physical resources and allow their mental powers to die of disuse that when their children are grown they themselves are broken down and unfit for farther service.

We know of one white-ribboner, a college graduate, on a western farm, who may serve as an inspiration to others. Like most farmers' wives in the West, she has lived constantly under heavy financial burdens, and been forced to practice the closest economy. She has had next to no help in her housework, which has been enormous, or in the care of her children, and she has seven under eleven years of age, or in her sewing, and yet she keeps up an active, intelligent interest in the affairs of the community, is well posted on all questions of the day, is an active worker in our ranks, and has been through it all an admirable mother. We do not believe many could do what she has done, and fortunately not very many are called upon to do it, but more could approximate it if they would study carefully the elements of her success—care of her health, a wise disregard of unnecessary punctiliousness in housekeeping, which is such a consumer of time, and which does no one any good, and above all a genuine, practical Christian faith, by virtue of which she possesses the Christian's rightful heritage, buoyancy of spirits and absolute immunity from despondency, discouragement and worry, to which must be added a considerate, sympathizing husband.

Women might save themselves much time for profitable employment if they would resolutely turn their backs upon the unnecessary work which Mrs. Grundy demands of them. How many a woman, for example, as she spends hours putting on tucks, ruffles and furbelows of various kinds stops to consider the books she might read in the time thus consumed, calculates the sacrifice of mental and spiritual culture, both for herself and children, and remembers that for every moment of her time, as well as for "every idle word," she "shall give account thereof in the day of judgment"?

But this does not cover the entire case. Many a woman might be exempted from a large share of the household drudgery, which crowds out all opportunity for the culture of her higher nature, were it not for the false and pernicious views which make women to so great an extent mere pensioners upon their husband's bounty and consider it the "chief end" of woman to "do her own work." True economy, which secures the largest results along whatever line with the least outlay, which sacrifices non-essentials for essentials, is one of the highest virtues; but economy in the sense in which it is ordinarily used, which confines itself to material things, which accounts the sacrifice of the spiritual and the mental nothing, and the "saving" of the material everything, is not economy but criminal wastefulness.

We deliberately say that the woman who might hire part of her work done and devote the time thus saved to her own intellectual training, instead of being worthy of condemnation for her economy, is guilty of the worst kind of wastefulness and sins against herself, her husband, her children and the entire community if she persists in making herself a household drudge. It makes no difference by what means this end can be reached, whether by work along her own chosen specialty she is able to earn the exemption from a part of the menial work or whether the household and, what should be the partnership, purse is sufficient for the purpose, it is both her right and her duty to provide for her higher culture.

Right along this line the New Testament comes with a message to women which they and all the world have too generally misunderstood. Christ's words to Martha, "Mary hath chosen the better part," are full of the tenderest sympathy and cheer to overburdened women if they would but open their understanding to comprehend its import. At that time much more than now household drudgery was woman's only legitimate sphere; even His disciples marveled that the Master should condescend to talk with "a woman" beside the well. Yet in the midst of all that prejudice, it is not the immaculate housewife He commends, but the one who, utterly forsaking all these "womanly" duties (?), improved the priceless opportunity to sit at His feet. Be assured, sisters, the women who, not of necessity but choice, even though it be from a mistaken sense of duty, waste their higher powers in order to save a little of this world's goods, may receive when they come before the Master the doubtful commendation, "Thou art careful and troubled about many things," but it will be the Marys who will win the highest praise of "she hath chosen the better part."

HINTS FOR LOCAL WORK.

Naturally every white-ribboner is specially interested in the local union to which she herself belongs, and in the success of W. C. T. U. work in her own home field. Naturally, too, our women look to their National organ and to experienced workers for aid and counsel in their difficulties. THE UNION SIGNAL is often asked to give suggestions and advice concerning methods of conducting local meetings and of sustaining that interest and enthusiasm with which—perhaps under the inspiring influence of a National or state organizer—the organization starts out.

In large cities where women are more accustomed to associated work, or in localities where circumstances stir the women to especially aggressive effort in the protection of home against the saloon and where the work of many different departments is practicable there is, for obvious reasons, not so much question as to the conduct of the local meeting. It is from the smaller towns and country places where there is apparently less urgent call for active temperance work that the query comes, How shall we sustain the interest? What departments shall we take up? And as it is these unions which constitute the great mass and the chief strength of our organization (in ways which the limits of this article will not allow us to indicate) we are glad to offer some suggestions which, if they do not fit all cases, may at least suggest something that will.

"Should the president always preside, or would it add to the interest and effectiveness of the local meeting if the members presided in turn?" we are asked. Clearly, according to parliamentary law, the duty of presiding devolves upon the woman regularly elected to that office, and the president being present it is only upon her request (or, in her absence, at the request of the vice-president) that a member may occupy the chair. Of course if she thinks it advisable for the best interests of the society to have members preside in turn she may request any member present to act as temporary chairman. But while it may be a good plan occasionally to thus vary the regular order—and perhaps by this means to discover latent talent—we think, that, as a rule, the president should preside both at meetings of the union and at public gatherings called by the W. C. T. U. In the devotional service which always precedes any business meeting of the W. C. T. U., whether local, state or National, it is best that the members take charge in turn, the leader being usually appointed by the superintendent of evangelistic work.

As to department work our own observation and practical experience of local methods has convinced us that where many departments would be impracticable, two of the most effective and most extended in their educatory influence are those of juvenile and press work. We know of one union which concentrated its energies upon a single line of effort. It organized a Loyal Temperance Legion, which from a small beginning became phenomenal in its results. Temperance work among the children is sure to bring about a hopeful thinking in the homes of the community—a thinking that augurs ill for the liquor traffic.

In every town or village which boasts a daily or weekly newspaper may be found some woman who is capable and willing to take charge of a temperance column, and few editors, if approached tactfully, will refuse to give a certain space weekly for items that are newsy and of local interest. With these two departments—juvenile and press—in active operation the W. C. T. U. cannot fail to be a powerful educative force and therefore a "success," no matter how small the organization may be numerically.

Speaking of press work, we would suggest that whenever the local meeting is of sufficient interest, that is, whenever the union transacts business of special interest to the public, the minutes of that meeting be published. By so doing a reply is made to the question so often asked by non-members, What do you do at your meetings? (some people still persist in thinking we do nothing but sing and pray), and the editor is always glad to publish such report—in fact we have known editors to ask for it.

Without doubt it is advisable for every local union to have its own headquarters, but where this is not practicable the meetings may be held in the churches alternately, or failing that, at the homes of members or of any lady who extends an invitation. Indeed, in some communities it has been found a good plan to meet thus in different homes. It is often a means of interesting those who would otherwise remain careless and apathetic concerning the work.

The "Monthly Readings," issued by the W. T. P. A. will be found very helpful in the local meeting. They serve both to impart information concerning the work of various departments and to give different and perhaps diffident members a part in the program.

As not all members take THE UNION SIGNAL, which does not argue that they should not, an article from its pages read occasionally by a good reader will prove most profitable, and if it be followed by a brief discussion of the main points of interest in the same it will add much to the interest and profit.

If it is desired to arouse indignation against the liquor traffic and to intensify the hatred of wives and mothers for the licensed saloon, let the members from time to time, as may be arranged, relate or read some incident bearing upon the drink evil which has come under their own observation, or has been brought to their notice in the papers—and, alas! there is never any lack of material for this kind of a program, no matter whether the union is in city, town or country.

THE INDISPENSABLE FACTOR IN OUR WORK.

In all lines of work there are certain indispensable elements. The gardener has not yet learned to do away with the hoe; the mason is absolutely dependent upon the trowel. The astronomer cannot pierce the heavens without invoking the aid of the telescope, nor can the scientist pursue his investigations if he discard the microscope. No lawyer can afford to ignore Blackstone; no doctor would attempt to practice without the necessary accompaniment of a medicine chest.

What would be thought of the writer who had not studied literature—or the Christian who never reads his Bible? We recognize instinctively that certain elements are as absolutely necessary in the performance of any work as are the rolling-pin and moulding board in the evolution of a loaf of bread.

Granted these premises, and what is the logical conclusion? That for the successful prosecution of the special work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, there is an absolutely indispensable factor; a something without which the work cannot exist, save in the most feeble and inefficient manner.

What is that factor? The official organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U.,

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Let us see if this claim can be substantiated. What is THE UNION SIGNAL? The answer must, for convenience sake, be divided into many heads.

1. It is the cheapest paper in this country to-day, not in quality, but in actual cost. A sixteen, and frequently a twenty page weekly, packed to the utmost possible extent with solid type—no efforts at "padding"—and all for one dollar per year, less than two cents per week!

2. It is a live paper, alive to all that affects humanity. Standing as the official organ of that society, which, long ago, adopted the "do-everything policy," it has never retarded its work, but has, rather, led on to higher heights of devotion and blazed the way through hitherto untrodden paths. It is a paper which dares.

3. It is the only official medium of communication between the leaders of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the great rank and file of its membership. The utter impossibility of the general officers communicating directly with each individual member will appear at the outset, and yet, they do communicate directly through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. Here appear Miss Willard's bugle notes to action; here in the weekly columns of the corresponding secretary and treasurer are found the heart-to-heart, hand-to-hand touch which links each to all. Here in the department of News from the Field are the latest items from each state and territory, while once a month there is an issue especially devoted to the work of the World's W. C. T. U. Whatever is of vital import in reform work, anywhere, finds mention in the columns of this far-seeing paper, while the list of contributors and correspondents embraces many of the best known names in the literary circles of to-day. The Publisher's Notes keep one in touch with all the publications of the W. T. P. A., indeed, there is no item of present or future occurrence which does not find due mention. So that THE UNION SIGNAL is as necessary to the full information of a white-ribboner as is the daily paper to a politician.

4. Despite all this, and very much more which might, with equal truth be said, white-ribboners exist who neither take nor read THE UNION SIGNAL. This is apparent in the subscription list, which in the aggregate hardly reaches one-third of the membership of the W. C. T. U., while, since we know that the paper is largely taken outside of distinctive W. C. T. U. circles, the proportion narrows itself down to yet smaller limits. The sad fact also becomes apparent in a too widely pervasive ignorance of our work, even among those who ought best to know of it. We have known local and county presidents who did not take THE UNION SIGNAL; we have even heard of more than one state president whose name could not be found upon our subscription list. What can be hoped for the progress of the work in such unions? Too many of the letters which reach us indicate either that our women do not read, or that reading, they do not heed. Orders are persistently sent to the wrong address and not infrequently the editors are reprimanded for failing to do a piece of work, which if it had been done by them, would transform the editorial rooms into a depot for transportation of packages.

But all these are but minor matters. Willingly would we transmit, day after day, letters to their proper destination, willingly would we explain over and over again to inquirers what has already been stated in our columns. It is not personally that we grieve, but because we recognize that our work can never attain its proper proportions, can never be carried on to its ultimate triumph, until our women enter upon it understandingly and follow its development with the trained eye and experienced brain which can only come from keeping in constant acquaintance with all its developments. And how else one can keep en rapport with any work save by reading its official organ?

We know the defects of THE UNION SIGNAL. No one can know them so fully as those who are constantly striving to remedy them. Many of these defects would be self-remedied if our constituency but gave us the generous support which would warrant us in a broader policy. As it is there is a constant aiming at perfection which will surely, some day, eventuate in a paper even more worthy the cause for which it stands.

It is not, however, from the standpoint of THE UNION SIGNAL, but from the standpoint of the W. C. T. U. worker, however lowly her sphere or limited her range of work, that we speak when we declare, and that from experience, that THE UNION SIGNAL is, next to divine grace and the power of prayer, the one indispensable factor in our work for God, and home, and humanity.

WE scarcely ever look through a day's exchanges without finding one or more clippings from THE UNION SIGNAL used without credit. If this were merely in the regular exchange or selected column, we would not take so much exception to it, although even there it is customary and courteous to mention the name of the paper. But these extracts are frequently found in the editorial columns, where only original matter is supposed to find place, unless full acknowledgment, at least, is given. Will not all the state W. C. T. U. papers, especially, take pains to credit THE UNION SIGNAL with all matter selected from its pages? This is not only conformation to good journalistic form, but will be a great help to a paper which aims to give only the best and freshest to its readers.

Prayer is the most practical thing in the world—asking the Heavenly Father for specific supplies for our needs. Yet, a large number of good people are more unbusiness-like in their prayers and less practical than they are about the least important transactions of secular life. Many men and women who keep careful records of letters written, calls made and plans promulgated, make their requests known to God in all earnestness, sincerely desirous of having them answered and then go away, almost forgetting the manner and time thereof. On the other hand there are matter-of-fact Christians who take God at His Word, and asking in faith and according to promise, watch and wait for the answer, well-nigh counting the hours and days till it come. Out of such a practical habit as this has grown a little book entitled, "The Prayer Record," being simply a blank book with ruled pages on which are to be entered the object of prayer, date of request, date of answer, with room for any remarks the owner of the book may care to make. Mrs. A. J. Penfield, one of New Jersey's W. C. T. U. mothers, is the originator of the idea. The plan is an admirable one in connection with our white ribbon work, the written records being reminders to us of our own undertakings, urging us to more persistent calling upon God.

***

The National Christian League for the promotion of social purity, organized by Mrs. E. P. Grannis, of New York City, is doing excellent work and deserves well of all good people. The society has the courage of its convictions and does not fear to stand by "abandoned women" as well as "fallen men," but while its Gospel mission is one of rescue and restoration, it seeks with equal earnestness the prevention of vice and the protection of women by righteous laws which shall make the standard of morality the same for the brother and sister in the home, in society and the great world.

***

Somebody who was opposed to total abstinence sent a question like this to Lady Henry Somerset at one of her conferences: "What are we to do with the Bible text about 'your barns shall be filled with plenty and your presses shall burst forth with new wine,' also with this: 'No man putteth new wine into old bottles, lest the bottles break and the wine runneth out and the bottles perish; but they put new wine into new bottles and both are preserved?'" The purport of the question evidently was to show that the Bible approved of alcoholic wine, for if wine bursts forth from the press and makes a rent in the skin bottle it must in the nature of the case be fermented. Lady Henry answered quietly: "The letter killeth, the Spirit giveth life. I should take these passages as being no more literal than the one that commands the washing of feet to disciples of Christ, or the one that bids women cover their heads and keep silence in a church. The question for us to ask is: 'What would Christ do to-day if He were here?' In a different age, a different climate, and in presence of a different race from ours, things may be said and done that are not right or best for the Anglo-Saxon of the present day with the drink delusion strong upon him. The Golden Rule, the Sermon on the Mount, and the Pauline doctrine that 'I will not cause my brother to offend,' afford ample reply to the question of our anonymous friend."

***

One of On Duty's readers takes exception to her indorsement of the Brooklyn board of education, in making provision for retired teachers. This reader makes the following good point: "I fail to see where praise is due for reserving one per cent of the teachers' salaries for a pension fund. If the pension were to be granted after the specified terms of service, the money to come from the public funds, all praise is due to the appreciation recognized by the city for the work of the teachers, but to take it from the teachers' salaries without their consent, is nothing short of robbery. It is forcing the teachers to give to a certain object whether they will or not." Theoretically the action may look a little arbitrary and unjust, but when the "certain object" is purely for the teachers' benefit and the amount reserved (one per cent) so small that it will produce no inconvenience, such objections are not altogether valid. The same principle is found in Pullman, Ill., where good homes are furnished by the company and the rent taken from the salaries, also in numerous mercantile establishments, where a part of the salary is devoted to the support of a hospital in which the employés may have free treatment when sickness comes upon them. I do not know the motive prompting this plan of the Brooklyn fathers but it looks very much like a savings bank in which the depositors are spared the trouble of making their own deposits. ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

"Hurrah for the land of the setting sun!
Hurrah for the State of Washington!
Hurrah for the men and women and all,
Who came to make the forests fall!
Hurrah for every pioneer,
Who built his humble cabin here.

. . . . . .

"Hurrah for the new and gleaming gem!
That glints within the banner's hem—
That shines upon the nation's shield,
And in the flag's pure azure field!
Hurrah for the land of the setting sun!
Hurrah for the State of Washington!"

So sings the poet, but there is a blight on the picture, a flaw that mars its beauty. The saloon is here, the gambling house and its kindred vices. There are many broad acres of our soil put to Satan's use in growing hops out of which to make beer which neither blesses nor enriches the consumer, and we cry "hard times." The times are indeed hard, but if the soils of Washington were used for raising fruits, grains and vegetables there would be food and to spare.

The Washington state prohibition alliance held its annual session in January. One hundred and sixty members and delegates were present. Among others present were our state president, Mrs. Melinda Shaffer, and Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, National organizer of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mattie N. Graves, state secretary of the Y. W. C. T. U., represented both the W. C. T. U. and Prohibition Club of Centralia. This club holds a four o'clock prayer meeting for prohibition every Sabbath the year around. All present were privileged to take part in the discussions and allowed to vote on all questions.

The active agent of the Alliance, Brother E. B. Sutton, thus sums up the matter:

"Altogether the outlook is better than ever before in the history of our prohibition movement.

"It is a matter of history that the Republican party of this nation has been for years favoring prohibition—among the wild Indians—where there is not a single Republican voter; while the Democrats of the South have been favoring local prohibition among the negroes of the Dixie Land where there are no Democratic voters. But now comes Mr. Cleveland with his message to the American Congress, and boldly throws down the gauntlet and declares in favor of national prohibition. Where? Why, among the wild negroes of the Congo Basin in Darkest Africa, where there is not, never has been, and probably never will be a Democratic voter.

"Who will dispute with us when we say the outlook is bright. With the Republican party favoring prohibition among the Indians, the Democratic party favoring prohibition among the negroes, and the Prohibition party favoring prohibition among the white men, do you not begin to see not merely daylight but the glinting of the sunbeams among the tree tops on the mountain side? Our motto, the saloon must go, will soon be replaced by one declaring the saloon has gone."

Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox is doing a good work in this state. Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden, state organizer, has been called to mourn the death of her eldest son. She is now in the field at work. "Though loth to go," she writes, "the Master's work is a great healer of broken hearts."

The Tacoma union observed Crusade Day according to the program suggested in THE UNION SIGNAL by an all-day meeting at our gospel temperance mission room. There was a fair attendance, and a helpful, inspiring meeting. At the mass-meeting Dr. Cherrington gave a history of the original Crusade.

Reminiscenes of those days by some who were participants made a deep impression. Cards were distributed to secure new members. A new uplift was given to our work by observing the twentieth anniversary of the greatest movement of modern times.

The Shelton union (Mason county) holds regular meetings. It had a sociable which was quite successful. Dr. Frances A. Cady, of Portland, lectured to the ladies one Sunday afternoon. Her subject was, "What Christ has done for women." On another occasion a mass-meeting was held in the Methodist church. A number of speakers were listened to with interest.

Brother F. L. Pierce, an evangelist from Seattle, led in prayer. Addresses were made by Dr. Hickerson, Rev. S. W. Beavers, and Mrs. Shaffer. The union never before in the five years of its existence, had such a rally. Five new members gave their names to the union and their hands to the work of rescuing the perishing. Several honorary members were received and ten signatures to the pledge.

Kent union has just sent a box to the White Shield Home at Tacoma.

ETTA JONES,
State Reporter, Kent.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MONTHLY BULLETIN.

We do not move very rapidly in Massachusetts. We are solid but we are not fast. Therefore, the history of a month is not specially cumulative. However, the annual meetings held in January and February were a series of accumulations. The sum of effort involved in the workings of 330 unions, with a membership of over 10,000; 200 companies of the L. T. L., with 1,300 enrolled; 1,200 active and honorary Y's, may seem to be stated in statistics, but there is much between the lines. It is not expected that a temperance nation will be born in a day—it never has been—and so we buckle on our armor and inch along.

Our state officers have instituted something truly enterprising this year, a series of official visitations, compassing the state. The whole Massachusetts W. C. T. U. parish is to be visited with a view to lengthening cords and strengthening stakes. Mrs. Fessenden, president, has been touring in Barnstable county, and has taken and received a blessing. Harwich, Chatham, Orleans, Wellfleet, Truro and Provincetown have been visited. Helen G. Rice, the children's captain, has been in Franklin county and up among the Berkshires, and everybody felt the better and brighter for her coming. Abbie J. Rolfe is looking after her great Middlesex parish, and Mrs. S. B. Shapleigh is never without a welcome among her constituency in Suffolk. In ways like these new heartiness is being put into the work.

It was truly a ray of sunlight to have Elizabeth P. Gordon, our quondam secretary, drop into the Dorchester annual meeting and give the latest news from England—a real home talk about Reigate, and Lady Henry and Lady Frances, and the stenographers and type-writers, and all that goes to make up that busy life over the sea. The life that reaches not alone into England and America, but around the globe. The world does not seem so very large, and the kingdom so remote, when one reads from a paper an item like this: "The fourth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Natal, Africa, was held this year at Verulam. Thirty delegates, representing six branches, were present. The address by the president, Mrs. Bridgman, was full of thanksgiving for the work of the year." But what odds to fight against in Africa! indeed, everywhere.

"Yet now, therefore, be strong, O Zerubbabel, [Frances! Isabel! Mary! Susan! and all the rest,] saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts."

Massachusetts has a weekly prayer and conference meeting. Every Monday morning at eleven o'clock at headquarters, 171 Tremont St., Boston, some workers gather. This point is inserted here for the considerable portion of our constituency who are so rich as to have THE UNION SIGNAL and so poor as to be bereft of the state paper, Our Message. And while the reporter has your ear it will not be amiss to say that the more local Massachusetts news will be found in this "Message." This is what it is for. The February issue is replete with good things such as special contributions from Mary Livermore, Joseph Cook, Alice Stone Blackwell, and a rousing song of "Victory," by Ella Gilbert Ives.

This state will have its part in the Neal Dow celebration March 20. The historic "King's Chapel," Boston, has been engaged, and the occasion will gather to itself noted speakers and workers in the temperance cause. The principle and the promoter shall be celebrated in spite of what an editor calls "The Farce of Prohibition." We try to keep and teach the Ten Commandments, but we are perfectly aware that they are not always "enforced."

You want to know, perhaps, how we came out with our municipal suffrage petition. As usual! "leave to withdraw." But it is only a question of time.

"You can't stay the onward motion,
Any more than King Canute
Could arrest the mighty ocean,
With his royal nod astute;
So you'd better do as he did,—
Bow to God's imperial sway;
Get in line with His appointment,
Gladly, eagerly, obey."

There were three hearings before the legislative committee, after which the bill was presented to the House in a minority report by Mr. Roe, of Worcester. Two amendments were offered—one, by a legislative brother, who is sometimes ior the cause and sometimes against. These amendments involved submitting the matter to the supreme court and there it is.

LOUISE C. PURINGTON,
State Reporter, Dorchester.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

AN AFFLICTED STATE.

It has been a long time since I have sent news from our state, and now that I am writing, I have little that is bright or cheering to tell.

Christmas was observed in several places with the customary visits to jails, almshouses, and L. T. L. meetings.

The Newberry L. T. L. established by Mrs. Mower years ago still remains a fitting monument to her. Since her death it has been conducted under the presidency of Mrs. Sophia Redus. Its meetings have been held every Tuesday, during 1893, rain or shine, cold or hot, and the attendance has never been less than thirty-five. Prizes were offered a year ago only to members whose attendance was fifty per cent. or more, which enabled them to have their names inscribed on a roll of honor, and all who attended every meeting should receive a prize. The prizes, $2.50 in gold, were awarded to four members. Thirty-eight names were on the roll of honor, and more than ninety members received prizes, all useful books. Every member, regardless of attendance, received a little basket of nuts, fruits, and candies. Mrs. L. J. Jones supplied the hall with flowers during the past season. Mrs. Dennis has faithfully aided in this laudable work and attended all the meetings. The prizes, the books, and the sweetmeats are all given by the Hon. George S. Mower. What more touching memorial than this could he give to his mother's memory?

The Spartanburg union sent its usual Christmas treat to the poor-house. The temperance Sunday-school observed the occasion with presents to the scholars. The never-give-up superintendent of the L. T. L. gave an exhibition of her little ones. A month ago the pastors of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches held a meeting for us. In a plain, outspoken way they handled the liquor traffic with gloves off. We all felt we had cause to be proud of our pastors.

Our Spartanburg union is troubled at this time over the continued ill health of our president, Mrs. Wm. K. Blake. She has been for several months one of the shut-in band, but even to her sick room we go with our doubts and fears, and come away strengthened and brightened.

The Beaufort union has had its hands and heart full for a long time with the sufferers from the storm on the coast. Clara Barton's Red Cross Society has been at work among the thousands of homeless, starving ones on the islands and along the coast of the lower counties.

Mrs. Chapin is devoting much of her time to the work in Charleston, that goes to prove that the Charleston union is wide awake and at work.

Our whole state has been greatly saddened over the sudden loss of Miss Yeargin. Perhaps some who met her at the National Convention in Atlanta will remember her bright, intelligent face. She was not one to be easily forgotten. She seemed so strong and full of energy, and there was so much she could do, we had mapped out for her a long and useful life. It was hard to think of her drifting about in the cold waters of a northern lake. We thanked God that He caused the restless waves to give her body back to loving ones. And it was with a feeling of relief that she was brought home to sleep with her own dead in the Carolina pine shadows. A few days ago her father was stricken with paralysis, and died suddenly. The mother is left to bear her sorrows doubly bereaved.

The temperance outlook for the state is very dark. The dispensary law is now at work and it is impossible to sum up its evils. The only prohibition there is in it, is that all are prohibited from selling it, except the state. Every whisky bottle is stamped with the Palmetto tree. Even our enemies always respected our state emblem; they need do so no longer. It is degraded and dishonored. We hope all the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will read again the article by Mr. Duncan, of Newberry, in the number of February 1. It is a clearer setting forth of the true state of the case than I can give. We asked of our law makers, bread, they gave us a stone; we asked for fish and they gave us a scorpion. In the beginning of this dispensary business some said: "Temperance is set back twenty years." They had better have said a hundred. We have gone back to the time when it stood upon the sideboards and little children saw it drank in the home circle, for the law now forbids drinking it in the dispensary, it must be carried out into the streets and into the homes.

The liquor law as it stood before could only have saloons in the towns, now every little village can have a dispensary. Places that have been free from bar-rooms for years now have dispensaries forced upon them. Men, who have been counted temperance men, now feel it their duty to support these state saloons from political feelings. I close this dismal letter with the following notice from to-day's paper: "The Union Dispensary is booming and took in about $200 the first day it opened. Last salesday Spartanburg went over $300." "It will prove a great source of revenue to our state, county and city." Our papers are full of items of this kind. The outlook is very dark.

N. P. FARROW,
State Reporter, Spartanburg.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

If you see the faithfulness, the courage, the golden thread of prayer all through these "etchings" they will be as beautiful as the frost work tracing on my window this winter's morning.

From the twelfth district comes encouraging reports and I have eight squibs telling of the effective work in Manitoba done by this organizer, gaining six hundred members the president, Mrs. Law. Their district meeting was held at Escanaba. Reports and discussions were held, two of the latter upon "The outlook for the coming year," and "What good has this convention done me?" Three papers were given, the subject of one being "Educational advantages of the W. C. T. U." The evenings were filled with addresses and a gold medal contest.

Stambaugh union in this district makes calls on the sick and poor, inviting persons to come to meeting. Such has been their spirit of consecration many members prayed audibly. In house to house visiting they learned one family gave up use of liquor through efforts of their L. T. L. boy. A man who joined the union spent Thanksgiving with his family—the first time in fifteen years—giving his wife a set of silver knives and forks with the money so saved.

From Port Huron in the seventh district comes account of a christening at a W. C. T. U. meeting, a four months' old baby named Frances Willard Gordon. The baby was presented with a silver spoon in behalf of the union.

Milford, sixth district, has a live union although not a year old; recently on Sunday evening the state superintendent of L. T. L. gave an address there. Three churches of the town united in the service. Forty-three signed the pledge and one man asked for a pledge including tobacco, saying he would not sign unless that was included; he was an habitual user of the weed. Before leaving Mrs. Greene organized a large L. T. L.

Wyandotte, first district, writes of their Crusade Day exercises. The first hour was devotional; second, history of the work; third hour, prophetic. The district L. T. L. officers, with the state superintendent, held a midwinter executive board meeting at this place, planning for a convention in the summer. This very alive union also held a reception for the school-board and teachers and clergymen, to bring before them the subject of scientific temperance instruction, and presented them a set of Mrs. Hunt's books. Two papers were read, music and refreshments gave a delightful evening. One of the faithful workers in this district has been Mrs. Lillian Hollister, president of the Central union, Detroit. The mail brings me resolutions of love and regret on her resigning this office for the present.

From the fifth district a clipping from a paper tells of the Sunday service at the Ionia reformatory. This report by an inmate says, "The services were conducted by the W. C. T. U. and, as usual, we had a very interesting time. Mrs. Wilson, state superintendent of prison and police work, opened the meeting; after prayers, the inmate choir rendered an anthem and several recitations were given. In answer to a call from Mrs. Wilson several inmates spoke grateful words of the work of the W. C. T. U. Seventy-five cards were taken and signed. Another paper, The Fenton Independent, edited by one of our good brothers-in-law, gives a full account of the joint celebration of the Crusade anniversary by Holly and Fenton in an all-day meeting at the M. E. church at Holly. The address of the evening was by Mrs. Dawson, of Pontiac, and as she was one of the original organizers of the W. C. T. U. at Chautauqua, N. Y., her lecture was very much enjoyed. This same speaker was also at Oakland county convention, which was held at Novi, which from secretary's and treasurer's reports showed advance.

Mrs. Van O'Linda says for foreign work, "We have now literature in seventeen languages, yet in our large state it would require 450 superintendents to do the work as I could wish."

The county president of Ingham reports from Williamston union the formation of a literary society called the "White Ribbon Literary," meeting every three weeks. Tobacco was the subject at the last. Both men and women are members.

Mrs. Aldrich says, "The unions of Michigan are trying to make camp life happier by sending papers to the camps." The L. T. L's of the state have sent enough money for a room in the Temperance Hospital—and any received now will be credited toward the endowment of the room. A new Legion has been formed at McBain. There are also two new W's in the ninth district, noe named Hopkins for the new president.

The superintendent of literature says, "District, county and local superintendents should make it their first duty to induce members to provide themselves with tools to work with—these are our papers and leaflets."

We have just lost a woman in Michigan who lived at Three Oaks. Fifteen years ago she formed a W. C. T. U. there, and it has been a bright and shining light ever since. All causes were responded to promptly as the word came down the line. The stuff of which she was made was akin to the "Old Guard," or better still, Paul the Apostle. Nearly a year ago the members became few, and word crept out, "We had better disband." She heard the rumor and walked some distance to be at the place of meeting to say: "I heard we were going to disband. Why, we never disband. I never thought of such a thing as disbanding." She was seventy then. Sisters, you in your states, I in mine, "As seeing Him who is invisible," "and having done all things, stand."

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

OKLAHOMA.

"BE OF GOOD COURAGE,"

is the motto that adorns our minutes, the first annual report that this territorial W. C. T. U. has felt financially able to have published. This is the fourth year since our organization, and as we are "Laters," we intend to possess the land, and trust our work will show our courage.

Mrs. M. H. Switzer, our territorial president, made her "maiden speech" at Watonga, and the result was a union formed, with nineteen members, and others promising to join soon. Some of the persons who joined declared they could not, as they had all they could attend to, but after hearing Mrs. Switzer's address, changed their minds and became white-ribboners. Mrs. Switzer was elected president, against her most earnest protestations of unfitness for the office. It is said, "the voice of the people is the voice of God," and the manner in which she seems to be grappling with the difficulties of the work in this new country is an omen of "good courage." Mrs. Switzer says she never fears losing members if they become readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and she has the promise of new subscribers from Watonga. The local editor's wife will join the union and edit a temperance column in her husband's paper.

Mrs. O. P. Light, president of the north district, after lecturing in Okarche, organized a union of eight members; this is the first union organized in Cheyenne and Arapahoe country. The natives of this portion of our territory have been given the full right of suffrage, but they cannot speak or read the English language. Mrs. Light has also held a silver medal contest at Lovely Valley schoolhouse, with a good audience. Miss Kate Thrailkill won the medal. The El Reno union, of which Mrs. Light is president, is doing good work. Six additions were secured to their membership during the winter. A five o'clock tea was given the union by Mrs. Susten, district superintendent of press work.

A public meeting at the South Methodist church was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Fisher, president Fort Worth University, Texas. The El Reno union also holds regular gospel services Sabbath afternoon in the county jail. We also cordially welcome to our ranks Mrs. Harriet Wampler, a member formerly of the Lucy Hayes union, of Minneapolis, Minn. She came to Enid, gathered around her a few white-ribboners and formed a union, before she learned that we had a territorial organization. Several gentlemen became honorary members; a Y. W. C. T. U. is being talked up. The business men of Enid have asked Mrs. Wampler to assist them in organizing a temperance club that will admit men and women, the business men desiring by this means to strengthen their forces to keep down the saloon element. The pastors take an active part in this movement. The ever faithful white-ribboner, Mrs. Emma Miller, heralds the glad tidings from Guthrie that the M. E. conference in session in that city, voted, not only to indorse the Woman's Christian Temperance Union "as the greatest factor for putting down the evil of intemperance," but bound themselves to coöperate with them in this territory during the ensuing year. What a victory! A thousand copies of their minutes were ordered printed, which will be equal to a thousand open letters to help the W. C. T. U. Dr. Young, of the St. Louis Advocate, was in attendance upon the conference. He paid an eloquent tribute to the W. C. T. U.: "It is one of the greatest organizations of the nineteenth century, and women are doing more for the advancement of humanity than men."

The Oklahoma city union is keeping right up with the procession, under the able leadership of its president, Mrs. W. W. Storm; they meet twice a month at the homes of the members. Parlor meetings, under the territorial superintendent, Mrs. O. A. Mitscher, have been a successful feature of this union. The first one, at the home of the president, the time was occupied in reading and conversation upon the vital topics of our society. Four new members added to strengthen the union's forces. Another parlor meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Mitscher, non-alcoholic medication was the subject under discussion; close attention was given by many of the ladies present to the helps and hints given upon the subject, and so interested, that it was decided to continue the subject at the next meeting. Two new names added to the membership.

Your reporter, who is also territorial press superintendent, having noted the offer of the W. T. P. A. to send THE UNION SIGNAL to ministers for fifty cents per year, is writing to all the unions asking them to subscribe for the paper for the ministers in their locality, thereby thinking if the incomparable UNION SIGNAL is read by the thinking leaders of the people, our cause would be greatly strengthened.

Oklahoma City has been the scene of a stirring revival of religion. Rev. Sam Small led, under the auspices of the clerical union. He preached one sermon to men only with a packed auditorium and gallery. On this occasion Rev. Small spoke his sentiments on the saloon problem. He is a well known Prohibitionist, has facts and figures at his tongue's end and puts them in a strange and startling way. He is now publishing a prohibition Democratic paper in Oklahoma City.

As press superintendent I have interviewed many editors for the purpose of obtaining space for W. C. T. U. matter in their papers. Among the number was a great Democratic daily; the editor was not "at home," but the business manager listened politely to my request for space, either for a W. C. T. U. column or scattered temperance matter, and he replied, "Madam, you know just as well as I do that politics and religious temperance won't mix, and that it would be very impolitic for us to grant your request." He said this, I imagined, with the same tone that Elder Judas Wast told Josiah Allen's wife, Samantha, "Oh, how unpractical females always are. Females are carried away by their sympathies and religious feelings, and sense of right and duty, making them a very dangerous element in politics." And like Samantha, "I was so beat out by my eloquent emotion that I sot still and let him go on."

Perry, the metropolis of the "Strip," has laid a tax of one hundred dollars a year upon wholesale liquor dealers, and they made it warm for the city council. By the way, one of our leading white-ribboners who made a successful run for a town lot at Perry, related the following incident on the day of opening the "Strip": She passed a rough fellow who said, "I wonder if there is a place on earth I could go and not see that little knot of white ribbon."

MRS. SUE UHL BROWN,
Territorial Reporter, Oklahoma City.

CONNECTICUT.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The intense cold, increased by high winds, did not deter the white-ribboners to the number of ninety-five, officers and delegates, from assembling at New Haven for the annual gathering, Mrs. Downs, county president, presided. After devotional exercises and a cheery greeting from the pastor good reports were read.

The Bible reading on Matthew 14, by Mrs. Fitz Gerald, was a very practical one, conveying the utter impracticability of carrying around the body of discontent.

The Rev. C. Pitblado, of Ansonia, in his earnest, emphatic way spoke of the liquor traffic as a huge Juggernaut which in its passage crushed out the life of all in its pathway. The song of Mr. Higgins, "My boy is a drunkard to-night," was accompanied by music of a small portable organ, which he stated had been with him in his travels with Mr. Moody in Chicago. Mrs. Effie Pitblado gave a very entertaining reminiscence of the National, Mrs. C. A. Holmes, of the World's, and Mrs. Effie Orcutt, of the state convention. The convention adjourned with the singing of the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again."

A small number of delegates met together in Middle Haddam, Middlesex county, to hold a semi-annual convention. An address was given by Mrs. Caroline B. Buell. A "children's hour" was conducted by Mrs. Fitz Gerald, in her happy way, and consisted of exercises by the children and a talk by Mrs. Fitz Gerald. Mrs. Forbes gave an excellent Bible reading from I. Chron. 4: 23. A greeting was sent to the convention by Mrs. H. B. Brown, former president, who is now in Melrose, Florida. A spirit of harmony pervaded the meeting and the kind friends who had cordially invited us entertained us royally.

LOCAL UNIONS.

Meriden union has been recently more than ordinarily occupied. In the death of Hon. J. C. Lewis, they feel that they have lost a friend, benefactor and sympathizer. A very appropriate and beautiful memorial service was held in White Ribbon Hall by the union.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt gave her address on scientific temperance instruction in Meriden this winter. A reception was tendered her to which all teachers in the city were invited.

Crusade Day was celebrated by this union with a program of praise, prayer, and reminiscences. The pastors from different local churches were present contributing greatly to the interest of the occasion. Mrs. J. H. Kelsey read Miss Willard's appeal to white-ribboners to help replenish the National treasury, to which a generous response was made. Mrs. Holmes, the president, made a brief address in which she alluded to the crumbs cast upon the waters twenty years ago out in Ohio, now multiplied into hundreds of loaves, scattered broadcast throughout the land. The evening was devoted to a grand temperance rally, many able speakers were present who represented temperance on the line of total abstinence and were heart and hand with the W. C. T. U. workers.

Middletown W. C. T. U. recently elected officers and made reports of work that were very encouraging. This union does much work at the jail and poor-house.

Rockfall W. C. T. U. has just held a vesper service which was encouraging in many respects. Though small, this union is made up of earnest women who are united heart and soul in the good work.

Mrs. Lute gave a chalk-talk to a good audience at Middlefield. Middlefield has a school board that examines its teachers according to the new educational law, that provides the required text books and otherwise aids the work of the W. C. T. U.

Danbury union has invested thirty-eight dollars in the interest of cold water, having repaired the pump at the railroad station and built a spring-water tank near the post office. Two temperance women will sit in the school councils this year, placed there by the aid of the woman's vote.

Mrs. McLaughlin has lectured for the Stratford union giving them grand aid in their no-license battle. Victory smiled on the temperance army by a majority of ten.

Shelton fighting the same battle has reduced the license majority for 149 in 1892 to 25 in 1893. This union is blessed in the hearty support of local pastors.

Bridgeport union, formerly Crusade, has established a rescue mission, known as the Home of Mercy. A clothing bureau is connected with this institution at which good, second-hand clothing can be procured at small cost. A work that it seems might be carried on by unions with good results is the circulation of sick-room utensils and remedies. In some places it is done by a society organized for the purpose, and much good is done; the articles are loaned without charge and under certain conditions, when they are returned the users often make a voluntary offering.

Newton is about to resume monthly meetings. The L. T. L. is prospering under the efficient leadership of Miss Wolcott.

Stepney has communicated with fifteen teachers in the interests of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, and has circulated anti-tobacco literature in fifteen public schools four times during the year, reaching in this way two hundred and thirty-seven children.

Buell union regularly visits the jail, hospital and almshouse, bearing kind words and little gifts of flowers, fruit and dainties.

Huntington reports that scientific temperance is taught in most of the district schools.

Sherman subscribes for THE UNION SIGNAL

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of

BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON

Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.

E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.
Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS

CURE

SICK HEADACHE, Disordered Liver, etc.

They Act Like Magic on the Vital Organs, Regulating the Secretions, restoring long lost Complexion, bringing back the Keen Edge of Appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These Facts are admitted by thousands, in all classes of Society. Largest Sale in the World.

Covered with a Tasteless & Soluble Coating.

Of all druggists. Price 25 cents a Box.
New York Depot, 365 Canal St.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,
80-82 W. 18th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

Knox's Sparkling Calves' Foot Gelatine

THE PUREST MADE

Received the only Medal and Diploma at the World's Fair, Chicago, on Package Gelatine for table use, for STRENGTH, PURITY and GOOD FLAVOR.

The only Gelatine positively free from odor or taste. Our new package has Rose Gelatine in top of each package to make fancy desserts. Your grocer has it if he keeps the best.

CHARLES B. KNOX, Johnstown, N. Y.

Send a 2-cent stamp for little book, "DAINTY DESSERTS FOR DAINTY PEOPLE."

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK

Corner Dearborn and Jackson Sts.,
CHICAGO, ILL.
UNDER STATE CONTROL.
INDIVIDUAL AND SAVINGS ACCOUNTS SOLICITED.
SAFETY ▲ DEPOSIT ▲ VAULTS.

A Swell Affair.

Did You Ever Look Like This?

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM
STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY
DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS
Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich.
THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,

But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.
H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

BAKER'S COCOA
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used for the editor of their local paper. Ladies' prayer-meetings have been held under the leadership of their superintendent of evangelistic work. Mrs. J. K. Barney has given her lecture, "Clean Hands" there.

The yearly report of the Ansonia union is so good that I regret space will not permit me to quote from it.

Rockwell L. T. L. meets every Sunday at the close of Sunday-school. Rev. J. L. Nott delivered, in the interest of the Rockfall W. C. T. U., a lecture showing the selfishness of a man who robs his family to gratify his appetite for intoxicants. The speaker believes that the taste for liquor is not a disease. His remarks were pertinent and had the effect to set people thinking.

The W. C. T. U. and Temple of Honor in Portland recently united and held a Sunday evening service, which was addressed by Rev. Clarence Greeley. He spoke of the outlook regarding legislation, its relation to the labor question and its influence on public opinion.

The Norwich Y now numbers about thirty members, and it is increasing at every meeting. They contemplate very active work this winter. They have already arranged to assist the city missionary in establishing a coffee-house, with an annex of a reading room. This room will be made attractive with books and games, and it is hoped will win many young men and women from the streets. In the meetings, which are held once in two weeks, they are to have debates on current topics, and exercises in parliamentary practice.

JOTTINGS.

From our state paper we glean several items of interest. One union is planning a "calling campaign" among former members, hoping to reawaken an interest.

Mr. Joseph E. Coe, of Menden, has given five hundred dollars to the new town hall in Middlefield, for the benefit of the local W. C. T. U., which will, in consequence, be accorded some accommodations and privileges in the edifice.

Goshen does good work distributing temperance literature and sending temperance publications into thirty different families. They have contributed liberally to all the calls made upon them. The union and L. T. L. together have expended over seventy dollars the past year for the cause of temperance.

Three faithful workers have passed from "ribbon white to robes of white": Mrs. Julia A. Bellows, of Essex, Miss Fanny C. Stone, of Abington, and Mrs. Susan Merwin Treat, of New Haven.

George P. Rogers, the first honorary life member of the Connecticut W. C. T. U., has passed away, exchanging this life for the eternal life, while asleep. Well may the white-ribboners mourn the loss of this true friend, who helped us in so many ways. We may not soon find another brother so earnest and loyal to this great cause of humanity.

M. BELLE SMITH,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

WEST PLAINFIELD, Wis., union, though few in number and only a year old, have some sheaves to show. They have been just helping the Eau Claire home by giving a social entertainment which netted a neat sum.

MAJOR and Mrs. E. T. Scott paid a visit to the temple, recently, and spoke a few words at the Willard Hall noon meeting. These staunch workers have been holding meetings in Kansas with the usual interest and success.

THE union of East Sedalia, Mo., of which Mrs. G. C. Grump is president, did flower mission work on St. Valentine's Day, by visiting the hospitals of the city and giving each inmate, of which there were thirty-nine, a beautiful bouquet—which was received with much gratitude.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS commanded the attention of a Groveville, Me., audience recently, presenting the work of the National W. C. T. U. in her clear, concise way, much to profit of the listeners. The Gorham male quartette furnished appropriate musical selections, and the occasion was one of value to the great cause.

HIAWATHA, Kan., temperance workers are deeply interested in the results of a recent case in which four prominent local druggists were fined to the full extent of the law ($300 and costs) for the illegal sale of liquor. The records in one of the cases have been most unaccountably spirited away, and most surprising of all, the Governor has granted a pardon to the law-breaking druggist on the letters of friends, among whom were the county attorney who prosecuted the case, the pastor who had labored with his erring member for this crime, and the president of the law and order league who had secured the evidence against the offender. It is believed, however, that the pardon is illegal, and the fine will be eventually imforced.

WASHINGTON'S birthday was celebrated by suitable exercises in the state normal school at Valley City, N. D. At the close of the program, through the efforts of Miss Emma Bates, preceptress, and state W. C. T. U. superintendent of heredity, hygiene and purity, the young ladies, nearly all of them teachers in the state, signed the World's petition.

AMONG the medical colleges which teach the effect of alcohol and tobacco upon the human system is Hering Medical College, Chicago. Dr. Clara Shaw, an earnest white-ribboner, who has been doing excellent service lecturing in this line, writes, "I will feel repaid if no physician from this college ever prescribes the accursed stuff in sickness and always denounces its use in health." Her lectures on this subject are received with great interest every term by the students.

FAIRMONT, W. Va., W. C. T. U. observed Crusade Day according to program, and sent a contribution in response to Miss Willard's appeal. Seven new active members were gained. Only one man was present at the camp-fire—but he was a man whose history is closely identified with the Crusade. Previous to that memorable winter of '73 and at that time he was a saloon-keeper. The Crusaders called upon him, prayed for him, and an arrow of conviction pierced his heart. Soon after, he became hopefully converted, and ever since he has lived a zealous and blameless Christian life, hating sin and all uncleanness. He is now a bold, fearless advocate of prohibition, and woman's suffrage, and the rum traffic has no more inveterate enemy.

MRS. JUDGE HOMER A. NELSON, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has proved herself an American woman in the typical sense that involves courage and good cheer. Mrs. Nelson is widely known among us, as she has been a delegate to the National W. C. T. U. for many years, and is president for one of the most important counties in New York state, where her husband was for a lifetime a leading lawyer and politician. Judge Nelson died some months ago, and his wife in her great loneliness resolved to go to Europe and alone make the tour they had so often hoped to make together. This she has done, taking a courier or guide, as occasion required, thus visiting the leading points in Great Britain and the leading cities on the Continent. She has been twice the guest of Lady Henry Somerset at Reigate, and interested the white-ribbon family there very much by reports of her adventures. One of her declarations was: "I shall tell our women all about this when I return, and my heart is more enlisted in the white-ribbon work than ever before!" During her stay in Paris Mrs. Nelson gave two Bible readings in the parlor of Miss De Broen, who has a W. C. T. U. headquarters at 205 Rue St. Honoré. This is a good address for our readers to remember, as the establishment is kept by temperance women, and our papers, leaflets, etc., are on file.

Official Communications.

SOCIAL PURITY.

MY DEAR COMRADES:—It is my belief that in Dr. Mary Wood Allen, superintendent of the social purity department, and her associate, Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, we have a "whole team" to help us along the most difficult piece of road that women ever tried to tread. Dr. Allen's little book entitled "Teaching Truth" would be an evangel to every young person into whose hands it might be placed in these days when impure literature is forwarded to school children through the post-office. I hold it to be the duty of every parent and guardian to build in beforehand the knowledge contained in a book like this, that the young people may be forearmed as well as forewarned. The mothers' meetings ought to be the right arm of the service in the next year throughout our entire constituency. If I were president of a local union, I would put on my "thinking cap" and, lifting up my heart in prayer for holy ingenuity, I would enlist the mothers on behalf of their children; holding parlor meetings for this purpose, and inducing each one to procure a copy of "Teaching Truth" for use in her own family. I would also invite the public school teachers to examine this rare little booklet, and would do my utmost to work up a social purity meeting for our National superintendent or some specialist as pure minded and clean worded as she is herself—it would be a benefaction to the community. Speech is golden and silence criminal in days like these, but that speech needs to be seasoned with the salt of mental refinement and spiritual grace.

You know how devoted I have been to this department, and how long I have looked for some one to take my place as its leader. I believe we have found the woman, and her last year's record proves it. The fact that she is a physician is greatly in her favor. Remember her address, Mary Wood Allen, M. D., 1412 Adams street, Toledo, O. Write to Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, the Sanitorium, Battle Creek, Mich., for help in conducting mothers' meetings. It is my fervent prayer that this mighty department of practical Christianity may gain a strong impetus this year. You alone, my sisters, can make this true.

Affectionately yours,
Frances E. Willard.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

The number of school savings banks are increasing in the United States, and those already running meet continual favor of school authorities and communities. No liberal feature of our W. C. T. U. work has more easy, effective and direct bearing on the eradication of the drink habit than this training to self responsible and economic thought; this making of every individual a property owner.

There is steady demand for the literature on the subject. My home secretary for the work in Norristown, Pa., who fills all orders in my name during my few months' absence, writes of the wide distribution she makes by mail. Will friends kindly bear in mind the expense of printing and postage, inclosing always with their orders for samples ten cents in stamps. Let us hear from every quarter, and may the light of economy be diffused in this new year as never before.

Since the annual department reports for the World's and National W. C. T. U. Conventions the schools of Forman, N. D., Camden, N. J., and others have taken up the work.

I would cordially and lovingly urge the superintendents of the states that have adopted the department of school savings banks, Maine, Missouri, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Idaho, Nevada and Florida, and the county superintendents in counties in California, New York, Pennsylvania and Kansas, to go forward cheerfully and persistently in introducing this great popular educational factor. It is most pleasant to tell people what they are interested to hear and gladly accept with the understanding, to help the world grow richer and better. We who labor for the uplifting of humanity, "Live for those who love us and the good that we can do."

Systems of saving in the schools and in the homes here in Germany are very effective. In some sections the school savings bank is used, and in others the postal savings bank. My winter abroad gives me broader acquaintance with foreign methods, and the needs of different nations, and I look forward to enlarged work with my prospective return to the states in the spring-time.

For "How to institute school savings banks," and all literature, address in my name, enclosing stamps, to Norristown, Pa.

Wishing you all a God-speed for 1894.

MRS. SARA L. OBERHOLTZER,
World's W. C. T. U. Sup't.
Freiburgine, Br., Germany.

DEPARTMENT OF PROPORTIONATE AND SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

We are rejoiced to hear that the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has created a department of proportionate and systematic giving, also that the Woman's Board of Missions has just ordered the appointment of a committee on benevolence for the promotion of these methods. This makes the sixth influential organization of women that has taken up this cause within the past ten months, and the outlook is most promising for concerted action on the part of all women's boards to bring about a return to Scriptural methods of giving. Every such accession to the general movement adds strength to our efforts and should afresh commend this department to the favorable attention of all our state unions.

The measures adopted by the nine organizations now officially urging these methods, are somewhat varied, but all are successful where vigorously employed. In no case is more being accomplished than has been done under favorable conditions, in our state unions. Such an agency is purely educational, formed to make sentiment, and the means that secure the greatest attention to the subject and produce the deepest conviction are of course the best. The cause we seek to promote must be persistently agitated. In this effort literature is a powerful agent. Neal Dow said, "Maine was sown knee deep with literature before prohibition was gained," which illustrates the power of the press in any reform. In our department the distribution of literature is a leading feature of the work. Only we must not conclude it is to be scattered "knee deep" at any one sowing. One good, strong pamphlet at a time, placed in each

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

WHY DO YOU WORRY along with dull knives and shears when . . . . .
75 CENTS
will buy an 8-in. Grafton Family Grindstone?
Each stone is mounted on a neatly japanned iron frame and will last a life-time. Notice that each stone is provided with an iron screw clamp for fastening it securely to the table. Shipped by express on receipt of price. Agents wanted.
GRAFTON STONE CO., 51 River St., Grafton, O.

The Natural Body Brace
Cures Female Weakness, restores health and vigor
After wearing your Natural Body Brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished.
MRS. JESSIE FISHER, Spruce Creek, Pa.
I am pleased beyond expression with the Brace. I would not part with it for any money.
MARY F. ADAM, Neosho Falls, Kas.
I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything to help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do any kind of work.
MISS LUCINDA FIELD, Oscar, Texas.

Money Refunded if Brace is not Satisfactory.
Send for Full Information.
Natural Body Brace Co., SALINA, KANSAS.
Howard C. Rash, Man'gr.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

FOR MAN AND BEAST.
Manufactured by
THE J. L. Mott Iron Works
84 to 90 Beekman Street, NEW YORK.
311 & 313 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Catalogue on Application

LADIES' FANCY WORK MANUEL.
A new book, just out, with all the latest ideas in Needle Work, Crochet, Knitting and Embroidery. Contains 50 patterns of Knitted Laces, Charming Crochet patterns, and directions to make articles for home decorations, tidies, chair-scarfs, doylies, purses, table mats, shopping bags, lamp shades, shawls, Afghans, toilet sets, counterpanes, sofa-cushions, chair-covers, pin-cushions, dressing slippers, babies' socks. Complete instructions with each design. Illustrated with 95 engravings. I send this Great Book Free to any one sending 10 cents to pay postage.
Mme. TOUISSART, Box 3139, Boston, Mass

The Columbian Raisin Seeder
Has received the World's Fair Award.
A perfectly simple device that anybody can use. Every housekeeper will appreciate it. Sent by mail to any address for 25 cts. Liberal terms to agents.
JAS. L. HALL, Box 24, Kingston, Mass.

6 tubs in one
BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.
E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

ALASKA STOVE LIFTER
will not get hot even if left in the lid. Heavily Nickel Plated. Price by mail, postpaid, 30 cents.
TROY NICKEL WORKS, Troy, N. Y.

DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.
FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Fit all ages and shapes—infants to adults.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH
SAMPLE VIAL FREE.
E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Now is the time to make money by raising early chickens. Get a INVINCIBLE HATCHER for $17, and start out right. Send 4c. in stamps for No. 76 Catalogue to BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO., Springfield, O

WANTED—INTELLIGENT LADY in every town to introduce the new "Youths Cyclopedia," prepared expressly for Teachers Pupils and Students. This is the one book that in these close times is bringing large profits to capable agents. Our school and installment plan makes quick work and brings big results. No capital required. Address family represented in the union, securing a promise that it shall be read, is better than a larger amount. The valuable literature issued by Thomas Kane, 137 Wabash avenue, Chicago, may still be had free of charge, by the unions. Mr. Kane insists upon small orders at a time that there may be no waste, and highly commends our women for their thoughtfulness in this respect. The state paper also will be of great service in publishing brief testimonies or items about the work from state superintendent.
C. B. BEACH & CO., 216 Clark St., Chicago.

Sermons, addresses, and Bible readings on Christian stewardship and systematic beneficence are found to help the cause immensely. Pastors often feel the subject of giving a delicate one to present and so it has come about that the whole truth on this question has seldom been heard from the pulpit. As a consequence the principle of benevolence can no longer be depended upon to supply church treasuries, and principle-giving is supplemented by enticement-giving to the spiritual loss of the church. A request coming to the pastor from a white-ribbon superintendent will relieve from embarrassment, and if accompanied by suggestive literature, will probably receive attention.

Addresses and Bible readings need not be limited to the superintendents. The superintendent who presses the most talent into her service shows the most generalship. In one state that has had eminent success in this department, the state president and vice-president ably advocate proportionate giving from the platform and have won many converts to the tithe system. Do not fail at the close of such addresses to draw the net. Call for those who practice these methods to rise and remain standing while others join them in a pledge to proportionate giving. Count the number of the latter and report to the superintendent.

The pledge-card can be used to great advantage, especially in connection with schools of methods where there is more time for personal work. This card may be ordered of the National superintendent at fifty cents per hundred. It is used for signature only, precisely as we use the total abstinence pledge-card.

In localities where superintendents have just received their appointment and are at a loss how to begin, the "Responsive Exercise on Proportionate and Systematic Giving" will be found helpful. Ask the local union to allow you a monthly meeting for conference on your department, and when met introduce your topic by using this exercise. It will bring the whole subject under review and naturally lead to a practical discussion of its merits. It may be ordered of the W. T. P. A., the Temple, Chicago, at fifty cents per hundred. A new set of leaflets, adapted to use in correspondence, will soon be issued and may be had of Miss J. B. Haines, Cheltenham, Pa. "One Woman's Experience in Tithing, by a Deaconess Worker," is a new and interesting contribution to our literature, and can be ordered from the National superintendent, for two cents each; or fifty cents per hundred.

ESTHER TUTTLE PRITCHARD,
National Superintendent.

Kokomo, Ind.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The following admirable "pebbles" were cast by the corresponding secretary of Michigan, Mrs. Julia R. Parish, for the benefit of her constituency:

FIVE SMOOTH PEBBLES.

"1. Carry out the spirit of our constitution, beliefs, platform, principles, object.

"2. Become intelligent on our lines of work by the use of our own literature.

"3. Carry out the plans of those whom you elect to make plans.

"4. Take up the departments that the locality needs.

"5. Dignify the regular weekly meeting.

"Summed up in these words: 1. Christianity. 2. Intelligence. 3. Loyalty. 4. Practicability. 5. Dignity."

We were happy to receive a call from several students from the University of Nebraska, en route to the convention of Student Volunteers to be held this week in the city of Detroit. Our Petition has been sent for the endorsement of the convention, and copies for each university there represented, with hope that the interest manifested in the University of Minnesota may extend to many others and thousands of additional signatures may thus be obtained.

Copies of papers read at W. C. T. U. meetings held during the Congress of the World's Columbian Exposition, have been furnished for publication. Many inquiries received concerning them are answered by the following letter:

CHICAGO, February 24, 1894.

DEAR MADAM:—In reply to your inquiry of the 23d, I will say that my application to the United States Congress to print and furnish to the leading public libraries of the world the proceedings of all the World's Congresses of 1893, is still pending before that body, but I hope will receive action during the present session. Circumstances arising out of the unhappy financial condition of the country are, of course, very unfavorable, but I still trust that the desired publication will be begun. It is very desirable that letters be written to senators and representatives by their personal friends, urging the importance of the publication.

With high respect and kind regards,
Very sincerely yours,
C. C. BONNEY,
Pres. World's Congress Auxiliary.

I regret the impossibility of reporting the marvellous meetings at Longmont, Col., under the charge of our evangelist, Mrs. R. J. Trego. On one evening after an address on purity, she asked all young people who would pledge themselves to such life to come forward and take friends by the hand, which they not only did but knelt for prayer, and upon repetition of the invitation and retirement of the young ladies, an equal number of young men responded, kneeling about the altar three and four rows deep. Old people, middle aged and young are finding peace in Christ under her teaching.

Miss E. P. Nichols, corresponding secretary of Rhode Island, writes: "We state officers are glad that we can say that the state union has grown, and that our women all through the state are eager to do what they can."

Our sister, Mrs. Eva Higgins, president of Colorado W. C. T. U., has been called to bid farewell to her father, who has gone home after four score and ten years well spent in the Master's service. She writes, "I have spoken three times this week, and expect to speak again three times, and have organized two unions."

I wish I could express my gratitude to W. C. T. U. women, the country over (I may say the world over) for their cheery, helpful letters. I especially thank state corresponding secretaries, from whom many have been received full of sisterly kindness. One can but love their own "kith and kin," and I pray that we may be made helpful one to another. Philippians 1: 3, 4.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

MORE DIMES AND DOLLARS.

While the Crusade dimes are beginning to be conspicuous by their absence, still those that are received are treated with great consideration. So the many "better late than never" people may rest assured that their gifts meet with a heartier welcome than could be given when the dimes came so fast as to threaten inundation on all the workers in the treasury department.

Our hearts were made glad this week by the receipt of $20 from Newfoundland, $5 from Harbor Grace, $15 from St. Johns.

Delaware's state treasurer also brightened up one cloudy day with a contribution of $16.50 from her constituents.

This charming little letter from across the sea shows how far the appeal for dimes has reached:

YANG CHOW, CHINA, Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR MRS. BARKER:—Herewith I send thirty cents in stamps for papa and mamma and ten cents for myself. I have been a member of the Loyal Temperance Legion ever since I was five years old. I will soon be eleven years old. My papa is a missionary in China.

Yours for temperance,
JENNIE LEE WRIGHT.

One sister writes: "I mean to do all I can this year, all the little things, for I cannot do any great things." But it is the little things that make the great things, as the dimes make dollars—and if she continues in this decision she will surprise herself at the good she has accomplished in the year.

A second donation comes from a friend in Kansas who says: "We sent our dimes with the home union, but I have felt ever since that we should have given more, so with this I enclose one dollar, wishing that we had a hundred to give." Now if there are any others feeling this way we will be glad to pass the contribution box again.

A brother writes: "I have been thinking for a long while of sending my dime to the National, for I consider the work of the W. C. T. U. so thorough, earnest and successful on the whole, as well as being an inspiration to the workers of other organizations." And he emphasized his remarks by sending five times a dime. We are glad to have people approve of us, and we appreciate an emphatic approval.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Our Library Table.

Part VIII of Bancroft's BOOK OF THE FAIR abates not one whit in beauty and excellence. Chapter eleven on the Woman's Building is concluded and chapter twelve takes up the Palace of Mechanic Arts, or, as it is more commonly termed, Machinery Hall. This artistic and literary outgrowth of the greatest exposition the world has ever witnessed ought to have wide circulation as it is well worthy a foremost place in select libraries and rare collections.

The Bancroft Company, Publishers, Auditorium Building, Chicago.

The bound volume of the YOUTH'S COMPANION for 1893 is a weighty affair and its mine of treasures well-nigh inexhaustible.

There is no better companion for young people than this YOUTH'S COMPANION making a weekly visit which bears with it wholesome fiction and valuable facts and figures, plenty of fun and a good proportion of "earnest," for Young America has a diversity of mental desires and refuses too much of one thing. Such names as General Lew Wallace, Mrs. Lew Wallace, Amos R. Wells, Edna Dean Procter, Will Carleton, Rudyard Kipling, Amelia E. Barr and a hundred others of note, appearing as they do in the list of contributors during 1893, bear their own testimony as to the high worth of the magazine.

Edited by Hezekiah Butterworth. Published by Perry Mason & Co., 201 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

THE RAILROAD QUESTION, by William Larrabee, for those whose interests lie in that direction, is a very clear and comprehensive work. It begins at the beginning by giving a very complete, though condensed history of transportation, showing the need for such facilities and their effect upon a country's development. In the second chapter the history of railroads is given, from the advent of the first wooden rail track at the end of the sixteenth century, which is described as "a result of pressing necessity," down to the present highly-perfected and complicated systems. Bringing the subject more to a focus the author considers the history of railroads in the United States, from thence going on to discuss, "Monopoly in Transportation," "Railroad Abuses," "Stock and Bond Inflation," "Combinations," "Railroads in Politics," "Railroad Literature," "Railroad Legislation in Iowa," "The Interstate Commerce Act," "The Rate Question" and "Remedies," with a valuable appendix, comprising tables and statistics. The book is commendable for its simple clearness and patient thoroughness. It covers nearly five hundred pages of close material.

The Schulte Publishing Co., Chicago.

IN DIREST PERIL, a late publication of Harper & Brothers, New York, is a story of marked strength and interest. It is a story pure and simple, the author—David Christie Murray—adhering rigidly to the narrative, so that the reader is left to make his own deductions and indulge in philosophic asides as he pleases. Mr. Murray has adopted the somewhat difficult first person in his narration, and his hero tells the incidents with a strength and directness that are noteworthy. In the preface, John Fyffe, the aforesaid hero, holds out a bit of bait to his readers, which they readily nibble at, but he also makes them wait until the very last chapter before he lands them upon the promised shore of explanation. The scene is laid in London; the plot is interwoven with the bitter struggle of Italy for liberty. Count Rossano is an Italian patriot, taken prisoner by the Austrians, and kept in solitary, loathsome confinement for years. John Fyffe and one Brunow—a weak, insufficient romancer, with only so much stamina as is awakened by his creditors' cries for payment—though men of widely different type, meet on the common ground of releasing the Count. They succeed, and he is restored to his daughter, whom he had never seen, gathers about him his countrymen and leads them to victory. Perhaps one of the most thrilling passages in the book is the struggle portrayed between ties of human relationship and love of country. "You must spare me to Italy," reiterates the old Count, pleading with his daughter Violet, and he tells her that if Italy called him he would sacrifice all ties to answer that call. Violet answers him as only a woman could: "And you think it's all Italy. It isn't Italy; it's you! You're my father, and you're a hero, and a—and a martyr, and the noblest man that ever lived; and I love you, and I'm proud of you, and—Italy! You're my Italy, dear!" The character analyses throughout the story are sharp and clear, and one knows not whether to admire most the heroic Count, who loved his country before all human loves, the daughter, who loved Italy in her father, or John Fyffe, who espoused Italy's cause, first, because he loved Violet, and finally wedding the two, was loyal to each of his affections.

GRANULA:
The Best Food. : :
The Best Medicine.
GRANULA, Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson over 30 years ago, is a scientifically prepared and twice-cooked food containing all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley winter wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and readily assimilated.
It has been called "The Perfect Food." As such it is a remarkable remedy for certain diseases, and if persistently used will remove Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and kindred ailments.
Granula should be eaten daily by children, as it builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities.
Manufactured by
OUR HOME GRANULA CO.,
Box 100, Dansville, N. Y.
Trial Box, prepaid, 25c. Pamphlet free.

Do You Remember the
$2,000 GOLD COIN
that was to be distributed to those who did the best work with Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread Exhibited at the World's Fair? The prizes have now been distributed. If you would like to know the names and addresses of the prize winners, write to us. It's interesting to all who crochet. This Thread received the highest possible award at the World's Fair, Chicago.
Our Illustrated books, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, are standard. Send 10 cts. stamps for either one. Our tidy patterns and bed spread patterns 5c. each, stamp.
Glasgo Lace Thread Co., Glasgo, Conn.

DON'T think because you have failed in the past, that you can't grow roses, successfully. There will be no failures in the future, if you get the famous D. & C.
D AND C ROSES
Our new Guide to Rose Culture gives you explicit directions for selecting and growing the very choicest flowers of every kind. We send it Free, if you request it, also a sample copy of our interesting Floral Magazine,
"Success with Flowers."
The Dingee & Conard Co.,
West Grove, Pa.

CHOICE 50c. TRIAL SETS.
Set B—16 pkts. Vegetable Seeds, - 50c
" E—20 pkts. Flower Seeds, - - 50c
" F—10 Lovely Carnation Pinks, 50c
" G—10 Prize Chrysanthemums, 50c
" H—4 Superb French Cannas, 50c
" J—10 Elegant Roses, - - - - 50c
" M—24 Fine Gladioli Bulbs, - - 50c
" P—6 Hardy Ornamental Shrubs, 50c
" R—6 Choice Grape Vines, - - 50c
½ each of any two sets, - - 50c
No two plants alike in these sets.
Any 3 Sets, $1,25; 5 for $2.
By mail, postpaid. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Order by the letters from this advt. NOW as these are introductory sets not in catalogue, an elegant annual of 168 pages, free. Everything of the best for Orchard, Vineyard, Lawn and Garden. 40th year, 1,000 acres, 23 greenhouses.
STORRS & HARRISON CO.,
PAINESVILLE, OHIO, Box 246

What a wonderful thing is a live seed. Immature, old or dead it may look the same. How to know? Old gardeners say that Burpee's seeds grow.
This is the proof of life. When grown we give our word you will be satisfied—your success is ours. BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1894, 172 pages, tells all about the Best Seeds that Grow. The newspapers call it the Leading American Seed Catalogue. Yours free for the asking if you plant seeds.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia.

FERRY'S SEEDS
Are just what every sower needs. The merits of Ferry's Seeds form the foundation upon which has been built the largest seed business in the world. Ferry's Seed Annual for 1894 contains the sum and substance of the latest farming knowledge. Free for the asking.
D. M. FERRY & CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

HON. NEAL DOW SAID THE CHRISTIAN is "very, very good; worth far more than the price" (only $1.00 a year.) "The best paper that comes to me."—C. H. SPURGEON. Agents wanted! Good pay! Sample free! H. L. HASTINGS, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

WHAT IS THE CHRISTIAN?

It is the "BEST PAPER that comes to me." —C. H. SPURGEON.

It is an Illustrated Semi-Monthly, Religious, Temperance, Family paper; comprising four 4-page papers: The Christian, Safeguard, Armory, and the Common People.

$1.00 a year. Send for a Sample Copy Free!

It is filled with true stories, music, poetry, religion and common sense. It is free from sectarianism, politics, pills and patent medicines. The young read it eagerly as well as the old. It is a safe paper to have about the house.

It is "about the BEST PAPER in the country." —D. L. MOODY.

AGENTS WANTED! Good Pay! Send for Terms!

H. L. HASTINGS, 47 & 49 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

Free to You, Ladies!

We will assist you to secure this handsomest of all Ladies' Bicycles entirely without cash outlay; or if you wish to buy a wheel outright, we can save you money! Try us! Wheels for Men and Youths on the same terms. J. K. HASTINGS, Manager of THE CHRISTIAN, 47 and 49 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

DO YOU OWN TOKOLOGY?

Mrs. L. N. A. writes: "If I knew I was to be the mother of innumerable children it would have no terrors for me, so great is my confidence in the science of TOKOLOGY." This book, a complete ladies' guide in health and disease, is written by Alice B. Stockham, M. D., who practiced as a physician over twenty-five years. Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agts.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago

When writing please mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

A SOLID GOLD RING or a dozen heavy Silver plated spoons given away to any woman, girl or boy. All we ask of you is to distribute circulars and talk up our remedies among your friends and acquaintances. Send us your name and address. No money required. HOBB'S MEDICINE CO., Chicago, Ill.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair.

OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best special ties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo.

$2.75 GENTS OR LADIES SIZE 14 KARAT GOLD PLATE. CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this beautiful gold finished watch by express for examination. You examine it at the express office, and if you think it a bargain, pay our sample price $2.75 and express charges and it is yours. It is magnificently engraved, open face, cut shows back of case, and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold watch. A guarantee for 5 years and beautiful gold plate chain and charm sent free with every watch, write to-day, this may not appear again, mention whether you want gents' or ladies' size. NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

A PERFECT FOOD.

Right living is an essential to health, and the "how" of staying well is quite as important as the "how" of getting well. Our food too often is more a source of discomfort than nourishment, and one-half our bodily ailments may be traced to poor food improperly prepared and of course improperly digested. In Granula—The famous health food, originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of America's leading health institution at Dansville, N. Y.,—one has the essence of all Medical Science, a perfect food. It is a scientifically prepared and twice cooked food, containing all the nutritious properties of the unequalled Genesee Valley winter wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and thoroughly assimilated by the entire body. A book of special recipes free to all who write the HOME GRANULA CO., Dansville, N. Y., and by mentioning this paper a sample box will be sent prepaid on receipt of 25c.

Notice to Church Societies.

A new and easy plan for raising Money, Books, Carpets, etc., for Churches, Sunday-Schools and Parsonages is offered by the Consumers' Wholesale Tea and Spice Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio. Churches in need should write them for particulars, also ladies who would like to secure beautiful premiums for themselves.

What folly! To be without BEECHAM'S PILLS.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Subscription Rates for 1894.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .50
Young Crusader, monthly, one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago.

CURRENT TOPICS FOR MARCH.

BRIGHTER and more INTERESTING than ever. Note the wide range of TIMELY TOPICS contributed by America's most popular writers:

Current Topics for March (Illustrated).

"The Wilson Bill." Discussed from the standpoint of a Protectionist. By Hon. William E. Mason.

After Mr. Gladstone—Who? A most pertinent and timely article upon the possible successor to Mr. Gladstone as Prime Minister of England. By Charles Robinson.

Medical Expert Testimony. The follies of the present system. By L. Harrison Mettler, A. M., M. D.

Civic Federation. Its wide field for action. By Ada C. Sweet.

Poem—"The Daily Greed." By Hon. Benj. S. Parker.

Municipal Politics; Personal qualification, not national issues. By John M. Stahl.

Recent Progress in Glacial Geology. Made interesting to general readers. By Henry B. Kummell.

Scenes from an English Country Parish. A delightful glimpse at English country life. By Lilian Sprat.

Sketch of the late Geo. W. Childs (Illustrated). An elegiacal tribute by an associate editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger. J. O. Jackson.

These with other interesting articles, among which are short stories, poems, etc., by authors of national reputation.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Current Topics for one year, $1.50.

Subscribe NOW.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OUR VISITORS.

THE UNION SIGNAL, official organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U., comes regularly to hand, always full of interesting news and splendidly written articles. We look upon THE UNION SIGNAL as being a treasure in itself, and heartily wish that it had access to every home in the land. The lessons and precepts with which it abounds cannot fail to make it a most interesting companion wherever it becomes known.—Exchange.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE SIGNAL.

During the last few weeks it has seemed to me that THE UNION SIGNAL has been especially helpful and rich in those things which strengthen one's faith and revive our courage.

"Those who stand on the watch tower, little know how we listen for their messages as they herald the dawn of a fairer, brighter day in legislation and temperance work."

BLACK BEAUTY,
By Anna Sewall.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the horse.

Paper	$ .15
Board cover	.25
Cloth	.50

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER.

"I want to congratulate you on the success you have attained in the management of THE UNION SIGNAL. May the dear Lord bless you and your assistants during the year, is my earnest prayer."

NEAL DOW CARD.

The Neal Dow Card, printed in colors, with excellent likeness in vignette of this noble man, is one of the prettiest souvenirs ever issued from our press. You will not be disappointed when you see it, and however large your order, you will wish you had doubled it.

Price $1 per 100.

Cash must accompany order.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The 1894 Standard price for the standard Bicycles of the world has been fixed at $125.00, bringing these highest grade wheels within the reach of every rider who aims to possess a first-class mount.

With Columbias at $125, there is little reason for buying any other bicycle, because Columbias are unequalled.

The 1894 Columbia Catalogue, which fully describes our splendid line of seven new wheels, is beautifully printed and illustrated. It will be of interest to every wheelman and wheelwoman. You can obtain it free at our agencies, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

Branch Houses—12 Warren St., New York. 291 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. Hartford, Conn.

POPE MFG. CO.,
221 Columbus Ave., Boston.

...Pansies at the Fair...

Finest in the World EAST OR WEST

Trial Package and Catalogue, 10c. HALF PRICE

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE

NEW YORK: 26 BARCLAY ST. CHICAGO: 88 STATE ST., 146.148 WASHINGTON ST.

AN EXTRA SESSION
...OF THE...
CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE.
A RICH PROGRAM
For Franchise Entertainments.

Dramatized for the Use of Local Unions and Suffrage Societies by SARAH M. SEVERANCE.

The stupendous irony of this view of a legislative body in action, makes it more instructive than the ablest lecture, while its keen wit and biting satire clinch the logic of its lessons. It may be adapted to a large or small number of performers.

PRICE—15c. per single copy; 20 or more copies, 12 1-2 cts. each. Address

MRS. H. E. BROWN,
COR. SEC. CAL. W. C. T. U.
132 MCALLISTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

$2,000 GOLD PREMIUMS AWARDED.

Our readers will all remember the $2,000 gold premiums offered by the Glasgo Lace Thread Co., of Glasgo, Conn., for the best specimens made of their thread, exhibited at the World's Fair. They will see by an advertisement in another column that the awards have now been made, and it is certainly safe to presume that every lady would like to know who the lucky ones were. Read the advertisement, and you will learn how to get the information.

Publisher's Notes.

DON'T

Send to us two weeks from now an order for four or five hundred copies of Neal Dow Prohibition Number. We cannot promise them in large quantities longer than two weeks. Remember how early our Crusade edition was exhausted, and send at once.

Single copy	$ .10
5 copies	.25
25 "	.75
100 "	3.00

These are our cash prices.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

YOUR OPPORTUNITY

To make money for your union. Why not order 500 copies of our Neal Dow Prohibition Number at $3 per hundred? Hundreds of your members will gladly pay 5 cents apiece for a copy of this number, giving you an opportunity to make $2.00 per 100.

Then the Souvenir Letter, a reproduction of Neal Dow's own handwriting, will cost you $1 per 100, and you can readily sell them at 2 cents apiece. The beautiful Souvenir Card in several colors would be cheap at 3 cents, but we offer it at $1 per 100.

Send for samples, inclosing 2 cents for postage.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ills.

"GRANDEST THING I HAVE EVER SEEN!"

DEAR FRIENDS:—

Inclosed find 25c. for five copies of the Neal Dow Prohibition Number.

It is the most inspiring, the grandest thing I have ever seen. It must do good. Men cannot fail to see calm, non-partisan truth in it, and feel the force of its object lessons.

LITHOGRAPH LETTER FROM NEAL DOW.

Every temperance boy and every temperance girl will prize a souvenir of Neal Dow's Birthday, and you can give it to them for just one cent. Think of it, a letter in Neal Dow's own handwriting with a vignette of his face on the outside of the letter, all for one cent! $1 per hundred. Cash must accompany order. Send for 100, and distribute in your Loyal Temperance Legion. Do not delay. We can fill your orders at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Watch for our coupon advertisement in this week's issue. It will interest you.

ATTENTION BOYS!

FOR SIX NEW SUBSCRIBERS

to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send this watch to your address, postpaid.

FOR FOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Fifty Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Seventy-five Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

THIS OFFER IS

FOR BOYS ONLY

Boys who will thank us for this generous offer to own the best pocket time-piece yet made by any Clock Company. Extreme diameter of case 2¼ inches.

As soon as your mind is made up to secure one of these Watches, write to us. Address

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

A Strong Contrast

Did you notice the illustration in our "ad" of February 8? It was the representation of a group on board ship, just starting on a trip abroad.

LOOK AT THE ABOVE HOME PICTURE.

How much more comfortable this group looks than the other. Here they all are together, papa, mamma and the children, and see how interested they all appear. The hands of the clock point to midnight, and the little people, at least, should be snugly in bed, but there they are, as wide awake as their elders.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN? WHAT INTERESTS THEM?

We will tell you; it means that this happy family are doing just what the people in the last picture are doing. They are traveling abroad and seeing the same sights, the same scenes, the same cities, the same paintings, the same old castles. More than this, they are having everything described for them in the most interesting and entertaining manner by a famous traveler, instead of some stupid guide who is only able to repeat, with no more intelligence than a parrot, a story he has committed to memory; and yet they are doing it in their own comfortable home.

HOW CAN SUCH A THING BE DONE?

Easy enough! Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and, seeing our "ad," cut out the coupon, sent it to our office with five two-cent postage stamps and received Series Number Two of our magnificent Portfolio of Photographs. After supper, the family sat around the table looking at the views and listening to the graphic descriptions.

THIS GRAND ART COLLECTION

has all been selected by John L. Stoddard, and the descriptions are from his pen. The photographs are contained in portfolios, 11x13 inches in size, each portfolio having sixteen views, worth at least $1.50 apiece. The demand for Numbers 1 and 2 still continues, and we are ready now with series Number 3.

The manner in which this grand Art Album can be secured is very easy. Cut out the coupon you will find printed below, and bring or send it with five two-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver to our office, and we will give you series No. 3.

If you failed to get Coupon No. 2, you can obtain Series No. 2 by remitting us 25c.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.
ART SERIES NO. 3.
COUPON.

Send Coupon, together with five 2-cent postage stamps. or 10 cents in silver, to our office, and you will receive our Portfolio of Photographs, No. 3.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

Price each, 1 cent. Per 100, 50 cents. per 1,000 $5

A Special Offer

To Our Readers

An advantageous arrangement, just made, enables us to present the most acceptable premium offer ever made. It is this: For one coupon (printed below) and 35 cents in stamps or silver, we will send by mail, postpaid, a copy of THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

The publishers' price of the book is $1.

This is the Coupon!

IT IS WORTH MONEY!

•• COUPON ••

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with 35 cents in stamps or silver, is good for one copy of the

WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

Free by mail to any address in Postal Union

This is the Book!

IT IS WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD!

Economy
Wealth

Temperance
Health

WHAT IS THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK?

A Collection of One Thousand Original and Revised Recipes and Suggestions. Edited by Kathryn Armstrong. A handsome, compact volume of 320 pages, including 40 blank pages for additional recipes.

It is a first-class book of Cookery and Housekeeping, prepared by a practical housekeeper. It is entirely new; copyrighted 1894. While it is not claimed that it is in all respects superior to all other books, we do claim that any housekeeper, even if she have a dozen other cook books, will find this one worth to her more than the full retail price, and that the author has fully carried out her purpose, "To prove that wine, brandy and spirituous liquors of any kind may be dispensed with, and that no culinary requirement necessitates the introduction of these poisons into any household."

Special Advantages of this Coupon Offer:

 Only one coupon is required.  You get the whole book at once.  You are put to no expense for binding or for transportation.  THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK is durably bound in the best quality of cloth (not in paper covers). It is printed on an excellent quality of cream laid book paper. It is cheap only in price. It is the neatest and handsomest cook book ever issued, the cover design, in grained and embossed silver, being a specially unique feature.

Orders will be filled in turn as received, and as quickly as the great amount of clerical work involved makes possible. Subscribers should wait two weeks before making complaint of non-receipt of the book.

More than one copy may be sent to one address, but there must be one coupon and thirty-five cents for every copy ordered. Address

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

OUR DAY FOR 1894.

This leading American Journal of Reform will be issued in 1894 as a BI-MONTHLY, and mailed to all subscribers, including clergymen and students, at the uniform price of

..ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM..

Remit by money order, express order, draft or postal note to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
...The Temple, Chicago...

Signal Notes.

THE Methodists of Boston have established a university settlement house.

THE annual drink bill for New South Wales, Victoria and New Zealand is a much larger amount than is raised the world over for foreign missions.

THE office for the registration of the Chinese in Oakland, Cal., is in a saloon, and the saloonkeeper probably profits well from the hundreds and thousands who register.

ENGLISH educators have sent five women to this country to study the American system of education and to find what features can be adopted in their own schools to advantage.

SOME one who knows is authority for the statement that much of the poverty in Chicago comes from gambling, and that the facilities for indulging in the vice are constantly increasing.

THE Ohio Anti-Saloon League is entering on an energetic plan of work along four lines, viz.: Agitation, legislation, enforcement of existing laws and education of boys by organizing them into boys' brigades.

A NEW Minnesota statute punishes a drunkard by a fine of ten to forty dollars for a first offence, a larger amount for the second, and ninety days in the workhouse for the third, but the man who made him drunk is left free to make others so.

To wear live lizards or chameleons on one's person seems an impossible fad, but some women have done so until the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has stepped in and prevented. Fortunately, such brainless and heartless women are in the large minority.

A COMMITTEE in Worcester, Mass., has been investigating the eighty saloons in that city from a financial point of view. They estimated that the saloons pay out yearly for salaries, license, etc., about one hundred and eighteen thousand three hundred dollars, but they receive fully one million two hundred thousand dollars.

A TEMPERANCE society has been organized in St. Petersburg, which includes many high dignitaries as members. The leading Russian newspaper in commenting on it said: "Only the coöperation of the government departments with the efforts of the society can deliver the people from the thralldom of drunkenness. To abolish such is the province and the power of the government."

THE last report of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows a large increase the past year in the railway mileage of this country as well as in the number of passengers carried; but with this increase comes also a still larger list of casualties, the killed and wounded numbering 29,424. Every day in the year eight are killed and seventy-three injured. Certain reforms should be insisted upon that this unnecessary, wholesale murdering and maiming of people may be brought to an end.

NOTHING could be plainer than that the English people approve the principle on which the direct veto bill is based, viz., that of placing in the people's hands the decision as to whether public houses shall or shall not be legalized in their vicinity. The campaign just closed in the north of England consisted of, by far, the most extensive series of meetings ever organized under the auspices of the temperance reform. The last meeting was held at Newcastle, on January 29, and was the most brilliant of the series. This campaign was organized by the North of England Temperance League. A thousand meetings were held within about three weeks, at all of which the direct veto bill was warmly endorsed, and in none of which was an amendment proposed save in a single instance, and then it did not find a second. At every meeting a resolution was passed rejoicing at the decision of the government to re-introduce the veto bill early in the next session, and pledging the meeting to earnestly support the government.

DO YOU HAVE ASTHMA?

If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is reported a positive cure for the disease. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, have such faith in this new discovery, that they are sending out free by mail, large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card.

Highest Award

Medal and three diplomas have been given to the New York Condensed Milk Company for the superiority of its Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, Borden's Extract of Coffee and Unsweetened Condensed Milk, exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition.

IVORY SOAP — IVORY — IT FLOATS

FORTY MILLION CAKES YEARLY.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

Good Wives grow fair in the light of their works, especially if they use SAPOLIO: It is a solid cake of scouring soap used for all cleaning purposes. All grocers keep it.

COPYRIGHT

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST by many a woman who strives to please her household and works herself to death in the effort. If the house does not look as bright as a pin, she gets the blame—if things are upturned while house-cleaning goes on—why blame her again. One remedy is within her reach. If she uses SAPOLIO everything will look clean, and the reign of house-cleaning disorder will be quickly over.

EVERY WOMAN SHOULD KNOW About ZOA-PHORA—

A True Nerve Tonic.
Not a Stimulant or Narcotic.
Expressly for Weakly Women.
Full information and testimonials sent sealed.
Address ZOA-PHORA MEDICINE CO., H. G. COLMAN, SEC'Y, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

"The STANDARD"

The only Dripless Strainer in the World

No drip to soil table linen. No wires to clog spout. No falling off. Beautifully nickel-plated.

Agents Wanted

Sent to any address on receipt of price, 25 cents.

Standard Strainer Co., 34 Maiden Lane New York City

THE EVERETT RAISIN SEEDER entirely new; just what every housewife wants; child can use it; seeds a pound of raisins in less than ten minutes; guaranteed to do the work. By mail to any address, 15 cents. Agents wanted, young or old. EVERETT SPECIALTY CO., 388 Wash'n St., Boston, Mass.

Coupon for Music. If you will send this coupon and 10c. to the THOMPSON MUSIC CO., 367 Wabash-av., Chicago, you will receive in return a copy of each of the popular temperance songs, "Saved by Mother's Prayer" "Then Shine Bright Soul." Each worth 30c.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No plaster. No knife. No poison. No JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama

WANTED—Young women to train for nurses. Inclose stamp. People's Health Journal, Chicago.

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY.

We take pleasure in announcing the January and February number of Our Day, which, beginning with 1894, will be issued as a bi-monthly at the reduced price of one dollar a year. The magazine will still stand as an unrivalled "record and review" of current reform, and will maintain the excellent reputation it has achieved among students, preachers, teachers, public men and reformers, and it is hoped the reduction in price will greatly widen its circulation.

In the January-February issue will be found excellent photogravures of the Rev. John Henry Barrows, D. D., and the Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, D. D.

The contents of this number include:

1. Neal Dow's Ninetieth Birthday. Miss F. E. Willard.
2. Tropical Africa as a Factor in Civilization. Cyrus C. Adams.
3. Machine-Made Millenniums. W. J. Lhamon.
4. Boston Hymn—Rain and Ray. Joseph Cook.
5. Boston Monday Lectures — Nineteenth Year. Joseph Cook.
   Causes and Cure of Poverty — The World's First Parliament of Religions
6. Book Notices.
   Dr. Barrows' The World's Parliament of Religions — Prof. Orr's The Christian View of God and the World—Prof. Schaff's Theological Propædeutic — Dennis' Foreign Missions After a Century—Hazell's Annual — The Review of Reviews on the Problem of the Unemployed
7. Vital Points of Expert Opinion.
   Dr. Boardman on the World's Parliament of Religions—New Ship Canals in Europe—Dr. Paton on the Kanaka Labor Trade—Albert Shaw on Need of an Expert Foreign Service.
8. Questions to Specialists.
   Dr. McNeice on the Situation in Utah.
9. Editorial Notes.
   Mr. Craft's Summary of Reform News — Lady Henry Somerset's Last Visit to America—Triumph of Prohibition in Ontario — Hon. T. B. Reed's Speech on the Tariff—Photogravures of Dr. Barrows and Dr. Pentecost.

Price $1 per annum.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Our Day $1.75 per annum.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS

Attention!

HURRY in your orders for the QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON, which is issued as a

Supplement to the

March Young Crusader

NOTICE OUR TERMS:

Supplement without Crusader.

100	$ .65
500	2.75
1,000	5.00

Supplement and Crusader.

100	$ 1.00
500	4.75
1,000	9.00
2,000	15.00
5,000	35.00
8,000	48.00

Postage paid by us. All orders between numbers named at the rate immediately preceding.

Send order in time to distribute in your schools on the Sunday preceding the date of the lesson, which is March 18.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS.

A correspondent writes: "I have just finished reading 'Nineteen Beautiful Years,' and it has inspired me to a higher life. I do not see how any one can read of so pure a character without letting it touch his life."

"Nineteen Beautiful Years" is the story of the life of Mary E. Willard, most tenderly and touchingly told by her sister, Miss Frances Willard.

Price, cloth, 75.; paper, 10c.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION.

Send for specimens of our Neal Dow birthday card. Samples two cents each $1.00 per hundred.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 11.] CHICAGO, March 15, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Ursula D Herrick
1029 15th st

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The new United States battle ship, Indiana, has been launched.

Dispatches from Rio Janeiro state that the siege has been extended until May.

Guatemala has temporarily suspended the payment of interest on its public debt.

Aluminum boats have been proved a success by United States navy officials in a recent test.

The pension appropriation bill of one hundred and fifty million dollars has passed the House.

Spain has concluded its treaty with Morocco in settlement of the recent outbreak at Melilla.

Ten years has been fixed upon for the duration of the new Russo-German commercial treaty.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt has assumed the post of Liberal leader in the British House of Commons.

The United States House committee on labor is considering a resolution to make an executive department of labor.

Another American north polar expedition sailed from New York, March 14, Walter Wellman, of Washington, leader.

Edison has completed a new photographic camera, called a kinetoscope, by which forty-six pictures are taken in one second.

Canada has agreed to coöperate with the United States postal authorities to suppress the Honduras Lottery Company in these countries.

Hon. William Gladstone is reported to be suffering from a cataract on one of his eyes, (said not to be a dangerous one), but his health is unimpaired.

A Sunday closing ordinance before the Chicago board of aldermen last week was virtually defeated, after a lively discussion, by being recommitted.

The Muncie, Ind., factory inspectors have just ordered four hundred children under twelve years of age, employed in the gas factories, to be sent to school.

The second trial of Daniel Coughlin for conspiracy in the murder of Dr. Cronin in Chicago, 1889, resulted Thursday in his acquittal after an imprisonment of five years.

The New Zealand Postal and Cable conference last week discussed favorably the proposed Pacific cable from Australia to America via New Zealand and Samoa to Vancouver.

Plans to beautify Jackson Park, Chicago, are being made, one of which is to connect the lagoon with the lake in Washington Park by a wide canal through the Midway Plaisance.

A large delegation of clergymen, laymen and women have visited the House committee on judiciary in support of the resolution of Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts, for an amendment to the United States constitution recognizing God.

Mrs. Mary Hemenway, a philanthropist of Boston, who passed away last week, aged seventy-five years, has done much to advance the study of American history among young people. She gave one-half of the $200,000 necessary for the preservation of the historic Old South Church, and contributed generously to researches in American archæology and ethnology.

The British Parliament reassembled, March 12, after its brief vacation. Lord Rosebery, the new premier, has assumed the reins of government with a new cabinet, in which the Earl of Kimberley is foreign secretary, and Henry Fowler acts as secretary for India. The London Liberal and Radical union has passed resolutions of respect on the retirement of Mr. Gladstone.

AMERICA as well as Great Britain and Ireland await with keen interest the Queen's first speech under the new ministry, which the Cabinet is now preparing. The accession of Lord Rosebery to the premiership opens a new chapter in the history not only of England and the English speaking race, but of the whole world, and the initial move of the incoming government will be more than usually significant.

THE career of the Wilson bill, and especially its experiences in the Senate finance committee, reveals the fact that the tariff is, after all, more a sectional than a party question, and more an individual than a sectional. The lines between the two dominant parties have been gradually disappearing, and now that the tariff can no longer be effectively used as a distinguishing mark they must perforce look about for some other issue to disagree upon, or a bewildered public will be unable to tell "which from t'other." At present the motto of each seems to be, "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost."

A READER of THE UNION SIGNAL writes to thank us for the "clear, concise" way in which the subject of "Gospel Temperance and Prohibition" is presented (editorially) in our Neal Dow number. So many good friends of temperance do not seem to fully understand the meaning of the word "prohibition" as used by Christian temperance workers that the word "annihilation" is suggested as better expressing our attitude toward the liquor traffic. But as our correspondent says, "it is only a little more light they need" and our Brohibition Number of February 22 will do good service as a light-giver. We especially commend it to those good brothers who advise that "we keep to our legitimate work," which means, "keep out of politics."

AGAIN has the silent reaper entered a well-known white-ribbon home. We will let Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap's own pen tell the sad news: "Those who have wondered at the silence of the energetic woman who is National superintendent of schools of methods and parliamentary usage will find full explanation in the words which will once be traced for all: 'March 1, at 11 p. m., Mr. Benjamin, after months of suffering, passed on to the life immortal.' Early last year Mrs. Benjamin was called from her work by the serious illness of her only son. He was scarcely well, when her husband, a noble specimen of physical manhood, and a very Great-heart in his helpfulness to his talented wife, was suddenly stricken with paralysis, and since then the shadow of fear has been on all the days. For many of these later weeks Mr. Benjamin was a great sufferer, and day and night she has been at his side until the end." We are sure that many prayers will ascend and sympathy tender and sincere will help her in this sore and lonely hour.

IN the prohibition see-saw performance now going on in the Iowa legislature the Prohibitionists are at present writing, "up." It transpires that the Republicans of the Senate are unfavorable to a local option law, and the friends of the Carpenter measure are appealing to the Democrats for help, which it is safe to say they will not get. In the house the mulct tax bill is under discussion the real fight being on the section which provides (rather inconsistently) that nothing in the act shall be construe as legalizing or licensing the liquor traffic, and that no e of its provisions are to be considered as protecting the drink-seller from any of the penalties now provided by law, "except that on conditions hereafter provided certain penalties may be suspended." Truly the law-makers of Iowa have undertaken a Herculean task in attempting to satisfy the people, and at the same time to carry out the pledges of the party. The chances now seem to be that in the diversity of opinion as to the proper thing to do, the legislature will adjourn without doing anything in the way of modifying th existing prohibitory law.

THE ninetieth birthday of Neal Dow, March 20, will be spent by him in his native city of Portland, Me. In the evening there will be a meeting in the city hall under the auspices of the World's, National and Maine W. C. T. U.; the program for which is being prepared by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. The leading speakers will be Gen. Seldon Connor, ex-governor of Maine, Rev. Matthew Hughes and Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman. Rev. C. F. Allen, who was chaplain of the House in 1851 when the prohibitory law was enacted, will make the opening prayer. The mayor of the city will participate in the demonstration, and doubtless the governor of the state will accept the invitation to do likewise. It is hardly necessary to suggest that temperance societies and interested individuals generally, forward their congratulations upon this occasion to the noble hero and "father of prohibition."

THE decency-loving citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, are manifesting their indignation at the infamous registration system which in spite of emphatic protest has been foisted upon that city by its police director. At an immense mass-meeting it was resolved "that we demand the abandonment of this scheme for the perpetuation of the social evil and insist that the power of the city government be employed to suppress, not to sanction and advertise the evil, and we appeal to all good citizens, without regard to party, to unite with us in a persistent effort to free our city government from its complicity with crime." We hope the people of Cleveland will denounce and work and vote until this municipal iniquity, which is a disgrace to every citizen and an insult to every individual home, shall be so completely crushed to earth and stamped upon as to preclude the possibility of future resurrection.

THE Christian Alliance of Indiana, which is made up of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, Young People's Society, Baptist Young People's Union and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is preparing to take an active part in the coming political campaign. The members are pledging themselves to vote as Christ would have them vote, and to support no party that will not pledge itself to oppose the saloon, gambling house and other evils. The Anti-Liquor League has united its forces with those of the Alliance, and mass-meetings will be held during the week preceding the Republican convention, and also during that preceding the Democratic convention later on, with a view to influencing action on the party platforms. John G. Woolley is to be a prominent speaker, and we are not surprised that this new movement in the interests of Christian citizenship is beginning to give old party leaders a good deal of concern.

A MASSACHUSETTS paper publishes replies from thirty-seven governors of states to the questions: 1. What law or laws prohibitive or restrictive, are on the statute books of your state relative to prize fighting or so called glove contests? 2. Would you permit the Corbett-Jackson fight to take place in your state? The replies show that prize fighting is prohibited in twenty-two states and not a single governor says he will permit the fight. Delaware punishes fighters for assault and battery. In Iowa legislation on this question is now pending. Indiana expects its next legislature will enact such laws as will make such contests impossible in that state. Governor Mitchell, of Florida, writes: "If I am convinced that it is the intention of the parties interested to have the Corbett-Jackson fight come off in Florida, the legislature will be called together at once, and I feel assured that body will make prize fighting impossible in this state." And Governor Waite, of Colorado, says with suggestive brevity: "We do not cross bridges before we come to them." It needs no prophet to tell us that the days of this brutalizing "sport" are numbered. We hail with joy this evidence of the "working out of the beast" in the man of the nineteenth century.

"NO COMPROMISE."

BY A. A. HOPKINS.

The fight is on, and it shall see no end
Until the foe surrenders. Heaven defend
Our noble army, with its banner white,
And give it hope and grace and godly might!

"No compromise!" upon our banner flames,
In gleaming letters, writ of blushing shames,
In which the blood of many a woman's heart
Seems blent and flowing as a scarlet part.

"No compromise!" the war-cry of our host
From Dow's own Maine to far Pacific coast.
"No compromise!" One course alone is true;
That cause alone unswerving we pursue.

Would license tempt us with seductive hold?
"No compromise!" we shout more loud and bold.
Before the church we ring it, strong and clear,
And point to Judas, in that distant year,

When for a price he sold the sinless Christ
To sinful hands, by bribery enticed;
And once again we echo forth the woes
Of God and justice waiting surely those

Who frame iniquity by human laws,
And block the way of God's own holy cause.
For Christ lives now within their souls who keep
His words of life; within the Godward sweep

Of moral forces in this world of sin,
And in the weak, who strength alone can win
Through Him who for the weak and lowly cares,
And who lifts up his daily, pleading prayers.

He who approveth that which baffles man
And hinders God, and checks the loving plan
For man's redemption, crucifies afresh
The one Redeemer here in human flesh,
Uprears again the ignominious cross,
And brings the world new shame, an added loss.

Harriman, Tenn.

MRS. JELLABY AND HER HUSBAND'S BOTTLES.

BY MARSHALL SAUNDERS.
Author of "Beautiful Joe."

She was a silly little thing, so everybody said. She laughed from morning to night, and could not exchange a sensible remark on any subject that was brought forward. She knew nothing of politics, nor of social, scientific and literary questions. Any kind of clever talk she abhorred. And yet she was a general favorite.

How did that happen—that everybody laughed at Mrs. Jellaby, and yet everybody liked her? I suppose it was for the simple reason that she liked everybody. She was sweet, and good, and innocent, and had never been known in all her life to make an unkind remark about any person whatsoever. She was like a child, the more sober matrons said, and would improve as she grew older. She was ridiculously young to have been married—only nineteen,—and it was an absurd thing for Jellaby, confirmed old bachelor as he had seemed to be, to go to fishing in a country place and fall so desperately in love with a village maiden as to imagine that he could not spend the rest of his life without her. However, he had done it and had asked nobody's advice, and there was nothing for his friends to do but to make the best of it.

On this particular morning he was standing in the hall of his prettily furnished house, getting ready to go to his office. He was a very fastidious man, was Mr. Jellaby. Not a thread nor a hair must be seen on his coat, not a speck of dust nor the suspicion of a spot, stain or any kind of a blemish. At last he was quite ready. He placed the whisk in its pocket, took his hat from the rack, and stood before his wife—a handsome, rather stoutish man nearing middle age, with a ruddy complexion and—though he was a city dweller and a business man spending the most of his time in a close office—with as fine a crop of hair as could be seen on the head of a country lad of eighteen.

Mrs. Jellaby was on the staircase playing with the cat, and he had to speak to her several times before she heard him. Then she ran quickly to his side, threw her arms round him and said, "Good-by, dear Harry; will you be home to lunch?"

His face clouded. "No, I don't think so."

"Very well," she said, resignedly. "I'll try not to miss you. Do you miss me?" and, putting her black, curly head saucily on one side, she looked up at him with eyes running over with glee.

"Yes, I do," he said almost angrily, "and if you would behave yourself I could come home."

"Oh, I will try—I will try, Harry," she said hastily. "Don't scold me. You know I can't help it," and turning her back on him she went back to the cat.

His conscience smote him, for he was absurdly fond of her. "Are you crying, Nell?" he said, and he made a step in her direction and putting his hand under her chin he lifted up her face to look at it.

She was smiling as usual, and with an impatient exclamation he went back to the door. He didn't want to make her cry and yet he would have been glad to find her crying.

She jumped up and ran after him. "Harry, may I have a ride while you're gone? The day seems so long—"

"Certainly," he replied; "I'll send a man round with a team. At what hour will you go?"

"At—, let me see," and she tapped her red lips thoughtfully with one tiny forefinger, "at eleven. Then Dorothy will be through with her sweeping."

"What has that to do with it?" he said, curiously.

"I want to take her with me."

"Ladies don't usually go riding with their housemaids," he said, sarcastically. "It isn't a city custom."

She shrugged her shoulders. "I'm glad I was born in the country, then. Dorothy is a dear little thing, and just as good as you and I, Harry."

"That may be," he said, stiffly, "and yet I don't want you to ride with her."

"Very well," she said, good-humoredly, "then I'll go for Mrs. Montgomery."

"Nell!" he exclaimed, startled out of his usual composure, "don't do any such thing. She felt it a great condescension to make even a formal call on you. She would be annoyed if you went to see her in the morning and asked her to ride with you."

"Would she?" and Mrs. Jellaby's light laugh rang through the hall. "Then let me take Dorothy. Please let me take Dorothy. She is a good little thing, and she seldom gets a ride; she told me so. Please, Harry—" and catching Mr. Jellaby's hand, she pressed it to her lips.

People might laugh at Mrs. Jellaby as much as they liked, but there was a kind of method in her madness. When Mr. Jellaby felt his large hand clasped in her two small ones, and scanned the pleading face raised to his own, he weakly yielded, placed his hat where it would be in no danger either from her or the still more demonstrative cat, and sitting down on one of the hall chairs took her on his knee. He held her there for five minutes, and she talked steadily to him, and when he got up he had promised to come home to lunch every day for a week and to let her take fifty Dorothys to drive with her if she wished to do so.

Then seizing his headgear and gloves he fled precipitately, lest he should make further ruinous concessions; and carefully averted his eyes from the hall window, where to his mingled confusion and delight she stood, blowing kisses to him from the tips of her fingers, in full view of half a dozen other business men hurrying to their offices, of whose presence on the street she was utterly oblivious.

Mrs. Jellaby danced a pas seul in the hall after he had disappeared from sight, walked to the glass in the hat-stand and arranged her dishevelled, curly hair, then placing the cat on her shoulder, darted upstairs to get a broom and sweeping cap in order to assist her small maid so that she might finish her work in time to go for a drive.

Mr. Jellaby pursued his way thoughtfully along the street. His mind was ill at ease and he stared absently at several acquaintances who passed him, and made not the slightest response to their greetings. Presently his eyes, roving to and fro, fell on the door plate of a house he was passing that bore the name of his family physician. "There's Grayson," he muttered, "why not consult him? He's just the man to advise me and he won't blurt the thing to the whole world."

By "the whole world" he meant his own set, and they were the last ones that he wished to get hold of his trouble. He went quickly up the steps, rang the bell and inquired for Dr. Grayson. "Yes, sir, he's in," the servant said doubtfully, "but he's taking his breakfast. I don't think he'll want to be disturbed."

"Tell him it's Mr. Jellaby," said the caller with a troubled air, "and that his business is important, and he'll see me."

The girl went away, and returning a few instants later ushered him into a back room, where a gray-haired man sat taking a solitary breakfast at a table drawn up close to an open window. "Morning, Jellaby," he said, stretching out a hand without getting up, "haven't seen you for weeks. Congratulations, my boy. Hear you've been getting married."

"When a man's married, his troubles begin," said Mr. Jellaby, taking a seat near the table and speaking in a doleful tone of voice.

"What—already?" and the gray-haired man tossed a bit of toast down his throat, and laughed heartily, though in infinite danger of strangulation. Then recovering himself he said: "What's the trouble, Jellaby?"

"That's what I've come to talk to you about," said Mr. Jellaby in a low voice, and with a furtive look at the open window. "There's no one about, is there?"

"No, no," said the doctor in a boisterous, hearty voice. "No eaves-dropping in this house. Go on with your confidences, Jellaby," and catching up an egg, he quickly beheaded it, and began to eat its contents.

Halifax, N. S.

(To be continued.)

THE NATIONAL OX—WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH IT?

BY C. HOBART, D. D.

Text:—Exodus 21: 29. But if the ox was wont to push with his horns in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned and his owner also shall be put to death.

A satisfactory proof of the supernatural origin of the Scriptures is found in the fact that in them provision is made for the protection of all classes in their natural rights, and that the observance of their rules will secure the largest possible amount of good to the world.

And further, it will be noted that while it was impossible to state every imaginable case of wrong, yet the moral principles that underlie the cases given are sufficiently plain to furnish rules of action and judgment in every possible case that may arise.

Hence the moral principles underlying the case in point are plainly as follows: Any man or woman having under his or her control any agency or business that puts in peril the well-being of another, and such man or woman being notified of the fact, if such man or woman fails to restrain such agency, or regulate such business so as to prevent the injury of others,—and others are injured by such agency or business,—then the man or woman so failing becomes responsible for all the harm done, and must be punished accordingly.

Without controversy this is legitimately applicable to the liquor traffic of the present day, and hence we inquire:

I. Who owns this rampant ox of the liquor traffic, or who is responsible for its existence?

1. Some will say, Of course the manufacturers of the liquors sold. But this cannot be, from the fact that they are obliged to pay others for the privilege of carrying on the business.

2. Some will say, The vender. Not so, for the reason stated above.

3. Others will say, Those who issue the license to sell intoxicants are the owners of this devastating business. Not so, as no board dares to issue a license unless authorized to do so by its constituency, the voice of the people, as expressed at the polls. This is the foundation of our government as set forth in our Declaration of Independence when it says: "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." So also the Constitution of the United States: "We, the people . . . in order to form a more perfect union," etc., "do ordain and establish," etc. All these facts furnish demonstration that our government originated with and is under the control of the people. From this it follows that the voters of the nation, in its sectional subdivisions, are the owners of this ox, and are responsible for whatever harm it may do.

II. Has this ox been wont to push with his horns?

1. The economist will inquire: What is the expense of this business? I give the following from Dr. Hargraves, of Philadelphia, in his work on alcoholics, 1887:

Loss of productive labor of 586,472 persons engaged in the liquor trade	$ 283,236,000
Loss of 700,000 drunkards	175,000,000
Loss of productive labor of 2,138,391 moderate drinkers	222,392,664
Loss of 66,660,792 bushels of grain destroyed in distilleries and breweries	33,330,390
Loss of time, medical attendance, etc., in sickness caused by drinks	119,368,576
Loss of employers, by time lost by drinking workmen	10,000,000
Cost of supporting 83,899 defective persons by drink, as insane, etc	16,779,800
Cost of supporting 59,110 paupers, made such by drink, at $100 per annum	5,911,000
Loss of labor of 59,110 paupers and vagrants at $300 per annum	17,733,000
Cost of supporting 39,481 prisoners at $100 a year	3,948,300
Loss of labor of the same at $300 per annum	11,844,300
Costs of prosecutions, courts, witnesses, jurors, etc	15,000,000
To this add the board of the 586,472 employees at $3.00 per week	101,489,632
The clothes of the above at $50 per annum	29,323,600
The rent of 338,655 buildings used for selling intoxicants at $10 per month	40,638,600
Amounting to the enormous sum in one year of	$1,085,995,862

So much wasted year by year, to brutalize, degrade and ruin the nation, by this savage ox of the liquor traffic.

2. But what has this brute done for this nation socially? I risk very little in saying that there is not a man, woman or child in this nation who has not been more or less injured by the gorings of this brute, not only financially but personally or relatively, by the degradation, shame and sorrow which it has caused. Few will doubt the assertion that the vast majority of crimes committed in Christendom, to say nothing of heathendom, have been occasioned or largely aggravated by the use of intoxicants—thefts, too numerous to mention, burglaries by the thousand, highway robberies by scores per week, trains and stage coaches held up and plundered by hundreds, and murders unnumbered, while from sixty to one hundred and twenty thousand are annually hurried into eternity by this monstrous ox, in these United States! !

3. Whose face has not burned with shame while scanning the dark record of crimes known as seductions, rapes, fornications, adulteries, with the whole family of crimes against purity, most of which have originated or been greatly aggravated by this hateful business called the liquor traffic?

4. Do you wish to learn further of the doings of this furious ox? Search the records of our criminal courts! Ask the convicts in our jails and penitentiaries, numbering more than 25,000. Go to the poor-houses, in almost every county in the nation. Number the inmates of our lunatic asylums. Count the sums paid to support the poor at their homes. Hearken to the screams of the alcoholic maniac as he struggles to free himself from the snakes in his boots, and the devils that are grappling for his soul. Listen to the thud of the rope as the murderer expiates his crimes on the gallows. Ninety-hundredths of these crimes are the result of this most fearful agency of Satan to drag mankind down to penury, shame and death in this world, and to the deeper agonies of eternal death in the world to come. And I would add take note of the agonies of the damned in hell, were it not for the fact that those who persist, by their votes, in keeping this hell-filling monster in the field will, doubtless, ere long, have the opportunity of a personal inspection of the case, unless saved from it on the ground of idiocy.

III. Who is responsible for all the wrongs, woes and curses of this nefarious liquor traffic? We have already seen that the people have the control of all matters regulated by law. But all know that it is hardly a supposable case that there will be entire unanimity where many are to be consulted,—and hence it must be agreed that majorities shall rule; from which it follows that, with one exception, the voting majority is entitled to all the credit when wholesome laws are enacted, and to all the scorn and contempt when laws are enacted that are destructive of human happiness and well-being.

The exception above alluded to will be seen in the following case: It frequently happens when a measure is submitted to a vote that the voters divide themselves into three classes: first, the majority who vote; secondly, the minority who vote; and thirdly, a class who do not vote. In such a case, if the minority voting and those not voting, together are a minority still, then the praise or blame belongs entirely to the majority. But if the non-voters and the minority voters united make a majority of the whole, then the responsibility for the enactment of a bad law falls with crushing weight on the non-voters,—and the curse of Meroz must rest upon them in all its bitterness.

And now permit me to make this one earnest appeal to every PATRIOT, to every PHILANTHROPIST, and to every CHRISTIAN, who has the right to vote: As you love your country, as you love your fellowmen, as you fear God and hope for heaven, unite and vote this cursed, murderous, fiendish liquor traffic forever out of the nation.

Red Wing, Minn.

MEMORIES OF THE WHITE CITY.

VI.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

I know very little about the Alaskan Indian, but I understood the Alaskan artist's little kit of properties I found up in one corner of the Government Exhibit. A satin-smooth, hollowed stone, oblong in form, about half an inch thick and eight inches in its longest diameter serves him for a palette. On this he grinds his colors with a stone pestle or spatula rubbed also smooth as satin. His palette knife is all wood, about the size of a silver "bread and butter knife," and has an elaborately carved handle. His pigments are all sorts of substances as are ours. A bright sulphur-colored lichen of the goat's beard variety furnishes him a tint midway between gamboge and the lightest chrome. The other pigments exhibited I took to be earths in which were metals, iron, copper, and perhaps mercury. His brushes he makes not of badgers' hair, but of "selected" porcupine bristles. These he neatly ties upon handles by means of a useful, separated fiber of the spruce root.

Every brush handle is a work of art. The favorite pattern is the totem pole. Sometimes it is carved with a front view, sometimes in profile. I saw but one sort of totem pole in all the examples. The first face would be broad, very Indian, very serious, but serene. Below this would come a second face with a hawk-like nose, a half-open mouth with hanging lips. This second face invariably frowned, and had the eyes rolled toward the nose. It sat upon arms beginning at the elbows, and these ended in rudimentary hands which rested upon knees indicated by holes. The wood was dark somewhat like rosewood in tint, and though the work as a whole looked like the design of some clever child intent upon carving something like the goblins of story-books, it was delicately finished, and rubbed to satin smoothness.

A few handles were long and round and ended in a medallion about an inch and a half wide by two inches long on which was carved a very ugly Indian face. Others still were very neat semblances of the human leg and foot, quite unlike the rude legs carved upon the totem poles, a fact which suggests that the Alaskan has "conventional" leg patterns, but that he can give a study from life if he desires. A long, narrow box carved so that it looked as if made of strung rattan, and painted a glossy black served to hold brushes, paints, palette, pestle, spatula, etc. There was in this box a curious likeness to certain boxes in the Corean exhibit in the Liberal Arts Building.

The Alaskan young lady's work bag furnished for fancy work holds finely shredded grass and red cedar root, delicately colored in tints very like those we buy in wash embroidery silks and linen floss. With these materials and porcupine quills, sinew thread, tiny awls and bone needles she can produce extremely pretty effects. Civilization has introduced her to the pearl button, which she uses entirely for ornamental purposes, sewing it on the garment to be ornamented in scroll patterns if her purse permits the outlay.

When the son of the family wants a ball, the mother or big sister cuts out two circles of black leather about four inches in diameter. Round these are set black and white pieces of leather alternately, and when finished and stuffed the plaything is not unlike a big cantaloupe and is pretty enough for any boy, anywhere.

. . . . . .

It is alleged that Japanese art is the child of Corean. If this be so, it is a clear case of evolution, for if one may judge by the Corean exhibit at the Fair, the child is eons in advance of the mother. Beside the dainty wares displayed under the white banner bearing the red disk, the Corean cabinets and robes were rude in workmanship, raw in color and coarse in design. The first object I saw was a being very Japanese in feature, slowly moving up and down among the quaint objects. Upon its head was a curious black hat so generally suggestive of discomfort and inutility, I fancied the being was a woman. The black hat was of horse hair and must have been well stiffened with glue. Beneath it was a white cotton nightcaplike drapery. The face was far away in expression and perfectly immobile. The body wore a white robe, and upon its feet were white Chinese shoes. Somewhere and somehow, even as I looked that figure disappeared, and an instant later I saw a little yellow gentleman in the garb of American men, hovering about the display of Corean shoes, and I overheard him tell one inquisitive visitor he was from Seôul. I looked about with careful eyes. The figure in the horse-hair hat could not have gone into the floor, nor yet could he be in the case of robes or in one of the cabinets. I concluded that at stated intervals this young man from Seôul, to relieve his ennui and homesickness must slip his white robe over his broadcloth, set the hat he was used to upon his head, and rest his toes in white pig-skin shoes. But where he effected the metamorphosis I cannot fancy.

Two of the exhibits I can now see with my mind's eye. One was a gaily painted trunk, about two feet long and one foot wide. Its cover was rounded, and I think it would hold a fin de siècle fashionable jacket, if the garment were closely folded. This was—a lady's trunk! The other exhibit was a scarlet robe, ornamented with elaborate scrolls in brass disks, convex, and in appearance exactly like the brass-headed tacks that made flamboyant flourishes and borders on the trunks of our grandmothers. "This was a warrior's robe," the gentleman from Seôul told me, the one he wore in action, and the red and gold were, I suppose, expected to inspire terror in the enemy.

In the Fisheries Building other gaily colored trunks were shown in the Norwegian and Swedish boat exhibits, seamen's trunks. And why not? Fancy a Saratoga in brilliant green, blue, red and yellow! Possibly color might soften the heart of the baggage smasher. Possibly not, for the most exquisite decoration moves not the heart of the kitchen china smasher.

. . . . . .

We often hear about "the good old times," but I fancy the locomotive engineers who looked at the uncovered iron chairs provided for engineer and firemen behind the boiler of the locomotive of the years 1835–38, and 1840 were of the opinion that the good new times of cabs and comfort, and speed, are good enough for the year 1894. I fancy, too, the men who "go down to the sea in ships," looked askance at the Viking, and Santa Maria, Nina and Pinta, and whispered among themselves: "What fellow'd care about going to Mackinac in such craft?" Yet, Columbus was warned that "if he succeeded in climbing the western mountain of waters, he would be sure to slide down on the further side, and could not return." He was warned, too, that to the far south was a sea "boiling hot." But he set out! "How could he a sot out!" exclaimed a lanky Hoosier as we climbed about the Admiral's flag ship. "Goodness alive, what a feller he mus' a been, fer a fac'!" It was not just as the rest of us would have said it, but interchanging glances revealed that the common feeling had been voiced.

(To be continued.)

South Evanston, Ill.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XXII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

The work of the W. C. T. U. went on after the ripple of the late "golden wedding" as though nothing had happened, except (if such a thing could be), "the tie that binds" became closer between the favored recipients and the unselfish benefactors.

About the time of the "week of prayer," 1888, it was resolved by the members of the union to invite Mrs. Romick, of Ohio, for a week of temperance and gospel work in our town. Measures were at once set in motion, and on March 20, 1888, she came to us, as our secretary, Mrs. E. L. Warson, happily expressed it, "with a heart filled with love for God and humanity and ready for work in His cause." The result was, many were benefited and our union was built up and strengthened. Her sweet, humble Christian spirit will long be remembered among our people.

Mothers' meetings had become a favorite feature of our work, and for a time "cottage prayer services" were quite successful.

But, as is always the case, some one person must be responsible for the outcome of such extra services, and that person must have a special gift and preparation. After our dear Mrs. Bridwell left us for favored Harriman, the mothers' meetings of which she was superintendent became a thing of the past. But we are trusting and believing that God will open the way for its revival.

Finding myself much hindered by age and home cares in my ability to serve the union of dear women whom I loved so much and had so long acted as president for, I felt it incumbent upon me to write them a letter of resignation, November 26, 1888. Mrs. Governor Hart, one of our most earnest and helpful Crusaders, moved that "we do not accept Mrs. Thompson's resignation, but that we appoint a president pro tem to act during her absence, and that a committee be appointed to draw up resolutions expressive of the feelings of the union with regard to the matter." Mrs. McSurely and Mrs. Gregg were appointed said committee. The following communication was read at meeting of the union December 3, 1888, and approved with one voice. The secretary was requested to present a copy to Mrs. Thompson and record it in the minutes:

Your committee to whom was submitted Mrs. Thompson's request that she be released from the presidency of our local union would respectfully submit: That we do not consider Mrs. Thompson "superannuated"; that although often prevented from meeting with us, yet when she is present we do not perceive that her natural force is abated. And we know that we but voice the feeling of all in saying that we most earnestly desire that she who first led us out in this work may continue to be our president for many years to come. We submit this, not as a mere sentiment, but from a conviction that we are doing what is best for our union. Feeling that God called Mrs. Thompson to be our leader, we await a clearer indication of Providence that another is to take her place.

In the mean time, during her absence from us, we recognize another leader in our first vice-president, Mrs. Hart, and we will faithfully stand by her.

The matter being thus adjusted, Mrs. Hart, with her usual energy and earnestness, prepared an appeal to the mayor and council of our little city and, accompanied by Mesdames Foraker, McSurely, Murray, Smith, Gregg, Langley, Bridwell, Patterson, Willett, Stevenson and McConnaughy, delivered it at the set time and was sustained by two of the councilmen, Dr. Patterson and Mr. McNichol, with eloquent and earnest speeches favoring their wishes. Mrs. Hart's appeal is worth reading, notwithstanding the majority was against us:

To the Hon. Mayor and Council of Hillsboro:

It is claimed that the ordinance prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor in our town is but a dead letter upon our statute books, and feeling aggrieved that this is so, we, the women of Hillsboro, through the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, come to you with an earnest appeal to see to it that it be enforced. Nearly two years ago this ordinance was asked for by more than two-thirds of our voters, and by our united voice. It was placed upon our statute books, not as a pastime, not as empty words, but to be enforced just as any law, and, as affecting our interests more than any law, you are asked to enforce, as by its non-enforcement our homes, our happiness, and the souls of our loved ones are placed in jeopardy. The voters, who asked its adoption, expected you, as sworn officers of the law, to enforce it. We hear it said that the ordinance is a failure. We grant that its enforcement has been a failure, but the ordinance is right, and right cannot be wrong. It may need revision to make it more effective, but that you have the power to do. It is said it cannot be enforced. Are you, the honored officers of our town, willing to acknowledge that you are powerless in the hands of a few evil-doers? That cannot be. We feel safe in our homes because we have officers who will protect us against the midnight robber. May we not feel safe in our homes because we have officers who will protect us from him who, in the open day, is stealing from us that which is dearer to us than our silver? We do not often come to you with our complaints, and we would not now, but we have no other redress, and we cannot see our loved ones slipping away from us and offer no protest, We, together with the children in our homes, who are either blessed or blighted by your action in this matter, form a large part of your constituency. Can you turn a deaf ear to our appeal? We also ask that you make an appropriation of money sufficient to enable our officers to execute the law.

On behalf of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hillsboro, Ohio.

MRS. GOV. HART,
Acting Pres., First Vice-pres.

LIZZIE H. HARSHA, Sec.

All this effort on the part of the temperance women and their friends so stirred up matters that the "powers that be" determined to enforce the "tax" part of the "Dow Law" and let them sell on, as they had been doing (without paying for the "privilege"). With the money thus collected our streets, "so wide and airy," were vigorously macadamized, and thus while the tempted ones were drawn into the "open doors" the "very rocks were crying out" against "those people who love to have it so." "And what will ye do in the end thereof?" has been asked, not only by the prophet, but by many aching hearts, since that day, for "at last it stingeth like an adder," even "our enemies themselves being judges."

The Crusade anniversary of December 23, 1888, was celebrated in a quiet, yet most comforting way; it was my blessed privilege to be present with the real pleasure of having Mrs. Hart preside. Miss Clothier, National organizer of the Y's, came over from Leesburg, where she had been visiting, to attend this meeting, and was prevailed upon to remain and give us a lecture in the evening; this was most helpful and much enjoyed.

The Loyal Temperance Legion continued to prosper under the care of Mrs. Harsha, as often as possible aided by Mrs. Thompson, during the absence of Mrs. Rives, on account of illness.

The Y's were very prosperous under the kindly and most capable guidance of Mrs. Mary B. Murray, their president.

(To be continued.)

Hillsboro, O.

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

I.

Production.

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

What is production? A man with a sharp stick is digging clams on the beach. He is producing clams. The beach, his labor, and the stick are the three factors in production. This most simple mode in no way differs in principle from the most complex form of production, with its boss, its army of wage-earners and its modern machinery. Each has three, and only three, factors: Land, labor and capital.

In the first example, the stick, though a rude instrument, may be termed capital. In the second, though the workers are many, they are all (including the boss) laborers. Though the machinery is complex, it is capital. Though the material used may be wool, tin, cotton or glass, yet all come from land; and the wages of all are, or should be, all that they produce.

Does the laborer dig clams for the sake of the labor, or for the clams? For the clams, certainly. They satisfy his desire for food and, inasmuch as they do this, they are his wealth. When he produces more than he needs for his immediate wants, he has accumulated some wealth.

This surplus is called production, whether produced by one individual, working alone, or by millions, working either separately or collectively. The wheat produced in this country last year was that which was raised, harvested and stored. Ten men are engaged in the industry of fishing. Some prepare the boats; others the nets and bait; women cook for all to eat. Here is a division of labor, in which many more fish are caught, and that, too, with less labor than when each man prepares his own boat, bait, net and food. Less boats, etc., are required, and much labor is saved. Each one who assists in performing any of this labor (including the woman) as truly catches the fish as those who pull them from the water.

The manufacturing of calico or woolen dress goods is a still more complex form of production. In the Southern states some are growing and preparing the cotton; others, in California or Australia, the wool; some in Africa, the madder; in Asia, the indigo; while in England, the cotton or wool is being spun and woven by elaborate machinery, which others have invented and still others built at great cost. This machinery is made of iron, wood, steel, copper, zinc, which men in distant parts have produced from the earth; moreover, this machinery must constantly be fed by coal.

Meanwhile, each of the many combined and distant workers, must eat, be clothed, housed, etc. Some grow or prepare all or parts of their own food, make all or parts of their own clothing; while others do only some one thing, and by so doing obtain their food of the distant farmers and their clothing ready made.

Some do nothing all day long but shovel coal into furnaces; others keep accounts, some plow, reap, make butter; others teach, write books, paint, gather news for others to arrange in newspapers.

When a man produces one thing alone—as the digging of the clams—we recognize, easily, that the result of his labor—the clams—are his wages. Now, when he produces any one (or parts of any one) of these million things, the reward for his labor is either a part of the things he produces or else a money equivalent, which he can use in exchanging his labor for the labor of others who may be near or remote.

When he receives the equivalent for his labor in money, the transaction is only half completed; for money will satisfy no desire and therefore is not wealth. It must be exchanged for food, clothing, shelter, luxuries, before the transaction is completed, for men do not labor for money but for what money will buy; for something that will satisfy human desires; wealth, which is always some substance from Mother Earth, upon which some labor value has been impressed, so as to fit it to satisfy some want. The money is simply a convenience—a labor saving machine—which acts, first as a measure of values, and, second, as a medium of exchange.

It is the same with the capitalist. Labor value is first given to him, then wages are paid, and this process may go on, week after week, month after month, before the capitalist is able to turn the finished product into money; yet labor is constantly adding value, which should equal or exceed, the wages paid. When the capitalist turns the finished product into money, the transaction is only half completed, for with him, as with the wage-earner, money is not wealth, only a representative of wealth, which he at once re-invests in fresh materials, and fresh labor value; thus by going round and round, the real wealth increases at every point—not just at the one point where it is measured in money—but all the time that labor is adding value. Money plays an important part in production, from the housewife to the government treasurer, but its office is only a measure and exchanger of values—a labor-saving device for effecting exchange of barter.

But the farmers, the merchants and the manufacturers are laborers as well as the wage-earners. It can truly be said of each that in producing, or helping to produce any one thing, (or parts of one thing) that can be exchanged for money, each has produced everything that his money will buy in the market; for when he eats potatoes, drinks coffee or reads newspapers, he as truly produces them as the farmer, the Arabian or the news-gatherer; for his demand for these things causes them to be brought into being. Moreover anything that interferes with this free exchange of the results of each man's labor, infringes upon his rights. To freely exchange that which one's own right arm produces, is as much his right as the free use of the arm itself.

It is this natural coöperation, this subdivision of labor that makes civilization possible. How few comforts would we possess, to-day, were each to produce his own food, clothing, shelter, etc.? Most people would be living in huts, eating out of wooden bowls, clothed in hand-knit garments. What government could so nationalize all industries, like this natural growth, into greater and still greater subdivisions of labor, where each is free and yet dependent?

To promote this growth three things are necessary, peace, liberty and a knowledge that each in working for his own highest interest is working for all—a sense of brotherly dependence and also of independence, fraternity and liberty. Up to a certain point, the natural desire to look out for self, is right. Should each one think it necessary to supply the wants of another, instead of his own, and all did the same, few real wants would be satisfied. Each can best look after his own interests, knows what kind of labor he is best fitted to perform and what products are best suited to his soil and climate.

The important thing to notice here is, the more workers and more complex the subdivisions of labor are, and also the freer and broader the exchanges, the easier and more abundant will be the wealth produced, and if this ever-increasing wealth could be distributed to the producers in proportion to their labor, then the more laborers the higher would be their wages; whereas, now, the more laborers the lower the average wages, because some of the wealth producers have power to control distribution.

Wollaston, Mass.

*Copyrighted.

"EVERY yesterday is talking to, instructing to-day."

VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS FOR TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The gospel temperance meetings held here by Dr. Tracy, and which have just closed, have developed facts which confirm some theories that I have long held in regard to our public meetings. These are the facts. A guarantee of two hundred and fifty dollars was made by the churches—pledges of fifty cents each, being taken at a morning service. The meetings were mainly held in the opera house which was filled every night at an admittance fee of ten or fifteen cents, the gallery being the only place where any one was admitted free, and it was also the only place where there was any confusion or disorder.

The second fact is that many came and paid their way who do not attend temperance or other meetings when held in a church, while the church members and attendants did not remain away because they were not held in a church and so both classes were reached.

The third fact, the expenses were paid and no deficit left for a "committee" to struggle with and either repudiate or pay from its own pockets, as sometimes occurs, in the one case the speaker being the loser, in the other, the committee, and in either—disgust and discouragement.

Here are some of my theories. First, that the temperance cause has been pauperized by its friends quite long enough in making all meetings absolutely free, save for a collection.

Second, that in emphasizing the religious character of our work by holding our meetings so generally in churches, some speakers strongly objecting to speaking in any other place, we fail entirely to reach the very class—and a large class—that need just what we have to say.

Third, that the old saying, "Nothing pay, nothing value," holds good with the people and our reform.

Consider some other facts. Many of our good speakers are not employed as constantly as they should be for the benefit of the cause, nor at the terms they should have to enable them to give their entire time to it. On the other hand, many unions never have a speaker unless it is some one who will go for the collection, and usually, no particular responsibility being felt, the meeting is not well worked up and the speaker, no matter what her ability or reputation, is met by a small audience and a smaller collection.

The unions that realize the need of having speakers occasionally, are obliged to use such efforts to secure the needed funds that there is little time, strength or energy left for the other work in which every union should abound and rejoice, and the result is that having a speaker instead of being an inspiration and help to the general work, actually hinders it, and devotion to the general work prevents the employment of speakers.

These things ought not so to be, and the remedy should be found. Try this simple one. Hold a part of your meetings in some other place than a church. Careful preparation in the devotional exercises will prevent any loss of the religious feeling. Ask an admittance fee for at least half of your public meetings. Advertise well, have your opening exercises carefully planned and carried out, and your audiences during the year will, I am confident average fully as well as under the old system, while the expense, instead of being borne by a few, as now, will be equally distributed.

I am aware of the universal feeling that our meetings must be free, but in the very nature of things they cannot be; some one has to meet the bills, and the only question is, shall it be the few who have met them so long, or shall the burden be more equally distributed?

Look at our great meeting at Denver. The church was packed to its utmost capacity the evening of the contest, does any one think the attendance or the interest would have been less the other nights had the same fee been charged? And had it been, the deficiency in the National treasury, which the membership is now called upon to make up, had it existed at all, would have been less.

Let us rank our speakers high enough to say to the people: "They are worth hearing and worth paying to hear." By this means our best speakers can be called to places where they are needed and financial considerations alone prevent their being called; their appointments can be made closer together and so a smaller proportion of their receipts be paid for railroad fare, and even a smaller fee would give them larger profits.

One fact is evident, either our platform work must remain limited as it is, or its financial conditions must be improved. MARION H. DUNHAM.

Burlington, Ia.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

White-Ribbon Services.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I was particularly impressed by a letter in your columns, some months ago, from Mrs. Love, our Australian in West Virginia. She takes the ground, most consistently, I think, that neither the ordinance of baptism nor that of the Lord's Supper can justly be administered at the sessions of a strictly non-sectarian society. It seems a thousand pities that the dross of sectarian interpretation should so have mingled with the pure gold of these simple and sacred observances that Christians of all denominations cannot peaceably participate in them.

I have long pondered over this difficulty, and it is borne in upon me that when we "come of age" (at the Cleveland convention of next year), we shall do well to precede the convention by a consecration day, and to open that by a love feast (the "Agapa" of the early Christians), at which water and bread may be partaken of in unity of spirit as an outward sign of our inward bond of peace.

It also seems to me that it would be wise to have a simple consecration service for any parents who might wish to set apart their little ones to active Christian service "For God and Home and Every Land." Both would be beautiful and blessed tokens, in no wise interfering with anybody's preconceived ideas nor "flying in the face" of any ecclesiastical prerogative.

I wish that the state presidents would set us an example, if they think well of these suggestions, and it would rejoice my heart if every local union in the world would precede its annual meeting by a consecration day, the opening hour of which should be given to such a love feast as I have mentioned; nor is there any reason why the setting apart of little children to be sons and daughters of the King, in actual service from the time that they can begin to manifest good will, should not be a feature of the annual meeting in all unions, local, county, district, state and National, throughout the World's W. C. T. U.

Reigate, Eng. Frances E. Willard

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The latest sensation in this District along anti-liquor lines is the pardon by President Cleveland of John Shea, a notorious violator of the liquor law. Shea was the first one given a sentence of imprisonment under the new law, and was serving out his sentence. The absolute imprisonment part of his sentence had expired, but there yet stood against him a fine of five hundred dollars, or six months' imprisonment. He chose to remain in the work-house, in hope of saving his money, and at the same time strenuous efforts were made to secure his pardon, while meantime his wife was conducting the liquor business without a license at the old stand.

The Evening Star, probably the most widely read and influential paper in the District, in commenting on the matter, says: "An examination of the records of the police court has revealed the fact that since January 1, 1876, the Shea family, father, mother or children, have appeared as defendants on the District or United States sides of the court no less than one hundred and fifty-one times, and as was explained by a clerk of the court yesterday, it is said that conviction followed in at least a majority of the cases."

The same paper in its leading editorial of February 5 took occasion to sharply criticise the action of the President in pardoning Shea, and among other things says: "Probably no recent violations of law . . . . are better known to the community than those with which the name of Shea is associated; none were more outrageously offensive or more worthy of all the punishment possible under local statutes. . . . . Had there been any doubt as to the guilt of John Shea, or had his punishment been disproportionately large, then a plea for mercy might have been regarded as reasonable. The judge who tried the case and the district attorney joined in opposition to clemency. . . . . In New York the police are being investigated and held up to public reprobation because of their connivance with and inactivity against the prototypes of the Sheas in that city. In Washington the executive 'rebukes' by the exercise of the pardoning power activity against this class of law-breakers. In championing the Sheas the President slaps in the face the moral sentiment of this city."

At about the same time that the President was pardoning John Shea, his wife, Maria Shea, was being arrested for keeping an unlicensed bar, but although sufficient evidence was secured to assure a conviction the case was nolle prossed on the ground that Mrs. Shea being a married woman, and not living apart from her husband, she was acting as his agent and was not liable. Thus do known violators of law escape just punishment.

During the last license year there were forty-eight convictions for violations of the excise law in this District, forty-three of which were for unlicensed bar, three for Sunday bar and two for aiding and abetting, while three were for the second offense. The amount of fines imposed was $10,586.28. The amount of fines collected, $2,231.53, leaving an uncollected balance of $8,354.75. Why this balance remains uncollected your correspondent knoweth not; probably some one versed in the intricacies of law, and especially excise law, can explain. The increase of the sum paid for a saloon license to four hundred dollars per year has not reduced the number of applications, made or granted, as was claimed it would do.

The Anti-Saloon League has lately effected a thorough reorganization under a new and carefully planned constitution, and hopes to make matters for the liquor men even more lively in the future than in the past. The new president is Rev. Luther B. Wilson, D. D., the popular and well beloved pastor of Wesley chapel, one of the largest and most flourishing churches of the Methodist Episcopal denomination in this city. Dr. Wilson is noted for his deep spirituality, his great power in the pulpit, his faithfulness as a pastor, and his utter fearlessness in the cause of temperance and the abolition of the rum traffic.

Washington, D. C. M. B. P.

LIQUOR IN NEW JERSEY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—East Orange, N. J., has had two notable temperance victories in the year of our Lord, 1893. Twice has the plague of a liquor store on one of our fine avenues been stayed by the devoted efforts of the best residents of its neighborhood. One old gentleman of seventy had to spend a week of his business mornings in a stifling Newark court-house, with disrespectful lawyers, working hard for their liquor-selling client.

A year previous a house and store for saloon purposes had been built and a license applied for, but the local opposition was so great that the application was denied. Again, in 1893, the license was applied for, but the judge ruled that as the local feeling was so much opposed, it could not be granted. Thus twice has this saloon been defeated, and we feel that it will not be brought up again.

Still more important is our success in the case that came up in the Orange Athletic Club. Part of its members desired to have a bar in the club house, an elegant building in the center of the town. These found it inconvenient even to go around the corner, when the thirst became imperative, and wanted a bar right at hand. It is against the law to have liquor in a club where minors are members. In this club there were about eighty members under age. Indeed, as one old gentleman said to me: "We support the club for the sake of our boys, and we will not have liquor where our boys spend their evenings." To have a bar would be to disassociate all these boys.

The matter caused much excitement among the four or five hundred members of the club, and among our citizens generally. The liquor party put on an air of much bravado, and said it would be useless to oppose them, the feeling was so much on their side. The other side were somewhat fearful, but not daunted, and went to work.

The matter was mentioned at the Woman's Club of Orange, with a suggestion that the influence of its members should be used for temperance, though it was known that the husbands and sons of some of the prominent women were in favor of the bar policy. The local W. C. T. Unions were called on to do their duty.

The various local editors were interviewed, and invited to use their influence to promote the best welfare of the club. One paper, The Orange Chronicle, a weekly, through its editor, Mr. Frank W. Baldwin, gave most excellent editorials for us. Circulars against the proposed change were distributed widely. These were authorized by influential club members, and of course carried much weight.

A large meeting of club members put the matter to vote, with a decision unexpectedly large in favor of the temperance side, and we think now that this question will be allowed to rest henceforth in the Athletic Club.

These successes have been most assuring, for the Oranges have a large and active liquor interest. What has been done here, can it not be done in other places?

C. C. HUSSEY.

East Orange, N. J.

NEW ZELAND ITEMS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I thought you ought to have from an actor in the scene some account of the first general election in which enfranchised British women had a share. This privilege has been so recently accorded to us that as you may imagine, women who have been exhorted all their lives to mend their stockings, mind their business and their babies, had no clear idea of measures for governing the country thus suddenly brought to their notice and judgment. However, one issue they did understand, the direct veto for the control of the liquor traffic, and whether the candidate was a Ministerialist or Opposition, if he had a "P" (prohibition) in his policy, he was their man, and they have succeeded out of seventy members in returning forty-four pledged to give the people the direct veto on a bare majority.

Unhappily, Christ Church, out of three members, has returned two publicans' men, one an infidel—but it might have been worse. The third candidate, though an untried young man of quite obscure birth, was returned second on the list as a Prohibitionist. We might have got three in, if the Prohibition party had chosen three good men, but the other two were down-grade parsons, disloyal to Christ, preaching a Christianity built on the sinking sand of humanity. Many of us could not believe in them, and think them more dangerous than the infidel Collins.

In Wellington they have placed Sir Robert Stout head of the poll. He is an agnostic—an aggressive one—clever and ambitious, but the Prohibitionists make much of him and would have got him in anywhere. He says, as he predicted, the women have voted Democrat, secular education and direct veto. He is only true in the last particular, for, as I said, the women have not had time to consider other measures. Surely the majority of mothers will not vote for secular education, their children to be educated for time only, when the question is put fairly before them? We are hoping that a Scripture text-book, to be taught by the teachers in the public schools, will gain the day before long. Shame, shame, that the Bible should ever have been thrown out of national education. You will perceive that I am Christian first, in politics, and then, prohibition. I cannot conscientiously vote for a man because he is Prohibitionist, unless, as far as I can gather, he is loyal to the Christ of the Bible in word and deed.

I do not hear much about the W. C. T. U. in New Zealand, partly because this enfranchisement of women has occupied the ground, and the prohibition leagues are all the fashion, where I grieve to state religion is quite in the background. I do not agree with some of our W. C. T. U. leaders that the word "Christian" in our title secures us Christian officers. In fact, this matter of real Christian officers is blocking the way of the success of the union in New Zealand. Cannot some one else who is an enthusiast give us a year or two? I am pretty sure she would be self-supporting. People would pay well to hear a good gospel temperance woman well accredited.

EMMA E. PACKE.

Christ Church, New Zealand.

Y MATILDA B. CARSE.

The centurion said, Neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed. . . . . When Jesus heard these things he marvelled at him and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.—Luke 7:7, 9, 10.

"In reading the argument in last week's Temple column of the Wisconsin sister," writes Mrs. E. C. Goodell, Canastota, N. Y., "I was impressed to write to you that the facts in the case of our union—which has raised one hundred dollars and is now adding to it a little—do not bear out the statement that 'raising money for the Temple causes a cessation of all other temperance work.' Our union numbers only thirty, not over one-third are active, working members, yet I think we never did more work than when we were raising funds for the Temple. Mite-boxes were given to those who were not active members, who would not have worked in any other way and except for this would never have been interested. A part of the money was raised by Demorest medal contests and a concert. Certainly this is one of the best ways of bringing our cause before those who would not listen otherwise." The secretary, Mrs. John, of the plucky little union above referred to, has just sent the last installment, $25, completing the $100 pledge.

***

The W. C. T. U. of Elizabeth City, N. C., sends $15 on its pledge. The Beardstown, Ill., union sends $20; $10 of this is for a full Baby Band. All honor to them. No doubt they will soon succeed in completing the full pledge. The Hampshire, Ill., W. C. T. U. has just sent $37, which makes $50 this union has sent to the Temple. Let fourteen women each fill a mite-box and the Hampshire union will have secured $100. How easy to do this where there is a determination to succeed. The following is a case in point. Mrs. Fannie E. Wilcox, Plattsburg, N. Y., is a warm admirer of the Temple enterprise; she is at work raising $100 for it, and has just sent $11 which she earned by making fancy work, having it sold in one of the stores in Plattsburg. This brave, unselfish and determined woman, has sent $52.16 within a year to the Temple, almost the entire amount being earned by her own deft fingers. Mrs. John Monroe sends $10 from the Romulus W. C. T. U. to be applied on the Seneca county, New York, tablet. Mrs. R. M. Smith sends the second monthly installment of $5 from the Barton, Fla., W. C. T. U. on a pledge. Fifteen dollars have been received from Mrs. Bickford, on the pledge of the Alma city, Minn., W. C. T. U. Would that we had as president of all local unions in the country such women as Frances J. Sumner, president of Lucas county, Ohio, W. C. T. U., then there would be no need of applying to outsiders to pay for the Temple. Mrs. Sumner sends a check for $25 as a first installment on a $100 pledge for the Toledo, O., W. C. T. U. Two years ago this union paid $100 to have the name of Lucas county on the Ohio tablet. "It sent the blood bounding through my veins," writes Mrs. Sumner, "when I stood before the beautiful Temple last October. I said: 'We will own every brick in that beautiful building; let's go to work.'" And she has gone to work. Miss Gibson, president of the North Hope, Pa., Y. W. C. T. U., sends $10. Miss Terry, president of the North Weymouth Y's, sends $10 from her union to be applied towards placing the name of Miss Elizabeth P. Gordon on the Massachusetts tablet. No worthier name, we are sure, can be placed there than that of "our Bessie Gordon." Let the Massachusetts Y's take hold with a will and soon the work will be accomplished for there are no better workers for temperance in the nation than the women of Massachusetts, headed by their noble and indefatigable leader, Mrs. Fessenden.

***

Eleven-year-old Grace Rose, Mason, Ill., writes: "I received the lovely Columbian souvenir, and think it is very handsome. I wish to have my name enrolled, as I am going to earn money to fill another mite-box for the solid silver spoon." Why can't we have hundreds of little girls at work just as Grace Rose is, filling a mite-box and earning the beautiful souvenir Temple spoon? What a lovely present it would be for mother next Christmas! I am sure all loving little girls will think so. "I would like very much to have you send me a mite-box," writes little Bertha Saunders, Braintree, Mass. "I think I can get it filled by the end of the year. I would like to do that much to help you pay for the Temple. I am ten years old, and go to school every day." Mrs. J. T. Clarke, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "Will you please send a Temple mite-box for my little Frances Willard, now five years old? Her brother eleven years older, has promised to give her a penny every day, and she wants to save them to help pay for the Frances Willard Temple, as she calls it." Mrs. L. H. Hyslop, Nebraska City, Neb., writes: "The dear Lord has helped me to fill three mite-boxes since my seventieth birthday, which was a year ago last August. Now please send me a box for Temple souvenir spoon. If my life is spared I hope to fill two boxes before 1895." Another aged saint, Mrs. Sarah Kiplinger, Indiana, writes: "Please send me a mite-box. I will fill it as soon as I get it, for I may not be here at the end of the year. I would like both the Temple spoon and the Columbian souvenir. I will send five dollars even. I may be able to save more in the near future. I may never see our beautiful Temple, but I want to help all I can."

***

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir.

LENT.

Is this a fast to keepe
The larder leane
And cleane
From fat of veales and sheepe?

Is it to quit the dish
Of flesh, yet still
To fill
The platter high with fish?

Is it to fast an houre,
Or ragged goe,
Or show
A downcast look and soure?

No! 'tis a fast to dole
Thy sheafe of wheate,
And meate,
Unto the hungry soule!

It is a fast from strife,
From old debate,
And hate
To circumcise "thy life."

To show the hearte griefe-rent,
To starve thy sin,
Not bin,—
And that's to keep thy Lent!

—Robert Herrick, 1591.

A TRUE PICTURE IN A CHICAGO HOME.

(Seen on September 3, 1893.)

BY NICO BECH-MEYER.

My feet were wet from the dripping rain. I put on dry footwear and started to make a cup of hot coffee. There! I forgot that my coffee mill was broken! It was nine o'clock but they might be up yet down stairs.

I went down to my neighbors in the basement to borrow their coffee mill. It was steaming hot in their kitchen, and the dishes were piled unwashed on the table. Talking was heard in the parlor—men's voices—drowsy, incoherent, but unceasing.

At my repeated knocking a woman came to the door. I sat down grinding my coffee. She stood by the stove, stout and healthy-looking, but with an utter indifference which often had struck me.

"It is hot here, I am baking beans. He has just come home with them, and he always wants them for Sunday breakfast. It takes eight hours, so I shall have to fill the stove with coal for all night."

A man came from the dining-room and looked hurriedly around without saying a word. She turned around, took a large pail from the table, rinsed it at the sink, and gave it to him. He disappeared. She turned to the stove again with a look just as indifferent as before. Something in this silent performance chilled me, but I kept on with my grinding.

The talking became louder from the parlor. A glimpse of disgust flitted across her face. "This is how it goes every Saturday evening—beer and brandy till midnight; if he has three friends in there I must be glad that there are not five."

A painful certainty dawned on me. I had known very little of the people.

"Three—four dollars spent that way every week, and yet I must buy coal by the pail. And then he grumbles when there is not enough of grub."

"Why, that is a pity, Mrs. Blinker, and that is a sin towards you and the children. Could you not convince him of that?"

She laughed. "I might as well speak to a stone. He always has used beer and always will use it; and I believe it is that way with all of them—that the first glass must have the last—till they have drunk the life out of them and then," with a sudden burst of feeling: "Oh, I cannot tell you what it means to see the man whom you ought to honor become only a miserable wreck without conscience or feeling!"

I put down the coffee mill and took her hand.

"I don't cry any more," she said, "if I did, I could do nothing else. Poor as we are, our only enjoyment should be found in our home, and I would delight in a nice, clean house."

"You have a nice home, too," I replied. "I noticed last Sunday your fine carpet and good furniture."

"It gives me no joy. He spoils everything; burns big holes in that thirty-dollar carpet, he and his friends, when they are half drunk; holes in the easy chairs, in the lounge; they lay down their pipes anywhere when they are half drunk. I have got so now that I am most glad when he is gone. I cannot say that I suffer, I am cold to everything. I only feel disgusted."

"But does he not love you and the children? Can you not touch his heart that way?" I asked.

"Love! When beer goes in all affection goes out. He used to make so much of the oldest little boy, the puny, weakly little fellow; he hardly ever notices him now. All his feelings get duller as time wears on. For me he cares nothing; I am here to cook and wash for him, that is why I must heat up the house for those beans which he would not bring in time, though he spent the whole afternoon in a saloon!" She stirred the coals with her poker.

"You must not give up heart, even if it does look dark," said I. "You have your children, try to rear them better; they will be your comfort, and when you grow old, you will know that your life was not lived in vain."

"The children! He sends them to the saloon, they see him and his friends drinking, he gives them beer to taste!"

"Still, I believe, Mrs. Blinker, that if you earnestly try to turn your children's hearts—"

I stopped. There was an expression in her face that I did not know, as some light from within slowly illuminated her whole countenance. She turned her face full on me. I saw that she did not hear my words at all.

"Is it not strange," she spoke slowly, looking past me as out into vacancy, "is it not strange, it comes to me as a voice from far off, always in my darkest times, that at some time my life shall be changed; it shall not always be as it is now, and I could never endure life had I not that hope."

Tears started to my eyes. Oh, the glory of humanity, the strength of hope and faith which no darkness can extinguish.

"You have hope! You are right, life will change for you, if you only can keep your brave spirit. If you only could get your husband —"

"I will tell you what I think; he cannot last long if he keeps on drinking as he does. He complains of his lungs, his health is failing fast; he cannot count on many years."

Utterly unable to answer in my bewilderment and shock, without knowing it, I emptied the contents of my coffee-mill in my lap.

"I hate Chicago," she continued, the old emotionless look creeping back to her face, "it is the worst place I yet have struck. I don't think we ever would have gone so far down had we not moved to this city. He cannot turn around here without running on a saloon."

"I am so sorry," I said, rising.

"Well, this is only what hundreds of wives could tell. Liquor is killing us, body and soul."

And I shut the door on her sorrow—just as the church and the government do every day on hundreds of thousands of despairing women and children—I, helpless, like every ballotless women, they, guilty as Herod in misused power.

Chicago, Ill.

BABY'S RIGHTS.

II.

BY MARY C. GLASS.

A box of soft, light, dainty, lovingly made baby clothes is a great and daily comfort to a young mother. Make long sleeved little shirts of white wash silk, buttoned in front, for flannel is very irritating to the delicate skin of some babies. Three or four soft flannel bands will be necessary for a little while. Cut flannel slips and white dresses by the same pattern, high neck and long sleeves, with one seam under each arm, button in the back, for convenience in putting on; and if the dresses must be fine, do put the trimming on the bottom and spare baby rough trimming around the neck and sleeves; finish all smoothly; use no starch in the clothes and have nothing to irritate the baby's tender skin.

Baby "No. 1" always has beautiful blue, pink and white crocheted socks, trimmed with cords and tassels, scallops, ribbons and bows, and if he is a lively little man he kicks them off twice as fast as his fond mamma can find them and put them on. Baby "No. 7" has soft, merino stockings drawn over the knees and securely pinned to the napkin, which should be numerous, soft, and not very large.

In rearing my babies I think I took more comfort in the little colored double wrappers than anything else. I would slip them on early in the morning over the flannel gown, and knew that baby was comfortable until bath time, for my babies were early risers. I found soft, gray flannel nightgowns the most satisfactory, as they neither fade nor shrink. I was myself a little November baby in the old Buckeye state. I was dressed in Irish linen shirts and bands, long flannel and cambric skirts, with cotton bands, and long white dresses, with low necks and short sleeves, and I had a small, beautifully embroidered blanket, to be thrown around my shoulders. I also had croup from my babyhood until after my marriage.

Baby can be taught to enjoy his bath if you are very gentle and tender and do not get nervous over it yourself. Be sure that the water is just right. I once heard a nurse say the way she told whether the baby's bath water was right or not was by the color of the baby when he came out. "If he was red it was too hot, and if he was blue it was too cold." She said it never failed. First, get everything needful ready; hang the clothes near the fire, have the purest soap you can buy, and a soft flannel bag of violet powder, a soft rag and an old, soft towel. Be sure that the room is warm, then get a low chair and proceed to business. First wash and dry the little face, head and hands before removing the clothes; then strip the upper part of the body, bathe and dry quickly, and put on the shirt and band, then bathe the rest of the body and put on the warm napkin and socks. Put on the flannel and white slips and lo! there he is all washed and dressed and ready for lunch and a good long sleep.

Feed your baby regularly and generously. I believe the rule is once in two hours for three months and once in three hours up to six months. One of my babies cried a great deal with "colic" until my young brother went to town one day and invested in a nursing bottle for him and baby never had a spell of "colic" afterwards. If you are so unfortunate as to have to depend on artificial food, get the best and be sure that everything connected with it is sweet and pure and warm.

Don't imagine that every time it cries the baby must be hungry, but find out the cause and remove it, whatever it may be. Babies often cry for a simple drink of cold water, especially when teething; but don't, I beg of you, quiet it by giving it soothing syrups which all contain opium, nor Jamaica ginger, which contains twenty per cent more alcohol than the meanest saloon whisky. Don't give it whisky, brandy nor any alcoholic drinks whatsoever, for they only stupefy it. Many a little baby is "so good and quiet," simply because it is dead drunk. And do not be so insane as to drink beer, ale and such abominations for the sake of nursing your baby; the milk of a sober cow is far better for your child than that of a partially drunk mother, for he gets the alcohol you drink "second hand." Don't be everlastingly dosing your helpless little baby anyway, but keep it properly fed, quiet, warm and comfortable, and if it is "well-born" it will not need medicine.

Some babies are so unfortunate as to have inherited a taste for alcohol, which as long as it lies dormant, does not hurt them; but if aroused by the taste of it, will grow with the growth and strengthen with the strength until nothing but the grace of God can save them. This dormant craving for alcohol has been likened to a sleeping tiger—harmless as long as asleep, but when once aroused by the smell or taste of human blood nothing else will ever satisfy it.

A nursing mother should literally live in the fresh air, dress comfortably and take life as easy as possible. Don't, don't fret and worry. If you need help and can afford it have it by all means, but let it be in your kitchen and sewing room and not in your nursery, for a baby has a right to be cared for by its own mother if she is able to care for it. Did you ever wonder why God gave that precious baby to you instead of to some one else? It was because He wanted you to take care of it for Him, for the Christ said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

When I see some wonderful article on "The Foolishness of Rocking Babies," I generally find that it was written by an old bachelor, or if by a woman, I wonder if she could ever have been the proud possessor of a rosy, dimpled baby, an old low-cushioned rocking chair, a corner of her own, by an open fire, and if she could have known "Greenville." Did you ever notice that a mother with her last baby is more tender, gentle and patient than with her first? It is not because she is getting old and childish—but older and wiser, and for loving, unselfish, untiring devotion commend me to a grandmother.

Baby has a right to a well-ventilated, dark, quiet sleeping room at night, and a much disputed point is "Where shall baby sleep?" I am an old-fashioned woman who thinks that the best place for a little baby in cold weather is in bed with its mother, but of course as it grows older and stronger it is better off in a little bed close beside that of the mother, so that she can be sure that it is properly covered without getting out of her own bed.

It has also a right to a quiet, sweet sleeping place in the day time, and you will find that its sleep will be more restful if you gently turn it from one side to the other if it sleeps long.

Pasadena, Cal.

(To be continued.)

I WILL look straight out—
See things—not try to evade them.

GREATLY begin; though thou have time
But for a line, be that sublime.

—Lowell.

PROGRAM FOR NEAL DOW DAY, MARCH 20, 1894.

SINGING.—By the Legion, "A Good, Great Name." (Y Song Book, p. 14.)
(In sixth stanza change "Washington" to "Brave Neal Dow.")

SCRIPTURE READING.

Leader.—A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches;

Legion.—And loving favor rather than silver and gold.

Leader.—The hoary head is a crown of glory,

Legion.—If it be found in the way of righteousness.

Leader.—A wise man will hear, and will increase learning;

Legion.—And a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels.

Leader.—For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it.

Legion.—But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it.

Leader.—My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments.

Legion.—For length of days, and long life, and peace shall they add to thee.

Leader.—The path of the just is as a shining light;

Legion.—That shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

Leader.—Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall.

Legion.—But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint.

PRAYER.—SINGING.

READING.—A sketch of Neal Dow's life as given in Advance Guard or elsewhere—By a member of the Legion.

QUESTIONS.

Leader.—Name three things that impress you in this story of Neal Dow's life.

Legion.—His Purpose, his Pluck, his Perseverance.

Leader.—How has he shown the two latter qualities?

Legion.—By daring to fight the legalized saloon when he stood almost alone, and by keeping up the battle even down to old age.

Leader.—What lesson does his old age itself teach you?

Legion.—That total abstinence from alcohol and tobacco tend to long life.

Leader.—What of his wonderful physical vigor?

Legion.—It shows that hard work does not injure one if only he live in harmony with God's physical laws.

Leader.—What words of our own did he make his life motto, long before we were born?

Legion.—"SALOONS MUST GO."

Leader.—Was he content simply with the motto?

Legion.—No. He made the saloons Go, and so will we.

SONG.—"Saloons Must Go."—(Marching Songs No. 2, page 4.)

Reading of Neal Dow's letter, found on this page.

RECITATION—BRIEF ADDRESS.

SONG.—"Saloons Must Go."

(Air—Yankee Doodle.)

Boys.—"Saloons must go" we sing each day,
And "go" they do, indeed, sirs.
But when we voters are, each one,
They'll "go" the way we mean, sirs,
We'll drive them out, without a doubt,
We'll give no peace nor quarter
We'll break Old Alcohol's grim reign,
And bring in good King Water.

CHORUS.—Hip, hip, hurrah, saloons must go,
Three cheers for prohibition,
We'll clasp glad hands with brave Neal Dow,
And carry on his mission.

Girls.—"Saloons must go"—we sing it too
With all our hearts and voices,
But when? 's the question troubles us,
E'en while the song rejoices.
We don't believe that day will come
Nor yet believe our mothers
Till straight up to the ballot-box
We girls march with our brothers.

CHORUS.—

Both.—(Clasping hands.)

"Saloons must go"—yes, that they shall.
We'll drive them out together,
We'll stand fast in our union strong,
Which only death can sever;
Together we will work and pray,
Together cast our ballots;
We'll break the dram-shop's prison door
With prohibition mallets.

CHORUS.—

(Large boy steps to the front and waves American flag. All salute it and sing.)

Hip, hip, hurrah—saloons must go
We pledge our banner glorious,
It yet shall wave above a land
O'er alcohol victorious.

(Repeat first chorus.)

RECITATION—COLLECTION SPEECH.

SINGING by audience, "America."—Benediction.

—The Advance Guard.

A LETTER FROM GENERAL NEAL DOW.

To the Boys and Girls.

MY DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS:—I, who am about to die, salute you. Before I go I send to you a few words of warning and counsel. Some of you may not understand all of it now, but your parents and friends can tell you what it means. When you are older, and have seen more of the world, and know more of men than you now do, you will see that many of them made a failure in life for lack of listening to good advice, or refusing to accept it. The young are everywhere exposed to temptations to evil, to which they may fall victims without the help of persons older and wiser than themselves.

At every great seaport there are men called pilots; their business is to guide ships safely over the shallows and among the rocks which would be fatal to vessels not guided by those who have been a over the ground, and know where the dangers are hidden away under the water. These ships are safe when the pilots' hands are at the helm, but if guided by men without experience the danger of shipwreck would be imminent, if not certain.

Now, dear boys and girls, I advise you earnestly never to take intoxicating drink of any kind; it is always bad, never good. I cannot take up the time to tell you what my reasons are for saying this, and many of you are not yet old enough to understand what the reasons are if I were to explain them all to you. The pilot when he goes on board a great ship to guide her into port, turns her this way and that way and every way among the rocks and sand banks which nobody sees. The captain never questions him as to his reasons for doing this and that, trusting the safety of the ship entirely to the skill and fidelity of the pilot. Now I know the ground thoroughly over which you must pass to reach my age; I warn you and advise you as to the course you should take; for the present you must trust my word as the result of experience and long observation; you cannot understand all about it now.

In taking strong drink of whatever name there is great danger; it is bad for the health; it is dangerous to good morals, basest of bad tendencies; it is a bad example for others; no one in all the world was ever harmed by avoiding it; millions and millions of men and women and children have been ruined in health, in morals and character and life, because they did not avoid strong drink. Let all your influence be against this great evil, a greater danger to those who do not avoid it than any other.

You are old enough to know what it is to sign the pledge; if your parents are willing, I urge you strongly to do it, and make of it a solemn obligation never to use intoxicating drinks. No matter by whom the bad example may be; no matter who they are. I urge you to avoid them as dangerous; always bad and never good. And when you are old enough to understand and act, be sure that your vote shall never, under any pretense, tend in any way to uphold and perpetuate the drink traffic, through which all the danger comes.

And now, dear boys, a few words especially to you: Don't use tobacco in any way. Don't be drawn into it by the example of others; it is a very great evil; all its tendencies are bad; it dulls the moral sense always, of everybody who contracts the tobacco habits. It makes men selfish; regardless of the feelings, the comfort of others; it is injurious to the health. A great many men of character and high social position have the tobacco habit; but for that it would be considered by all decent people as a vile, disgusting, loathsome habit, fit only for ignorant savages through whom it made its way to the civilized world. My reasons for giving you this advice are many and cogent. I cannot take up the room for them here, and some of them you are not yet old enough to understand.

Dear boys and girls, my last words to you are:

Avoid strong drink of whatever name; your nature loathes tobacco, do not touch it; they are always bad, never good.

Neal Dow

Portland, Me.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Are you preparing to celebrate Gen. Neal Dow's birthday next Tuesday? If your Legion has not yet planned to do so, there is still time to arrange for the good program on this page which doesn't require much preparation. Show it to your leader. Even if you are not to have a public celebration just take this copy of THE UNION SIGNAL and read carefully General Dow's letter to the boys and girls.

Then, wouldn't it be a nice thing for each one of us in the big UNION SIGNAL temperance family to write our dear old friend a postal card or short letter of greeting, telling him how glad we are that he has lived so long and that his life has blessed so many? Wouldn't that help to make March 20 a happy day in that Cozy Corner in home-protected Maine? Let us send a shower of good wishes, and mail them next Saturday to Gen. Neal Dow, Portland, Me.

Your,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I am eight years old. I take The Young Crusader and read the Cozy Corner. LEAH BROWN.
Oklahoma City, O. T.

We have three churches in this town and three saloons. We are trying hard to dig them out.
Monon, Ind. FLORA TARPIE.

I like to go to the temperance meetings and to read the children's letters in the Cozy Corner.
Brookfield, Mo. BESSIE BETTELHEIM.

I go to school every day, and I have fifteen head marks.
Reedsburg, Ohio. CLARA C. STATLER.

I saw so many letters from little boys in the papers that I thought I would have to write, too. Will you accept me as a nephew? FRANK G. STATLER.
Reedsburg, O.

My papa is a Prohibitionist.
Thornberg, Neb. PHEBE B. JARMON.

Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I always look to see where the Cozy Corner is. GRACE MARSH.
Sumas, Wash.

I went to the World's Fair last fall. I was in the W. C. T. U. exhibit in the Woman's Building where the Willard Fountain and the busts of Miss Willard, Mrs. Carse and Mrs. Livermore were. Two walls of the exhibit were made of children's pledge cards. I sent ten cents to the Willard Fountain and signed a pledge card. I saw the Temperance Temple and was at a noon-day meeting in Willard Hall. AGNES E. VOLENTINE.
New Douglas, Ill.

I would like to have a seat in your Cozy Corner. We have now twenty-seven members in our L. T. L., besides one that used to be a member but thinks she is "too large."
Shutesbury, Mass. W. ALFRED READ.

I am a temperance boy twelve years old.
Corning, N. Y. WM. H. COYE.

My cousin, Bertie, and I mean to fight for temperance as long as we live. We do not have any liquor stores in our city, because the temperance people worked and prayed very hard and the school children wore no-license badges before election day. LILLIAN NORTON.
60 Hancock St., Everett, Mass.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

277.

My whole, composed of 7 letters, is the name of a person whose birthday is March 20.
1, 6, 7, the appointed time to accept Christ.
2, 3, 4, a meadow.
5, pronounced the same as a river in Scotland.

ELSIE.

278.

DECAPITATION.

In battle, Gen'ral Marcus Lane,
Was a whole and daring man,
But drink to men is e'er a bane,
And Lane, when full, just two'd and ran,
Like a person quite insane.

SOLON.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED FEBRUARY 22.

271. Neal Dow.
272. Prohibition.

Correct answers: Ethel Morris; Marion Stephanie Krom; Rosamond Clark.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIFT B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, "No Compromise." By A. A. Hopkins ... 2
Mrs. Jellaby and her Husband's Bottles. By Marshall Saunders ... 2
The National Ox—What Shall Be Done With It? By C. Hobart, D. D. ... 2
Memories of the White City. VI. By Elizabeth Cumings ... 3
Hillsboro Crusade Sketches. XXII. By Eliza J. Thompson ... 3
Economic Principles. I. By Eliza Stowe Twitchell ... 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Valuable Suggestions for Temperance Meetings ... 4
Editorial Correspondence ... 5
Our Washington Letter ... 5
Liquor in New Jersey ... 5
New Zeland Items ... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Lent ... 6
A True Picture in a Chicago Home. By Nico Bech-Meyer ... 6
Baby's Rights. II. By Mary C. Glass ... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Program for Neal Dow Day, March 20, 1894 ... 7
A Letter from General Neal Dow ... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts ... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Denial of Heredity in Inebriety ... 8
Popular Sentiment ... 9
Individual Responsibility in Public Matters ... 8
The Ninety-fourth Psalm ... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ... 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
New York—Nevada—Indiana—Rhode Island ... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ... 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Bands of Mercy—Scientific Temperance Instruction—Sunday-School Departments—Commencement Exercises at Temperance Hospital ... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ... 13
TREASURER'S CORNER ... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ... 14, 15
SIGNAL NOTES ... 16

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.—Ex. 34:7.

THE DENIAL OF HEREDITY IN INEBRIETY.

Recently some very extraordinary statements have been going the rounds of the press concerning the heredity of inebriety. As a rule mere assertions and denials of facts are unworthy of notice, unless supported by some evidence that has at least the appearance of truth. Any one can criticise and deny the facts which have been acknowledged as true, not because they were asserted by any one man, but as the conclusion of a large number of competent observers.

The boldness and presumption of any one who asserts that inebriety is not inherited, sounds like the shouts of a belated traveler who has lost his way and is bewildered and confused, or one who declares there is no light in the world because he cannot see.

To say there is no evidence that inebriety is inherited, and there is no such a thing as hereditary appetite for liquor, is to repeat Rev. Mr. Jasper's conclusions, "The sun he do move, the earth he do stand still." Fortunately we live in an age when statements of this kind are judged, not by the author, but on the evidence which is put forward to sustain them.

The heredity of inebriety was observed by Greek philosophers and physicians, and commented on in many works of medicine and philosophy. Roman laws and civilization embodied this fact in the statutes of the time, and from this period down, in almost every age and country, the heredity of drunkenness was mentioned. The medical testimony on this point, and the laws and edicts concerning it, would fill a volume.

In more recent times this fact has been studied from a statistical point, and every observer, including hundreds of physicians of hospitals, asylums, and institutions for the insane and inebriates, have all, with one consent, recognized the heredity of drunkenness. The evidence of this can be found in reports of asylums, volumes on insanity, inebriety, and brochures on heredity.

While there are wide differences of opinion as to the extent and nature of heredity, the fact itself is not doubted by any who have given the subject careful attention. It is not possible to understand how the degenerations and defects of one person are transmitted to the descendants, simply because the problem is so vast, and involves a knowledge of biology that is not yet attained. No one can say when and how the disease of inebriety and the drink craving is carried on to the next generation; or when it will appear, or how it may slumber along for one or two generations, then break out from the slightest exciting causes. But the facts of such cases are within the observation of every one.

Take the common, everyday statistics of the parentage of inebriates, and the fact appears that from thirty to eighty in every one hundred cases have inebriate parents or grandparents. These figures are the highest and lowest of different observers in this country and Europe. There is no fact in drunkenness upon which there is such a universal agreement. Many persons have divergent theories and methods of explanation. Some persons think it a very large factor in the causations, and others doubt this. Much in the same way many persons believe that alcohol is the sole and only cause of drunkenness, while in reality the use of alcohol is, in many cases, only a symptom, and the "signal flag of distress" pointing to a condition of degeneration going on in the brain centers.

The great difficulty in want of agreement is that the subject is far beyond any individual theory of its nature and causes. The dogmatism which asserts "that prohibition increases drunkenness, and that spirits and drugs given to children, as medicines or otherwise, cause more inebriety than the saloons," and that some more empirical remedy "is more effective in the eradication of the drink habit than a world of prohibitory effort," requires no answer. It describes the author and his knowledge of inebriety more clearly than can be done otherwise.

The question of heredity is open to every reader of this paper, and can be decided from facts within the observation of almost every one. Like every other fact in science it is open to correction and change. If any one has evidence that shows that there is "no such thing as a hereditary appetite for liquor," it will be welcomed and examined by an ever-increasing army of students of this subject. Its acceptance or rejection will be decided above the levels of theory and personal opinions.

It is a fact seen in all departments of scientific and sociological studies, that those who are most learned are the least dogmatic and assertive. Such persons state all conclusions with reserve, and, as the best knowledge of the present time. This is an unmistakable sign of probable correctness. While emphatic, authoritative statements, particularly on matters where exhaustive and exact studies are essential to even master the first principles of the subject, are open to grave suspicion of error and deception.

In the meantime our readers need not be disturbed with any extreme articles going through the press on heredity or any other allied topic. The real facts will be determined and stated in a different way by very different men. Facts that will not appeal to faith alone, but have some evidence sustained by our common experience and observation.

POPULAR SENTIMENT.

"The prohibitory law should be made to conform to popular sentiment or else the state should supply the means for enforcement and thus compel popular sentiment to conform to the law." So says Senator Carpenter, of Iowa—a Republican Prohibitionist and originator of the bill which bears his name. It would be well, under the circumstances, if the Iowa legislators who are struggling with the complications and distractions of republican prohibition would explain what they understand by "popular" sentiment. Admitting it to mean the sentiment of the people we would ask further, who, in their opinion, are the people of Iowa? It surely will not be claimed that the few who framed the Republican platform, nor even the many (conceding there are many) throughout the state who repudiate prohibition as a party measure, constitute the people.

Popular sentiment can only be represented by the voice of the entire adult population, male and female, and if that voice could be heard in the state of Iowa it would prove conclusively that the thirteenth plank of the Republican platform does not conform to popular sentiment. It would prove further that, party sentiment accurately measured, this plank does not even conform to popular sentiment inside the Republican party.

Senator Carpenter is personally a Prohibitionist, being opposed to license in any form, and he represents a prohibition constituency, yet he is ready to make certain concessions to the liquor interest in order to "fulfill the party pledges." Is this representing people or party? For there is not only a distinction but a wide difference between the two. We maintain that any legislator who thus places party before principle misrepresents the people, using the word "people" in its wider and truer sense. The rank and file of the Republican party in Iowa, though in their blindness they may hug their party chains, are, we believe, ready to stand firm against the encroachments of the rum power upon the constitution, and are opposed to any law providing "relief" for anti-prohibition districts—anti-prohibition only because through lack of voting power the popular sentiment in those districts is not effective.

The legislature of Iowa is endeavoring, so its members claim, to separate the question of prohibition entirely from partisan politics. In that case we do not see how any senator or representative, who truly desires to do the will of the people, can have any doubt as to his duty in the matter. If the men and women of Iowa—the whole people—without regard to party affiliation, were asked to determine the policy of the state concerning the liquor traffic they would declare overwhelmingly for "no compromise."

We believe with Senator Carpenter, that prohibitory law should conform to public sentiment, and we believe further, that the state should "supply the means for enforcement," by backing up popular sentiment with the ballot. If all the people of Iowa possessed that powerful weapon, we venture to say that the number of anti-prohibition districts would be considerably reduced, and the matter of enforcement made comparatively easy. The day that sees the ballot in the hands of all the people of this republic will also witness the deathblow of the rum power, and the successful party of the future, by whatever name called, will conform to popular sentiment by making the question of prohibition a "test of party fealty."

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY IN PUBLIC MATTERS.

The great difficulty in reform work is concisely stated in the ancient adage, "What is everybody's business is nobody's business." In other words, there is an almost total lack of realization of personal responsibility in regard to matters of public interest.

If we urge the passage of a prohibitory law we are informed by Christian men who really desire prohibition, that it is impossible to enforce such a law because public sentiment has not yet been educated up to the necessary standard. If we entreat these same men to demand of their respective political parties a declaration explicit and uncompromising against the liquor traffic, we are assured that it is folly to ask the party to take a stand which would insure its defeat and the consequent sacrifice of other paramount interests. In the meantime said individuals seem not at all to recognize their own responsibility in the matter of forming public opinion both within and without their respective parties.

The crying need of the times is for men to recognize the truth of Henry Ward Beecher's statement that every one is responsible for any national crime until he has done everything in his power to overthrow it. The individual voter is partially correct in thinking that he can do little to stem the tide of political evil; he is fatally wrong in concluding that therefore he is justified in doing nothing. If he found himself in a hopeless minority in a company bent on highway robbery, he would not therefore consider himself justified in accepting a stipulated share of the spoils, yet this is his precise attitude toward the liquor traffic. He might rightly feel it a duty to accompany a band of anarchists as a relief party for fellow creatures who were exposed to death on a wreck, but, if his companions insisted upon burning cities on their way, he would justly hold himself an accomplice in their crime if he continued with them even to accomplish the work of humanity which was their ultimate mission; so does he not with regard to his political party.

It is perhaps not to be wondered at that those who are "without God in the world" take such an attitude and disregard their own personal responsibility, but we confess it is utterly beyond our comprehension how one who has a real faith in a real God can thus ally himself with the powers of darkness. If we hold, not as a mere theory, but as an actual fact, to be acted upon as we act upon the law of gravitation, that God rules in the affairs of men and that "one with God" is an invincible majority, how can we for one moment doubt the ultimate triumph of our cause whatever are the forces against us? If we really believe that He will some day call us to account for "the deeds done in the body," how dare we compromise in the least with evil?

We have no quarrel with Christian men who unite their votes with those of liquor dealers to secure "tariff for revenue only" or a "protective tariff"; to secure the unlimited coinage or the demonetization of silver when these questions stand alone; but when linked to these measures is the legalization of the liquor curse, we can no more understand the presence of Christian voters in the company than we could their presence with the anarchists supposed above. To our mind their position is painfully analogous to that of Judas in Gethsemane.

"But," is urged, "if I should refuse to vote with my own party, I should only compass the success of the opposing party, which is equally allied with the liquor power, so where would be the gain? Of two evils I choose the least." There could not be a greater fallacy, nor one more devoid of Christian principle. The Christian who deliberately talks of "choosing between evils"—moral evils—needs to look to the foundations of his faith, and "do his first works over again." "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

The man who acknowledges the authority of that commandment has no alternative but to declare war to the death upon all evil, the "less" as well as the "greater." He may not always be able to conquer evil, but of two evils he must always choose neither. His business is to do right; it is God's business to take care of the consequences. If because a man refuses to give his consent to the murder of one individual the whole family is slaughtered, he is not, therefore, responsible for the greater crime. Neither is the man who refuses to give his sanction to one single door to hell responsible if a thousand are opened. But this seeming defeat can never be the final decision.

The weakness and cowardice of evil is shown by its eagerness to compromise whenever a determined attack is made upon it, and, alas, just here it has won its victories. Unconditional surrender is the only terms the Christian is authorized to offer to the hosts of sin, and, like the Israelites in the promised land, we have the assurance that if we relentlessly drive them out and destroy their idols we shall have full, undisputed possession of the land, but if we allow any to remain the remnant shall be "pricks in our eyes and thorns in our flesh."

"Whatever a free nation ought to do it can do" is a grand truth, but we shall practically realize it only when individuals realize their personal responsibility in political matters.

Nor does this apply alone to voters. It is not to be wondered at if sometimes we women turn with discouraged hearts from legislative halls, where our petitions have been rejected with the summary words, "You can't vote, ladies." Yet we, too, must remember that though we have not as yet all the weapons we could desire that does not justify us in refusing to use those we have. We, too, are responsible for the liquor traffic, "until we have done all in our power to destroy it."

THE NINETY-FOURTH PSALM.

Whoever wrote that marvelous heart-cry had surely gone down to the very depths of soul travail in the interest of righteousness. It begins with the agonized prayer of one who has looked out upon the contending forces of good and evil until his brain has reeled and who turns from the awful conflict to Him who can alone give victory.

"O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth. O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself.

"Lift up thyself, thou judge of the earth, render a reward to the proud.

"Lord, how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph? How long shall they utter and speak hard things and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves?"

A generalization of anguish! A cry that includes all earth and heaven in its own overmastering protest against the very existence of these things which had so wrung the heart and crazed the brain. But the speaker goes from that cry to a deeper and closer analysis. From evil in the abstract he comes to evil in the concrete. He sees that God has not forgotten; that underneath all this sea of iniquity there still flows the tide of the Divine purpose.

"He that teacheth man knowledge shall not he know?"

And then comes the comfort of the thought,

"The Lord will not cast off His people, neither will He forsake His inheritance."

But note, the Psalmist does not let this thought lead him to a life of righteous ease. The very fact that God will not cast off His people rouses in his heart the cry,

"Who will rise up for me against the evil doers, or who will stand for me against the workers of iniquity?"

God will do His part, there is no doubt about that, but God's part is dependent upon man's part. Even the Infinite One cannot make for Himself a way into the troubled sea of human wrong and misery, save as He makes it through human beings.

And then there comes that last question—most searching of all,

"Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee which frameth mischief by a law?"

This Psalm belongs as fully to the riper development of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as the Crusade Psalm belongs to its inception. It should be inscribed upon our banners, and written in living letters upon our hearts and lives.

We too, have been looking out upon the compressed misery, the utter abjectness of humanity, through the accursed liquor traffic, and its accompanying evils, until we have cried out our souls in the anguish of the wail, "Lord, how long shall the wicked triumph?"

But thank God, we have not stopped at this question, nor with the assurance that the Lord will not forsake His people. Two questions we are thundering into the ears of the world to-day; into the ears of the Christian church: "Who will rise up for me against the evil doers, or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?" "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee which frameth mischief by a law?"

Who will rise up? That is the answer to the question of "how long?" When enough men and women rise up against it the doom of the liquor traffic is sealed.

Rise up how? In the strength of the Lord of hosts and in the strength of their own common sense, which shall consent to put practical business methods into the Lord's work.

Oh, how our prayers and songs must mock the ears of God! We sing, "Rescue the perishing," and then we turn away in righteous indignation and holy disgust from the perishing ones in our very midst, waiting, longing to be "rescued." We pray "Thy kingdom come," and act as if we expected it to drop straight down from heaven without our once lifting a finger to bring it.

We "resolute" like strong men armed, we execute like the puniest of weaklings. William T. Stead never uttered a truer word than when he said we crown Jesus Christ Lord of all in very much the same way that the kings of England, for centuries, have been crowned kings of England and France.

We give Him the title, but what about the kingdom? Oh, that we are quite content to see wasted and despoiled. "Rise up," where? Where evil is. We rise up valiantly where it is not. If even a small proportion of those who are on their feet in the prayer-meeting would maintain an equally perpendicular attitude on the street, at their business, in their homes, in the ward meetings, at the polls, we should soon sing the doxology over the Kingdom of God, set up on earth. Somehow the average Christian is mightily like a Jack in the Box. The lid is lifted and out he pops in bravest attitude when the church is on dress parade, but, oh, how closely he cowers down when it comes to the place where there is real fighting. "Rise up!"

It is God's call. Assume the perpendicular. Make good your claim to belong to the class of moral vertebrates, and see what God and the human heart, brain and hand can do for humanity. "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?"

Shall it, business man? Shall it, politician? Shall it, Christian minister and Christian layman? Shall it, Christian woman sitting at ease? You say no—by word—but what do you say by deed?

Let the legalized liquor traffic answer, and in that lurid answer receive the reply to your first pious ejaculation, "Lord, how long shall the wicked triumph?" Just so long as the Christian manhood of this country is content to sit supinely by and watch its triumph. Just so long as we trust God to do for us what He has called us to do for Him.

"How long, oh, Lord, how long!"

AMERICAN homes are suffering as much for the need of the active presence of the husband and father as American politics are suffering for the presence of the wife and mother. While the mother must from the necessities of the case bear the greater burden of the children, the father has a legitimate share of that burden which too generally he shirks. Many men from business necessity are unable to bear a large share of this, but many more could, if they would. Where it is possible, it is the duty of the father to assist in the care of the children. And it is infinitely better for all concerned, father, mother and children, that he perform his duty in this particular. It is for the best interests of mother and children that for at least an hour a day the mother should be relieved of the care of her children, and have perfect freedom to recruit her worn nerves and wearied mind by an entirely different kind of work; it is equally for the interest of father and children that they spend this much time in one another's company. In more instances than some believe a husband needs only to know his wife's needs and desires and to have his own duty in the matter suggested to give heartily his help and coöperation. He lacks neither justice nor kindliness of purpose, but simply "arrest of thought." We know of cases in which the husband has been the prime agent in urging his wife into a broader life, and of many more where the demands of this age having called the wife to a participation in outside work, the husband has been her inspiration and encouragement to respond to the calls.

It is a curious fact that few critics among men seem capable of doing justice to women. There is a controversy now going on as to who are the chief English poets of the time, and suggestions are made concerning Mr. Lewis Morris, Mr. Alfred Austin, and other comparatively recent names, while we have looked in vain for that of Christiana Rosetti, Jean Ingelow, or the two ladies whose non de plume is Michael Field. It should be perfectly well known to our friends, the critics, that these women have produced literary work that certainly should entitle them to rank with any English poets now living. We wish some student of psychology would unravel the mystery of this power in keen and brilliant minds to squint habitually at the human race, seeing but half of it.

***

A Chicago paper states that 2,685 English sparrows were killed by seventy-two bounty hunters in a certain town, the largest number captured by any one person, being one hundred and sixty-two. These were taken by a little girl, the hapless innocents having made themselves drunk by feeding on refuse from the brewery of the child's father. Think of the curse on the land when God's creatures cannot feed with safety! No wonder is it that godly men and women await with patient eagerness the day when "Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited," "and there shall be no more curse."

***

The white ribbon does a missionary work of its own often when it is least expected. A W. C. T. U. woman who is ever scrupulous to wear her tiny badge, gave away a winter garment to a friend who needed it. Attached to the button was a knot of white ribbon. "I will leave it on," she said, "you ought to belong to the white ribbon army yourself." But the recipient of the cloak tossed her head saying, "Guess I can get along without that yet a while." She wore the cloak soon after neglecting to detach the ribbon. One evening a young girl stopped her on the street to inquire her way. "That is not a very good neighborhood," answered the older woman, "I will walk over with you, if you'll trust me." "I'd trust a white ribbon anywhere," answered the girl quickly, pointing to the forgotten bow. Her companion, for obvious reasons, made no reply. Before many days she will wear it as one of the sisterhood banded against all wrong and unworthiness.

***

Among the many interesting reminiscences of Lincoln brought out at the celebration of the last anniversary of his birthday the following is of special interest to temperance workers. Captain Fitch narrates that soon after the Lincoln-Douglas campaign, in 1859, Mr. Lincoln was invited to Kansas where he delivered a speech at Leavenworth. In the evening a reception was given in his honor. Wine was, of course, included in the refreshments, but while almost, if not quite, every one else partook of it, Mr. Lincoln did not touch it. The next morning at his departure Mr. Lincoln bade each one of his friends goodbye, and when he came to Captain Fitch, then a young man of twenty-two, he took the young man's hand in both his, and looking down into his eyes with a sad, kindly look said, "My young friend, do not put an enemy in your mouth to steal away your brains."

***

"You just keep up a big hush," said one friend to another; "yes, I know it hurts, and I know better than you can ever tell me that they were unjust and unkind to you, but take my advice—keep up a big hush." I never heard the sequel, but the advice if followed, could but result in a true victory. It is so easy to "answer back," so easy "in justice to one's self" to defend one's position and parry the cruel thrusts, the stinging taunts, the pitiless onslaughts of an unkind tongue. "When trouble is brewing," said Dr. Burton in a lecture before some young ministers, "keep still. When your feelings are hurt, keep still; till you recover from your excitement, at any rate. Things look differently through an unagitated eye. . . . Silence is the most massive thing conceivable, sometimes. It is strength in its very grandeur. It is like a regiment ordered to stand still in the mad fury of battle. To plunge in were twice as easy. The tongue has unsettled more ministers than small salaries ever did, or lack of ability." "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles." And there was One who "was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth."

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

"A time like this demands
Great hearts, strong minds, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lusts of office cannot kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who possess convictions and a will,
Men who have honor—men who will not lie."

Several counties continue the publication of monthly papers, which are used as a means of communication among the local unions, and in which are reports of conventions and of work done throughout the county. The Illuminator, published in Schenectady county, and Convention Echoes, the official organ of Suffolk county, have been sent me, containing not only reports, but many helpful things beside, including the annual address of the presidents and a brief outlook over the field.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Delaware county reports its semi-annual convention, held at East Branch, as one of the best ever held. The report of the corresponding secretary was most encouraging, showing an increase in membership and along all lines of department work.

The first evening meeting opened with a prayer and praise service, followed by the welcome and response, a short talk on woman's enfranchisement by Mrs. Hilsinger, and an address by Hon. Irving Holcomb. On the second evening Rev. Mr. Leech read a most excellent paper on heredity, and Rev. L. F. Piper gave a fine temperance address. Mrs. Luddington followed with a talk on relief work, and the choir rendered excellent service. A greeting was sent to their absent president, Mrs. Lockwood.

Oswego county celebrated its sixteenth birthday at Pulaski. Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, state recording secretary, opened the meeting with a Bible reading of great tenderness and sweetness. The address of the president, Mrs. Maltby, was full of happy thoughts and useful suggestions. She urged the appointment of a county organizer, and a more general subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and Woman's Temperance Work. This county received a banner from the National for securing the greatest number of signatures to the autograph pledge cards. Reports from the different unions showed much faithful work done. The president of Sandy Creek union was asked to give a paper on "The Discouragements of a Local President." Her reply ought to be the watchword of every president: "I see no discouragements in the work, and cannot speak from that standpoint."

In the evening Harriet May Mills gave an address on "The Ideal State and Woman's Place In It." The department superintendents all had good suggestions and plans for the accomplishment of future work, and we may expect a steady growth in this county.

King's county held a quarterly meeting in the First Free Baptist church of Brooklyn. Rev. Dr. Lord, the pastor, in extending a cordial welcome, spoke of the uncompromising attitude maintained by his denomination against liquor and tobacco.

Mrs. Annable, superintendent of "Rescue Work for Girls," made an earnest plea for helpers in her noble work, and Mrs. Martin, National superintendent of purity in literature and art, spoke of the grand work accomplished by her department during the past year.

A white ribbon sociable was held at the home of Mrs. Lucy Van Deventer, the second held in the county. Good music and recitations helped to please all present, and a report of the National and World's conventions was given by Mrs. Pritchard.

Jefferson county annual convention was held at Black River. Excellent reports of work were given, with earnest exhortations for increased diligence. The address of the evening was given by Mrs. D. L. R. Libby, of Watertown, and received marked attention. An excellent paper on suffrage was read by Mrs. Leffingwell.

Mrs. Ella Gurney was reëlected president, and Mrs. Devendorf, corresponding secretary. Mrs. Gurney with her husband is about to start out in the temperance field for active work and while they will be greatly missed from their accustomed places, yet they go with the "Godspeed" of all their fellow workers, who heartily recommend them to all who desire such workers.

One of the most delightful and interesting conventions ever held by the Albany county W. C. T. U. was held in the beautiful village of South Bethlehem. The attendance during both days was large, especially in the evening, when the church was crowded to its utmost capacity.

Tioga county's annual convention was held at Newark Valley and was a most interesting and profitable occasion. Every local union was well represented and every line of department work reported "gain." Systematic giving is a "hobby" in this county and was thoroughly explained by Mrs. Hutchinson, who urged all unions to take it up.

Dr. Anna H. Shaw was present and gave her wonderful address on "The Fate of Republics," and my report says "many sinners were converted to equal suffrage." Mrs. Hutchinson was elected county president in place of Mrs. Howland who refused a reëlection.

Sullivan county convention was held at Narrowsburg and was a grand success.

The address of the president was most interesting and full of helpful suggestions. Mrs. Boole was present on the second evening and gave a most telling address, beside conducting a parliamentary drill. The children occupied the first evening and performed their parts splendidly. Excellent reports were given and much good work has been done.

The semi-annual convention of Allegany county, was held at Richburg, and although the day was dark and stormy, the women manifested their interest by traveling many miles in carriages to be present at the opening session. Mrs. Weaver was present, and by frequent talks helped to give zest and profit to the occasion. She also had charge of the question box.

Several interesting papers were read, and a tribute was paid to the memory of Lucy Stone. The notes from local unions and remarks by superintendents were full of interest, and if the suggestions about plans of work are heeded, interest ought to increase.

New York county held an enjoyable meeting at Eighteenth Street M. E. church, New York City, Mrs. E. Frances Lord presiding. Many interesting accounts were given by the superintendents of the work in their departments. Mrs. E. B. Grannis, county superintendent of social purity, spoke of the home for unemployed women and girls, which it is hoped soon will be established in New York.

Dr. Wilson, the pastor of the church, emphasized the fact that provision should be made to care for girls out of positions, and thus save them from ruin. It is a lamentable fact that while there are several homes for fallen women in New York there is but one place where a respectable, pure woman or girl can find shelter if she be without employment and money, and but thirty can be accommodated at this place. Dr. Wilson invited the county W. C. T. U. to take charge of his usual monthly temperance meeting, and they gladly accepted, several workers taking part in the meeting.

The many friends of Mrs. Ella C. Viele will regret to learn that a change in her husband's business has necessitated their removal from Brooklyn to Warren, Pa. Mrs. Viele has for several years been actively engaged in W. C. T. U. work in this state. She was president of Cortland county for some time, and after that, for over two years, held the position of editor and publisher of Woman's Temperance Work and office secretary at headquarters. She was also a faithful and efficient worker in local and county work in Brooklyn.

CHIPS.

Gloversville Y is giving a series of entertainments during the winter.

Spencerport Y has also arranged a lecture course for the winter, and the best of talent has been secured.

The Y's of Kings county held a very enjoyable parlor entertainment at the home of Mrs. C. Pritchard. Miss Ida Clothier was present.

Mission churches of all kinds are gradually taking up juvenile temperance work on their own account, and much really good work is done in this way.

Crusade Day was observed with special exercises by the unions at Summit Station, Elmira, Millport, Middletown, Lockport and the Mary Hartt union, of Brooklyn.

Oneida county has given up its midwinter convention, but is active and pushing department work. Rome has headquarters and holds Sunday evangelistic services.

Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, National evangelist, spent a Sunday at Verona, giving two addresses to large audiences. On Crusade Day an "original Crusader" was present and gave an address.

Monroe county is rejoicing in the hope that Miss Willard will be with them in June, at which time she will visit her birthplace, Churchville, and attend the convention of Monroe county W. C. T. U.

Gaines union, in Orleans county, held a reception at the home of Mrs. Mary Lattin. Over eighty were present, and a carefully prepared program, which took the form of a Crusade celebration, was carried out.

A most delightful parlor banquet was given by the Hornellsville W. C. T. U. at the home of Mrs. J. B. Woodbury. Several toasts were responded to in a charming manner, The whole affair being in charge of Mrs. C. H. Mead.

Mrs. Bullock, of Elmira, gave a talk to ladies only in the First Presbyterian church of Binghamton, in behalf of the anchorage and rescue work, and also addressed a large audience in the evening. The county president, Mrs. Bristol, writes most hopefully of this work.

Miss Colman sends me a few notes from New York county in which she says: "I am sorry to announce that Mrs. Grubb's missionary work at Ellis Island has been given up through failure of National appropriation. As the sale of beer has recently been introduced there the calamity seems greater."

A white-ribbon tea at the home of the president of Vestal Center union is reported as having been especially pleasant. A Loyal Temperance Legion has been organized among the children of the colored church in Binghamton. Meetings are held in the basement, and the children are very enthusiastic.

Lockport union has a course of three lectures and two concerts, all by home talent. The management of the course was placed in the hands of Mrs. Graham. Two entertainments have already been held, and success is assured, financially and otherwise. All who take part in the course have donated their services.

At our state convention, acting upon the recommendation of our president, a new department was created, called "Rescue work for Girls." This department was placed in charge of Mrs. Mary J. Annable, whose heart is deeply touched by the need of such work, and who is proving herself "the right woman in the right place."

Broome county is deeply interested in rescue work for girls. Through the efforts of Mrs. M. A. McIntosh, who seems especially adapted to this work, it promises good results. She has power to reach the hearts of the fallen and outcast, and her influence with them is something wonderful. She is heartily recommended by them to any desiring help in rescue work.

The W. C. T. U. of Middletown celebrated Crusade Day with appropriate exercises. Mrs. Nichols, of Ohio, and Judge Groo, of Middletown, addressed the meeting, and after the speeches Mrs. Clark, treasurer of the local union, presented the union with a large, handsomely framed portrait of the president, Mrs. Mary F. Groo, to be hung on the wall of the headquarters. It was a complete surprise to Mrs. Groo.

I would urge upon all the necessity for steady work with the petitions to the constitutional convention. Keep "everlastingly at it" from now until April. Introduce them in every public meeting, make a house to house canvass and in every way possible secure helps toward a victorious end. Then let us pray that the constitutional convention may be composed of men. God give us men.

The Episcopal Church Congress which met in New York City, held a discussion in Chickering Hall on "What should be done with the saloon." Dr. Rainsford presented his views, entirely disclaiming the idea that he had ever advocated the plan of having the church undertake control of sales, but of the four other writers and speakers, none fell in with his plans. The hall was crowded and the interest marked.

Very many unions all over the state celebrated Crusade Day; reports of some of these gatherings have been sent direct to THE UNION SIGNAL, but the large majority of them will not be reported at all. Lockport union made an extra effort to get every member out, special invitations being sent by mail. The result was a large gathering and some new members. Chocolate and wafers were served at the close.

New York state white-ribboners are rejoiced to learn that a legacy has just been received by the state treasurer for our organization, amounting to a little more than two thousand dollars. This was left us by the will of Mrs. H. S. Hotaling, of New York City, who, while not a member of our organization, was for two years previous to her death a subscriber to Woman's Temperance Work, our state organ, and through it was moved to remember us in her will.

Our state superintendent of L. T. L. can also testify to the interest awakened by our state paper. A young lady in Rochester after reading her column containing a report of her department, sent her ten dollars to help carry it on, saying she considered it the most important line of work. We may be doing more than we realize for the work, when we place the paper in the hands of those not accustomed to taking it. Oswego county has sent in one hundred and eight names since October. Ulster comes next with seventy-one.

Occasionally we get a little poetry mixed in with the prose in our white ribbon work, and this time Niagara county claims the poetry, which consisted of a white ribbon wedding—Miss Rose Parks, a Y president (and a "rosebud," too) was married to a prominent Christian Prohibitionist of decided ability. The floral decorations were interwoven with white ribbon, and the bride carried rosebuds—the Y emblem. Another Y president made delightful music during the ceremony, and taken as a whole it was one of the prettiest weddings ever witnessed.

The severe illness of our beloved state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, has caused us many anxious thoughts and when for a few days we waited anxiously for the word which should bring to us so much—either of joy or sorrow—we could but pray that if it be God's will her precious life be spared, and He who doeth all things well, heard the prayers, and gave her back to us even from the brink of the dark river. She is not yet able to take up active work, but is planning for it.

The work which is upon us now and which demands our best attention is the campaign for the constitutional convention which will be held at Albany in May next. As usual the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was early in the field with plan of campaign and petitions for the full enfranchisement of women, and the prohibition of the liquor traffic. It is needless to say that our workers responded to the call for this. We hope for much from this constitutional convention campaign, and while praying always in faith for the ballot for woman and the overthrow of the saloon, we add to our faith, works.

Oswego county arranged with Mrs. Mary Forbes Robinson to give addresses or hold parlor meetings with the unions, her topic being heredity. She visited seven unions, holding public meetings in three of these places, and parlor meetings in the others. Many unions observed Crusade Day, Pulaski holding a public meeting on Sunday evening, the address being given by Mrs. A. A. Maltby, their former county president. This union has but ten members, yet they send in nine subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL. We wish that more of our unions realized the fact that better work can be done by a "reading" union, even though small in numbers, than by a union where only a few papers are taken. These helps are at our doors, and the cost is so little that almost every woman can afford both THE UNION SIGNAL and Woman's Temperance Work.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

NEVADA.

THE SNOW CLAD STATE.

It has been a long time since anything from the state of the sagebrush has been reported in our UNION SIGNAL.

The temperance cause in Nevada looks brighter than a year ago. The blessed influence of God's holy spirit seems to have permeated the hearts of God's people, and many souls have been born again, and while grace abounds sin much more abounds. Yet we praise the Lord for what has been done.

Owing to the low price of silver, our mines are closed, and very many men are out of employment, and times are hard, yet nothing to the destitution in California and some of the Eastern states, for which we are sincerely grateful.

There have been no temperance lecturers in Nevada for the W. C. T. U. in the past year, and some of the unions are losing interest in consequence, yet owing to the low state of finances, there is not much inducement at this time for one to enter our state.

Our convention was held in Gold Hill. The fact was demonstrated that numbers do not go to make a success of any undertaking. "If God be for us who can be against us?" The meeting was a success in every way. The same officers were all reëlected, with our beloved past president, Lucy Van Deventer, state organizer and lecturer.

Many plans were discussed for the success of our W. C. T. U. work, more especially children's departments and social purity. From this department we do and must expect much. There have been many plans formed and some work done in this department. A large quantity of social purity literature has been distributed all over the state. Much time has been devoted to visiting the fallen, carrying the gospel as well as the necessaries of life. In nearly every instance a desire for a better life has been expressed, but for the want of the proper institutions there is no door open where a poor sinsick soul can hide herself until the moral life is made strong to battle with temptation. Two children have been taken from a home of vice and sent to a Catholic home. God bless any institutions that will open their doors to innocent children and shelter them from the contaminating influence of life in such places.

We are praying for the day when our state will have better laws and enforced laws. Nevada stands nearly alone in licensed saloons and gambling houses, houses of vice in public places to demoralize and degrade the young with its inmates plying their vocation on the principal streets day and night.

The only institutions Nevada has at present are, state prison where the most vicious are incarcerated, and the less vicious let go for the want of a proper home for them; an insane asylum and an orphans' home, very much crowded. The Catholic sisters have a school. We very much need a reform school and house of refuge for fallen women. We have hundreds of Indian children, some of them half white, running wild. There is a school in Carson, but the mothers are averse to sending the little ones away from them.

The women and men congregate between buildings in the sun, and gamble all day. I saw while standing in front of a church waiting for a funeral to move, four Indian men sitting on the ground gambling until the carriages began to move, then they gathered up the cards to find another place. Such are some of the vices of Nevada, and the picture is not overdrawn. The cause of this dreadful state of affairs is whisky. Nevada is a whisky-cursed state. Pray for us.

MRS. L. M. WESTLAKE,
State Reporter, Reno.

INDIANA.

OPEN DOORS.

Huxley says, "The sense of uselessness is the greatest shock the human system can sustain, and if persistently sustained, results in atrophy of functions."

The white-ribbon workers certainly do not experience this shock, for they are persistent workers. If they cannot carry out their plans they have learned to look upon the disappointment as being the will of God, and watch for an open door through which they eagerly enter to do the Master's work.

A call from New York took one of our principal lecturers, our state vice-president, Mrs. Calkins, from our state, to assist in their suffrage movement.

Severe illness in her family caused Mrs. Denny to recall her lecture engagements, but we learn of temperance brethren coming to our state whose timely visits are appreciated. Captain Van Netten, of Dakota, in Valparaiso, Mr. Benson in Monon, and John G. Woolley in Indianapolis and other places. Although Mr. Woolley is under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E., yet in some localities the W. C. T. U. is asked to unite with them in their effort to get him. A door through which they enter to assist in doing good.

The charity work in some localities seems too gigantic for the local W. C. T. U., so they unite with other organizations for the quick relief of the needy.

In Evansville the white-ribboners unite with the city relief in procuring plain sewing for needy women. One of the rooms in W. C. T. U. headquarters is used as the working room, and many of our members assist in superintending the work. The superintendent of the noon hour frequently teaches the workers the most palatable and nutritious way of preparing some simple food. Again, W. C. T. U. leaflets to mothers, are read to them. On another day a part of the hour is devoted to Scriptural reading and prayer. At another time one of our lady physicians will give a short talk to the women. The needy women are thus taught, and assisted to help themselves, and at the same time we hope to give them spiritual aid. In this work, Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants are enthusiastically united.

One of our lecturers, Mother Trish, seems constantly and successfully at work. Many unions write of an increase of membership, one a gain of nineteen, through the effect of her lectures, and all are awakened and quickened.

Greensburg has an increase during the last month of twenty-two members. Seven new unions have been organized in our state during this quarter.

The Gospel Mission and Rescue Home, established last October by the Meridian union in Indianapolis, have been blessings. About one hundred and fifty have professed conversion since the mission was established.

The department of systematic giving is being pressed forward. Local superintendents are circulating literature among the congregations of the various churches, awakening the interest of the ministers who are using their influence from the pulpit to induce their members to practice systematic giving.

Thus the good work goes on and the workers are enrolled.

N. C. MEADOWS,
State Reporter, Evansville.

RHODE ISLAND.

"Make life a ministry of love, and it will always be worth living."

To how many W. C. T. U. workers this thought has become a vitalized truth, as with "diversities of gifts" our spirit animates them all to work for the betterment of humanity in the name of the Master.

The Providence Y's, realizing the responsibility and privilege of these gifts so richly bestowed upon them, are always awake to new enterprises. Their latest is best described by a few extracts from the report of Miss Edna B. Hale, one of their most active members:

The Providence Y has had it in mind for some time to follow the example of the Boston W. C. T. U. in giving a reception to the teachers of the city, in order that through the hearing of addresses by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and others, they might thereby be more interested in giving scientific temperance instruction to their pupils. The place chosen for the occasion, the most elegant and commodious in the city, was the Trocadero, and the order of exercises was as follows: From 7:30 to 8:15 there was a general reception, when a continuous stream of guests were escorted by the ushers and introduced to the speakers of the evening. By 8:15 the large company of ladies were up stairs and were comfortably seated, ready to listen to the speakers. Miss Pearce spoke a few words of welcome, explaining the reason of the gathering, and introduced the Rev. Anna Garlin Spencer, who, in the course of her remarks, showed that the drink habit is a physical as well as moral disease, and that an effectual method of guarding against its contraction is by teaching children.

Dr. Plumb's address aroused the audience to a sense of the need of this scientific temperance instruction in the schools, and when Mrs. Hunt arose to speak all were looking for an answer to the question, "How is it to be accomplished?" This she proceeded to answer so fully that every teacher present must have felt a thrill of desire to give in the future, if she had not in the past, all possible prominence to this study.

Mr. Tarbell, superintendent of public schools, encouraged the teachers not to hesitate to give the same temperance instruction to children whose parents smoked and drank as to others, on the ground that although some parents lie and steal and swear yet the children are taught in school not to do these things.

At the conclusion of his remarks all were invited to adjourn to the dining-room, and here the guests were served generously with ices, coffee, cake and lemonade. The beautifully decorated tables were presided over by Providence Y's, assisted by the honorary members who had previously done duty as ushers. From beginning to end the reception was a complete success, socially as well as in the deeper purpose of its plan.

The Westerly union has also done good work in this line and now they and other unions send copies of the Scientific Temperance Monthly Advices to each teacher in town.

The Providence union has opened a reading room for boys. It is open each evening and is furnished with books, illustrated papers, drawing materials, puzzles, games, jackstraws, etc. A few minutes practical talk given at the close of the evening is, perhaps, the only moral training that some of these waifs will receive ere they enter upon the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

The Newport Y's are striving to keep their light so clear and bright that many shall be led from the darkness of sin to behold Him who is the light and hope of the world. Meetings are held four evenings a week at the Beacon, one in charge of the Y, one, the W. C. T. U. and two in charge of W. S. Kimber. The spirit of God is manifest in these meetings and several have been brought to Christ. One man who has often attended the services so intoxicated as to annoy others, gave himself to the Lord and on a recent evening arose and said he was a saved man. They have also held a reception for those who attend the Beacon services. Many came and were cordially welcomed by members of the union. Readings, music, social conversation and refreshments made it a pleasant and successful occasion. A little later an entertainment was given to the children of the families who attend. Mr. N. S. Greet gave a chalk talk after which ice cream and cake were served, and as each child passed out a box of candy was given.

Providence county held a convention at Ashton at which fourteen unions were represented. Morning and afternoon were filled with bright, earnest speeches by our workers, closing with a pleasant exercise by the children. In the evening Mr. James A. Williams, chairman of the state prohibition central committee, gave an able and interesting address.

The state prohibition convention was held in Providence on February 22. Blackstone Hall was tastefully decorated by Miss A. E. Parker with national colors and shields bearing the names of the different towns. A larger number of delegates assembled than ever before, and three new towns were represented. A spirit of harmony and enthusiasm prevailed. The women delegates were received without question, the resolution for woman's suffrage was carried with applause, and Miss E. P. Nichols, our state corresponding secretary, was made a member of the state central committee. Mr. H. B. Metcalf, the nominee for governor, paid a fine tribute to the W. C. T. U. for their efforts in the campaign of 1886, and said if the party would gain success in the future it must rely on their efforts and coöperation. Notwithstanding the hard times, more money has been raised than ever before, and plans are in progress for a vigorous campaign.

Much interest is manifested in the hearing before the state legislature on a bill for the appointment of two factory inspectors, a man and a woman. Among the prominent speakers are members of the woman's council including the president of our W. C. T. U.

Petitions for woman's suffrage are rolling in and the governor in his annual message called attention to the same.

Mr. Moody and his assistants have been doing a grand work in Providence and its vicinity, in which our white-ribboners have been actively interested. It has given a new impetus to the work of the evangelistic department in nearly every union of our state, and a series of meetings have been held in many places resulting in renewed consecration of the workers and many made glad in the Lord.

So in the midst of much want and suffering and in sin the Gospel brings its message of cheer. The Canaanites are indeed all about us, but God is above us and we, like faithful Abraham, can trust Him to bring good out of seeming evil. May we like him, wherever we shall sojourn, raise an altar to the living God and leave a thought of Him in every life that touches ours. So shall His kingdom come and His will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

MIRIAM EARLE,
State Reporter, Valley Falls.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MOTHERS' meetings are a feature of the work of South Williamsport, Pa., union which numbers twenty paying members.

A LARGELY attended and very interesting Crusade anniversary was that of Oakland W. C. T. U., Taunton, Mass., not long ago.

A GOOD work has been done by Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Michigan, in the eleventh district of Iowa, where she has labored faithfully for three months, speaking one hundred times, adding many new members to the unions.

ONE-HALF of all the money sent by THE UNION SIGNAL subscribers to Mrs. Anna McPherson Edworthy for her musical charts, which contain eight pages for $1.50, will be donated to the Temple. Address 1315 Capitol Ave., Des Moines, Iowa.

A DEMOREST gold medal contest was held at Upper Alton, Ill., last month, under the auspices of the Shurtleff college prohibition club. About four hundred people were present, making one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the chapel. In addition to the recitations by the six students engaged in the contest, excellent music was rendered to the delight of all. The gold medal was won by Miss Tamar Scott, of Payson, Ill.

CRUSADE DAY was observed by Danville, Ill., W. C. T. U. with an overflowing feast of good things. An earnest consecration service, led by Mrs. Kuhl, was followed by helpful words from city pastors. The "Personal Experience," of Mrs. Dr. Barnes, as a Crusader in Lafayette, Ind., was of intense and touching interest. An excellent address by Mrs. Kuhl was followed by an appeal for juvenile work from Miss Wintringer. Eight active and two honorary members have been enrolled.

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of

BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON

Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.

E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.

Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

HELPS IN ECONOMY.

Stylish Gowns of Handsome Color at Small Cost—Diamond Dyes Make Old Clothes Look Like New—Two Useful Books Given Away.

With a few packages of Diamond Dyes wonders can be done in making old dresses, gowns and suits look like new. Many families have not bought a single new dress, wrap, or suit this winter, yet they dressed well and fashionably, by dyeing their clothes with Diamond Dyes.

Those who buy one package as an experiment, find the dyes so easy to use that they color over gowns, cloaks and suits for the whole family. The Fast Black Diamond Dyes are especially popular, being easy to use and making a rich black that will not fade crock, or wash out.

COUPON.

This entitles any reader of THE UNION SIGNAL to one copy of "Successful Home Dyeing," and "Mats and Rugs; Art and Fancy Work."

For the home-dyer or rug-maker these books give complete directions with many illustrations. Send above coupon to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., and both books will be mailed free.

Worth a Guinea a Box.

A trifling dose from a 25-cent box of

Beecham's Pills

(Tasteless)

will frequently prove as effective as a doctor's prescription. 10

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,
80-82 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK

Corner Dearborn and Jackson Sts., CHICAGO, ILL.

UNDER STATE CONTROL.

INDIVIDUAL AND SAVINGS ACCOUNTS SOLICITED.

SAFETY ▲ DEPOSIT ▲ VAULTS.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,

But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.
H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

BAKER'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used

LEBANON, Tenn., is an 1894 union organized by Mrs. Harriet N. Adams.

MRS. PRISCILLA VAN HORN, an old Crusader and earnest reformer, has just passed away at her home near Pittsburg, Pa., aged eighty-six years.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., celebrated the Crusade anniversary with appropriate readings from THE UNION SIGNAL and a paper entitled, "The Influence of Women in the Nineteenth Century."

THE program arranged for Crusade Day observance was also carried out by the East Liverpool, O., union, who were blessed by the presence of some original Crusaders among whom was Mrs. J. C. Taggart, who led a band twenty years ago.

AN inspiring meeting for the sorely tried, often discouraged temperance forces in Birmingham, Ala., was that on a recent Sunday evening, when in response to a request from the local W. C. T. U., who attended in a body, Rev. Hugh Walker delivered a telling discourse and the large audience displayed deep interest by its attention.

THE evangelist, Dr. N. W. Tracy, and his assistant, Prof. Graham, with stereopticon illustrations, delivered a series of temperance lectures under the auspices of the Davenport, Ia., W. C. T. U., this winter which have awakened wonderful interest. All the temperance forces are enthused for more aggressive work and forty names are added to the union.

SOUTH Side W. C. T. U., of Oil City culled its program for Crusade Day from the one published in THE UNION SIGNAL and intended to occupy two hours time divided among three leaders. At the close ten membership dues were paid in, one new member was received and nine ladies paid free-will offerings. One hundred copies of the Crusade UNION SIGNAL were on hand for distribution.

THE Fostoria, Ohio, Y. W. C. T. U., organized last September, with ten charter members, now numbers over eighty, seventeen being honorary members. One reception has been held and one dime social, both of which proved decidedly successful. The society has furnished a pleasant room adjoining the public library, and is now uniting its efforts with those of the library association in keeping open a free reading room.

MAYOR WEIR, of Lincoln, Neb., in his social purity crusade receives the endorsement of Christian workers everywhere. Burr Oak, Kan., W. C. T. U. by appropriate resolutions, has expressed its sympathy in his efforts and his sentiment: "I will under no circumstances concur in the custom of fining women alone, believing that all prostitutes, male and female, should be dealt with exactly alike," and called upon other mayors to follow his example.

W. C. T. U. leaders in Wichita, Kan., had long been impressed with the thought of a Crusade in their city which became a realization on Crusade Day, when an old time movement was made as reported in these columns. After a season of prayer and consecration they felt impelled to go forth to make personal appeals to those (with their temperance eyes open) whom they thought the greatest sinners and entreat them to "flee from the wrath to come."

IN accordance with the resolution of Venango county, Pa., W. C. T. U., a circular giving the names of applicants for license, including bondsmen, signers and attorneys, has been placed in every house, office and store in the two cities of the county, and sent broadcast into the country places. The object was to "dissuade good men from thoughtlessly giving their influence to this unrighteous business" and the moral force was clinched by the interposition of warning Scriptural texts throughout the list. "It has done more good than ten lectures," writes the county president; "all the better signers say they will never sign an application again, and men and women who scarcely realized we were here are sending us cheering messages."

MRS. DELLE C. H. COX, National organizer for the W. C. T. U., gave the first week in February to Whatcom county, Washington. She addressed seven mass-meetings and two afternoon meetings for women, reorganized one union, and secured nearly sixty new members for the several unions in the county. Mrs. Cox is a fluent speaker, an enthusiastic worker, inspiring confidence and esteem from her audience. Her illustrations and arguments are forcible, and based upon facts and figures gleaned from observation and varied experience in temperance work, and presented in a manner to arouse interest and convince the most skeptical of the amount of degradation and crime that is the direct product of the legalized liquor traffic. Washington workers most heartily commend her services to any union in need of progressive work.

Official Communications.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

In addition to its educational power with the young hardly another department affords so large opportunity for arousing an indifferent and inert church membership while equally affording facilities to lead out and inspire the people whose convictions have evolved a purpose "to attempt the end and never stand to doubt."

Scarcely a temperance advocate doubts the speedy accomplishment of prohibition when the church shall become a unit in practical total abstinence. "Recruiting total abstainers in the Sunday-school will give us a total abstaining church membership." Can there be a speedier corrective?

New methods have been suggested on certain lines of department work and these methods having been recommended to workers will be tried; if successful will be embodied in our plan of work, hence a new one will not be issued at present. The plan of work for 1893 meets every particular need and will be sent on receipt of a postage stamp.

It is our purpose to emphasize the observance of the quarterly temperance Sunday. That this subject is so thoroughly engaging the interest of our wise leaders is a matter of supreme thankfulness to us, and should encourage us. Let observance of the quarterly temperance Sunday have our best efforts.

Let work for Sunday, March 18, be begun at once by county superintendents, aided by local superintendents, unions and temperance people.

Seek its observance throughout the state, county and town after the following manner:

Temperance sermons in the morning.

As far as possible, use the Illustrated Leaflet, published by the W. T. P. A., in the Sunday-schools on that day.

A temperance Sunday-school mass-meeting in the afternoon or evening.

All young people's societies meeti ng on that evening should be requested to present a temperance topic. Any desiring a plan for the public meeting may receive one on application.

For the success of this plan we ask the hearty coöperation of regularly appointed superintendents of unions, temperance societies of whatever name and all temperance people who have the "divine insanity of noble minds that labors and endures and waits till all that it desires it finds, or what it cannot find creates."

The victory of the late International Sunday-school convention, God's own reward for patient and wise service these many years, in which our former National superintendent, Miss Kimball, has proven the possibilities of a divine mission on this line of work should inspire to the remotest Sunday-school in the remotest corner of our country.

Let no one say, "There are lions in the way." There are more pulpits dedicated to temperance in the land or in the United States than any previous year has known; more Sunday-school superintendents in quiet sympathy than we dream of, but the vitalizing power of our department, created for this purpose, is needed to convert their latent energy into active force.

JULIA A. BIDWELL,
Nat. Supt. Sunday-School Work.
Deposit, N. Y.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION.

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT, SOMEWHAT DELAYED.

The week of March 4 our annual "Scientific Temperance Budget" is being sent to the eight thousand local unions of our organization in the United States. Next week we shall remember the friends in Canada whose addresses we have.

This Budget consists of

1. A letter to the local president in behalf of a temperance education for every child in the public schools of her community, and one to county and district superintendents.

2. The new "Co-Workers' Letter" for 1894, which is to be given to each local superintendent of scientific temperance instruction. It is her chart and compass for the coming year's work.

3. "The New Century and the Drink Problem." A brief history of the present situation of the temperance education movement in the United States. An eight-page pamphlet to be read in the union, and that everybody should read.

4. A copy of the January Advices, that very successful and popular monthly publication for teachers, showing how to teach physiological temperance in the schools and a circular telling how to get these Advices to the teachers.

These constitute our New Year's scientific temperance message and gift to our sisters in the local unions throughout the country. The tardy arrival of the new lists of local officers in the state Minutes for 1893 has, we regret to say, helped to make the Budget later than usual. If through our failure to get your correct address, or for any other cause, you of the local, county, district or state scientific temperance instruction departments do not receive the four fold Budget, please write asking me for it, addressing,

MARY H. HUNT,
National Supt.
23 Trull St., Boston, Mass.

BANDS OF MERCY.

NOTICE.

As one of the duties of my department is to recommend the best literature to forward its aims, I wish to mention three books which have won prizes offered by Mr. George T. Angell, 19 Milk St., Boston. They are "The Strike at Shane's" "Our Gold Mine at Hollyhurst," and "Beautiful Joe."

The first two teach lessons of justice and mercy in a most effective manner. They are only twenty-five cents each in cloth binding. There are also ten cent editions. They can be ordered of Mr. Angell.

The third book, "Beautiful Joe," a story of a dog, is a volume of over three hundred pages. It was written by Miss Marshall Saunders, of Halifax, N. S., who is "one of us"—a member of the W. C. T. U. I can heartily say that I consider it a worthy companion of Black Beauty; perhaps even of wider scope in its teaching, while its style is most interesting. It must develop the best and tenderest sentiments of every reader, and is just the book for boys and girls. The price cloth bound is sixty cents. The publishers, (American Baptist Publication Society, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Dallas, Atlanta,) have promised to issue soon a still cheaper edition. Though it has been out only six weeks the first edition is nearly exhausted, so well is the book liked.

MARY F. LOVELL,
Nat. Supt. Department of Mercy.
Bryn Mawr, Pa.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

The graduation exercises of the Training School for Nurses at the National Temperance Hospital, will be held at the hospital, 1619 Diversey avenue, Chicago, Thursday evening, March 15. The following program has been prepared:

Opening prayer by Rev. Dr. Martin, of the Grace M. E. church; music by the Wheaton Quartette; reading by Mrs. Miller, of Chicago; solo, by Miss Dresser, of Wheaton; address, by Mrs. K. L. Stevenson; presentation of Loyal Temperance Legion room, by a member of the Legion; address to the class, by Dr. John R. Boynton; presentation of diplomas, by Mrs. Louise S. Rounds; music, by the Wheaton Quartette.

The program will be followed by refreshments and a social hour. All are cordially invited. MRS. M. E. KLINE, Pres.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

NEW YORK TO THE FRONT.

The W. C. T. U. of New York has in circulation the following:

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

PETITION

FOR THE

PROHIBITION OF THE TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS,

TO THE

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

To be held at Albany, May, 1894.

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned, twenty-one years of age, citizens of the State of New York, and the county of ..... earnestly and respectfully pray your honorable body to embody in the revised Constitution the following article:

No person shall manufacture for sale, or sell, or keep for sale, as a beverage, any intoxicating liquors, whether brewed, fermented or distilled. The Legislature shall by law prescribe regulations for the enforcement of this article, and shall prescribe suitable penalties for the same.

President Burt has written to her constituency: "The prohibition petition, representing as it does the great principle of our organization, should command the very best efforts of every white-ribboner. We have no knowledge that any other petition for prohibition will be presented to the convention. How important then that every name possible should be secured on this one."

THIS IS IT:
the De Long Hook & Eye
Richardson & DeLong Bros.
Philadelphia.
See that
hump?
Trade-Mark Reg., April 19-92.

THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.'S
DELICIOUS NEW PERFUME,
CRAB-APPLE BLOSSOMS.
Sold everywhere, in Crown stoppered bottles only.

Alaska Stove Lifter,
NICKEL PLATED.
ALWAYS COLD,
even if left in Stove Lid.
COLD HANDLE
Sold by all Stove and Hardware Dealers and House Furnishers, or sent by mail, postpaid, for 30 CENTS.
TROY NICKEL WORKS, TROY, N. Y.

JENNESS MILLER
Specialties. Corset substitutes, Empire Waists, Bust Supports, Divided Skirts, Union Suits, etc. Send stamp for illustrated pamphlet, "Dress." Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 34 Central Music Hall, CHICAGO.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
Take a Course in the SPRAGUE Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.)
Send 10c. stamps for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH.
No. 22 TELEPHONE BDG.

You Dye in 30 minutes
Turkey red on cotton that won't freeze, boil or wash out. No other will do it. Package to color 2 lbs., by mail, 10 cts.; 6, any color—for wool or cotton, 40c. Big pay Agents. Write quick. Mention this paper. FRENCH DYE CO. Vassar, Mich

World's Fair Highest Awards
Medal and Diploma on our INCUBATOR and BROODER Combined.
"Old Reliable" Leads them all.
If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for our 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address
Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co. Quincy, Ill.
45 yards High Class Fowls.

$25 to $50 per week, to Agents. Ladies or Gentlemen, using or selling "Old Reliable Plater." Only practical way to replate rusty and worn knives, forks, spoons, etc.; quickly done by dipping in melted metal. No experience, polishing, or machinery. Thick plate at one operation; lasts 5 to 10 years; fine finish when taken from the plater. Every family has plating to do. Plater sells readily. Profits large. W. P. Harrison & Co. Columbus, O.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalog, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 26, Chicago, Ill.
$18.50 Carriage for $9.25.
$12.00 " " $5.95.
$5.00 " " $2.75.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

The Knights of Labor, in their recent congress at Albany, indorsed the petition for the full enfranchisement of women, and it was sent to the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Graham, Lockport, with the seal of the organization affixed thereto.

Notwithstanding the money required for the prosecution of the scientific temperance campaign by the New Jersey W. C. T. U. these women of faith have just made arrangements for raising four hundred dollars by July 1, for a payment on "Rest Cottage," their headquarters on the state fair grounds, a building costing $2,400.

Their state convention will be held this year at Jersey City. Neal Dow day will be observed, and the Neal Dow number of THE UNION SIGNAL distributed. Mrs. Benjamin has been engaged to give parliamentary drills in April. Summer camp meetings will be held. Dr. Mary Wood Allen and Miss Clara Parrish will be in the state through April and May, and Dr. Anna Shaw more or less every month of the year, while Mrs. Hunt is afield.

A Mickle day will soon be observed in honor of Mrs. Elizabeth Mickle, who has served most efficiently as treasurer for fourteen years, but is now a resident of Pennsylvania. What a record! Is there a state in the Union that can equal it? Let us hear.

There is but one sorrowful thing to record. Mrs. Ellis, their faithful, dearly beloved corresponding secretary, was detained from the spring executive meeting by illness. May the Divine Healer restore her speedily.

Mrs. J. E. Sibley, president Georgia W. C. T. U., sends the good cheer that her state work is looking up and pressing onward. Excellent service has been done through petitions presented by the local union of Augusta, to the city council, asking the enforcement of the law against selling liquor to minors and drunkards, and against gambling. Kind and respectful attention was given to the plea, which was referred to the police commissioners, with instruction to investigate and enforce.

Many arrests have been made and many gambling places and slot machines closed. The police commissioners have also advised the council to revoke the license of any liquor dealer, who furnishes a policeman with liquor while on duty. Encouraged, the women are pressing on over the state, overcoming difficulties in many ways. They hope Miss Griffin and Miss Kearney will visit them; meanwhile they will "trust in God and keep the plow a-going."

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

TO THE WHITE RIBBONERS WHO READ THE CORNER.

From my sister's quiet home in a little country town in northern New York I pen these few words. I cannot tell you how sweet the restful quiet is to me after my long confinement in the offices of the World's Fair, with its wearying crowds, and at Headquarters at the Temple, with all the rush and rattle of Chicago's rustle, that so wear upon sensitive nerves and make one long for a "lodge in some vast wilderness," where no mail-carrier could intrude, and no money must be counted, recorded, banked and paid out.

Yet, I am glad to learn that the dimes continue to come, and I know that my faithful assistant will take good care of them until my return. The hard times are confined to no one state, but are universal, and it seemed quite Chicago-like last Sunday evening when an appeal was made in the union meeting at Cuba for the starving thousands in New York City.

No wonder our treasury feels the strain. Every white-ribboner ought to resolve to do a little more this year than she really feels is her part, to make up for the inevitable falling off of those who cannot pay their quota.

The skies are brightening, and everything points to a good and prosperous year notwithstanding all the drawbacks to financial prosperity. The loyalty of our unions to our beloved leader and our National W. C. T. U., as shown by their prompt response to her call, is certainly very cheering.

We trust each state will make an effort to send in dues as early as possible so we may be able to meet all obligations without difficulty, and be able to present at our birthday Convention a great reduction in our debt, or better, a clear balance sheet; or still better, a balance on the right side of the ledger. This ought to be done, and may be, with very little effort on the part of our "women folks," though we will not object to help from our brothers.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Our Library Table.

MARCH MAGAZINES.

Musicians will be delighted to find in the March issue of THE CENTURY, a paper on Edward Grieg, written by William Mason, the well-known musician. This is one of THE CENTURY'S series on great composers, and sets forth briefly but tellingly the leading characteristics of this composer. This magazine presents as usual this month a long and richly-varied bill of fare on which appear such names as Washington Gladden, Edith M. Thomas, Mary Hallock Foote, Mark Twain, Anna Eichberg King, Mrs. M. G. Van Rensselaer, and many others.

The Century Company, Union Square, New York.

The friends (and enemies) of temperance and prohibition, who are watching closely the pros and cons over the Gothenburg System, as they are promulgated by the leading periodicals of the day, will be glad to read with care, E. R. L. Gould's article in the current number of THE FORUM, entitled "The Gothenburg System and Our Liquor Traffic." Dr. Gould has represented the government at several important congresses on economic and statistical subjects abroad and his arguments show strength of thought. He pleads for the system and a radical Prohibitionist sees the fallacy of many of his arguments. But the eye which gazes too long upon an object sees it in abnormal proportions after awhile; sharpness and power of vision are cultivated by wide scope and varied detail. It is therefore incumbent upon those who would strengthen their positions to study from all points of view, and Dr. Gould's arguments are good ones—from his point of view.

Statistical tests are being brought to bear upon every known theme of discussion and of "making books" of bewildering figures "there is no end." In refutation of a very prevalent belief that the churches are declining in influence and power, Mr. H. K. Carroll, the special agent of the United States Census for the collection of church statistics, shows the stability and the growth of the great religious sects which stand unmoved in the general clamor. Accompanying this is an exceedingly vivid picture of the religious condition of society in a New England town (Middleboro, Plymouth county, Mass.), by the Rev. W. B. Hale, rector of the Episcopal church there. Mr. Hale shows that the rivalry of the several churches for the popular support of the town has gone far toward killing religion and reverence. These two articles give a very interesting insight into the religious condition of the time.

The Forum Publishing Co., Union Square, New York City.

One of the pleasing articles in SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for the month is from the pen of Octave Thanet—"The Farmer in the North. Sketches of American Types." Her sketches were made at the World's Fair, where one could sit observant under the blaze of an American sun and see all the world pass by. "There was the prosperous farmer of the New England states, and the equally prosperous farmer of Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa; there was the tenant farmer of the South, who may not prosper, but is always sure of cornmeal, pork and molasses so long as his planter landlord does no go bankrupt; and the unprosperous farmers farther West, with their mortgaged farms and their discontent. Nor did it take any special gift of discrimination to pick them out, the one from the other." However that may be, the author's discriminative word-portraits are beyond criticism, and there is a world of wisdom in her pithy, semi-humorous, semi-pathetic reflections. There is also a sound expression upon the decrease of farms and farmers as the cities spread their influence abroad.

Charles Scribners' Sons, New York City.

"The Identification of Criminals. The Scientific Method in Use in France," by Ida M. Tarbell, is one of the leading articles in MCCLURE'S magazine for March. There is no refuge in a lie when once the never-lying measurements, contours and peculiar marks of the victim's body are written down in black and white and committed to the care of this wonderful system. The article is accompanied by numerous highly interesting photographs of this method of identification. Miss Tarbell says in reference to the results of this plan: "The malefactors of a country where the system has been adopted are the first to realize the impossibility of escaping its records. Naturally they seek new territory. Thus, the pickpockets of Paris have been materially decreased since anthropometry began its reign at the Palais de Justice. From sixty-five in 1885, their number fell to fourteen in 1890. . . So powerful is the method considered by penal authorities, that there has been a repeated demand that it be made international in all civilized countries."

One other, of the many very readable articles in this magazine is a charming sketch entitled, "John Ruskin at Home," by M. H. Spielmann, editor of the "Magazine of Art." This is accompanied by portraits of Ruskin, surrounding and interior views of his home.

S. S. Mc Clure, Ltd., 743 and 745 Broadway, New York.

The cream of articles in the March number of the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE is that contributed by Rev. Philip Stafford Moxom on the subject of "Christian Socialism." Every one to whom this word socialism presents any difficulties in the way of comprehension should read this article thoughtfully. The writer expresses himself at once with a clearness and depth that give the reader a sense of satisfaction. A few sentences taken here and there from it will be welcome to those who are confined by limits of time to reviews rather than the originals: "In the minds of many otherwise intelligent men and women there is a woeful dearth of clear ideas on the subject of socialism. . . . The way in which many people jumble together Socialism, Communism, Nationalism and Anarchism and succeed in missing the true meaning of each and all of these terms, gives one a vivid sense of human capacity for unsuspecting ignorance. . . . Christian socialism stands for a way of looking at things socially. It occupies the point of view of Christianity; in a word, the point of view of Him who, more fully than any one else, at once announced and illustrated the precept, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself!" The writer meets and refutes one by one in a most satisfactory manner the statements that "socialism involves spoliation, or invasion of individual rights in property"; that it "restricts or destroys individuality"; that it "demands and promises equality of possessions"; that it is "destructive of the motive to work, to invent, to advance and to excel."

"Let the cynics sneer," he says in closing, "and the votaries of selfishness denounce this thought of human life as a dream. It is a glorious dream. It is a divinely inspired dream. It is a dream that will haunt the imaginations of men and stir their hearts and inspire their endeavors until the long struggle of humanity, in its battle march from the nomadism of the savage to the ordered and peaceful and beneficent civilization of the Republic of God shall draw to a close, and human society shall fill the sublime prophecy of that apocalyptic symbol, the city 'that lieth four square' in which there shall be 'no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain.'"

Warren F. Kellogg, Publisher, 5 Park Square, Boston, Mass.

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

C. E. ALLEN PLANT AND SEED GUIDE, Brattleboro, Vt. Sixty pages of illustrated helps to summer gardening.

POPULAR SEEDS AND BULBS FOR SPRING PLANTING. A twenty-four page booklet issued by L. R. Benedict, Ellenville, N. Y.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO., CATALOGUE, giving full particulars of their abilities as nurserymen, florists and seedsmen. Painesville, Ohio.

THE HIGHER CRITICISM. By H. L. Hastings, editor of The Christian. No. 37 in the well-known series, "The Anti-Infidel Library."

Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE'S ANNUAL, 1894. Edited by Robert Rae, secretary to the League. Published at the National Temperance League Publication Depot, 33 Paternoster Row, E. C., London. This two hundred page pamphlet is packed as solidly as possible with temperance facts, and makes a valuable reference book.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR IN CLEVELAND, A beautiful and unique advance souvenir booklet, giving a brief history of the Cleveland, Ohio, Christian Endeavor Union, the third largest in the world. It is a book for Endeavorers from Boston to San Francisco.

F. M. Lewis, Chairman Printing Committee, 237 St. Clair Street, Cleveland, Ohio

Model 34

COLUMBIA,

Price, $125.

A new machine in many important points of design and construction, retaining also the best features of previous light Columbias. It is regularly fitted with an easily detachable front wheel brake, rat-trap pedals, and either single or double tire as ordered. Weight 30 pounds with, 29 without brake.

Full description in Columbia catalogue, which is furnished free by Columbia agents, or mailed for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Boston. New York. Chicago. Hartford.

DONGOLA, SOLID LEATHER, PERFECT-FITTING.

This shoe is controlled b us exclusively and canno be obtained elsewhere It is worth Three Dollars and far superior to the unreliabl Shoes often sold by mail. Sizes, 1 to 8, Common-Sens or Opera Toe, and Opera with Patent Leather Tips; width C, D, E, EE. We guarantee the shoe and will refund th money to any one who for any reason is dissatisfied. W can point, however, to thousands who stay by us becaus we do just as we agree. Sent express prepaid for $1.47 Let us send you "Shoe Facts," Free. You will fin us and the shoe at 096 Washington Street, Boston, Mass

MOOAR BROTHERS.

AN EXTRA SESSION

...OF THE...

CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE

A RICH PROGRAM

For Franchise Entertainments.

Dramatized for the Use of Local Unions and Suffrage Societies by SARAH M. SEVERANCE.

The stupendous irony of this view of a legislative body in action, makes it more instructive than the ablest lecture, while its keen wit and biting satire clinch the logic of its lessons. It may be adapted to a large or small number of performers.

PRICE—15c. per single copy; 20 or more copies, 12 1-2 cts. each. Address

MRS. H. E. BROWN,

COR. SEC. CAL. W. C. T. U.

132 MCALLISTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SEEDS GIVEN AWAY

FOR TRIAL. I have found that the best way to advertise good Seeds is to give away a sample for trial. If you will send me a 2-cent stamp to pay postage, I will mail free one package, your selection, of either Cabbage, Carrot, Celery, Cucumber, Lettuce, Musk or Water Melon, Onion, Parsnip, Pepper, Pumpkin, Radish, Spinach, Squash, Tomato, Turnip, or of Flower Seeds—Aster, Balsam, Celosia, Carnation, Mignonette, Pansy, Phlox, Poppy, Sweet Peas, Zinnia, or Verbena, and one of my 1894 Catalogues. Under any circumstances do not buy your Seeds until you see it, for I can save you money. Over 200,000 people say my seeds are the cheapest and best. I have earliest vegetables on record. Discount and large prizes to agents. 50c. worth of Seeds free with $1.00 order. Write to-day. F. B. MILLS, Box 50 Rose Hill, N. Y.

High Arm

FREE TRIAL in your own home for 30 days without paying one cent in advance; machine to be returned at our expense if unsatisfactory. We take all risks, pay freight, ship anywhere, to anyone, in any quantity at wholesale prices. $65 Kenwood machine, $24.50; $55 Arlington, $20.50; $45 Arlington, $17.50; $35 High Arm Gem, $12. We sell all makes and styles, from cheapest $7.95 to best "Kenwood," $24.50. All attachments free. THREE HIGHEST WORLD'S FAIR MEDALS AWARDED. Over 100,000 now in use. Buy direct from factory Save agents large profits. Catalogue and testimonials free. Write at once. Address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 W. VanBuren St., Dept. A 151, Chicago, Ill.

Warranted Ten Years.

CANCER Its cure by scientific local treatment. 20 Years Experience. Book Free. Drs. McLeish and Weber, 123 John Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best special ties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo

GRANULA

"The Perfect Health Food."

ORIGINATED by the famous Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of America's leading Health Institution, over 30 years ago. It is a scientifically prepared and twice-cooked food containing all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley Winter Wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and thoroughly assimilated by the entire body. IT IS A REMARKABLE REMEDY for certain diseases, and if regularly and persistently used will not fail to remove

DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION AND CONSTIPATION.

Granula should be eaten daily by children, as it builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities. Granula is sold under a registered trade mark and manufactured solely by OUR HOME GRANULA MFG. CO., Box 100, Dansville, N. Y.

Trial Box 25 cts. Book of Recipes and Descriptive Pamphlet FREE.

Spurgeon's Own Words.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE: As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

"Since then I have seen in many, very many, instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

"Yours heartily, (Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON,
"'WESTWOOD,' Beulah Hill, England."

G. T. Congreve's Message to America.

The above letter from the late eminent preacher, C. H. Spurgeon, is one of thousands of testimonials to the wonderful curative properties of my Balsamic Elixir, which not only cures consumption, but gives instant and permanent relief in cases of Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Influenza, and all Chest affections.

GEO. THOS. CONGREVE.

For years I have been entreated to make my remedy known in the United States, but my time has been too much absorbed by my European patients to allow this. Now, however,

I have been able to extend my organization so as to bring America within the scope of my personal observation, and my desire is to make it clear to all citizens of the United States that they may henceforth procure from my American Depot

A cure for Consumption which, even in the advanced stages of that terrible disease, may be used with certainty of relief.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs or Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis; together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order of $1.00 bottle of my Balsamic Elixir.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR can be obtained from many drug stores, but it will take some time before it will be introduced into all of them throughout this vast country. If your druggist has not yet put it in stock, it will be sent you, carriage paid, from my own depot, on receipt of 50c., $1, $1.75, $3.75 or $7, according to the size of the bottle ordered.

CANADIAN BILLS AND STAMPS cannot be received. Send Money Order.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE,
London, Eng., and 4 Wooster Street, New York.

Druggists supplied by
C. N. CRITTENTON CO., NEW YORK,
OR
John D. Park & Son Co., Cincinnati.
Mention this paper.

THE WORLD'S WASHER.

Makes wash day easy. Saves all the hard labor. Saves the clothes from destruction. Makes them white as snow.

Child can use it. Price within reach of everybody. Write for price delv'd. C. B. ROSS, LINCOLN, ILL.

SOCIAL PURITY TRUE . . . MANHOOD

A MANUAL FOR YOUNG MEN.

Mrs. F. M'C Harris (Hope Ledyard), Supt. for Mothers' Meetings for the W. C. T. U., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I like the book very much indeed. It takes just the stand that should be taken on these matters, and will be of great assistance to mothers."

The Independent: "We cannot conceive of a book on such a subject, written in a more reverent and cleanly spirit."

12mo, nearly 400 pages, illustrated. Prepaid, $1.65. Best terms to agents. Circulars free.

A. B. STOCKHAM & CO., 98 Market St., Chicago.
When writing please mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DON'T

Send to us two weeks from now an order for four or five hundred copies of Neal Dow Prohibition Number. We cannot promise them in large quantities longer than two weeks. Remember how early our Crusade edition was exhausted, and send at once.

Single copy	$ .10
5 copies	.25
25 "	.75
100 "	3.00

These are our cash prices.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Subscription Rates for 1894.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .50
Young Crusader, monthly, one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago.

OUR WHITE-RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

This is the age of pictures, pictures of the World's Columbian Exposition, pictures of the Holy Land, pictures of famous countries and famous men and women, and to this collection we are now ready to add one of the finest and most artistic portfolios yet issued. Every white-ribboner will have a heart interest in our portfolio, for it will contain faces beloved by every one interested in the work of the white-ribbon army. We shall issue a series of these portfolios, each number to contain photographs of men and women who have been prominently connected with the temperance and prohibition movement. Think of the pleasure you can give a friend by presenting a copy of our portfolio, containing the thoughtful, intelligent faces of Neal Dow, Frances Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, John B. Gough and the other noted leaders, all in dainty and artistic form, pleasing to the eye and suggestive of the grand reforms to which they have devoted their lives.

We hope to have an order from each one of the two hundred thousand members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for we have selected these pictures with care, the reproductions are artistic and we feel that every home will be honored by the introduction of this refined, chaste and attractive collection into the family circle. It is the large demand with which we believe our efforts will be rewarded that permits us to offer this work of art for the small sum of twenty-five cents, with coupon, or thirty-five cents single number, without coupon. It is hardly necessary to add that cash must accompany order, as on all specialties offered at a nominal price we cannot extend credit.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A FINE PORTRAIT.

This week's mail brings the following; "Please send me another number of the Neal Dow Prohibition number. I sent mine off before reading but the first page. You may well say 'We are proud of the cover of this issue, the portrait, etc. What a fine portrait of our noble Prohibition Chieftain.' By the way I wish the paper could be sent without being folded as I wish to hang the revered picture in my home for inspiration."

All extra copies, price ten cents, are sent out in tubes instead of being folded.

WORTH MORE THAN THE PRICE OF A WHOLE YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION.

From another correspondent:

"Have just received and gone through at a single sitting the Neal Dow Prohibition number of THE UNION SIGNAL and am frank to say this number is worth more than the price of a whole year's subscription. I wish I could speak the word that would give you a million new subscribers."

The Neal Dow cards are going with unprecedented rapidity.

Send in orders quickly or supply will be exhausted.

Price $1.00 per 100.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

LITHOGRAPH LETTER FROM NEAL DOW.

Every temperance boy and every temperance girl will prize a souvenir of Neal Dow's Birthday, and you can give it to them for just one cent. Think of it, a letter in Neal Dow's own handwriting with a vignette of his face on the outside of the letter, all for one cent! $1 per hundred. Cash must accompany order. Send for 100, and distribute in your Loyal Temperance Legion. Do not delay. We can fill your orders at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"My Trade

will take anything I give them; they believe what I tell them; and I mean to sell them what I make the most on." That is what one grocer actually gives as a reason for selling washing-powders—imitations—instead of the original and best washing-compound—Pearline. If grocers and customers were all like these, the millions of women who are now blessing Pearline would still be doing useless hard work. But when you come across such a dealer, don't let him put you off with anything except Pearline. 397 JAMES PYLE, New York.

SECURITY HOSE SUPPORTER

LOOK AT THE CROOK

Can't slip—Can't cut
Metal work covered up

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

Lovely Complexion.

Pure, Soft, White Skin.

Have you freckles, moth, black-heads, blotches, ugly or muddy skin, eczema, tetter, or any other cutaneous blemish? Do you want a quick, permanent and absolutely infallible cure, FREE OF COST to introduce it: Something new, pure, mild and so harmless a child can use or drink it with perfect safety. If so, send your full Post-office address to

MISS MAGGIE E. MILETTE,
134 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

SELF THREADING Sewing Needles. Weak sighted or blind can thread them. Finest silver spring steel. One style threads on end, other on side. Sample paper of either kind by mail 10c., 2 for 15c., 5 for 25c., 12 for 60c. Money easily made selling them. C. E. MARSHALL, LOCKPORT, N.Y.

WE WANT YOU to distribute circulars, samples, etc., in your locality for our syndicate of big advertisers. $3 to $5 per thousand. CASH PAID. No canvassing. Enclose stamp. DISTRIBUTING BUREAU, P.O. Box 1925, New York City.

NEW LEAFLETS.

Department No. 23. "Seeding down the Field."

National L. T. L. No. 212. "Indoor Fun and Frolic."

Price of Department Leaflets 15 cents per 100.

National L. T. L. 90 cents per 100.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ON HAND.

A new responsive reading on Proportionate and Systematic Giving,

by Esther Tuttle Pritchard.

Fresh, terse, strong.
Just what you need.
Order at once.
Price one cent each; 50 cents per 100.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address, and we will send you this elegant watch by express for examination. You examine it and if you consider it a bargain pay the express agent $1.98 and express charges and it is yours. Fine gold plate Chain and Charm FREE with each watch, also our written Guarantee for 5 years. Write to-day, this may not appear again.

THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

...THE...

White Ribbon Art Portfolio

...OF...

Temperance and Prohibition Leaders...

Photographs of many of the grandest and noblest women of the world...

PROMINENT WHITE-RIBBONERS

Photographs of good and noble men prominently connected with the Temperance and Prohibition Movement...

PART I NOW READY

COLLECTION OF THOROUGHLY ARTISTIC PORTRAITS OF

Familiar Faces

Brief sketches accompany each photograph, the aim being artistic rather than biographical.

The Portfolio will comprise several parts, to be issued in quick succession. Each of the other parts will present faces as interesting and photographs as artistic as Part I.

PART I CONTAINS

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MOTHER THOMPSON, MADAM WILLARD,
MOTHER WALLACE, MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT,
MARGARET BRIGHT LUCAS, MOTHER STEWART,
HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, NEAL DOW,
CLINTON B. FISK, JOHN B. GOUGH,
MARY ALLEN WEST.

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents, and we will send you Part I.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART I
Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

PART I WITHOUT THE COUPON THIRTY-FIVE CENTS

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

Signal Notes.

THE Rescue Homes of the Salvation Army in India have accommodations for fifty-five girls.

A CONGREGATIONAL church in California supports two Salvation Army missionaries, one in India and one in Africa.

DURING the year ending March, 1893, the Bible Society added nine to its list of versions. The total number now is three hundred and thirteen.

LET the very playthings of your children have a bearing on the life and work of the coming man; it is early training that makes the master.—Aristotle.

ANOTHER noonday rest has been opened in Boston, run on the coöperative principle and giving the girls employed in the neighborhood a quiet, restful noon hour.

IT is sometimes stated that all the governments of Europe are really in the hands of the Hebrew race, but until the formation of the last Cabinet in France, no Jew has ever held a Cabinet position in that country.

THERE are on the roll of ministers in the Congregational church the names of nine or ten women, but the first one to be ordained is Mrs. Amelia A. Frost, who is now associate pastor with her husband, at Littleton, Mass. Her examination was admirably sustained.

THE Church of England Missionary Society proposes to undertake a work for the lepers in Japan of whom there are more than two hundred thousand. Japanese Christians believe it will do more to advance Christianity in the Islands than anything else.

THE Asclepiad, a medical journal, has an article on the progress of medical science during the reign of Queen Victoria, by Dr. B. W. Richardson, in which he says: "We have detected that no single cause of fatal disease is so deadly as this one cause, alcohol."

IT is stated that two Christian Chinamen formed a business partnership adopting certain rules. Three of them were as follows: "1, We will not buy or sell anything injurious to our fellow men. 2, We will do no business on Sunday. 3, Of all we make one-tenth shall be given to the Lord's work."

A WIDELY advertised parade of the unemployed took place recently in Boston. The makeup of the crowd was striking, for fully one-half were Italians, next came Jews while the American born formed but a small minority. Not only do foreigners and foreign born children constitute a large share of our criminal and pauper classes but they also predominate in the unemployed class.

TWENTY million dollars was spent in strong drink in Australia last year, giving employment to less than ten thousand men all the year round in actual production. Had that vast sum of money been spent in other trades it would have employed twenty-five thousand men at three pounds per week for five years and twenty weeks; so, completely solving the problem of the unemployed.

THE statistics of results in the Madras University examinations for 1893–94 are interesting, although they do not reflect credit on the native Christian students. Out of 3,369 candidates, 285 were native Christians, and only 51 passed. Six times the number of Brahmin candidates passed. Many women were among the candidates in the Bombay university examinations, mostly from the Parsee community.

THE illustrated government reports of Dr. Jackson on the progress of education in Alaska gave a very good idea of the strange inhabitants of that region. Arctic Alaska has only been occupied by missionaries within the past five years. In 1890 the United States government assumed a share in the education of the Eskimos, of Alaska, who number 15,000. Dr. Jackson who has visited all the missionary and educational stations believes that these Eskimos are worth saving, mentally, morally and physically. Reindeer are being domesticated among them, thus providing for the physical well-being of the people.

GOOD NEWS FOR ASTHMATICS.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is now in reach of sufferers from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free, by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases free by mail. to sufferers.

A New Cooking School has been started, which, recognizing the importance of having plenty of milk on hand for cooking purposes, has found its requirements fully met by Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, prepared by New York Condensed Milk Co. It highly indorses it.

IVORY SOAP

IVORY

= IT FLOATS =

FORTY MILLION CAKES YEARLY.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

"Who wins the eyes, wins all."

If you regard APPEARANCES you will certainly use SAPOLIO in house-cleaning. Sapolio is a solid cake of scouring soap. Try it in house-cleaning.

COPYRIGHT

YOU ARE JUDGED

by your house just as much as by your dress. Keep it neat and clean and your reputation will shine. Neglect it and your good name will suffer. Do not think that house-cleaning is too troublesome; it is worth all it costs, especially if you reduce the outlay of time and strength by using SAPOLIO.

This Grand Organ

$42.50 for the next 60 days only.

CASH WITH ORDER

Complete with Stool and Instruction Book. Safe delivery guaranteed. Price $42.50 cash, or $45.00 if cash is sent us after ten days' trial in your own home, or $50.00 on credit—$10.00 down, and $5.00 per month. This offer stands unequalled in the annals of Organ making. It is the red letter offer of a lifetime. This is our No. 23,000

GOOD HOPE ORGAN,

(exactly like cut), absolutely perfect, containing all the latest improvements. Solid Black Walnut Case, 10 Effective Stops, 4 Sets of Reeds, Double Octave Couplers, New Tone Swell, Grand Organ Swell, Specially WARRANTED for 10 years. The Regular Retail Price of this Organ is $78.

We have { Organs from $27.50 up. Pianos from $175 up.

We send our beautiful Catalogue absolutely FREE to any one, anywhere. Send for it at once, and see how much better you can do by buying from our factory at manufacturer's prices, FOR CASH or EASY CREDIT, terms to suit you.

CORNISH & CO. Established Nearly 30 Years. Washington, N. J.

Positively no connection, past or present, with any other House in the world. The only actual manufacturers in the country selling Pianos and Organs exclusively to the public at factory cost.

EVERY WOMAN SHOULD KNOW About ZOA-PHORA—

A True Nerve Tonic.
Not a Stimulant or Narcotic.
Expressly for Weakly Women.
Full information and testimonials sent sealed.
Address ZOA-PHORA MEDICINE CO., H. G. COLMAN, SEC'Y, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

Its merits as a Wash Blue have been fully tested and indorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask for it.

D. S. WILTBERGER, Proprietor, 233 North 2d St., Phila, Pa.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair. OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

$12 TO $35 a week can be made working for us. Parties preferred who can furnish a horse and travel through the country; a team, though, is not necessary. A few vacancies in towns and cities. Men and women of good character will find this an exceptional opportunity for profitable employment. Spare hours may be used to good advantage. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 11th and Main Sts., Richmond, Va.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No plaster. No knife. No poison. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

WANTED—Young women to train for nurses. Inclose stamp. People's Health Journal, Chicago.

RUBBER GOODS BY MAIL

Ladies or Gents send for Free catalogue. Big Profits To Agents. A. U. BETTS & CO., 51 Water St. Toledo, O.

FREE!

DEAF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

MAIZE, KAS., Jan. 28, '94.

For many years I suffered from catarrh of the head and throat, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not understand conversation at all. Could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing had ever given me the slightest relief. Last summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatment, and had not used it three weeks until my hearing began to improve, and has steadily improved ever since, and now I can hear common conversation across a room without difficulty; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away, with the door closed, and I think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. I urge all who are afflicted as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment.

EDWIN COLEMAN.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment, and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send (by express) Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address,

J. H. MOORE, M. D., Cincinnati, O.

If out of order, use BEECHAM'S PILLS.

"THE THROAT AND ITS AILMENTS" is the title of a new and valuable treatise on Quinsy, Throat Catarrh, Loss of Voice, Goitre, etc., published by The Physicians' Remedy Co., Box 23 S., Cincinnati, O. Any one interested can have it for the asking. Send your name.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers Block, Rochester N. Y.

A USEFUL INVENTION.

Much interest is being taken by the physicians of this city in a case of almost total deafness, which has been nearly if not entirely relieved by an inexpensive invention belonging to F. HISCOX, of 853 Broadway, New York City. As every known device, and the most skillful treatment, had failed to afford relief, the case was believed to be incurable, and the success of this invention, which is easily and comfortably adjusted, and practically invisible, is considered a remarkable triumph.

A Liberal Organ Offer.

That there has been a revolution in the manufacture of Organs and Pianos is evinced by the current offer of Cornish & Co., the well-known manufacturers of Washington, N. J. For the next 60 days they offer to sell an Organ for $42.50, which a short time ago would have been considered a desirable bargain at $75. With this they offer terms of credit that are sure to meet with the approval of every fair-minded person. Cornish & Co. are the largest makers of Pianos and Organs in the world, selling direct from the factory to the home. Since the conception of this great business, nearly 30 years ago, they have been fighting the method of selling instruments through agents and dealers, their plan being to give the enormous profits usually retained by this class of tradesmen to the buyer. Their efforts to place first-class instruments within reach of all, at manufacturers' prices and the most liberal terms, deserves the highest commendation. Every one who is contemplating the purchase of an Organ or Piano should get the catalogue issued by the firm. It illustrates and describes all the latest and best designs of Organs and Pianos, with prices and special offers that are sure to prove profitable. They generously offer to send it free to all who write and mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

A Great Point Gained.

The good, if any, that nauseous medicines difficult of assimilation by the stomach do, is scarcely appreciable. A great point of superiority gained in the chemical blending of the sterling pulmonic Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, is that the objectionable flavor of the oil in some preparations is completely got rid of in this. It is noticeable in reading the testimonials of physicians avouching the remedial excellence of the article in Consumption, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Anæmia, or poverty of the blood and the wasting diseases of childhood, that they almost invariably speak of the readiness with which it is swallowed and incorporated by the system of invalids, whose feeble stomachs reject inferior articles of its class. The phosphorus contained in the salts mentioned is a well known auxiliary of strength, enriching an impoverished circulation. The oil, besides healing sore lungs, supplies ample fuel to the flickering lamp of vitality.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S

FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPYLAED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 12.] CHICAGO, March 22, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Lissula D. Hetrick
1029 15th St.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

King Humbert, of Italy, celebrated his fiftieth birthday last week.

Municipal suffrage for women has passed the Massachusetts house of representatives.

New York's senate has made hazing a misdemeanor, and the infliction of personal injuries a felony.

Senator White, of Louisiana, has taken the oath of office, as associate justice of the United States Supreme Court.

The Ohio legislature has obtained an unenviable record by refusing women the right to vote at school elections.

The caravels, Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria, have been loaned to the Red Cross society for exhibition in aid of its charitable work.

Russia's state council has ratified the treaty of commerce with Germany, which has also passed the German Reichstag by a large majority.

Efforts are now in progress to negotiate a treaty bebetween Great Britain and America which will make binding the results of the Bering sea arbitration.

Dispatches from Hawaii announce that steps have been taken towards the formation of a permanent government and a call has been issued for a constitutional convention.

A motion to investigate Senators who were reported to be speculating on Wall street, was characterized as slander unworthy of consideration and tabled in the Senate last week.

Five sisters of charity who were teaching in the public schools of Pittsburg, Pa., have resigned in deference to the popular objection to their official raiment, worn in that capacity.

Admiral Da Gama, commander of the rebel fleet at Rio Janeiro, has surrendered and taken refuge on board a foreign war ship. The war is now confined to the southern states of Brazil.

The two liquor measures in the Iowa legislature, the mulct tax bill in the House, and the Carpenter bill in the Senate, were defeated by good majorities Friday, the latter receiving only twelve votes in its favor.

The seigniorage bill which finally passed the United States Senate, March 15, provides for the coining of silver bullion now in the treasury and the issue of silver certificates, a process which will occupy about two years.

The landing of British troops at Bluefields, Nicaragua, quelled the riots between Nicaraguan troops and the native Mosquito Indians. A United States war ship has been sent to this point to look after American interests.

By a majority of two votes, the British House of Commons passed an amendment to the Queen's speech, demanding the abolition of the House of Lords, proposed by Henry Labouchere, and the next day withdrew their action.

An amendment to the Constitution providing that United States Senators shall hereafter be elected by a direct vote of the people instead of by state legislatures, was favorably considered by the House Committee on election, Saturday.

A new lottery has been opened in Wichita, Kan., under the disguised title of the "Louisiana Guarantee Loan Company." It has all the attributes of the usual lottery scheme, excepting that the prizes and drawings are termed "loans" and the lottery tickets, "loan applications."

Denver has been the scene of a great disturbance, in which troops were called out, caused by the refusal of the governor to comply with an injunction from the court restraining him from removing certain municipal officers. The matter has happily been submitted to the supreme court for arbitration.

THE twentieth annual meeting of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U. convened in Willard Hall, Thursday, March 15, in an all-day session. Mrs. Carse was reëlected president. The reports gave evidence of a steadily increasing interest and showed that despite the distractions of World's Fair year, work has been pushed forward with the vigor characteristic of this pioneer union. The treasurer reported an expenditure for the year of $10,596, and a balance in the treasury of $378.

THE supreme court of Indiana refuses to reconsider the Stehlin-Haggard case, in which the saloon was decided to be a nuisance, at the solicitation of the liquor interest. The State Liquor League, therefore, is preparing to defeat the reëlection next November of two of the judges —one a Republican and the other a Democrat—and is raising a fund for that purpose. All justice-loving citizens of Indiana will, we trust, also make their preparations, regardless of party affiliation. "Forewarned is forearmed."

FROM March 7 to 24 is the annual period set apart by the Salvation Army as Self-Denial week. Salvationists and their friends everywhere are invited to join in the sacrifice of some personal indulgence, the funds thus raised to be used "for the extension and support of the work in such branches and countries as there may be no special provision for." The W. C. T. U. counts the Salvation Army among its valued allies, both being branches of the one great army which is marching against the foes of Christ's kingdom. We hope this appeal will find hearty response not only among white-ribboners, but among temperance people generally. Contributors to the self-denial fund may send their dollars or dimes to the commander of the local army or to Commander Ballington Booth, 111 Reade St., New York City.

THE graduating exercises of the Training School for Nurses occurred Thursday evening, March 15, at the National Temperance Hospital. Dr. John R. Boynton of the staff of physicians delivered the address. He congratulated the class upon the excellency of its work and upon the modesty and general helpfulness of its members, expressing the conviction that the nurse's profession was in dignity and responsibility second only to that of the physician. The class was privileged, he said, in being trained to care for the sick without the use of alcohol. Diplomas were presented by Mrs. Rounds, state president of the W. C. T. U., the graduates being overwhelmed with floral tributes, and receiving a class pin from the medical staff. Miss Ruth Coggeshall presented the children's room to the board of trustees, which room has recently been furnished by temperance children who are now working for the endowment of its beds. A general social time brought to an end an enjoyable program.

MRS. JEANNETTE HAUSER forwards from India one hundred and two signatures to the Great Petition. Eighty-nine of these are names of members of the Brahmo-Somaj in Calcutta, and are accompanied by a letter from S. C. Chakravarti, secretary of the Brahmo-Somaj Prayer-meeting Association. He says: "I am always ready to render help to the workers of this sacred cause if they want it, and shall consider it a great privilege if I am asked to do anything within my means." "In this association total abstinence is one of the requirements for membership, and on many points," says Mrs. Hauser, "this branch of the Brahmo-Somaj is taking a very forward stand." Judging from its representatives who participated in the World's Congresses last summer and from the humanitarian and reformatory character of its doctrines as presented by them we should naturally expect to find this organization well to the front in the fight against the great enemy of all mankind.

As we go to press word comes to us of the very general celebration of Neal Dow's birthday throughout the country. The interest is very marked, as is shown by the fact that the Neal Dow edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, which was unusually large, is entirely exhausted. The beautiful Neal Dow souvenir cards have been ordered in large quantities, and are still to be obtained, as also the Neal Dow letter to children.

AMONG the many radical declarations of the Supreme Council of the Patrons of Industry which met recently in Toledo, O., are resolutions favoring woman suffrage and opposing the liquor traffic. We are glad to count the members of this organization on "our side." May they be mindful of the relation between faith and works and manifest "industry" in directions which will make their action effective and practical.

THE feature of Queen Victoria's speech which at first glance strikes us most forcibly is its brevity. We commend it in this respect to prospective presidents of the United States. The portion of the message which will be of interest to white-ribboners the world over is the statement that among the bills to be submitted to the present parliament will be one for "the exercise of direct local control of the liquor traffic." Lord Rosebery announces a radical policy for the new administration and it is safe to say that the British Lion will continue to manifest signs of a hopeful unrest for some time to come.

IT is due Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset that we should state that their contributions to the Neal Dow number were forwarded as they supposed in ample time, but owing to the publication of the paper one month before the date of General Dow's birthday, their manuscripts were not received until one day after the paper was out. By a misapprehension too, an article on General Neal Dow's library from a biography of General Dow, which was furnished Miss Willard from Portland, was credited to her in the Neal Dow number. She has sent the same article to all parts of the world and never claimed its authorship, but as it came to us unsigned we supposed it was hers. Miss Willard was at much pains to secure for us all the English letters that we published and has done everything in her power to give this number its success.

IN his exposition of the temperance Sunday-school lesson in the Interior of March 8, Dr. Withrow vigorously arraigns wine as a "mocker," and at the same time speaks of it as a "good medicine." He quotes St. Paul's advice to Timothy to "take a little wine" for his stomach's sake, and thus comments: "This Scripture must stand; never will we join with those whose temperance feelings are so hostile to the liquor traffic that they denounce the Bible because it speaks as in Paul's word to Timothy or of Christ's act at the Cana wedding." Are we to infer that Dr. Withrow has been invited to join an infidel or "free-thinker" society? Temperance Bible denouncers are an anomaly, and we would really like to know who the doctor means by "those." The W. C. T. U. goes as far in its hostility to the liquor traffic as any organization or any individual in existence, yet the Bible has been from the beginning its inspiration and guide. The question for Christians in our times to consider is, what would be Paul's, what would be Christ's attitude toward intoxicants if they were citizens of a Christian land to-day? Would they not say that with our modern physical manhood vitiated by the drinking habits of generations, there is danger in taking even "a little"? "Keep thyself pure" is also an injunction of the apostle to Timothy, and if Paul were among us here and now he would enjoin upon every young minister, every young Christian, total abstinence. For under whatever guise it may come, whether in the social glass, the physician's prescription or the communion cup, "wine is a mocker."

GOD'S BIRDS.

BY MARY A. LATHBURY.

Not one of them is forgotten before God. Fear not therefore.—Luke 12: 6, 7.

A BLUE-BIRD—blue as an Easter sky,
Sang from a beech bough brown and dry
A little song that was half a sigh.

She sang to heaven, as pure souls do
But the only heaven she ever knew
Was the sun-filled air with its roof of blue.

"Dear heaven"—this was the soft refrain—
"Let the trees laugh out into leaf again,
Let the earth grow green with the springing grain."

She sang in faith, then she ceased to sing
And hid her head 'neath a soft, blue wing,
And waited for what the morn would bring.

Alas, and alas! ere the night was o'er
The east wind rose with a mighty roar
And the rain through the beechen boughs did pour.

And the blue-bird—who can tell the rest?
The fears that fought in her little breast
While there was no sun, no spring, no nest!

Three days—three nights of the wild March rain,
And the great sun smiled on the world again,
And the blue-bird piped to the sunlit plain.

"Dear sun in heaven, for days of grief,
Let the trees laugh out into tender leaf;
Let the fields grow green with the coming sheaf."

And the great sun answered: "My little bird,
You sang to God, and your song was heard.
The 'stormy wind fulfilling His word'

"Was one of His deep and sweet replies;
For up through the budding beech will rise
The rain that fell from the clouded skies—

"To weave the roof of the forest fane
That brings the birds to their own again
In the 'clear shining after rain.' "

New York City.

MRS. JELLABY AND HER HUSBAND'S BOTTLES.

BY MARSHALL SAUNDERS.
Author of "Beautiful Joe."

(Concluded.)

Mr. Jellaby settled back in his chair, and with a somewhat relieved face began the recital of his woes by asking abruptly: "Have you seen my wife?"

"No," replied the doctor.

"She's the sweetest—" continued Mr. Jellaby, then stopped, not being of a gushing disposition, and having no further adjectives at his command.

"I know," said his listener with a comprehensive nod, "they all are. Skip that."

"But she's peculiar," went on Mr. Jellaby.

"True again," said the doctor. "All the sex same way."

"She—" exclaimed Mr. Jellaby, with a violent expletive, and a sudden bursting forth of the temper that had been stored up for weeks—"she won't have a bottle of wine nor a glass in the house. She's smashed every one of them."

The doctor paused, his fork with a morsel of steak perched on it half way to his open mouth, and gaped stupidly at the extraordinary news conveyed to him by his friend.

"It began just after we were married," went on Mr. Jellaby, still in an exasperated tone of voice. "It was the day we arrived in Chicago—she was pleased with the house, and danced and skipped about like, like—"

"Never mind what she was like," said Dr. Grayson impatiently. "This sounds queer. I want to hear the rest of it."

"We were having lunch," pursued Mr. Jellaby; "she kept jumping up every few instants to run around to me, or to look at something new in the room that caught her eye. Presently I got up, and she said: 'Where are you going?' I told her to the cellar for a bottle of sherry. She shrieked at me—'Where?'—I was amazed, and told her again that I was going to the wine closet. Then she twisted up her face to cry, and I had to—"

"Comfort her," suggested his friend.

"Yes," said Mr. Jellaby sheepishly, "and she told me I had deceived her, and she never would have married me if she had known I was a drunkard. I told her I wasn't a drunkard, and she said if I didn't give up drinking I soon would be,—only this morning she was staggering about the room, showing me how I would walk when I got to be eighty."

Dr. Grayson burst into a roar of laughter, and being a bluff, outspoken man, said: "A pity you married her!"

"Yes, it is," said Mr. Jellaby, frankly, "but I've got to make the best of it, now."

"Send her back to—wherever she came from," said Dr. Grayson, with a curious look at him from under his eyelids. "Send her back,—she's no right to make your life miserable."

"Send her back!" and every bit of color faded from Mr. Jellaby's rubicund face. "Send her back,—what kind of a house would I have after she's been dancing through it? Why, I would go crazy. It would seem like a tomb."

"Fond of her, eh?" said the doctor, shyly and tentatively.

Mr. Jellaby smiled. "I love her," he said simply, "and so will you when you see her, and you'll regret that you didn't find her before I did, for she would have tempted you, too, from your bachelor ways."

"Tush, man," said the doctor, who was nevertheless well pleased. "I'm too old to marry—a good ten years older than you."

"Well, I've married her," said Mr. Jellaby, meditatively, "and the next thing is to reform her, and I want you to help me do it."

"Reform a temperance crank!" and Dr. Grayson laughed loudly. "That you'll never do—I know them. She'll reform you."

Regardless of the interruption, Mr. Jellaby took up the thread of his story. "That day we arrived home I managed to pacify her, and she let me get the bottle and bring it to the room. I told her that in the little hole of a village where she lived there wasn't a drop of any kind of liquor to be had, and I am not enough of a slave to the habit to carry a case of bottles about with me. While I was there I did without, and I never thought of mentioning the subject to her. My courtship was a short one, and then we came directly here. Finally, as I have just said, she let me get the bottle, but she wouldn't have it on the table where she could see it, and I had to put it on the floor behind one of the table legs. Then she didn't like the smell of the sherry, and took her plate over to the corner of the room. She acted like that for several days. If she was downstairs and I asked her to bring up a bottle or a glass she'd fall and break it. One day when she thought she was alone I saw her take some of that English port that I got at Trotback's sale and put it in the middle of the table and shut the cat up in the room with it. Naturally, the cat broke the bottles. My sherry is gone, the port is gone, and when I go out into the back yard I see a heap of broken glass. I had whole sets of wine glasses,—there isn't one left, and I believe that in her mania she has destroyed some of the water glasses."

"She's dishonest!" said the doctor, in a sudden fit of indignation. "She's no right to smash your glassware and spill your wines."

"No, she isn't," said Mr. Jellaby, with a puzzled face. "She can't help it, and this is where I want your advice. She says something impels her to destroy anything that reminds her of wines or liquors. The other day I had her in Danvers' restaurant giving her an ice-cream. Suddenly I felt her touching me under the table. She said: 'Harry, hold my hands, quick.' She didn't tell me what was the matter, but I believe she had caught sight of old Danvers sitting behind a screen with a glass of whisky before him. I think she wanted to go and take it away. When he left she was all right. Now I put it to you, Grayson, what can a man do with a wife like that?" and in deep perplexity, and yet with a certain sympathy for the absent cause of this perplexity, Mr. Jellaby stared at his friend.

The doctor looked puzzled. "No common case this,—you think she speaks the truth when she says she can't help it?"

"I do."

"Inconvenient kind of a wife," said the doctor musingly and sympathetically.

"Isn't she?" returned Mr. Jellaby with energy. "I never was in such an awkward place in my life. I've always been used to having a glass or two of sherry for my lunch. In fact I can't do without it. If I do, my head isn't clear for business in the afternoon. I've no peace now, though, in touching a drop of anything at home. I've been trying to take my lunch down town, but she hates that. She won't eat anything herself if I'm away, and it's a nuisance changing my restaurant every day, for if she knows where I am, she'll plan to have some shopping to do, and walk by the restaurant just for the sake of throwing me a glance. You can imagine," sarcastically, "how comfortable I feel inside, when I see her through the window staring at me with a hungry look, and eyes as big as saucers. I've had to give up taking home friends to meals, for there's the old racket about the wine."

"She's crazy," muttered the medical man to himself. Then aloud, "How does she look at such times?"

"She's always smiling," said Mr. Jellaby, peevishly. "I hate to have her go out alone. She's only a girl, and she attracts attention."

"A fool you, to have married her," said the doctor under his breath. "Well—" cheerfully and loudly, "she bothers you, yet doesn't worry herself."

"Yes she does," said Mr. Jellaby fretfully, "she cries in her sleep about it."

"Worse and worse," said the doctor. "A kind-hearted man you—Jellaby. You don't want this state of things to continue. What are you going to do about it?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Jellaby, irritably. "I wish you to tell me."

"Take your drinks between times, can't you?" said the doctor. "Have something now," and starting from his seat he laid his hand on a cupboard door.

"No, no," said Mr. Jellaby, miserably. "I've tested her sense of smell. It's something extraordinary—almost supernatural. If she catches a whiff of anything she won't—"

"Kiss you, eh?" said his friend sympathetically. "Poor boy—poor—boy."

He laughed uproariously, but Mr. Jellaby gazed hopelessly at the clock and said: "It's getting late, I must be off. Your advice now—quick."

"Don't know what to think unless it's a case of prenatal influence," said the doctor gravely. "I've a hobby in that direction. What do you know of your wife's antecedents?"

"Nothing much," said Mr. Jellaby carelessly. "I didn't care about any one but herself, but she talks to me a good bit about them. Her mother and father died when she was a baby, and she was brought up by a grandmother who died a year ago, and left her in the care of some relatives with whom I found her. They had a large, romping family of girls who made her as wild as themselves."

"What kind of people were her parents?"

"Poor and respectable, I think; her father was a carpenter."

"But their dispositions?"

"I don't know."

"Give me the address of her relatives and I'll write them. I'll call and see your wife, and do you come in again and I'll report to you. In the meantime you'd better let up on the drinks."

Mr. Jellaby was not pleased to hear this latter advice and went away shaking his head dolefully.

Two, three weeks passed away and then once more—this time in the evening—the two men found themselves facing each other in the little back room. Mr. Jellaby looked haggard and worn; the color was partly gone from his face, and he eyed the doctor not hungrily but thirstily, for during the three weeks not a drop of wine had passed his lips.

"Well," he said impatiently, "what have you got to report? I've been having an awful time of it. If any one had told me that I was dependent on a daily dram, I'd have said they were lying. Are you going to let me out of this purgatory?"

"How's your wife?" said Dr. Grayson, mischievously.

"Happy as a lark—she doesn't know what I'm suffering."

"She's come out of purgatory and you've gone in," said Dr. Grayson, dryly. "Listen now, and I'll tell you what I found out. You didn't know I was making inquiries in person?"

"Not so!" exclaimed Mr. Jellaby.

"Just so,—we don't miss each other in Chicago. I wanted a few days' run away from home so took the train out—went up the line of the New York Central and Hudson River railway to what you called that 'hole of a village'—charming spot. Village and mill in the valley—houses perched on side of hill, looking at a distance as if they were running race to the top. Here's the story for you. Twenty years ago an old woman, her son and son's wife, lived in one of those cottages on the hill. Old woman and daughter-in-law, good people,—son, a handsome ne'er-do-weel, breaking his mother's heart, given up to bad company and so on. They loved him, of course—women always foolish, Jellaby. One wild, stormy night when fast night express was tearing along between Albany and Poughkeepsie, and nearing village, young man took leave of boon companions and started for home. He got across railway track, part way up hill,—they found his marks after—slipped back and must have fallen across rails.

"Old mother and young wife waited in cottage above. When he did not come, the wife took lantern and threw shawl over her head and started out. She found him, and later on the old mother and neighbors found her. She had put her lantern on ground, thrown her shawl over mangled body, and knelt with hands stretched out in direction of village."

"Not dead!" ejaculated Mr. Jellaby in tones of horror.

"Yes, dead," said the doctor shortly. "Lots of women killed by drunken husbands."

"Why did they not tell me of it?" blurted poor Mr. Jellaby.

"Twenty years ago," said the doctor laconically. "Time to forget, and daughter—your wife—never knew. Well—report got out that dead woman had laid a curse on village. Saloon-keeper, or tavern-keeper they called him, died violent death. Drinking young men of place came to bad ends. Old grandmother lived on and didn't say much, but in quiet way got up temperance organization among women—what do they call those things now, T. W. C.—no—W. C. T. U. Doing what they call 'a great work.' No glass of liquor obtainable in place, as you found out. Young girls like your wife, brought up to look with holy horror on serpent in cup, and so on. Taught this by elders—nice women some of them, Jellaby—" slyly.

A sudden illumination came over Mr. Jellaby. There was a change in Dr. Grayson.

"You, you—Grayson!" he exclaimed; "you don't mean to say that—"

"Yes," replied the doctor composedly, "nice woman—aunt to your wife. Temperance crank also. Says I've got to give up my glass. Marriage next month. No cards. Powerful woman,—says Chicago is Mecca for temperance host. Is going to draw your wife in. We've got to yield, Jellaby. I've studied your wife's case—monomania's inherited. Laugh's put on. She's sensitive, and if you drink half a teaspoonful a day, you'll kill her. Total abstinence's the word, my boy," and Dr. Grayson clapped him joyously on the back.

Mr. Jellaby rushed from the room. One demon he had carried into the house with him,—he brought away seven. What he had undergone during the past three weeks in throwing off, just for a season, the chain of a habit that had bound him for years,—what he underwent during the next few months in throwing it off forever, no one knew but himself and his Maker.

Mr. Jellaby is a friend of mine, and I have the story from his own lips. It struck me as an odd one, and I thought I would put it down. Thousands of men—young men, middle-aged men—drift, year by year, into the awful gulf that is filled with unintentional drunkards. Mr. Jellaby has been rescued. Others, take warning—take warning, and turn in time into the only safe path in the world—that of total abstinence.

Little Mrs. Jellaby is going on her way gaily through life, not just understanding what she has saved her husband from in following out the dictates of what was rather a blind impulse than anything else. She has sobered down considerably, and is a bright and shining light among the temperance workers of Chicago. Her husband loves her dearly—nay, passionately. He, too, has become a thorough-going, temperance worker, and fully appreciates the priceless value of the service that his wife rendered him, in arousing him to a sense of his danger, and making him see that there was nothing for him to do but to throw himself at the feet of a merciful God, and implore His help in shaking off the shackles of a habit that had nearly gained the mastery over him, to the loss of his immortal soul.

Halifax, N. S.

THE SOCIALIST PROPAGANDA AND THE DRINK DIFFICULTY.

BY JAMES WHYTE.

Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance.

Certain of the propagandists of socialism have thought it necessary to teach their disciples and proclaim to the public that the economic condition of the industrial classes would be no whit improved by the total abandonment on their part of harmful drinking and other wasteful practices, inasmuch as the money thereby saved would, by the operation of an "iron law," inevitably be deducted from wages or added to rent. Is this sound doctrine? Let us see.

A working man with a family gets, say thirty shillings a week—I name that sum according to statistical experts—about the average amount at present earned per family by the working classes of this country. Now, few will assert that thirty shillings a week, even when the most is made of it, is too much, or, indeed, enough, for the proper maintenance of a family. But we must, to begin with, take things as they are. It is the sum upon the wise or unwise use of which so much of the weal or woe of the country depends; and there is a good deal more of purchasing power in it than is usually supposed, as is shown by the fact that in spite of the sadly wasteful way in which it is too often administered, the mass of the families of this country are maintained upon it in their present condition.

Let us look at some of the ways in which it is wasted through drinking. The family earns thirty shillings and spends, say, six shillings a week in drink. They thus, by indulgence in one single article of harmful luxury, reduce their resources available for the purchase of necessaries by nearly one-fifth. I say "luxury" because it is sheer nonsense at this time of day to talk of alcoholic liquor as a necessary of life. The healthiest people never touch it; and it causes a greater amount of disease than anything else in the country. This expenditure then of six shillings a week in drink is useless, and it leads to other outlay which is exceedingly wasteful and injurious. For instance, drinking causes loss of work through illness and produces inefficiency while at work; hence, the man who is placed at these physical and industrial disadvantages is liable to such crises in his affairs as induce him to borrow either from the pawnbroker, the loan-monger or some one else much oftener than he would have to do but for these disadvantages. Such borrowing always costs something, and often causes heavy loss. And what for the present purpose requires to be noted is that, as these borrowers do not themselves save, they employ pawnbrokers and money-lenders to save for them; and these, as is well known, often charge a very high rate for their services.

Then, in the purchase of necessaries, people who have but little money, or who purchase in small quantities on credit, (as many drinkers in consequence of drink-caused poverty do,) have to pay higher prices than are paid by purchasers of considerable quantities for ready money. That is, as they do not themselves save, they, by buying on credit, employ grocers, drapers and others to save for them, who exact very high rates of remuneration in the form of excessive prices.

Again, complaints are constantly being made about the exorbitant rents exacted from the poor. Well, people who own houses and let them must have a certain amount of return from their investments to enable them to carry on their business of house-building and house-letting. Periodical want of money, caused by drinking, makes rent collecting a much more difficult and tedious business than it would otherwise be. The increased work thus caused has to be paid for by the tenants; because, in the long run and in the average of cases, the landlord gets sufficient rent to cover not only interest at the customary rate on his investment, but also the extra outlay in collecting. In short, the watching and hunting of tenants has to be paid for out of an increase of rents. Then the injuries of all kinds caused to house property, whether due to negligence and apathy, to folly and violence, or to dishonesty resulting from intemperance, have to be made good out of the rent. Now, if from all these causes the money paid in rent is increased by so small a proportion as one shilling in the pound, the loss to the working classes of the country would, on the aggregate of about £52,000,000 which they pay as rent, be £2,600,000 a year.

Further, everybody who is acquainted with the condition of the masses of the people is aware that a very large proportion of them are in debt to small traders and money-lenders, and that drink is an important factor, both in putting them into the condition of indebtedness and in preventing them from getting out of it. This indebtedness calls into existence a great army of debt collectors, bailiffs, auctioneers and others who, being non-producers, have to be maintained by other people's labors. Can it doubted that to a great extent they are maintained by the buyers on credit and the borrowers of the working classes? Others may be worse in the matter indicated than the working people; but the fact—if fact it be—does not in the least lessen the load of misery which these latter bring on themselves by their folly and maladministration.

Still further, it is notorious that public-houses and drinking-clubs are schools of gambling and betting. In their peculiar moral atmosphere the gambling spirit is the dominating influence, and a large proportion of those who frequent such places succumb to it. Swarms of professional bookmakers and betting men make a good living—or rather, an expensive one—out of their winnings; that is, out of other people's losings. And these losers belong, to a very large extent—although by no means exclusively—to the wage-earners. This means that an important proportion of the insufficient wages of the workers is voluntarily devoted to the maintenance in luxury of multitudes of non-producing and much-consuming social parasites. There are many other ways in which, through drinking, the wages of labor, if not wasted on a large scale, are fritted away on a small scale, as, for example, in the foolish wastefulness in housekeeping caused by female intemperance, the cost of doctors, drugs, quackeries, etc., and the loss occasioned by drink-caused failure to keep up the payments to benefit and insurance societies.

It will be observed that I have been dealing chiefly with drink-originated influences, which waste the wages actually received, and that the loss which these inflict is so great that the proportion of the wages of labor at present actually devoted to the purchase of necessaries and comforts must be very much less than it ought to be and considerably less than is usually supposed.

But there is another side to the question. The drink habit not only causes the waste of a large portion of the wages actually earned, but it also greatly impairs the power of earning. Such facts as the following make this clear. Sixty years ago, when drunkenness among the working classes was certainly not more prevalent than it is at present, a parliamentary committee, which inquired fully into the subject, reported that at least one-sixth of the productive power of the wage-earners was lost or destroyed by intemperance. A year or two ago Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., was told by General Roberts that thirteen thousand teetotal soldiers were equal in value to fifteen thousand non-abstainers. The well-known railway contractor, Brassey, when constructing the Great Western railway, found that a certain gang of navvies, every one of whom was a teetotaler, were able habitually to do as much work per man in eight and one-half hours, as any other gang on the line could do in ten hours. These cases certainly go to support the conclusion that such drinking as is and has long been common, impairs the efficiency and productiveness of the workers, by about one-sixth; and it is beyond doubt that it also reduces, to an important extent, the average duration of life. Teetotal working men at twenty years of age have an "expectation" of five years and seven months longer life than non-teetotal working men of the same age. And it is certain that the evil conditions and habits which shorten life so much, must also deteriorate it and render it less efficient while it lasts.

But even abstainers have often suffered much in one way or another from the drink evil. A rather considerable proportion of them have, at one time or other of their lives, been intemperate; and, in their days of dissipation, they did incurable injury to their powers of thinking, observing and working. Many of them, too, were the children of drunken fathers or mothers, or of parents who both were drunken. They consequently were much less richly endowed in body and mind than would have been the case had their parents been entirely sober people. In addition to this, numbers of them spent their childhood and early youth in the midst of the deteriorating and degrading influences, physical, spiritual and mental, of a drunkard's home; while, on the other hand, many of the alcohol users, whose physique had been deteriorated by their own drinking, enjoyed, in their childhood, a highly favorable environment. It is clear, therefore, that in any comparison made at present between the effects of teetotalism and those of alcohol-using, the former is heavily handicapped.

The question of how to obtain sufficient wages is continually exercising the minds of working-class leaders and other sociologists; but the question of what to do with the wages when obtained is generally ignored. It seems to be forgotten that the character of the employment of the mass of the people depends on that of their expenditure. As it requires at least as much wisdom, as much knowledge, as much power of administration, as high a capacity of adapting means to ends, to spend thirty shillings a week wisely, as to earn it; and as the well-being of the nation, and especially of the working classes, is almost as much dependent upon wise expenditure as upon increase of income, the persistent neglect of this vital matter cannot be excused. In the present condition of society, even higher natural powers are probably needed to enable one to spend a week's wages to the best advantage than are required to earn them. Bread-winners are usually trained to their work. They are almost always carefully supervised. Out of the home are the issues of life; yet in multitudes of cases women are left to pick up as best they can a knowledge of the very important facts and principles on which home making depends. The consequence is that the management of the home, the most important of employments, is carried on by unskilled labor, and is therefore badly done.

Professor Marshall, who is probably the greatest living authority on economics, says: "A skilled housewife with ten shillings a week to spend on food will often do more for the health and strength of the family than an unskilled one with twenty." This is an evil which, it is true, prevails in some measure even amongst the sober and well-intentioned; but its extent is greatly increased, and its malign influence enormously aggravated by alcoholic intemperance in all its phases and degrees, especially amongst women; and no increase in the amount of wages will do much to increase the well-being of the working people, until this crucial matter has been resolutely and rightly dealt with by themselves.

London, Eng.

"EACH man's life
The outcome of his former living is."

"THE battle of our life is won,
And heaven begun,
When we can say: 'Thy will be done.'"

"DEAR Lord, until
These restless hearts in Thy deep love are still,
We pray Thee, teach us how to do Thy will."

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

II.

Production; Classification.

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

Our last lesson was intended to show production as a whole; how, by the subdivisions of employments, by a natural growth in coöperation, each individual was free to do as he pleased, while still active in both conferring and receiving benefits.

This picture is only partially true to-day, because all governments more or less interfere with the free flow of exchanges. In some countries the hand of excessive and burdensome taxation is so heavy as to almost stop production.

This tax upon trade, to soften it, is called a "tariff," and when particularly excessive, is called "protection"—to sweeten it.

In this way vast sums are collected annually from the people, over one million dollars a day in this country, one-third only of which goes into the public treasury to be used for the benefit of all, minus the expense of collecting it; and the other two-thirds into the pockets of those who are ready to affirm by all that is high and great that there is nothing outside of religion so good for a poor man as to allow the rich to "protect him."

There is, to-day, not a college or a text-book in our land, of any repute, but declares the tariff upon an article to be a tax upon that article; and that the tax is paid by the one who consumes the article; and that "protection" is only a more burdensome tax. Cobden settled this question in the repeal of the corn laws. Herbert Spencer has shown most clearly that such governmental interference with trade is an infringement upon human rights. Trade is one of the greatest promoters of peace and wealth, uniting hostile nations in friendly intercourse.

There are four modes of production: Adapting, growing, transporting and exchanging. In each of these, labor adds some value to earth's substances. By adapting; as when a tree is turned into boards, doors, chairs; sand made into glass; iron ore into stoves; granite into houses or bridges; copper into wire, kettles, lamps; clay into china, etc. By growing; as when man adds the forces of nature to his labor, and raises cattle, fruit, grains, etc.

But the grain in the barn; boards at the mill, cattle on the plain, glass at the factory, are produced only for those near enough to make use of them to satisfy their desires. They are not yet produced for those living at a distance, until transported, and perhaps exchanged. Just as the first producer adds a value to the raw material by his labor, so the transporter adds a value by carrying it to those in need; and the exchanger, by keeping constantly on hand a fresh supply. Wherever one can purchase of the first producer and so do his own transporting and exchanging, at less cost to himself than the added value of the transporter and exchanger, he usually does so; for each one seeks to satisfy his desires by the least exertion. But if he has no time, nor conveniences for so doing, his labor spent in other directions will easiest pay the added price.

Subdivisions of labor generally make it easier for all. But the wealth produced by exchanging is far greater than the simple convenience of retail, or saving by wholesale.

The transporters and exchangers are the great agents that facilitate the divisions of labor, and advance civilization, adding greatly to the power of each man's labor.

Herein lies the mistake of the Grangers, in considering the middle-man a non-producer; whereas wealth is produced more rapidly by exchange than by any other mode, else each man is limited to the work of his own hands, and fruits of his own soil and climate.

CLASSIFY THE PARTS.

Everything in nature seems a confused jumble until some scientist discovers amid the thousand substances looking so unlike, there is some one important property each has in common. He then classes all these under one division; another group under another division, until, at last, all the animals in the world are under four grand divisions; all the plants under two. When any subject, however great, is thus simplified, the mind can easily grasp it. Both the clearness of a subject and its conclusions depend upon correct classification.

First: All things created by God, such as natural resources, the earth, sea, mineral deposits, winds, tides, every force of nature—all these may be called land—God's gift to man.

The second class includes the useful exertion of all mankind, whether wage-earners or employers, workers with brain or muscle. This broad class is called labor.

The third class includes all the things which labor has produced from land to satisfy human desires. This class is termed wealth.

There are then, strictly but two divisions, land and labor. But since man is a tool-using animal, he no sooner produces wealth than he takes some of it to assist him in producing more. To distinguish this wealth from that which is being consumed (or used) to satisfy desires, it is called capital.

A loaf of bread in a bake-shop is capital, for it is being used to produce more wealth by exchange. On the table it is wealth, for it is being consumed. A sewing-machine used to make garments for sale is capital; used to make garments for the family it is wealth, for the machine thus used is being consumed (worn out) to satisfy needs or desires.

It will be seen then, that capital is easily turned into wealth, and vice versa. But these two terms, capital and wealth, should never be confused with land and labor; for land and labor are but the two parts, which taken together (assisted by capital) produce wealth. To call either wealth would be the same as saying a part is equal to the whole.

Herein lies the chief mistake of the Nationalists or Socialists, in wrong classification. When they use the term land, they mean the same as described above. But the word labor, with them means only the wage-earner, i. e. some men, not all men. But their worst confusion lies in their use of the term capital. By it they mean, some men (i. e. capitalists) some wealth and some land. They have, then, only one clear, distinct factor—land, and even this they constantly confuse with capital.

Hence, the labor question with them is: How shall some men, with some wealth and some land (capital), be prevented from over-reaching some other men, with no wealth and no land?

This, at first sight, seems just what we wish to know. But this takes for granted that the present condition of affairs is a natural one; that is, that there must always be classes—a capitalist class and wage-earning class, instead of, as we have seen, a natural growth towards coöperation, in which, more and more, each man becomes his own employer and capitalist. The Nationalists' remedy is to kill present monopoly by producing a greater one, viz.: Government.

The study of the relation of some men to other men is not political economy, for economics knows no classes, deals only with fundamental principles that apply alike to all men.

What power is there in each of the three factors that produce all wealth, land, labor and capital, or their relation to each other? Should it be found that one controls a certain power, strong enough to enslave the other, the way out will be to take from all men such power; not passing laws against the rich for the benefit of the poor, but treating all men alike before the law; giving no one a chance to reap where he does not sow, and likewise, no one sowing where he cannot surely and easily reap the full reward of his labor.

Wollaston, Mass.

*Copyrighted.

MEMORIES OF THE WHITE CITY.

VI.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

It was a February day when I first beheld the White City. The snow lay white upon the ground, and the gondolas and chair boys were not yet. Balsamic scents of woods from near and far made sweet the air. The first object of which I had a "realizing sense," was the liberty pole from Idaho, a mighty fir from the slopes of the Cascades. The last thing I saw that day was a dwarf fir from Japan. It stood in a charming blue and white pot, and the placard upon it said it (the tree) was two hundred years old. It was as picturesque in outline as an artist could desire, and was probably a wonder of the dwarfer's art, but, for some reason, this specimen of human cleverness saddened me.

We had set out to visit the Eskimo village before a thaw had reduced its attractions, and we found it safe behind a tight, green fence. The tiny houses seemed to be of boards faced with hemlock slabs, and one was covered all over with a species of lichen; the white man in attendance said it was caribou moss, which was held in place by coarse wire netting. Each house was about fifteen feet square and one story high, and came up to a sharp gable. Each one had a tiny porch, with an equally sharp gable. All sorts of things were in those porches—tubs, pails, saws and coats. At one side was a snow hut, round as a nutmeg melon and smooth as if sand-papered, a fact much enjoyed by the small Eskimos sliding down it by the simple process of clasping the arms about the shins, bracing the feet and receiving a push from some obliging friend. Two very small Eskimos who had been racing, each one with a foot in a barrel hoop, attached themselves to us. Both had eyes like black beads, hair like jute, and a broad, good-humored faces, with cheeks like Baldwin apples. Each wore a sealskin jacket, to which was joined a hood that ran up into a peak at the back, and sealskin breeches that ended in odd-looking sealskin boots. Spasmodically they talked as fast as their little red tongues could fly. I suspected their object was, to quote Mrs. Burnett, "remuneration." As I was sure to pay in the end, I let them talk. A dozen or more children were sliding down the bank of the frozen pond, without sleds, their arms clasped tightly about their shins. There was neither quarreling nor pushing. They played like good-natured old men, and the bald spots on the seats of their little seal-skin breeches added a last touch of the comic to their appearance. A little brown man, dressed exactly like the children save that he had calf-skin shoes on his very little feet, bowed low to me. "He, madam, is there," and he waved his hand at the little house opposite. "Everybody comes very soon to see him."

He turned about and I followed him. The little house was very crowded with an odor of codfish. Its one room was not plastered. A square box set upon a post and fastened close up in one corner, served for a bed. From a wooden frame above it hung pink cretonne curtains, and from behind them emerged tiny Mrs. Tuktooksinka, holding a scrap of a yellow baby, with a mist of black hair and bits of hands that flopped about aimlessly. "Name Christopher Columbus," said the father proudly, and motioning me to be seated on the bench near the cheap cooking-stove. Then he placed himself beside me in the most cozy way. "I call him William Palissier, too," he added, confidentially; "that was my grandfather's name. But Christopher Columbus because born here."

"And what," I asked, "is his name in Eskimo?"

"Toon-tab," replied the father, stroking his wisp of beard. Then he bent his face close to mine, and added in a whisper, "We have but one name up in the north. Ummm! Yes. One name's enough in a very cold country."

Recollecting that a Palissier had been marshal of France, I softly touched the baby's velvet cheek. Poor little mite! My best wish is he may adorn the simple life to which he was born, whether he be called Christopher Columbus William Palissier Tuktooksinka or plain Toon-tab.

Our last call was the most interesting. The father was carving dolls out of walrus ivory, and the mother was dressing them in sealskin suits. The young woman daughter was making drawings of a ship to sell, and wore a long redingote of sealskin, embroidered at the neck and wrists with red and blue beads. Beneath this was a black silk skirt. There were pots of artificial flowers set on the shelf that went around three sides of the room, and before the young woman lay a very large and brilliantly colored accordion. I had insisted upon knocking, a formality the guide said was unnecessary, but it had its reward. The young woman thanked me.

"We have felt the cold more here than at home," said the father, sadly. "We came from Port Rigoulette, and live in a snug log house, in which there are six rooms. There is a place for everything at our home," here he glanced sympathetically at his wife, who sat very much drawn up in her chair to hide her costume, which was a short sack and trousers of sealskin, "and our women dress like you. The men wear the skin suits only in midwinter, and then only when hunting or hauling. We had to make these trousers for the women on ship," and he put out his lip and glanced down indignantly at his old wife's nether garments. Tears, the slow tears of age, came into her eyes.

"I wear them to save my daughter," said she to me. "She is young, I could not let her feelings be so hurt."

"And I would far rather wear them than have my mother," interposed the daughter quickly. "If we do not wear them, they refuse us coal."

"It makes everybody feel bad," continued the father. "All the women are ashamed to walk around. Yes, we are Innuits, but we are people with feelings," and he shook his head at me by way of emphasis.

The children who had followed us suddenly began talking at once, and one held a little purse from which hung the tail of some furry animal. He opened this purse in the most expressive manner, gazed into its emptiness, and then at me.

"They are telling you how they love apples," said the father in answer to my inquiries. "They never saw apples till they came here. The girl is Pomeguneak, the child of a family from the far north, and the boy Pomneak, is her adopted brother." Pomeguneak leaned up against me affectionately as I fumbled for my pocket-book, but the boy stood up straight and expectant thinking no doubt of apples.

"I have seen apples once or twice," continued the father, "but never a cow or a horse till I reached New Brunswick. Yes, your country is interesting, but, madam, after all, home is always best."

. . . . . .

I fancied my happiest day at the Fair had come when I heard Frau Materna's glorious voice float above the mingling motives in the closing numbers of "Die Gotterdammerung." And again I was certain it had come when I heard the nuptial music of Lohengrin; but when one perfect day I heard the wonderful chorus and orchestra in the Messiah, I felt as if listening to the heavenly host before the Throne of God—and that I know was my happiest day at that vanished dear delight, the White City by the Lake.

South Evanston, Ill.

(To be continued.)

OUR ENGLISH LETTER.

DEAR WHITE RIBBON COMRADES:—Since my last letter to you we have had several stirring events in the temperance world. It is wonderful how public opinion is growing upon this subject, when one remembers how much scorn and contempt it excited only a few years ago. The growth of ideas is a very striking thing to watch. Every reform seems always to go through the same stages. God puts the conception of it, and the longing for it, in a few hearts, but it is met at first with indifference and ridicule. Then, as it captures more hearts and begins to be heard of by more people, it excites anger and opposition and reproach. Until finally all hearts are captured, and it becomes a universal belief.

I have lately met with some lines that express this. I call them a comment on Matthew 13:31-33, which seems to be the Bible declaration of what I have been saying: "Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field. Which indeed is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. Another parable spake he unto them: The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

The lines are these—by whom written I do not know:

"God's fiat rules it all. One day He wills
A thought, a want should burst upon the world,
Then grow, and spread, and mix with everything;
Possess some men, win hearts, and delve a groove,
Though kings may trample on it, and may seek
To gag. Only that they some morn may see
At diet, conclave, this the scorned idea
That they had spurned, all suddenly expand
And soar above their heads, bearing the globe
In hand, and on its brow a tiara!"

It seems as though it had been this way with the temperance reform, and the labor reform, and many other of the great social questions of the day. Once despised, they are now lifted to the place of honor, and even parliaments are forced to discuss them. Our leader, Lady Henry Somerset, is helping on this growth of ideas in England at the present time more than almost any one else. Everybody listens to her, and she is a magnificent radical about everything. She is having several series of great meetings all over England, with audiences of four and five thousand, and no words of mine could tell you the eagerness with which she is listened to nor the profound impression she creates. Those of us who have known the triumphant career of our beloved American leader, Miss Willard, can picture what Lady Henry's career is like.

Just now she is advocating everywhere the passage of a bill for dealing with habitual drunkards, which will give power to the justices who heretofore have been obliged by the law to sentence people taken up for drunkenness to prison—to send them instead to reformatory homes, where they will have hygienic and medical treatment, and where there may be some hopes of a cure. We of the British Women's Temperance Association are now making a great effort to collect money for the starting of such homes in the hope that if they are all ready the government will be more willing to make this desired change in their treatment of habitual drunkards.

A lecture by my daughter, Mrs. Costelloe, on the subject of how to study the European picture galleries may interest you. It was given to a woman's development society. This society is a company of ladies, both married and single, who meet to discuss all the living social questions of the day, and whose aim is to develop themselves in harmony with the spirit of the times on all philanthropic and intellectual lines.

Mrs. Costelloe developed her subject something after the following fashion: She said the great difficulty with all amateur students of art is to know what pictures to study and admire. The directions given in Bædaker or Murray are, of course, all based upon the names at present attributed to the pictures as their makers, and as these are in so many cases absolutely wrong, the result is that people study as the works of great masters very inferior copies of their works done by their pupils, or even the exceedingly mediocre, original work of those pupils themselves. As a consequence their taste is vitiated, and they are educated down in art instead of up. They feel, for instance, that it is the proper thing to admire Botticelli, and consequently they try to force themselves into this admiration before every picture attributed to him. But as it is a fact that a large proportion of the pictures attributed to him were not painted by him, but are very poor copies of his pictures, it is manifest that a great deal of bad taste in art must be cultivated in this way, and that such students must become sooner or later almost unable to enjoy true art. In the National Gallery in London there are about twenty pictures attributed to Botticelli, only three of which are genuine, the others being the work of very inferior copyists or pupils. And yet several of these false Botticellis were bought for immense sums and are given places of extra honor.

It is quite possible, however, to discover which are the genuine productions of any especial master, and which are false. She said that every artist of any note has a manner of painting that is as characteristic of him as his manner of writing and as easily distinguished; and that just as no amount of assertion would make us believe a signature was really our friend's unless it was in that friend's handwriting, so no amount of assertion concerning a picture, either on the picture itself or in a catalogue (not even in the infallible Bædaker!) ought to convince us that such picture was really by the man named, unless we can see the handwriting of his brush. Therefore our first duty in studying art as critics or as mere enjoyers, must be to become familiar with this signature of the brush.

Then we must know what to look for in a picture. We must make ourselves acquainted with the spirit of the time when it was painted, and must try to discover the probable message the artist had to give to the world. We must not look for the fulfillment of our ideas in his picture, but for the revelation of his. We must, in short, read the picture as we would a book of the same period, not minding the old-fashioned spelling nor the quaint and perhaps even awkward construction of the sentences, but must try to see through these to the heart of the book or of the picture, and must try to see the man's soul in his handiwork, instead of stopping short at this handiwork, and judging the man's soul by its imperfections. All this requires study, historical as well as artistic, but this study will amply repay any real lover of art in the mental and moral education it gives, and in the keen sense of enjoyment it would create. One meets so many disappointed travelers, especially Americans, who have come abroad for a year's study, full of anticipations, and who are going back disheartened and weary, simply because they have not known how to study or enjoy the very things they have come abroad to see.

There are women who might become the amateur's guide to European art galleries, and give all who may desire it the benefit of what they have learned, and might make quite a little money in this way.

Yours fraternally,

London, Eng. HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

THE NEW CONTEST BUREAU FOR WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You will kindly permit me again to say a word to your many readers, by way of explanation. I am in daily receipt of letters of inquiry, saying, "In THE UNION SIGNAL of January 25 ult., is a notice of a New Oratorical Bureau which you have inaugurated. Please send me soon the prices, and when to obtain it."

To all such inquirers I would say the Superintendent for Ohio is Mrs. S. M. Perkins, 24 Livington Street, Cleveland, Ohio; for Kansas, Miss Helen L. Kimber, Parsons, Kan.; Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, Red Wing, Minn., for her state. All correspondence from the above named states to me will be referred to them for answer. These are all commissioned superintendents who are provided with medals, circulars, etc., and can give all the information desired. I am anxiously looking around for superintendents for every state in the Union, and should any persons, male or female, who are in deep, honest sympathy with the doctrines of woman's suffrage, and will take the time necessary, have the strength, tact patience, and devotion to God and humanity, I solicit their correspondence, and would be glad to send them their commission. This work can be made to pay financially, if managed rightly. This system is no more expensive than the Demorest, notwithstanding these medals are bought and the Demorest donated.

The following are the Cooper Rules of Contest:

1. When no less than six persons, and as many more as are desired, male or female, not under the age of ten years, trained by some competent elocutionist, if possible, shall declaim before an audience selections I have prepared for that purpose, or other selections, indorsed by any of my state superintendents, by three competent judges, strangers to all the contestants preferred, who shall decide to have made the best recitation, according to the rules of elocution and oratory, shall be awarded a silver or gold medal in a morocco and satin-lined case.

2. When no less than six contestants have won a silver medal, these six may compete for a gold medal, designed and made for this purpose.

3. When in turn six have won a small gold medal, these six may compete for a grand gold medal.

4. When six contestants have won each a grand gold medal, these may compete for a gold medal, set with one diamond, three pearls and three turquoise, a most beautiful jewel.

The above are the principal rules, but more will be published further on.

Yours in earnest for the franchise of American women,

Jerseyville, Ill. M. M. COOPER.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised.—Heb. 10:23.

A secret which I have been aware of for some time, I must now divulge to you, my sisters. My Items this week will, of necessity, take somewhat the form of a farewell, for I am going on a pilgrimage, with the end in view, dear white-ribboners, of aiding you in your great work for humanity. In return I ask for the daily prayers of all women of faith, that I may be sustained and upheld, that the hearts of those that I appeal to may be responsive, so that they may give of their abundance, as they shall wish they had when they stand before God's tribunal to give an account of their earthly stewardship.

At the last meeting of the Board of Temple Trustees, it was voted unanimously that the president of the Board, not later than April 1, should commence an aggressive campaign to raise funds sufficient to buy up principal and interest of all stock and bonds belonging to the Temple, and, if possible, secure sufficient before the next convention in October—when the National W. C. T. U. attains its majority—to pay for the balance of stock not yet in the possession of the Trustees, which will make them, in behalf of the National W. C. T. U., virtual owners of the building. It was also decided that at present there should be no attempt to send any agent into the field to secure funds, other than the president of the Board and those she may be able to interest.

A woman, single-handed and alone, going forth in such times as these to secure $1,250,000 seems to the mind unilluminated by faith, a most Quixotic undertaking. But on the other hand, remembering in whose strength she goes; that He has promised to be "a mouth-piece and wisdom"; "a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night"; that "all things are possible to him that believeth"; that "the gold and the silver, the cattle upon a thousand hills are His," why should there be any doubt or fear? Beside, has He not a host of consecrated children all over the land who count their possessions, not only by hundreds of thousands, but by millions? If they understood that the ownership of the Temple by the W. C. T. U. meant greatly enlarged work by the society, in educational, reformative and preventive lines, the ultimate outcome of which must be Prohibition, they would gladly contribute from their abundance to the enterprise. We shall ask for sums from fifty thousand to one dollar. The following is the latest classification we have made:

Class No.	1.	2	persons	each	contribute	$50,000 $100,000
"	2.	4	"	"		25,000 100,000
"	3	20	"	"		10,000 200,000
"	4	20	"	"		5,000 100,000
"	5	50	"	"		2,000 100,000
"	6	100	"	"		1,000 100,000

Those who put their names down for any of the above sums will not be asked to pay until the class in which their names appear has been fully subscribed and the fact certified by the following four well-known bankers of Chicago: Mr. Lyman J. Gage, president First National Bank; Mr. E. J. Keith, president Metropolitan National Bank; Mr. G. B. Shaw, president American Trust and Savings Bank; Mr. H. C. Speer, investment banker.

The following nine classes are asked to pay the sum to which they place their name at the time they subscribe, or else, on or before October, 1895.

Class No.	7	200	persons	each	to pay	$500.00 $100,000
"	8	400	"	"	"	250.00 100,000
"	9	2,000	"	"	"	100.00 200,000
"	10	1,000	"	"	"	50.00 50,000
"	11	1,000	"	"	"	25.00 25,000
"	12	2,500	"	"	"	10.00 25,000
"	13	5,000	"	"	"	5.00 25,000
"	14	5,000	"	"	"	3.65 18.250
"	15	6,750	"	"	"	1.00 6,750

The amount asked for in the fifteen classes amounts to $2,250,000. This seems a large sum with what has already been sent in—but it must be remembered that interest must be paid on stock in order to secure it, and a premium must be offered to secure the bonds which are out. When we have gained all we have asked, should there be any surplus it will go to enrich the National treasury.

All unions and individuals who have paid or pledged any of the above sums since January 1, 1894, will be counted in the above classes. Consequently we have got a good start for classes 9, 14 and 15. It is hoped that all who read this will, according as God has prospered them, send in their money and pledges as fast as possible to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson. The writer expects to be well on her journey before this article reaches you. She will take it as a great favor if any white-ribboner having knowledge of persons of wealth whose sympathies are with the temperance reform, would write her, giving the address of such parties. It would be a great aid in the herculean task.

Mrs. H. B. Kells, one of the valued editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, and secretary of the Board of Temple Trustees, has kindly consented to take charge of the "Temperance Temple Items" column during my absence. I go forth, my sisters, on this mission, knowing not what may befall me. I only know I have heard the Master's call, and have answered, "Here am I, Lord." By your prayers, sympathy and aid, you can do much to lift the burden that has been laid upon me. Through this column you will, no doubt, hear from me occasionally. Any letters personally addressed to me at Chicago will be forwarded.

All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Send two cent stamp for mite-box.

TRUE EASTER LOVE.

THY fishes breathe but where thy waters roll;
Thy birds fly but within thy airy sea;
My soul breathes only in thy infinite soul;
I breathe, I think, I love, I live but thee,
Oh, breathe, oh, think,—O Love, live into me;
Unworthy is my life till all divine,
Till thou see in me only what is thine.

Then shall I breathe in sweetest sharing, then Think in harmonious consort with my kin;
Then shall I love well all my Father's men,
Feel one with theirs the life my heart within.
Oh, brothers! sisters holy! hearts divine!
Then shall I be all yours and nothing mine—
To every human heart a mother-twin.

—George MacDonald.

"POOR NAN'S" EASTER.

BY M. M.

Do you know "Poor Nan"? Probably not, for I fancy it is not often you visit "Paupers' Paradise"—as the lower part of C.— is called—nor is it likely that you ever exchange calls with the inmates of that wretched hovel, the very worst in "Paradise," where "Poor Nan" and the wrecked humanity she still called father existed, not lived, for the one was dead to holy impulses, the other, to the happiness of childhood,—both were dead to God.

So long ago, "Poor Nan" could but just remember, there had been life and love, a happy home. But one sad day the death-angel, long hovering near, bore away the beautiful wife leaving one heart bitter and reckless in his grief, while little Nan, ever so full of sunshine, sobbed day after day for "my mamma." It was then that loving hearts aching with sympathy for the lonely child, christened her "Poor Nan."

Sad the tale, but too often verified to be thought mere fiction! The desolate husband, forgetful of the double obligation now resting upon him because of the grief alike his and his child's, listened to the tempter's voice to drown his sorrow in wine—that basest of deceptions, as if adding sorrow to sorrow could stay the power of grief! sold himself to the demon of drink and with more than usual rapidity, hurried down the drunkard's pathway. "Oh, poor Nan!" exclaimed those who watched the terrible changes wrought in the once lovely home.

Lower and lower he sank, dragging the child with him into a humbler home, then one with less comforts, each change graded to the character of the saloons he patronized, till now, scarcely tolerated in the lowest dens, they were reduced to the deepest poverty. A sorry apology for a room in a damp, dark cellar afforded them shelter—but that was all. Furniture there was none.

There had been a ——, I had well-nigh said "stove"—but you wouldn't call the rusty iron thing which had stood, propped up with stones, discharging all its smoke into the room, by that respectable name. But then, you see, Nan did, for on those rare days when she could find a few bits of sticks to sizzle over borrowed coals, she could set thereon her one leaky basin, the leak to the back and over the ashes, and actually get a potato warmed through—if there chanced to be a potato!

But now, to-day, the besotted father had carried even this away—given it for old iron to the little "tough" whose father had promised "old Bill" a drink for it. "Poor Nan!" even the other residents of this street had come to say, and more than one sighed a little more deeply and softened her voice, more used to jangling than pitying, this day as they said, Poor, poor Nan!"

And what of Nan herself? She watched this last sacrifice to her father's demon appetite with never a word of remonstrance. Did she not care? Yes, if child of ten, with life so bruised and crushed as hers can rally enough to care. What really passed through her mind was the half-defined thought that by and by when the winter days came again this would make it easier for death to take her. You think she cried? Poor Nan! she had forgotten how to cry. Grief that in child like her should have been poured out in tears burned into her heart and brain like coals of fire. Poor Nan! straying listlessly down one street, up another, on, on, anywhere, unheeding aught but the heavy aching where people's hearts are, wishing she could be now white and still as Mag Mants was last week and be put in the ground where Mag's mother said she'd "never be cold or hungry or suffering any more." Oh, poor Nan! Cursed be the traffic that made death and the grave thy most coveted gift!

Suddenly a burst of music arrested poor Nan's thought and paralyzed for the instant her roaming feet. It was the "Gloria." How the rare, exultant strain swelled out upon the air that Easter morning, as if dropping from fingers inspired to tell the world that He who was slain to purchase redemption lives to bestow it upon asking hearts.

Into the crushed heart swept memories of the golden days when mother's voice and mother's fingers brought forth music sweet as this, and in the hush of prayer that followed Nan stood panting, following with hungry eyes the belated people who passed those doors to her so mystic, wishing she, too, could enter. Then came the old triumphant song, "Joy to the world, the Lord has come"—its wonderful harmony brought out by hundreds of rich voices. Could she? Dare she? rang in poor Nan's thought till, as the last note died away, she stole into the corner seat close by the door and sat statue-like, as if eyes only had power of motion. "Such pretty flowers!" Nan wondered if she could have died and gone to heaven?

"Who shall change this vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body?" Slowly and distinctly Dr. Eviland announced his text. Good Deacon Jones and certain other critical minds regretted that the Doctor, who had heretofore proven himself so apt in his choice of themes, should this morning of all others, when Dr. Brown was present, choose this subject for an Easter sermon. But the criticism, if known, would have been wholly lost on the venerable man who had seemed to rest in the "secret place of the Most High," while the Spirit guided his thought and gave him an inspired view of this possibility of blessedness as the result of Christ's resurrection.

Deacon Jones forgot his fears, and marveled at the appropriateness of the text. Ah! he did not know of the pleadings with God that had marked the preparation of this sermon; did not know that Dr. Eaton had come to this hour, unheeding the flowers, the music, rare and beautiful as they were. All-absorbing was the prayer breathed all the week, "Lord, let this be the Easter of some soul!" What wonder that he spake with more than human power?

"Who shall change this vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body!" The risen, glorified Christ! Nan's loathsome wreck of a father, dead, buried in sin! Nan shuddered at the contrast—it was so awful! And yet—could it be? Did he not say it? Burned into Nan's memory was that one o'ermastering thought, even its very wording:

"Child of sorrow, art thou tired of this vile body? Come this glorious Easter morn to the divine Alchemist who alone hath this transforming power. Hast thou a friend for whom thou covetest this unspeakable change? Delay not, but bring him with thee. To-day is God's time, and the promise is to all. It matters not how vile the body, how unlike the image. Will you come, come to-day?"

All else was lost to the panting girl; all but to know where to come! not for one second did she lose sight of the saintly man till his own door received him from sight.

. . . . . .

Old Bill's shambling steps were sharply arrested as Nan, with a look upon her face that well-nigh transformed her into something like her former beauty, seized his arm and gasped, "Come, it's the 'changing day'; come, we must go, it's getting late! Come."

Will power long enchained could not resist this pleading, resolute child, and back through alleys lined with sin, into the streets, cleaner, purer, whose air old Bill had not breathed in many a day, even past the lovely place he had once called home, Nan, with flying feet led him. Up to the front door of the parsonage she came with a persistent boldness which the maid who answered her resounding knock could not understand, and would have shut the door upon them, but "Stop!" rang out from pallid, Nan's tense lips. "Where is he? I must see him—the man."

"Who is it?" came in the tones Nan knew at once, and Dr. Eviland appeared at the door.

"Oh, sir, it's me—and I've brought him—Is He here? Can't we see Him 'who shall change this vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body'?"

Tenderly Dr. Eviland took a hand of each and led the way into his study. Ah! the angels must have hushed their harps to listen to that simple, prayerful talk with the Father as he asked for wisdom to lead both the needy ones to the risen Saviour.

Then followed the matchless story of the sinless One who lived, died, rose again, that he might be able to work this mighty change. Speedily did the Spirit transform the willing child's heart into His own likeness, but the struggle was long and terrible with the powers of darkness that had tyrannized over that wretched man. Conscience, so long unheeded, now quickened by the Holy Spirit, goaded him with countless scorpion stings. Again and again did he cry out, while the sweat rolled from his agonized face, "I'm wading in hell! I'm wading in hell! O God, have mercy upon me!"

Never unheeded did that prayer fall from a repentant heart. The holy peace of God stilled the wild raging of that awful storm and the sunshine of God's forgiveness dispelled forever the darkness of sin, and irradiated that once bleared and blank face with the reflection of Christ's image.

Nan, whose white lips repeated the one prayer, "Change him! Change him!" conscious at last of the stillness, raised her head long bowed and, paused as if spellbound, at the transformation; then springing to him with the old cry so long foreign to her lips, "Oh, papa! It's true! it's true! 'fashioned like unto His glorious body!'"

Nan—"poor" Nan no longer—went out from that holy place where God had been with a resurrected father, to live, to love, to tell the story of that one blest Easter day to many a soul in body vile, winning them to Christ.

After blessed years of soul winning, growing more and more into the likeness of Christ, the summons home came to the transformed father. It was just at dawn of another Easter morning. The watchers, from that number whom he had rescued from sin, had stepped aside to admit the aged Dr. Eviland now trembling upon his staff, whispering mid their tears, "How can the world give him up?"

"Nannie, dear Nannie," came the clear, low tones, "don't cry, little girl. Tell them—of Jesus—'who shall change this vile body—'" and the soul had reached the risen Saviour!

"That it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body," finished the lonely Nan, adding, "Dr. Eviland, can you do that for him? Will you take the blessed words again and tell of that resurrection unto life eternal which awaits? Though he be dead, let father tell the story again."

Pittsford, Mich.

TYPICAL LESSONS FOR LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION TEACHERS.

XII.

The Cistern.

BY MARY E. RUDD.

Opening exercises, 25 minutes:—New song, "We are Coming," page 9, Marching Songs. Use "Exercise Song" as opening prayer. Repeat Scripture texts about springs, rain and rainbows. Sing "Our Wonderful House," repeating texts and giving moral thoughts suggested. Let children choose finger-plays and songs. Practice new song.

Rhythmical exercise, 15 minutes; lesson, 20:—It may seem to be something of a fall to come down from the rainbow into the cistern, but it is a very necessary one, for how could we have clean clothes if we stayed up there all the time, and what would be the use of a cistern if there were no rain to fill it? Obviously the worth and worthiness of a cistern is apparent at just such a time as this when there has been a great storm. And if we seem to be dropping from poetry into prose it is only that the prose of life may be sweetened by the poetry, as many a housewife has found true after doing the family washing for many weeks in hard water. Truly the rainbow is not too exalted to lend a hand in the practical affairs of life.

We have before us wash day, with all its accompaniments of benches, tubs, pails, boiler, etc. The children will probably be able to suggest all the implements of the warfare until in imagination you have before you a goodly array. You will probably be able to offer suggestions on the subject of taking care of the baby on wash day, also suggestions on not soiling the clothes unnecessarily, for that makes more work for mother. But where does mother get the water to wash the clothes in? If the children are familiar only with lake water show them how you can make a suds of it with soap. If you can get both hard and soft water show the difference in regard to mixing with soap. If you can not, explain as well as you can about the water under the ground and how it gets its qualities from the rocks it comes in contact with. Tell how the papa of Dot and Trot dug the cistern, and placed pipes so as to catch the water that fell on the roof. Then when the rain came it was almost full of nice, soft water.

Speak about the pleasure of having clean clothes, different ways of washing, such as Germans taking a great many clothes at a time to the brook to wash. When the clothes are hung on the line why do they get dry? Why do they dry quicker when the sun shines than when it does not?

March 10 minutes. Occupation:—Sew or mount washtub and board.

Closing: Pennies taken while singing, "Only a drop in the bucket."

Chicago, Ill.

OUR HERO.

BY MRS. L. M. DODGE.

SING it, morning breezes, whisper, winds of night;
Stars smile down in gladness, laugh the noonday light;
Mountains, make obeisance, clap glad hands, oh, sea!
Heaven vouchsafed a hero, rum-shackled slaves to free!

Rejoice, O natal morning; though ninety years have flown,
Dauntless the hero standeth, stanch for the truth alone!
May heaven long wait his coming, that earth may richer be!—
Youth's heart and manhood's courage, Neal Dow, we find in thee!

Berea, Ky.

THE LEGEND OF EASTER EGGS.

"Dearest papa," says my boy to me,
As he merrily climbs on his mother's knee,
"Why are these eggs that you see me hold
Colored so finely with blue and gold?
And what are the wonderful birds that lay
Such beautiful eggs on Easter day?"
Tenderly shine the April skies
Like laughter and tears in my child's blue eyes,
And every face in the street is gay;
Why cloud the darling by saying nay?
So I hunt my brain for the tale he begs,
And tell him the story of Easter eggs.
"You have heard, my child, of the Man who died
Crowned with keen thorns and crucified;
And how Joseph, the wealthy—whom God reward—
Cared for the body of our Lord,
And piously tombed it within the rock,
And closed the gate with a mighty lock.
Now close to the tomb a fair tree grew
With pendulous leaves and blossoms of blue;
And deep in the green tree's shadowy breast
A beautiful singing bird sat on her nest,
Which was bordered with mosses like malachite,
And held four eggs of an ivory white.
Now when the bird from her dim recess
Beheld the Lord in His burial dress,
And looked on the heavenly face so pale,
And the dear feet pierced with the cruel nail,
Her heart nigh broke with a sudden pang;
And out of the depths of her sorrow she sang;
All night long till the moon was up,
She sat and sang in her moss-wreathed cup,
A song of sorrow as wild and shrill
As the homeless wind when it roams the hill,
So full of tears so loud and long,
That the grief of the world seemed turned to song.
But soon there came through the weeping night,
A glittering angel clothed in white,
And he rolled the stone from the tomb away,
Where the Lord of the earth and heaven lay.
And Christ arose in the cavern's gloom,
And in living light came from the tomb,
And the bird that sat in the heart of the tree
Beheld this celestial majesty.
Its heart was filled with a sweet delight
And it poured a song on the throbbing night.
Note climbed note till higher, higher
They shot to heaven like spears of fire.
When the glittering white-robed angel heard
The sorrowing song of the grieving bird,
And heard the following chorus of mirth,
That hailed Christ risen again on earth,
He said, 'Sweet bird, be forever blest,
Thyself, thy eggs and thy moss-wreathed nest.'
Thus ever, my child, since that blessed night,
When death bowed down to the Lord of light,
The eggs of that sweet bird change their hue
And burn with red and gold and blue,
Reminding mankind in their simple way
Of the holy marvel of Easter day."

—Selected.

HOW TO DECORATE EASTER EGGS.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Among the many novelties which appear in the store windows at the Eastertide, those which are made of eggs will always be most popular with boys and girls. The secret is, I think, that we always associate the egg with this happy spring festival of life and joy, because it is a type of life and promise of a fulfillment. All life comes from an egg, we know, and the egg itself is a perfect food containing all the substances necessary to sustain life and nourish. And so, among the many tokens and souvenirs of the Eastertide, the symbolic egg will always take the lead.

Here is an attractive window filled with pretty Easter tokens. Let us stop and look awhile. There are rabbit boxes and candy rabbits; handsome cards with Easter greetings, and little downy yellow chicks. But best of all the egg everywhere; eggs in many forms, decorated, colored, painted eggs, in nests and tiny baskets, and egg faces in all sorts of quaint devices.

You would like some of these dainty Easter greetings to give to dear friends, wouldn't you? You can make them yourself if you will try, very much more easily than you imagine, perhaps, and they will look nearly as well as those we have just seen in the bright store-window. Let us sit down this evening and see what we can do.

First procure a number of eggs and prepare them by gently breaking one end of the shell and allowing the contents to escape. Rinse the shells carefully and set them aside to dry.

If a big brother or sister has an egg blower, the eggs can be emptied with great facility and the shell remain almost intact. The large duck eggs are very pretty when blown, a narrow ribbon passed through, by which they can be suspended, and the words "A Joyous Easter," or "He is Risen," painted in gold or lettered on them with pen and ink.

Now I will take this piece of tinted cardboard measuring three and one-half by five inches. On it I glue firmly a half shell which I have cut very carefully in order not to split it.

With a pen or a paint brush I outline a pretty face on the shell and write an Easter motto on the border of the card. Then taking a strip of this pink tissue paper, I gather it with needle and thread and carefully tack the paper ruffle thus made on the card with touches of glue, making a Quaker-like old lady's cap around the face.

A pretty ribbon might be used instead with bows at either end of the shell and if you can paint a tiny bird instead of the face it would have a pretty effect.

Whole egg-shells or china eggs decorated with faces may be fixed up in a variety of ways to suit the character represented. A nun has a large, white paper bonnet, and a strip of gray or black paper pasted on the card to represent the neck of her gown. This Mikado with his funny face is simply decorated with a strip of black paper wired and bent over like his peculiar head-dress. The choir boy with his mouth open, wears a tiny paper student cap and has a folded white (tissue paper) necktie under his chin. A round piece of pale blue tissue paper, six inches in diameter, gathered tightly, about half an inch from the edge, makes a pretty head-dress for a sweet girl face and only needs a ruffle round the neck to complete it. A little Normandy cap is for this peasant, and I'll place a folded surplice around her neck; the "dude" has painted eyeglasses on his nose, a very high white collar, reaching to his ears and a narrow violet ribbon necktie.

For the pretty penwipers take a china egg head and make for it a felt dunce cap measuring four inches to the point and extending in length to five inches at the back. Fasten this securely to an oval piece of cardboard six inches long and three wide on which have been laid several pieces of chamois skin and felt. Decorate the cap with tiny bell and sequins. Two colors of felt are very pretty.

But, some of you are saying, these are too hard for us to make. We can't draw faces, or do lettering, or make paper caps, and such things, please show us something easier to do. Of course I will.

I have here a quantity of small candies, such as are used in bon-bon boxes and a sheet of bright red paper with some fine stout cord or linen thread. I cut a round piece of the paper about one inch in diameter, and slash about half an inch from the center in order that it may fit over the end of the egg. Have ready a needle threaded with the cord or thread, and some good glue or mucilage. Fill the egg with the small candies. Pass the double thread through the center of the piece of paper, leaving the ends to be pasted with the paper over the opening on the end of the egg. The egg can thus be suspended by the cord or thread. Was that very hard? I think these candy eggs are most popular with the children, and can you guess why?

I think, too, that some of you can fashion these yellow chicks in their tissue paper nests. Why not? Take some sheets of tissue paper in three different shades of green or violet. Cut round pieces, two of each shade, the darkest, about eight inches across; the next, seven inches, and the lightest, six. Form petals around the edge by cutting towards the center and rounding the points. With a hairpin crimp each petal by folding it down the middle and crushing the paper along the hairpin wire. By fastening these tissue leaves together with a touch of mucilage, the lighter shades on top, a nice nest is ready for your chick. Form the chicken by cutting from a layer of light yellow jeweler's cotton, a piece about four inches across. Gently puff and pull it up till it looks like a chicken's back and head. Tuck in the soft point representing the head, a bit of folded white paper for a bill, and use a black jet bead for an eye. Now, doesn't he look cunning with this Easter motto in his bill?

Wishing you all the joys of the happy season,

Ever your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

Edward A. Sparks, Mamie E. Lemen, } Wisconsin.
Olive G. Anthony, Ethelyn Pierce, } Ohio.
Nellie J. Taylor, Connecticut.
Grace M. Leach, Charlie R. Heritage, Elsie ——— } Illinois.
Eva F. Roberts, S. Dakota.
Ruth E. Brewer, Massachusetts.
Marguerite F. Herr, New Jersey.
Amy Elliott, Wm. H. Coye, } New York.
Ethel Williams, Hartwell Shippey, Mary Pattison, Maggie A. Hitch, } Missouri.
Walter Whitman, Oregon.

When I grow up I shall help to make "King Alcohol" tremble. CARROLL LEON MCHENRY.

Stillwater, Pa.

I am a little girl nine years old. My auntie wears the white ribbon and I like to read the Cozy Corner very much. VIOLA P. REESE.

Ebensburgh, Pa.

I have never missed a session of our L. T. L. since last March (1893) and received a gold medal for constant attendance. EVIE D. COOKE.

Palmyra, N. J.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

279.

BEHEADINGS.

1. Behead exalted and leave not early.
2. Behead to connive at and leave a wager.
3. Behead a person and leave a fairy.
4. Behead sour and leave skill.
5. Behead an occurrence and leave an opening.
6. Behead to tear and leave to close.

The beheaded letters form a happy spring festival.

J. A. S.

280.

DROPPED LETTERS.

H. i. n.t h.r. b.t i. r.s.n r.m.m.e. h.w h. s.a.e u.t. y.u w.e h. w.s y.t i. G.l.l.e. J. A. S.

281.

PI.

Rtstu ni het rdlo nad eh lhsal dreitc hty tpahs.

MAUDE S. AINSLIE.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MARCH 1.

273.
p e N a l
c h E a p d r A y s s o L a r m e D a l q u O i t
f a W n s

Correct answers: L. C. Latimer; Mildred K. Howe; Maurice E. Butz; Abby M. Collester.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets. Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE. President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS. Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON. Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, God's Birds. By Mary A. Lathbury 2
Mrs. Jellaby and her Husband's Bottles. By Marshall Saunders 2
The Socialist Propaganda and the Drink Difficulty. By James Whyte 3
Economic Principles. II. By Eliza Stowe Twitchell 4
Memories of the White City. VI. By Elizabeth Cumings 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Our English Letter 5
The New Contest Bureau for Woman's Suffrage 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, True Easter Love 6
"Poor Nan's" Easter. By M. M 6
Typical Lessons for Loyal Temperance Legion Teachers. XII. By Mary E. Rudd 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Our Hero. By Mrs. L. M. Dodge 7
Poem, The Legend of Easter Eggs 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
How to Decorate Easter Eggs 9
Soft-Shelled Nuts 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Power of His Resurrection 8
Some Signs of the Times 8
End of a Noted Criminal Case 8
Municipal Reform 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
QUEEN'S GARDENS:
A Springtime Sermonette. By Harriet Francene Crocker 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
New Mexico—Missouri—Southern California—New Hampshire 10-12
News in a Nutshell 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Loyal Temperance Legion 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
TREASURER'S CORNER 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 14, 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

As we have born the image of the earthy so we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.—I Cor. 15:49.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

THE POWER OF HIS RESURRECTION.

"Christ is risen!" We greet our readers this Eastertide with the exultant words with which for hundreds of years Christian believers saluted each other on this festal anniversary. And from all around this ribbon-belted world we hear in thought the joyous response, "He is risen indeed!"

Our thoughts fly back as we write to that sorrowful Sabbath day nearly nineteen hundred years ago, when our Lord rested in the tomb. We faintly picture to ourselves the grief, the disappointment, the utter humiliation of the little band of disciples in the hours immediately succeeding the crucifixion. Up to the very last the faithful few who had followed the Man of Nazareth to Calvary had doubtless looked for some mighty manifestation of His power, some miraculous display of authority, which should proclaim to His persecutors and to the world that He was Son of God indeed. But instead, they had to face the fact of an ignominious death—death as a malefactor. It was only in the light of later events that they began to recall and to understand the Master's frequent allusions to His death, burial and resurrection. And it is only in the light of a quickened understanding which the resurrection itself made possible that Christ's followers in these latter days begin dimly to perceive the wonderful harmony—the divine naturalness—of the Saviour's life, death and resurrection.

The experience of the stricken disciples was one which is common to every Christian to-day, namely, that sorest trial is the precursor of blessings peculiarly rich. How brilliant the dawn which followed close upon their darkest hour! What a transition from sorrow to joy was there in the early morn following that mournful Sabbath! The very thought coming to us after the lapse of nearly nineteen centuries makes the heart leap and the pulses thrill in sympathy with the joy of that little company of devoted men and women in Jerusalem.

How little, probably, the early followers of Jesus realized the tremendous significance of His victory over death as it applied to human life; and in fact, how little does the Christian world to-day, after ages of development, realize the "power of His resurrection." "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and "Lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world." These are the words of the risen Christ. If in our endeavors to remove the mountains of iniquity which surround us we, in these latter days, could but take hold more firmly of the transcendent truth these words contain, and would live in accordance with the possibilities they reveal, the world would witness the fulfillment of this promise to the believer, "The works that I do shall he do also," nay, "greater works than these shall he do."

The "power of His resurrection" manifested to-day in Christ's body, the true church, would soon usher in the day for which we pray, when every knee shall bow at the name of Jesus and the will of the Father be done on earth as it is in heaven. Only a living Christ can be always with His followers; only a living Christ can be the "hope of glory" to all mankind. Power to destroy the works of the devil is in us because Christ is in us. And, dwelling in us He will work through us if we will only let Him.

But whenever, from any motive, we actively or passively sanction any form of evil, we become hindrances instead of co-laborers in the work of salvation; we "crucify the Son of God afresh and put Him to open shame." How often still does the blindness of man, the blindness of His professed followers, call forth from the lips of the patient Jesus, the risen Redeemer, the tender, pathetic utterance, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Easter is the time of the vernal equinox, the period when the sun enters Aries, and slumbering nature begins to thrill with the subtle power that betokens awakening life. We moderns know that it is the earth which "do move," and the sun which stands still, and among the many beautiful analogies to be found between the relationship of the planet to the sun, and the relationship of man to God, this one thought we pass on to sister white-ribboners as especially fitting to the Easter season: It is our attitude toward God, not His toward us, which makes the summer or winter of our spiritual life. It is our position, not God's, which determines the temperature of the soul atmosphere. God is ever the same. Man is the moving, changing factor in the spiritual macrocosm.

Turned toward the Sun of Righteousness, the latent forces of man's nature respond to its energizing touch and become operative. Turned from that life-giving Center they are indrawn, inactive, apparently dead. But the analogy, like all analogies between the spiritual and the material, is necessarily incomplete. For redeemed man, by reason of the Light within, may at all times live and move in the vitalizing beams of the Sun, may at all times "have fellowship with Him in whom is no darkness at all," may himself shine with His reflected light.

Consecrated as are white-ribboners to the service of God and humanity, may we this year realize as never before the significance of Easter to us; may we as never before take hold upon the living Christ, and upon the power that is in Him as Lord of heaven and earth.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

When the Pharisees and Sadducees came to our Lord demanding a "sign," He repulsed them saying, "Ye know how to discern the face of the heaven; but ye cannot discern the signs of the times." Unfortunately this blindness to the "signs of the times" did not cease with the Pharisees and Sadducees of Christ's day. Through all succeeding ages, it has been the fatal defect which has hindered, sometimes defeated, every forward movement of humanity. While in its worst form it has continued to affect peculiarly the "Pharisees and Sadducees" of each generation, those whose selfish interests are most closely bound up in the existing condition, and who have the most to lose and least to gain by radical innovations, it has more or less pervaded all classes of society and has made the path of the reformer a thorny one. It is therefore one of the most hopeful signs of the present times that many of the most thoughtful and intelligent Christian men are turning their attention away from issues which have been dead and buried for centuries, to the living questions of to-day, and are proceeding in a rational manner to investigate present evils with a view to finding adequate remedies. The social disturbances of the last quarter of a century, the growing hostility between capital and labor, the financial earthquake of last summer, whose vibrations have not yet ceased, have caused a widespread and hopeful alarm; hopeful because it is not the wild panic of cowardice, but the reasonable fear of brave men and women who know how to look real danger squarely in the face and wisely prepare to meet it.

We have already called attention to the American Institute of Christian Sociology which had its birth where the W. C. T. U. originated, at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., and whose very existence speaks volumes concerning the general interest in our social problems. The papers are full of references to these problems and the leading minds of all countries turn their attention perforce in the same direction. John Burns simply expressed a very general conviction when he said that the solution of the labor problem must be attempted by the adoption of measures, "as a whole, tending towards the reorganization of society," and that "it must be admitted that whatever is done under a competitive form of society can only be palliative and not permanently remedial." Numerous similar expressions from men of high standing in church and state prove the trend of public thought and show how carefully mankind is watching the signs of the times.

The Carew lectures at Harvard, by Pres. E. B. White, are devoted this year entirely to social questions. In the lecture entitled "Socialism," the fifth in the series, he says: "Socialism has nowadays too many, too honest, and too thoughtful devotees to be ignored. It is stronger at this moment than ever before, and is rapidly growing." This general interest betokens an appreciation of the magnitude of existing evils and a perception of the whither to which we are tending, which constitute our strongest ground of hope that we shall overcome them.

A recent article in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago, entitled "Christianity in Earnest and at Work," by Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur, is full of helpful suggestions along this line. It pleads for the application of Christianity to all the affairs of life, and is full of striking, epigrammatic statements, bearing directly upon the subject in hand. "Christianity that is not applied is not Christianity." "The man who thinks so much of the other world that he cannot see his duty in this world is never likely to see another world as good as this world." "The pious Jew did not distinguish widely between his patriotic devotion and his religious consecration. The true American must possess much of this noble spirit." "We ought to understand that a man can rightly serve God when rightly working for the state as truly as he can serve God when working for the church." It is along the line indicated by the above quotations that all hope for permanent relief from our troubles comes. As Dr. MacArthur says: "We do not want an unchristian philanthropy; reformers that are Christless are powerless," but we do sorely need, not only that the Christian thought of the world should be turned upon our social problems, but that the Church of Christ recognize that the solution of those problems is one of her chief duties. It is not enough that she continue to preach Christ, all important as that is; she must also take up our social problems and deal with them as Christ, whose representative she is commissioned to be, would deal with them. Her failure to do this, or even vigorously to attempt it, is the chief cause of her weakness to-day. Strange anomaly, that in a land full of Christian churches there should be Christian work left for societies independent of the Christian church!

Societies for the prevention of the dissemination of obscene literature, of cruelty to children and animals, for the overthrow of the liquor traffic, the evangelization of cities, etc., are, as Dr. Josiah Strong terms them, monuments to a sleeping church. The church should be the acknowledged source of all these movements. She should have hurled the "organized motherhood of the world" against the direst foe of the home. Instead, she ignored one chief source of her power, and forced the majority of of her membership into narrow ruts, reversing the decision of her Master to Mary and Martha, until they were forced to burst their bounds and carry on the work outside her limits. She should have sent her servants with all the prestige of her authority and position against every emissary of Satan. Instead, she left them largely to fight as individuals and organize without her precincts. As we apprehend it, this failure of the church to measure up to her responsibilities and privileges is due, not to lack of earnestness or devotion, but to lack of adaptation in her organic structure and her methods.

By some means, denominational antagonism must be overcome. Instead of half-a-dozen different denominations crowding into a territory where one can do the work, and only one can prosper, we must have the Church of Christ doing efficient work. The world-wide problems which are upon us to-day cannot be successfully handled by "each acting in its independent and sovereign capacity." They demand all the energy of the Church of Christ Also the church must recognize more than she has ever done before that her mission is to save the bodies as well as the souls of men. Dr. Josiah Strong says: "Christ did not preach a gospel suited only to disembodied spirits," but the church has very largely been guilty of that mistake.

We do not believe that Dr. Washington Gladden is mistaken in his estimate when he frankly says: "Until within the last few years, the Christian churches of this country in the distribution of what they call their charities, have done more harm than good. They have found and relieved some cases of actual want, and it would have been a great pity if these cases had not been found and relieved; but in doing this they have bred paupers by the thousands; by their careless and unquestioning doles they have paved the way for whole families to enter the steep and slimy paths of beggary." In this, however, the church has not been a sinner above others. Even her mistaken charities are a proof of the Christ love within her. But it were a pity that all this zeal should remain unused or misdirected. It is only necessary that the church understand the question in all its bearings to recognize her own duty in the matter. The causes of the poverty which she seeks to relieve are deeper seated than has thus far been acknowledged. If the church would permanently redeem the body and the soul of the individual, she must also save the state. Her hand must be on every human interest, her influence pervade every department of life. We believe she will ultimately rise to the full recognition of her privileges and duties.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

There is no more encouraging sign of the times than the constantly increasing prominence accorded to the subject of municipal reform.

The present campaign for good citizenship in Chicago is only one of the many hopeful indications that the moral sense of good people is at last becoming aroused; that henceforth the Christian citizen is to play an important rôle in the government of the town or city in which he lives.

Viewing the subject upon its face, the wonder is that there should be need of such arousing. Surely if there be anything in which a Christian man would be supposed to take an interest it is in the morality and good government of the place he calls his home.

Municipal reform ought to be an uncoined phrase, for the reason that municipal corruption should never have been possible. Nor would it have been if the true, upright manhood of our nation had but taken into public affairs the thoughtfulness given to private business, the zeal accorded to what they are pleased to call distinctively "religious work."

They have failed, largely through lack of thought, to grasp the idea that there can be no more religious work than purifying the great body politic, casting out of its midst all that is dangerous to morality, truth and purity.

That which is given over to evil can, from the very nature of the case be only evil. Good men have withdrawn their interest from public affairs, evil men have grown more and more zealous, until as a result there is no municipal government throughout our vast country in which there are not glaring enormities. Fraud, embezzlement, chicanery, bribery, corruption, impurity, gross ignorance on the part of the men electing and elected; grosser indifference as to manner in which public trusts are held and public duties fulfilled.

The men who are elected to office, as servants of the people electing, become their masters, and we witness constantly the pitiable spectacle of a city government in the hands of men whom we would not invite into our homes; who are to the city whose interests they are sworn to serve what the vulture is to the carcass—a ravening bird of prey.

We know all this; the pity is that we know it so well it has become to us a twice told tale, falling upon leaden ears. If men could but hear it once as for the first time how they would arise in their manhood, breaking these bands of degradation as Sampson his green withes!

Thank God that there are signs of this arousal, that there are indications which point unerringly to the reforming of our municipalities, and when that shall be brought about the steps in the ascent will be easy to the re-forming of our entire governmental life.

In true municipal reform there are certain absolutely necessary elements.

1. The arousal of Christian manhood to the conviction that it is as Christly a thing to purify government as to work for the personal salvation of the individual sinner.

2. An accession of common sense as to the modus operandi for the purification of government. Here we might well sit at the feet of the saloon-keeper and his satellites. Does he stay away from the primaries? Nay, verily. It is only the respectable man, the moral man, the Christian man who does that. Does the saloon-keeper wait till the ticket has been prepared for him by those whose principles he knows are directly opposed to his own, and then without a question "vote as he is voted"? No, here, too, it is only the better element of society which may be counted upon to play such a fool's part. Shame upon such moral laziness! When there are "ward heelers" for Christ and His kingdom, when there are primaries for the bringing in of righteousness, when the Christian is recognized as a dominant factor in politics, to whom concessions must be made before his support can be secured, then we shall hold the balance of power and sweep the world Godward.

3. Party lines must be absolutely ignored in municipal reform. Whether a man is a Republican or Democrat or a Prohibitionist, must not be once asked when it comes to the matter of purifying our cities, but "Is he a good man?" "Is he an honest man?" "Is he a brave man?" "Will he stand for the reform forces as we stand behind him?"

Oh, for the day when there will be but two elements recognized in our municipal life—the good and the evil, and each election shall be looked upon as a veritable battle of Armageddon; when the battle cry shall be, "Who is on the Lord's side?"

4. One last element is an indispensable one in municipal reform—the ballot in the hands of woman. If she were but freed from the shackles of an unjust and arbitrary disability, how soon would our cities become safe homes. John G. Woolley says he wonders that the women of the nation have not, long ere this, formed into a mighty procession, and, with flaming fire-brands laid waste the breweries, distilleries and saloons.

Our wonder is that they have not formed into an irresistible phalanx which should wrest from usurping hands that one sure symbol of power—the ballot—in order that, through its instrumentality, they may save their hearts, their homes, their children.

Is it not a monstrous anomaly that the greatest sufferers through the saloon should have no power of suffrage against it! But "it's coming," the hill tops are already aglow; the morning breaketh! Oh, for a consecration of purpose which shall, in the true meaning of the Psalmist, "pre-vent the dawning of the morning," thus "looking for and hastening the coming of the day of God."

END OF A NOTED CRIMINAL CASE.

The rapidity with which the jury in the recent Coughlin trial at Chicago arrived at a verdict causes some surprise and, if the press be taken as the mouthpiece of public opinion, no little dissatisfaction throughout the country. Three things at least influenced the decision—a growing repugnance in the minds of men toward capital punishment, sympathy for the prisoner's wife and children (whose constant presence in the court room was a tower of strength to the defense) and failure to comprehend the meaning of Judge Tuthill's words, "a moral certainty." When to these influences is added the "fixing" process, whatever that may mean, this unexpected unanimity is explained. The frequency of jury scandals is bringing the jury system more and more into disrepute, and one result of the second Coughlin trial will be to add largely to the number of those who advocate a change in this direction.

All newspaper readers will recall the main features of the "Cronin case"—one of the most notable in the history of criminal jurisprudence—and the peculiarly revolting details of the crime itself, but they may not be so familiar with the circumstances which led up to it. Briefly, the facts are these: Dr. Cronin, an Irish-American, was a prominent member of the Clan-na-Gael, a secret and powerful organization whose avowed object was the freeing of Ireland from British rule. The unprecedented growth of this society attracted the notice of politicians and of schemers generally, and they flocked to it as flies to a molasses barrel. Dissension, jealousy and intrigue naturally followed among those who aspired to be leaders. In 1881 Alexander Sullivan, an Irish-Canadian, was made president of the order, and the autocratic methods of the "Triangle," as the three members composing the executive were called, resulted in splitting the Clan-na-Gael into two rival factions. Dr. Cronin, leader of the seceders, charged Sullivan with misappropriating the society's funds. Sullivan and his followers accused Dr. Cronin of being a British spy. The woes of Ireland were forgotten in the more exciting events brought about by the animosity of the two champions. The end came when upon the evening of May 4, 1889, Dr. Cronin was lured from his boarding place to the now famous "Carlson cottage" and brutally murdered. The finding of his body in a catch-basin, and later on (in another catch-basin) his clothing with surgical instruments, prescription books and business cards, removed all doubt as to his fate and roused the public to a pitch of horrified indignation. The train of events which led to the conviction of Coughlin, Bourke, O'Sullivan and Kunze, the sentence of the three to life-imprisonment, the new trial and subsequent acquittal of Kunze, the deaths of Bourke and O'Sullivan, and finally the second trial of Coughlin, dragging out its weary length with enormous cost to the state—all has been told time and again with a tediousness of detail in the newspapers. While by the verdict of a jury of his peers Daniel Coughlin walks the earth to-day a free man, the verdict of a majority of American citizens is "guilty" and he knows it. He will live henceforth in the shadow of a great retribution.

"The time of the singing of birds has come," the springtime of the earth, the Easter time of the spiritual world. There is an intangible but divinely refreshing newness in the air, the sky has a lovelier blue; our hearts feel lighter and brighter, and instinctively with Mother Nature we lay aside winter's stormbeaten garments and don the brighter shades and lighter fabrics of the springtime. Easter "novelties" are making gay the show-windows, Easter flowers are being gently "forced" in the greenhouses; children are beginning to prattle about Easter eggs, and snatches of Easter music float out from church home as the "young men and maidens" prepare for the jubilate which shall rejoice the listening audience on Easter morn. In all this, where do we whose hands are laid to the plough of reform find a part? Is there a springtime for us? Or must the gloom of the drink slavery sadden our songs and deafen our ears to the joy around us? Oh, no! For us, too, there is a promise, and to-day's darkness only precedes the dawn of to-morrow's sunshine. Our faith is in God. A few with God is a glorious majority. The same King who arose triumphant over the death-king, shall one day burst the bonds which keep nations groaning in thralldom. So let our Easter chorus be:

"For right is right since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin!"

***

How shall we gauge the whole, who can only guess a part?
How can we read the life, when we cannot spell the heart?
How shall we measure another, we who can never know
From the juttings above the surface the depth of the vein below?

"Even our present way is known to ourselves alone,
Height and abyss and torrent, flower and thorn and stone,
But we gaze on another's path as a far-off mountain scene.
Scanning the outlined hills, but never the vales between.

—F. R. Havergal.

***

It was somewhat amusing to read recently on a printed slip coming from a press clipping bureau, the following statement: "That this service may be of still greater value, the reading of this list will not be done by young women, as is the custom now in clipping bureaus, but by experienced newspaper men of education and literary taste." Well,—what is there to say? Nothing, save to join in the ripple of derisive laughter which must be the comment of those who know whereof they speak—experienced women of education and literary taste. The world "do move" but it is beyond question, some of its inhabitants refuse to keep up.

***

High hearts are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams; and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease, and start on some fresh march of faithful service. And looking higher still, we find those who never wait till their moral work accumulates, and who reward resolution with no rest; with whom, therefore, the alternation is instantaneous and constant; who do the good only to see the better; and see the better only to achieve it; who are too meek for transport, too faithful for remorse, too earnest for repose; whose worship is action, and whose action ceaseless aspiration.—J. Martineau.

***

An earnest appeal comes from one of our workers that every member of the great army of the W. C. T. U. should keep in plain sight of all, day in and day out, her badge of white ribbon. It was the recent testimony of a saloon-keeper that "that little white ribbon would do the business. It would ruin our trade if every woman who belongs to the organization would wear it, it would create such a sentiment against us." If you and I really are arrayed against the forces of intemperance, this is a small thing to remember. Buy a bolt of ribbon; if possible, fasten a bow on every dress and wrap, and then make a point of never removing a soiled knot, unless there is a clean one at hand to replace it. But have a clean one! There is a wordless lesson in a pure, white ribbon, before which scoffers are silent. What a sense of comradeship it gives one to meet on the crowded thoroughfare another white-ribbon! There may not, indeed, be an interchange of formal greetings, but there seldom fails a significant flash of the eye as the tiny badge of the army of women flutters in sight. Wear it! wear it!

On Duty.

A SPRINGTIME SERMONETTE.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

When we were little girls, you know, and went to school in the dear little, old red school-house among the pines, there came a season every year when our mothers brought out and "did up" certain checked gingham sunbonnets.

The mellow music of willow whistles was heard in the land. A nightly chorus of frog voices sounded from the marshy places. A general air of window opening, household cleansing and delightful bonfires pervaded everything.

By all these signs and many others we knew that spring had come. And who can ever quite forget the indescribable feeling of joy that heralded its coming?

The first robin! what a welcome visitor! The first dandelion,—what a golden treasure! The first pale-tinted fern uncurling itself in the moist, sweet-smelling woods! The first shy windflower trembling on its slender stem! The first real patch of new green grass!

Oh, there is something about it all that thrilled us then and thrills us now! Who wonders that the poets go madly into rhyme over the beauties of the lovely spring! And why should we blame them?

There is a poem, I believe, in every human heart at this sweet season,—a vague sense of happiness that may or may not find expression. All honor to him or to her who writes it out for us,—the rare, sweet charm of spring's first flowers, the anemone, the violet, the hepatica,—and all the rest.

And, when we were little girls, you remember, our favorite subject for our school composition was spring. It generally began something like this, didn't it? Mine always did. "Spring is the most beautiful season of the year. In the spring the birds come back from the South," —well, that will do. Thank God the faithful birds do come back from the South,—sweet messengers of song and peace!

Somehow our precious childhood comes back to us more vividly in spring than at any other time. No one can resist the indefinable charm of the first spring days. It is so easy then to think of various childish pranks and good times—of blazing bonfires in the back yard after mother had cleared out the garret—the sweet, sweet sounds from the frog orchestra which drifted us off into the deep, restful sleep of perfect health. Spring and innocence,—are they not synonymous?

I wonder how spring comes to the hearts of all these thousands of girls who wear the white ribbon or the silver cross? Is it a time of happy dreamings of good things to be done, of pure and noble aspirations, of plans and purposes as sweet as the scent of springtime itself?

Do there come to all these consecrated hearts new impulses for what is good and true?

Easter Sabbath, with its holy associations, its wealth of floral beauty, its sweet songs of joy and praise and triumph in a risen Lord, its beautiful significance, should be the day of days to every maiden's heart. No thought or act unworthy should mar its perfectness from the first faint pink of dawn to the quiet starlight that hushes it to rest. It should be rounded and complete—filled to the brim with all that is most lovely and most pure, with prayer and song, with lilies and roses, with gentle kindness and reverent silences—a day to be remembered through all the days that follow it. To me it is the best and happiest of days.

Are we resolving, dear girls, during these blessed springtime hours, that the coming summer shall witness more and better service for our King? that the silent strength of our influence shall reach and touch more hearts than ever before?

It ought to be so, for we are older, and Experience, that best of school teachers, has had us in her keeping another year. We ought to be wiser, better, more advanced in every way. Are we?

The coming summer will be rich in opportunities for doing good. Across what darkened life will your white ribbon send a gleam of light?

What untouched heart will wake to the sweetness of a Christian life by the shine and shimmer of your little silver cross? What sad old soul may you be privileged to cheer and comfort by an act of gracious kindness?

Oh, think of it! the opportunities are so many! They are as plentiful as roses in June, as snow-flakes in December.

The coming summer may be the pivotal point of your life—it will be so to many. Keep sweet and courteous through it all, guard constantly that natural heart-kindness so easily usurped by selfishness. Neglect no chance of aiding your beloved cause, the bringing in of the universal love of God, the driving out of sin and wrong in every form.

Be firm as you are gentle, be strong as you are womanly, do good and be good, and though you may not know it now there'll come a time most surely when you shall see the fruitage of your consecrated acts.

So now in the lovely springtime resolve to do, to be, not trusting in your own frail strength but in that higher power which is promised.

Santa Paula, Cal.

NEW MEXICO.

IN THE FIGHT.

The New Mexico W. C. T. U. has not surrendered the battle against the saloon, although as a whole we have not measured up to our usual activity for several months past, owing partly to continued absence of many workers during the World's Fair and chiefly to the permanent removal from the territory of many others, because of the prevailing stagnation in financial circles.

The White Oaks W. C. T. U., under the able leadership of Mrs. Parker, has succeeded in having all business houses and the saloons of the town closed on the Sabbath day, while the saloons are closed at ten o'clock on week day evenings. Those brave workers may not fully realize all that this may mean to loving mother hearts whose boys have gone from eastern homes with the view of locating permanently in that rich gold-producing district. Would God our white ribbon rank and file could accomplish even this much all over the land. The results could be measured only by eternity.

Eddy and surrounding towns are in the midst of a medal contest campaign.

The third one recently held in Malaga was a grand success, standing room being at par. These contests were inaugurated by that indefatigable worker, Mrs. Bettie Hoag, who is already arranging for an adult contest in which four school teachers will participate, some of them living at a distance of ten miles. A temperance program for a Fourth of July celebration is also a part of Mrs. Hoag's plan of work, in which the writer gladly accepts an invitation to join.

The Albuquerque W. C. T. U., Mrs. J. W. Harding, president, celebrated the Crusade anniversary with the Crusade program as prepared, and a public tea.

This union has recently established a Children's Home for homeless children, in the name of Him who took little children in His arms and blessed them. A commodious building was placed at the disposal of the management by our banker philanthropist, Mr. J. S. Reynolds, while the citizens readily responded in generous donations of furniture, clothing, provisions, fuel, etc. Four motherless little ones, the youngest eleven months old, are being comfortably housed and kindly cared for by a white ribbon matron, Mrs. A. A. Carey.

The Neal Dow anniversary will be celebrated by this and other local unions. The only son of the writer, now fourteen years of age, rejoices in the fact that his birthday occurs on the same date as that of our grand "Father of Prohibition," whose memory will be doubly cherished by the family, because of this happy coincidence.

The Catskill W. C. T. U., the youngest child of our territorial union, now leads the van. Organized, on my return from the National Convention in November last, and with but twenty-seven members enrolled, yet they have become an incorporate body, and are now busily engaged in the erection of a W. C. T. U. church. Your correspondent has been invited to lay the corner-stone, some time this month, and to dedicate the church in the near future, which she will accept as the honor of a lifetime. Mrs. J. L. Lamb is the efficient president, while Mrs. S. E. York stands at the head of a grand army of boys and girls in the L. T. L., all of whom are working "in season and out of season," for the building of "our house."

The San Marcial union, led by Mrs. J. N. Broyles, is conducting a successful series of mothers' meetings, which cannot fail to preëmpt the homes for temperance and right living.

Other local unions are bravely holding the fort and our united prayer is that the present financial depression may result in a spiritual uplift—a "drawing nearer to the cross." A faithful proving of Him who is abundantly able to bless us above what we can ask or think.

Though ofttimes weary we are not discouraged, for we know the battle is God's and in proportion as we seek His guidance, we are slowly, perhaps, yet surely building sentiment, in favor of "home protection" against the drink curse, which shall crystallize at the ballot box, to work out for home and humanity an "exceeding and eternal weight of glory" in the universal prohibition of legalized rum.

M. J. BORDEN,
State Pres. New Mexico W. C. T. U., Albuquerque.

"I AM quite sure that the earnest, prayerful hearts of our white-ribbon sisters everywhere will rejoice to learn that the sons and the daughters of the liquor sellers of primitive Crusade memory are being drawn by the 'Spirit of all Truth' into the fold of Christ, and in Hillsboro this winter the Presbyterian, the Episcopal and the Methodist churches have verified the promise, 'My word shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it,'" cheerily writes Mother Thompson.

MISSOURI.

MANY EXCELLENT REPORTS.

Crusade echoes are still flying, nearly all unions rejoicing over the uplift that came from their anniversary meetings. A dozen different lecturers and evangelists are in the field. Demorest contest work is being pushed everywhere, and is both popular and financially profitable. Department work is steadily carried forward, evangelistic and social seeming specially prominent. A large number of unions meet every week, and gospel temperance meetings once a month are reported by many.

Mrs. Hoffman is traveling and lecturing with tireless energy. Her birthday, January 18, found her in Springfield, whereupon she was presented with a gold pin, the pendant inscribed "Springfield unions" on one side and "C. C. H." in monogram on the other. Mrs. Hoffman organized unions in Brownington, Deepwater and Montrose in twenty-first district, spent ten days in twenty-third district, speaking at Mount Vernon, Union Springs, Chesapeake, Aurora, Southwest City and Monett, and visiting several unions, including Neosho, in the afternoon, and organized a union of twenty-eight members at Pineville. Members were added wherever asked for, and her work appreciated in all localities. She is now in the northern part of the state.

Mrs. E. A. Cranmer, president of the W. C. T. U. of South Dakota, is lecturing in the state during February, delighting her audiences, organizing new unions and building up the work. Mrs. Emma Smith, of Kansas, has given eight lectures in twenty-third district, and Mrs. J. H. Berkey gave four lectures for the Temperance Alliance in Lawrence county.

Miss Adelaide Sherman, railroad evangelist, held a month's meetings at Monett, which resulted in a hundred conversions, and the establishment of a reading-room for railroad men.

Verona has just defeated a saloon petition but our government has given that city a distillery, against which local votes alone are powerless. Public meetings are being held all over the district.

Seneca held a memorial service for Lucy Stone, February 6, and distributed copies of Dr. Gregg's address on equal rights. They also sent to each of the tax-payers in town a copy of the Day Dream, a keen presentation of the liquor question.

The unions are organizing L. T. L's.

A district executive meeting was held at Monett, February 7 and 8, at which the pledge for state work of $100 was apportioned to the unions, and also $100 to be raised for district work.

St. Louis has had a successful series of meetings conducted by Miss Jennie Smith at the police court, fire department, railway shops and railway hospital. At the Missouri Pacific shops a railroad temperance association was organized with a membership of fifty. A new union was also organized, and called the Jennie Smith union. Vigorous L. T. L. work is being carried on with about five hundred pledged members, and a Legion of newsboys just being formed.

A book social on February 13 added many volumes to the library already gathered for the city jail. Mrs. S. F. Grubb recently addressed the monthly district meeting. Sunday services are maintained by different unions at the Marine Hospital and the Bethesda Home.

The Central union of Kansas City, meeting every Tuesday, is pressing steadily forward with department work, and is especially successful in scientific temperance instruction and in prison and hospital lines. This union is much encouraged by the good work being done by the Progressive Prohibition Club, which meets every week and holds Sabbath afternoon public meetings at which different leading ministers assist.

Bolivar union has four meetings each month as follows: 1, Business. 2, Parlor. 3, Mothers' meetings. 4, Prayer and Bible study. A library has been purchased for the jail and literature racks at depots are kept full. The union has had two parlor meetings at homes of members in the country, neighbors of the hostess from the country being the invited guests, with very satisfying results and gain of new members. Both men and women attended and were much interested in the work and the program presented, which at one meeting included a question-box. Nine dollars and a Christmas box of provisions were sent to the Industrial Home at Springfield, the result of a social purity program at a parlor meeting when each one pledged what she could afford to give.

Clarence union recently had at one of their regular meetings Dr. Patmore, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, who in his extensive travels abroad has witnessed the good done by our foreign missionaries, and spoke in highest praise of their work. This union is holding prayer and Bible meetings at the different churches in succession, using the W. T. P. A. Bible leaflets. Have also a Friday evening public meeting, keep a half column filled in both the town papers, and, as might be expected, are gaining new members.

Kirkwood's annual free-will offering meeting was held February 4, Mrs. Grubb delivering an eloquent address to a large audience.

Lee's Summit, with eight active and five honorary members is preparing a matron's contest. Their literature racks in depot and barber shop have a Bible in each, and beneath a tin mite-box, painted black, with W. C. T. U. and our motto in gilt letters.

Hopkins is doing good work with public and parlor meetings, Crusade anniversary being specially helpful. They are publishing the Hopkins White Ribboner as a local influence, the advertisements paying for the cost of paper.

Stanberry L. T. L. has quadrupled its membership in past two months, and the children held a public meeting on Sabbath afternoon and distributed four hundred pages of literature. Ludlow has had seven Demorest medal contests and holds public meetings on Sabbath evening each month. A lecture and Sabbath service from Mrs. Hoffman have had a strong effect on public sentiment.

Canton union followed a Crusade program with serving ice cream and cake and netted fourteen dollars. They use a column in the weekly paper. Newark observed Crusade Day with a thanksgiving prayer meeting and holds a public temperance meeting each month.

Cole Camp Y has grown from five active members last October to sixteen active and eleven honoraries, and are holding parlor meetings, entertainments and medal contests, beside regular departments carried.

The Ralls county convention held in New London had hearty assistance from pastors, and lectures were given by the district president, Mrs. Lou Coffman, and by the state president, the convention being the best ever held in the county. The following day Mrs. Hoffman lectured by special request in the Baptist church, a large audience gathering to listen.

Miss Lillian Wood has spent a week lecturing in fifth district at Mt. Carmel, Grange Hall, High Creek, Magnet and Watson, addressed two L. T. L's, held one woman's meeting and made many friends for the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Cranmer has since given several lectures in this district and organized a union at Watson besides adding members to old unions.

Through the help of R. Foster Stone's meetings, sixteen members were added to the union at Princeton. Two oyster socials have lately been held with pleasure and financial profit.

Adrian union, organized eighteen months ago, carries on seven departments and meets each week. Mrs. Frances Sheldon lectured for them February 6, and a silver medal contest was held two days later.

The union at Craig has over fifty members in a town of only five hundred people, and is doing good work. A "World's Fair" social and a social for the Christian Home have been held, with good attendance and satisfaction. Crusade anniversary was observed. A reception was given Mrs. Cranmer, and an audience of four hundred listened to her eloquent lecture. Mr. H. Barney is secured for a series of meetings, both at Craig and Adrian.

Ashburn union is rejoicing in the prospect of being soon rid of their saloons through the effect of circulating a remonstrance, and by the same means Lutesville union has twice prevented saloons being opened. Lutesville had excellent Crusade Day services, is carrying on department work faithfully and meets every week.

El Dorado union maintains their public temperance meeting every Monday night, and is jubilant over the closing out of their last saloon. The cause assigned by one saloon man for closing was "the women bother us so all the time!" But the unions are not imagining that their work is done, and are now setting themselves to watch the drug stores. Beside regular weekly meetings, they have had two parlor meetings, and on February 14 a valentine box supper. Mrs. Hoffman has given them one lecture, and Mrs. Smith, of Kansas City, four lectures and two sermons.

Great encouragement has come to the Louisiana union from the two weeks' gospel temperance meetings, led by Mr. James M. Dunn, of Milwaukee, who had crowded houses every night.

In Appleton City the successful Crusade meeting was followed a little later by an excellent and telling sermon by the M. E. church pastor on the text, "Is the young man safe?" Then they had Mrs. Cranmer. Both Appleton City and Louisiana furnish a column for their town paper.

Their fourth medal contest is being prepared by the Austin union. One, at request of the pastor, was repeated at the Pleasant Valley church, the pastor giving a book as prize. The contests have put over twenty dollars into the treasury, of which five dollars has been sent to state work, and a like sum to the Temple. People enjoy the contests and new members are coming into the union. At request of the pastor at Austin, the union occupied his pulpit in his absence, December 24, with a Crusade anniversary service.

From the Clarksville Crusade anniversary a contribution was sent to the National treasury. At Lamar, special subjects were assigned the four pastors for Crusade service, who responded beautifully. Contest work is carried on, always calling out large audiences, and meetings are held every week. Butler has recently held two medal contests, the first a class of girls, the second a class of boys, and has another class of boys nearly ready. Meeting regularly each Saturday, department work, Bible meetings, mothers' meetings and parliamentary drills all find place. Visits and prayer-meetings at the jail are frequently had.

At Bonne Terre the union carries on nine departments, press work, juvenile work and literature receiving most attention.

The Sedalia Y were twice compelled to postpone a medal contest by reason of extremely stormy weather, but with true Y pluck they "tried again" and were delighted with their success.

De Soto has a new railroad temperance association, the result of a visit from Miss Jennie Smith, and the union maintains noon meetings at the shops and has had a reception for the railroad men.

Clinton had Mrs. Cranmer for a parlor meeting and a lecture February 19. Honorary members are a very helpful factor in this union. The Anti-saloon Army is an aggressive temperance society and holds a public temperance meeting the last Monday night of each month with overflowing houses. At the one last held forty-seven bottles of liquor were displayed, fastened around the edge of a large decorative screen bearing the inscription: Sold to Minors by Saloon-keepers of Henry County. Forty-four clear cases with indisputable evidence were brought before the grand (?) jury in January, but not an indictment was obtained. Temperance sentiment is extremely weak, and saloons flourish. Yet there is a "Gideon's band" and God is helping them.

EVA JONES,
State Reporter, Clinton.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

RAYS OF SUNSHINE.

To the weary toilers of this southern clime the cool, bracing breezes of this winter have been both acceptable and beneficial while they aid us in realizing the severe suffering of others from blizzards. The same frost which retards the too early flow of the sap and thus secures a superior crop of fruit, illustrates and comforts us in the temperance work, as we note what beautiful fruits of righteousness are borne by those who have endured the chilling frosts of opposition and temporary defeat, "Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down."

The first large gathering of the feminine clans this year was the Woman's Parliament at Pomona. There were sixty-one delegates present, representing as many societies—religious and secular. Without "malice aforethought" the trend of the speeches was to equal suffrage and the session pronounced the best yet held.

Sickness has greatly retarded the work of late, and among the many sufferers is our state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. Emily V. Wright. Her first thoughts, as the crisis passed which had taken her so closely to the valley of shadows, were of the temperance work, and desiring the work of her department not to be hindered by her illness, she requested that another might be appointed in her place.

Like many another visitor to this land, Mrs. S. A. McClees, National superintendent of soldiers' and sailors' work, is fascinated with the beauties and bounties of nature here afforded, and hopes to make Los Angeles her permanent address. She accepted the superintendency of her department for Los Angeles county—a department not before adopted.

The work among soldiers and sailors had not, however, been entirely neglected, as the soldiers at the Santa Monica Home can testify of many kind remembrances from the local union, and the sailors in many ports have been made to rejoice. Especially is this true of San Diego and San Pedro, where our sisters have visited a number of ships, supplied them with literature and circulated the pledge. At San Pedro, recently, a sailor visited the regular union meeting, and it being one of those exceptional times when a program had not been prepared the president feared the brother might be lonely, and so invited him to act as secretary pro tem, which he did, and remained during the entire meeting.

Mr. J. M. Glass, chairman of state executive of the Prohibition party, spent part of February in San Bernardino county, speaking at Colton, Highlands, Redlands and San Bernardino. At Highlands an all-day service was held, participated in by ministers, citizens and members of the W. C. T. U. Mr. Glass's work in the south closed with a county rally at the M. E. church in San Bernardino, where the entire day (think of it—busy Monday) was given by ministers, lawyers, our comrades and others to the discussion of such topics as these: "The attitude of the churches toward the temperance question—as it has been and as it should be." "Short cuts to the destruction of immorality in our midst," considered under the heads of Sunday closing, newspapers, prostitution and woman's work. Mr. Glass spoke on "The outlook for the suppression of the saloon," in the afternoon, and his evening address was said (by an old party paper) to be too strong even for Prohibitionists. Seven ministers participated in the program and the noon was spent in a fast service. A wonderful revival has stirred the M. E. church people this winter, and the recent researches into the evils of San Bernardino by their pastor, Rev. C. A. Westenberg, gave his words upon "Prostitution" unusual force. At the close of the evening meeting the large audience adopted a resolution condemning the liquor traffic, prostitution and the present methods used in treating these evils.

San Bernardino W. C. T. U. was actively engaged in prison work during the winter, releasing from prison life one young colored woman, homeless and friendless, who expressed a desire to reform, and so was given an opportunity in our Ransom Home. A little seed sown by the union four years ago has recently borne refreshing fruit. The local militia were requested by our sisters not to serve wine at their New Year's receptions, as was their custom. The request being granted, the white-ribboners thereafter donated refreshments in appreciation thereof. This year the union was invited to receive with the soldier boys and cheerfully accepted. Good use was made of the opportunity to advertise our work by attaching to every plate of refreshments furnished by members of the union, the name of the donor and her official title in the W. C. T. U. Thus most of the departments were represented.

Some one has said there is nothing like a debt to keep a church alive and at work. It seems true also in the case of the Compton W's and Y's, for a few years ago the union was getting "weary," but now the two societies show with pride a nice hall, with a seating capacity of six hundred, and though bearing the burden of lifting a mortgage they greatly desire the Los Angeles county convention to meet with them—which it will do April 18-20. And such persevering Y's! Not only Compton but the surrounding country knows they are alive and healthy.

Our White Ribbon, so ably edited by Mrs. Mary Case Lord, closed the year 1893 "with all debts paid and twenty dollars in its apron pocket." So it says, but a few friends know that but for the generosity of the editor, all debts would not have been met, and we trust that our gratitude can sometime take practical form. From an appreciative one in Missouri, come these words: "May God bless our bright little paper and its editor, that she may continue to wave the flag of peace and purity over Southern California's miles of loveliness." And a Lompoc sister writes that she must have "our inspiration."

East Riverside—in prohibition Riverside county—gives us this object lesson of the "good time coming." On alternate Fridays the W. C. T. U. are given, by the school trustees, an hour and a half of school time to teach all the scholars L. T. L. lessons.

The National Y prize banner made its debut in Southern California at a valentine party given by the Los Angeles Y's, at the home of their state superintendent, Mrs. N. W. Brodbeck. Hearts abounded, varied in form and use. Interesting papers were read after which Mrs. S. A. McClees told the guests of her sailor valentines.

This Y has one department "quite English" since it was imported from Canada by a Toronto Y sister. It is a bicycle Y, or a plan to combine outside temperance work with pleasure. All members must sign the pledge, (this Y has the triple pledge) and pay regular dues.

Mrs. Emma Cash, state organizer, held enthusiastic meetings at San Pedro, Wilmington, Redondo, Compton and Downey, and secured many new members for the unions. Wilmington has so many obstacles in the foreign population and saloon element that the little band of workers are true heroines to stand by our cause. Redondo union relinquishes a few hundred dollars rather than be party to a transaction which permitted a cigar stand, and that, too, open on Sunday.

Among the many who attended the Compton Sunday evening meeting held by Mrs. Cash were a mother and daughter whose hopes and home were darkened by the curse of rum. When they reached home they found the father, as often before, wild with drink and ready to kill some one, as he had loaded his revolver. A son, who had been hunting and stopped in town on his way home, soon came, in like condition, and naturally the father and son quarreled, though the mother tried to prevent it. The revolver was raised, the gun likewise, both too truly aimed, and the father fell dead. The son walked to the well to get a drink and sat down by it, but before the mother, who, with her two children, had witnessed it all, could reach him, his life had departed.

As the mother was a member of the Compton union it was not surprising that when Mrs. Cash met the comrades the following afternoon the chief topic was, "How shall we get rid of these two saloons?"

Must it come to pass in our land as in Egypt that there will be no deliverance until it can be said, "There was not a house where there was not one dead"?

"Hark! the onset! will ye fold your Faith clad arms in lazy lock?
Up, oh, up, thou drowsy soldier
Worlds are charging to the shock.

"Worlds are charging—heaven beholding.
Thou hast but an hour to fight.
Now the blazoned cross unfolding,
On! right onward, for the right.

"On! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell for ages—tell for God."

GABRELLA T. STICKNEY,
State Reporter, Los Angeles.

ONLY ORIGINAL AND GENUINE
Jackson Favorite Waist

FITS!
AND SECURES A DELIGHTFUL SUPPORT

TRADE MARK JAXON

THIS IS TRUE of the genuine JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST, which gives the wearer a greater degree of comfort and enjoyment than any design of corset can, yet does not sacrifice style or fashionable figure, but a graceful and pleasing support is always the result.

BE COMFORTABLE

as well as graceful, for you can be both in a genuine JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST. Extra long waist. Side steels, if you wish them, under arms and over hips. Colors Drab, White, Gold or Black. Low or high cut fronts. Ask your dealers for it, or write us (mentioning UNION SIGNAL), sending $1 for sample, postpaid.

Awarded Highest Medal at World's Fair.

Coronet Corset Co., Jackson, Mich.

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of

BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON

Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.

E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.

Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS

TASTELESS—EFFECTUAL FOR A DISORDERED LIVER

Taken as directed these famous Pills will prove marvellous restoratives to all enfeebled by the above or kindred diseases.

25 Cents a Box,

but generally recognized in England and, in fact throughout the world to be "worth a guinea a box," for the reason that they WILL CURE a wide range of complaints, and that they have saved to many sufferers not merely one but many guineas, in doctors' bills.

Covered with a Tasteless & Soluble Coating.

Of all druggists. Price 25 cents a box.
New York Depot, 365 Canal St. 11

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,
80-82 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK

Corner Dearborn and Jackson Sts.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

UNDER STATE CONTROL.

INDIVIDUAL AND SAVINGS ACCOUNTS SOLICITED.

SAFETY ▲ DEPOSIT ▲ VAULTS.

Sound Discs are invisible, and comfortable. Relieve more cases of

DEAFNESS

than all devices in the world. H. A. Wales, 674 Ashland Block, Chicago.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The ladies of the Haverhill W. C. T. U. are in the habit of visiting the almshouse, at least once a year, to carry flowers, fruit or gifts that will be acceptable. On the opening of the new year they were accompanied by Rev. E. C. Langford, who had his magic lantern and over one hundred views. He talked in an interesting and instructive manner, and was rewarded by a most attentive audience. It was a rare treat to these poor mortals, who see but little of the pictures of life, except on the shady side. It was a kind thing to do, and many a lonely hour will be enlivened by the remembrance of those pictures.

I am happy in giving you the annual report from Manchester W. C. T. U. They have held in the past year forty-five meetings and four especial business meetings, average attendance at the business meetings being sixteen. I think their membership numbers about one hundred and seventy-five persons. Four active workers have died the past year, and two honorary members.

Three Demorest medal contests, two silver and one gold have been held. Religious services are supplied at the Industrial School every Sabbath. Three national and two local petitions have been indorsed and circulated. Crusade Day was observed with appropriate exercises. Mothers' meetings have been held, and an especial prayer service held every Saturday evening. The union has been greatly interested in the Sunday observance, social purity, health and hygiene, schools and colleges, and especial meetings have been held in the interest of these worthy and all-important subjects. The present recording secretary has filled her position for nine years.

Flower day was observed at all their public institutions, and Christmas day at the almshouse, as well as contributions given for a Christmas service at the county farm. Papers are subscribed for, to be kept at the police station. Three leaflets have been prepared by their members, and a fourth, on "Fashionable Gambling," is soon to be put before the public. They have had three lectures from noted speakers. Their reading-room is well patronized, and seems to be appreciated, according to the following figures: The whole number of readers registered during the year, not including Sundays, 12,846, making an average of 41 per day. Sunday readers average 17 per day. There have been 1,663 visitors. A free intelligence office is kept, which has proved very helpful to both parties.

The Loyal Temperance Legion of Henniker met at the home of Mrs. E. Maria Cogswell, when thirty children assisted in packing a barrel of clothing and useful articles to be sent to the Ruggles St. Baptist church in Roxbury for distribution among the poor.

The following are some of the contributions to the lumbermen's camps in the White Mountain region: James L. Morgan, Brooklyn, N. Y., tracts; New Hampshire Bible Society, Bibles, Testaments and parts; Epworth League, Warren, R. I., two barrels of reading matter; the W. C. T. U.'s of Athol Center, South Framingham, Hinsdale, South Middleboro and headquarters of Boston, each a barrel of reading matter and comfort bags. All these are from our sister state, Massachusetts. Several barrels have been received, but the superintendent cannot decipher from whence they came.

New Hampshire must wake up and work abreast of the adjoining states in this matter. It is home mission work and should find favor in the eyes of every one. Every one should see and subscribe for the tiny new paper published by the superintendent of the lumbermen's department, Mrs. Rev. W. A. Loyne, Jefferson, N. H., price 25 cents per year (monthly), A Voice from the Woods, —for it gives a full account of the work done by both the superintendent and the agent, Mr. Arthur H. Dury, the camps visited, the amount of reading left, the number of men in each camp, also how it is received. It is really a very interesting paper. I must make mention of the kind gift of forty-eight dozen views and two glasses (stereopticon) from B. W. Kilburn, of Littleton, N. H. A picture of Mr. Dury appears in the first number. Send for a sample copy and I'm sure you will catch the spirit needed and "lend a hand."

The Hillsborough county convention met in quarterly meeting at Hillsborough Bridge. The delegates were met at the depot and escorted to the home of Gov. J. B. Smith, where they were given an elegant lunch. The meeting was called together at two p. m. by Mrs. Jewett, with Mrs. Addie B. Jones as the recording secretary, at the church. The Clarions were present and furnished excellent music. The roll-call was responded to by twenty-six delegates. Words of welcome were given by Mrs. J. B. Smith.

Mrs. E. H. Harris, of Nashua, read a paper upon "Things that hinder." The next was by Miss T. Dunlap, of Manchester, "Can we expect our children to do valiant service for God and Home and Native Land unless brought up to attend church regularly?" Ex-Gov. Goodale spoke his usual word of encouragement to the W. C. T. U. workers. He was confident that the day would surely come when our land should be freed from the drink curse.

Gov. J. B. Smith heartily endorsed the good work of the ladies. He believed in moral suasion and legal action as well; the law was ample and work could be accomplished in both lines, inducing men to refrain from using intoxicating drinks. Mrs. M. E. Chase spoke in favor of the Mercy Home and its needs.

It was voted to appropriate five dollars for the purpose of printing the paper on "Hygiene" read by Dr. Ellen Wallace, at a previous convention. Tea was served in the chapel. At the gold medal contest all spoke well. The medal was won by Miss Alice Chalk, of Manchester. Each of the others received a book.

The Franklin W. C. T. U. will give the proceeds of its Demorest medal contest for the support of the missionary at the lumberman's camp.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Mercy Home it was voted to request Mrs. Fellows to try and induce the railroads to suppress the impure literature that is now allowed to be found upon the daily trains.

Gospel meetings have been held throughout the year in Lakeport, Laconia and Tilton (this much for Belknap county). Tilton has looked after her L. T. L. and assisted the citizen committee in every way possible to enforce the prohibitory law.

In Carroll county there are six unions. Monthly meetings are held by the pastors at Wolfboro. This county is so widely scattered that it is difficult to get a large attendance at convention. Mrs. Gleason has done some good work through this county in the line of social purity lectures.

Cheshire county has eight unions, though not all are doing active work. A part of the year they have held services in the jail each week. Marlow has held a few gospel meetings. Gospel meetings have been conducted by the Hinsdale union. Marlboro has had one mothers' meeting and raised money by means of furnishing dinners and five cent investments and sent money to the Temperance Temple.

A mass-meeting was held in Concord early in the winter, which was largely attended. Miss C. R. Wendall, our state president, was one of the speakers. She introduced Mrs. Gleason, from Roslindale, Mass. The meeting was called to see what action could be taken whereby a public sentiment can be aroused that will demand a rigid enforcement of the laws prohibiting the sale of liquor within our borders. "The law, the state and God are on our side, and if we do our duty, victory will come to our cause, and I hope that action will be taken to-day that will result in driving the curse from our land," said ex-Governor Goodale, at the opening of the meeting.

D. C. Rennick, of Littleton, gave an outline of the work done in the northern counties. He stated that if twenty men, loyal and fearless, would band themselves together they could, with proper means, drive the saloons from any town. Of the twenty-seven saloons once in the town of Littleton, not one remains. "We have purged the town from rum sheriffs, rum solicitors and rum grand jurors. This was done by organizing a law and order league, which embraced all the leading men of the town."

A motion was made and carried that a committee of twelve be chosen to organize a law and order league, to draft a constitution and by-laws and to appoint all necessary officers, and report in Concord the following week. The committee consisted of men of prominence and ability. Among them were the governor of the state, J. B. Smith, ex-Governor Goodale, Rev. C. D. Hill, D. D., of Manchester, Col. E. S. Nutter, of Concord, and others equally worthy.

The W. C. T. U. at Hinsdale supported during last summer an ice barrel.

The quarterly meeting of Merrimack was held in Bow Mills at the new hall built by the W. C. T. U. This is a thriving little union, with a stirring president. They have in the past year earned five hundred and twenty-seven dollars by suppers, festivals and lectures. It is no wonder that the convention was well entertained.

The reports from the various unions came in well. Warner had had eight Demorest contests, and one gold medal contest, with sixty-four dollars as a net proceed. They netted fifteen dollars at their town meeting dinner. Henniker L. T. L. has sent to the Mercy Home a valuable box of clothing and ten dollars in money. They have thirty members.

Pennacook sent six representatives to the convention. They have now thirty-five members, and ten honorary members. The good word for the "Clarions," and the lecture from Sol Cutter, of Nashua, entitled "Who Owns the Ox?" which generally went with the Clarions, was heard from all unions.

Franklin reported eighty-eight members, fourteen having been added the past year. They had had four contests, and nine lectures. Three thousand pages of literature have been distributed and ten copies of the Anti-Tobacco Gem are taken. They have sent sixteen dollars to the Mercy Home.

A detailed account was given of the fair at Tilton, which netted $225. In the afternoon, Mrs. Foster, of Canterbury, read a paper upon "Character Building"; Mrs. Hardy, of Pennacook, one upon "Certain Improvements Needed," and Mrs. F. H. Bailey, "A Plea for the Protection of the Young."

Cheshire county convention was held at Hinsdale, afternoon and evening. The address of welcome, by Miss Smith, was responded to by Mrs. W. G. Cain, of Marlboro. The president gave her address to the satisfaction of all. A paper by Mrs. Merrill, of Keene, was one that should be put into the hands of every young woman in the state. Mrs. Bailey, of Hinsdale, also gave a fine essay. After remarks by the clergymen the convention adjourned.

Newport entertained the Sullivan county W. C. T. U. convention. The county officers were reëlected, except Mrs. Bridgman, who resigned, and her place was filled by Mrs. Leland. Mrs. Jewett gave words of cheer and encouragement. The Newport friends entertained the convention with recitations and songs. Mrs. Coburn read a paper on the work of the young people. Newport has had lectures by three noted lecturers.

Mrs. Sargent, in reporting her visit to the county farm, urged the ladies to make an effort to find homes for the children where they can be surrounded by better influences. In the evening Mrs. Jewett gave a lecture on the friends and foes of temperance.

And so the work goes on; no one can tell the good arising from one little act, one simple hand pressure, one word of brotherly love.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

Official Communications.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

OUTLINE OF WORK FOR 1894.

I.

Earnest and faithful observance of our 7 P. M. Concert of Prayer. The special texts for the year are: Dan. 11:32 (last clause); Phil. 4:13.

II.

Follow carefully the general plan of organization and of regular work, as found in Questions Answered and in the L. T. L. Manual, vitalizing these with your own individuality. A faithful observance of the directions for division into Senior and Junior grades, and of the subdivision into platoons, with the election of ensigns, will be a great help in maintaining both order and interest. The opportunity for promotions from one grade or platoon to the next above, as the proper age for each is reached, is a constant stimulus. These promotions should be accompanied by special exercises.

III.

Information should be constantly sought in regard to special methods, as presented in The Young Crusader, in THE UNION SIGNAL, and in the articles furnished by state superintendents to their respective state W. C. T. U. papers. To these the watchful superintendent will add methods of her own suggested by hints gathered here and there or evolved by her own ingenuity. Use constantly our "Prohibition Rallying Cry" and our "L. T. L. Salute," both of which were given in supplement of December Young Crusader.

IV.

The excellent helps provided by the W. T. P. A. should be faithfully read, supplemented, if thought best, by helps from other quarters. Attention is specially called to this point, as Legions have been found which ignore almost entirely our W. T. P. A. publications. Each local superintendent should have for her own use a catalogue of L. T. L. publications, a copy of Questions Answered, and of the L. T. L. Manual, of the Responsive Reading on the Loyal Temperance Legion, of the Leaflet on Diplomas and Seals, and of Loyal Leaflet No. 14. She should also be a regular subscriber to the Young Crusader and to the Advanee Guard. One thing more. She should supply herself with a copy of last National L. T. L. report, which she can do by sending an order to me with stamp enclosed for postage. Each district and county superintendent should have, in addition to the foregoing, a copy of National Leaflet No. 208.

V.

Give special attention to advanced plans for the Seniors, such as the development of graduates by our diploma course of study, the formation of reading circles for taking up the seal courses, discussion upon the les-

Get a COLUMBIA

IT IS ECONOMY TO BUY THE BEST.

Columbias are built to last. Riders know this; they see the honest old Columbias about and doing good service year after year. Columbias are also built to look well, as every body knows who ever saw a Columbia. The standard Columbia price of $125 must prove attractive to every intending purchaser of a wheel. Our catalogue for 1894 shows a line of wheels all newly designed, which for attractiveness excel any bicycle ever offered. It is free at our agencies, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford.

Do You Remember the
$2,000 GOLD COIN
that was to be distributed to those who did the best work with Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread Exhibited at the World's Fair? The prizes have now been distributed. If you would like to know the names and addresses of the prize winners, write to us. It's interesting to all who crochet. This Thread received the highest possible award at the World's Fair, Chicago.
Our Illustrated books, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, are standard. Send 10 cts. stamps for either one. Our tidy patterns and bed spread patterns 5c. each, stamp.
Glasgo Lace Thread Co., Glasgo, Conn.

Knox's Sparkling Calves' Foot Gelatine
THE PUREST MADE
Received the only Medal and Diploma at the World's Fair, Chicago, on Package Gelatine for table use, for STRENGTH, PURITY and GOOD FLAVOR.
The only Gelatine positively free from odor or taste. Our new package has Rose Gelatine in top of each package to make fancy desserts. Your grocer has it if he keeps the best.
CHARLES B. KNOX, Johnstown, N. Y.
Send a 2-cent stamp for little book. "DAINTY DESSERTS FOR DAINTY PEOPLE."

"The STANDARD"
The only Dripless Strainer in the World
No drip to soil table linen. No wires to clog spout. No falling off. Beautifully nickel-plated.

Agents Wanted
Sent to any address on receipt of price, 25 cents
Standard Strainer Co., 34 Maiden Lane New York City

The Columbian Raisin Seeder
Has received the World's Fair Award.
A perfectly simple device that anybody can use. Every housekeeper will appreciate it. Sent by mail to any address for 25 cts. Liberal terms to agents. JAS. L. HALL, Box 24, Kingston, Mass.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

FOR MAN AND BEAST.
Manufactured by
THE J. L. Mott Iron Works
84 to 90 Beekman Street, NEW YORK.
311 & 313 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Catalogue on Application.

A Swell Affair.

Did You Ever Look Like This?
DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM
STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY
DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS
Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich.
THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM

ALASKA STOVE LIFTER
will not get hot even if left in the lid. Heavily Nickel Plated. Price by mail, postpaid, 30 cents.
TROY NICKEL WORKS, Troy, N. Y.

6 tubs in one
BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.
E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

WANTED—Young women to train for nurses. Inclose stamp. People's Health Journal, Chicago.

sons and upon current events, essays, parliamentary drills and the selection of specific objects to which the benevolent work and contributions of the Legion shall be directed. While doing all this for the Seniors, let us remember that the work among the Juniors needs equal vigilance in order to maintain their enthusiasm. Their regular exercises should be varied and bright, and they, too, should be provided with special work for outside objects.

VI.

As soon as you have secured any considerable number of graduates call a state convention of these, and organize them into a state Legion, as Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and New York have already done.

VII.

The need for trained leaders and helpers being imperative, county conferences should be everywhere held, in which the various phases of L. T. L. work will be freely discussed and new plans devised. Any one sending a stamp to me can procure a program of a most successful conference of this kind recently held in Boston.

VIII.

Carry out to the largest extent possible the plan for county Legions and county L. T. L. conventions as outlined in National Leaflet No. 208. Nothing else ever tried has been the means of bringing so much of enthusiasm into our general work. The money obtained from the small fee for membership in the county Legion may be properly used for paying state dues where L. T. L. representation in the state conventions has been secured; also for any necessary expenses of the officers or work of the county Legion.

IX.

As L. T. L. representation in the National conventions is now assured upon the basis of one adult W. C. T. U. delegate who is an active L. T. L. worker for every one thousand members paying fifty dollars into the National treasury, each state should arrange to be represented by at least one delegate. All National dues must represent individual members, and must pass through the state treasury.

X.

Each Legion should have a standing committee for obtaining subscribers to The Young Crusader, since this is our official organ, bearing the same relation to our L. T. L. as THE UNION SIGNAL does to the W. C. T. U. Let us make a united effort to give this paper the patronage that its excellence deserves. Each Senior L. T. L. should have a standing committee for obtaining subscribers to the Advance Guard, which is the special organ of the Seniors. Whether this magazine shall continue to exist depends upon the substantial expressions of our appreciation during the coming four months.

XI.

The special objects for our contributions during the coming year are the Temple and the National Temperance Hospital. Mrs. Carse has asked that each Legioner contribute fifty cents to the Temple. Let us at least make our contributions as large as circumstances will permit. Our first work for the hospital is in furnishing the L. T. L. room, but we also wish to receive contributions toward endowing the beds. In addition to these two general objects, it is hoped that each state superintendent will place some specific object before her own Legions. I am specially desirous that we shall give Miss Gordon some help for her L. T. L. work in foreign lands. Read Prov. 11: 24, 25.

HELEN G. RICE,
Nat. Supt.

1597 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

We learn from Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president of Texas W. C. T. U., that their annual convention will be held the first week of June, that time being chosen to insure the attendance of teachers whose schools do not close until the last week of May. President Stoddard writes enthusiastically of the good attending Mrs. Hoffman's trip through the state in February, at which time she delivered thirteen addresses in twelve cities and it is planned that other lecturers shall be put into the field. Mrs. Hoffman will return for their state convention when it is hoped she will remain for a time in the state.

The March number of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. Bulletin bears to the constituency the resignation of Mrs. Mary H. Jones, ex-state president, who for four years has faithfully borne the burdens of editor and publisher, and who passes the paper to her successor free from debt and with money in its treasury. President Hammer has been elected editor, and Mrs. H. H. Forrest, publisher.

Miss Belle Kearney, who has been an invalid since our National Convention, is again able to enter the field, for which we are grateful. We trust her voice may be heard East and West after April 8, when she will be open for engagements.

A most interesting report is received of the Crusade anniversary exercises of the W. C. T. U. of Steubenville, O. Members of the union marched into the First Presbyterian church in procession and were met at the platform by the ministers of the city. The stage was handsomely decorated; a life size portrait of Mrs. James Sterling, the first president of the league, occupied a prominent place. Bunting hung in graceful folds around the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," beneath which was "150,000 strong."

A history of the twenty years' work was read by the secretary. Among other items the statement was made that twenty-four of those engaged in the rum traffic at the time of the Crusade, have died, some by violence, others in the horrors of delirium tremens. Of the seven hundred women who signed the constitution of the Woman's Temperance League in 1874, one hundred have gone to their rest. Letters of reminiscences and congratulation were read from six ministers, who were pastors here during the Crusade, also letters from absent comrades, among whom was Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese. Many experiences were given by Crusaders who were present.

At the close of the meeting, the president, Mrs. E. J. Brownlee, presented a handsome oak secretary to the recording secretary, Miss Julia M. Galloway, as a token of the love and appreciation of the women for her efficient services of the last twenty years. During this time Miss Galloway has continuously filled every office within the gift of the society.

The Leadville, Col., union, though in the clouds, is not of the clouds cloudy, as we can testify of our own knowledge. The city gave to them a hall which they have remodeled to meet the needs of their work. A gospel temperance meeting is held there every Sunday afternoon and since the disbanding of the Y. M. C. A. is the only meeting of its kind in the city. They also have lodging rooms for working girls under the wise guardianship of a matron of true Christian character. In appointing the county board of charities and corrections, Judge Nash selected all from the working force of this union.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Just as we were wondering where we could secure a loan to carry us on our way another thirty days, providentially came the following dues: Ohio, $63; Colorado, $50; Northern California, $44; Kentucky, $25. If a few more states could send parts of their dues this month it would decidedly lighten the burden the officers at National headquarters are bearing.

How glad we are to have the children take an interest in our work. From Eau Claire, Wis.: "Our Loyal Legion observed Crusade Day, and in response to Miss Willard's call took up a collection, which I enclose you, not a great sum, but to many of those little folks a penny means a good deal, and these were given so willingly, and they were all pleased to help on the work even a little." And to us these pennies mean a good deal; they show us these children as they grow on into reliable, influential citizens, making happy homes, the foundation of all good government.

Master Guy Swartz, of Clintondale, Pa., also helped the National by gathering up the dimes sent by that union.

A Missourian says: "Lots of unions die from poverty of spirit, but we Missouri women know better than to sit down and expect the Lord to bless us when we do nothing ourselves. Our own brave, intrepid Clara Hoffman would disown us if we failed to respond to a call for help in our own ranks. Will send more as soon as we can collect it."

Steubenville, O., sends us a much larger gift than most unions.

We would be glad to give the readers of this column more of the bright, encouraging letters that reach the treasurer, but all can not be given. The following letter, from Wisconsin, strikes the keynote: "I am hoping, longing, praying for the time to come when we can give something better than dimes, or even dollars, something that will help much more to speed forward the glad day when the legalized saloon will be swept forever from our land. When we can give our ballots I feel sure the great work we are striving to do for God and Home and Native Land will be accomplished, and I fear, not till then."

HELEN M. BARKER.

Our Library Table.

THE DAILY NEWS ALMANAC for 1894, compiled by George E. Plumbe, A. B., LL.B., and issued by the Chicago Daily News Company, is a one-volume encyclopedia of valuable and trustworthy information—a dictionary of events. It is well termed a "Political Register," since it faithfully records the movements of the various political factions. This is, however, but one of its specialties as it presents the facts and figures of religious matters, secular business, history and affairs of world-wide scope.

THE VEGETARIAN COOK BOOK, by Josiah Oldfield, has reached our Library Table from the publication office of The Vegetarian, Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London, E. C.

The little volume certainly is a good advocate of the cause it represents and tends to make a purely vegetarian diet much more attractive than it may seem at first to those whose palate has been trained to the flavor of animal food. There are many ways of preparing cereals of which Americans are ignorant, and it requires the genius of an English chéf to make vegetables of crude flavor in themselves, dainty dishes fit to set before anybody. But the less than one hundred pages of the book in question contain familiar American recipes, and many valuable comments upon dietary rules and habits.

PARLIAMENTARY TACTICS. For the use of the presiding officer and public speakers. Arranged by Harry W. Hoot. This seems to be one of the most useable little books on parliamentary forms that has yet come to hand. By its unique arrangement and clear brevity it can be referred to during a meeting without the embarrassment of delay. A marginal index, which is really a table of motions arranged in the order of precedence, enables the chair to readily reassure himself or settle a controversy. The matter is arranged in the briefest possible paragraphs, a page being devoted to each indexed subject. The matter is adapted from such standard authorities as Roberts, Cushing, Matthias, Jefferson and Crocker. The book can be carried in the pocket, and will prove valuable to many who are tyros in this important feature of deliberate assemblies.

The Scientific Publishing Co., 27 Park Place, New York City.

It is a study to note how story-writers reveal or conceal the purpose they had in mind in the construction of their work. It is, indeed, much the same in books as it is in lives, this varying relation between purpose and action. With some, this thing which impels is deep hidden beneath all outward activities and it is only the intimate friend or the more keen-sighted observer who can detect the motive power. The other extreme shows a purpose held aloft before all eyes and so magnified that attention is riveted to that rather than upon the road leading to the goal.

A recent publication of Harper & Brothers, New York City, is a novel, entitled HORACE CHASE, by Constance Fenimore Woolson, lately deceased. After a careful reading from first page to last, one is somewhat perplexed as to what may be the author's purpose. If it be to tell a story entertainingly, she has succeeded, and one regrets that her story in itself were not more worthy such skilled workmanship. The hero and heroine are as unlike as possible and, though interesting, unsatisfactory. The former, Horace Chase, is a character one rarely meets with, a man showing two distinct natures. It might almost be said the one never conflicting with the other. In business, keen, energetic, unscrupulous, hard—stopping at nothing to win. In friendship, and love, generous, gentle, untiringly patient, forgiving, self-sacrificing—apparently. His young wife, Ruth—the pen pauses over her portrait for it is that of warped possibilities. A wide awake, intellectual nature, lovable and loving, but brought up—or rather not brought up at all, so that what might have been a royal strength of will is simply reckless willfulness, what might have been an upright, uncompromising morality is a blind, unthinking, judgmentless impulse that knows no barriers where indecision ripens into temptation and desire. A third character is Ruth's sister, Dolly, and though the author throws many a covert slur upon her, the reader admires her good sense, her uprightness and general rightness and her unselfishness in spite of the dress put upon her. The book is without one suggestion of Christian sentiment and might possibly prove a dangerous one in the hand of those of unformed principles, since, while it does not commend the mistakes of its characters, neither does it condemn them; and the best character of all is treated with a touch of scorn. But aside from this the story, as a story, is something of a masterpiece.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

WHY DO YOU WORRY
along with dull knives and shears when . . . . .
75 CENTS
will buy an 8-in. Grafton Family Grindstone?
Each stone is mounted on a neatly japanned iron frame and will last a life-time. Notice that each stone is provided with an iron screw clamp for fastening it securely to the table. Shipped by express on receipt of price. Agents wanted.
GRAFTON STONE CO., 51 River St., Grafton, O.

D. and C. ROSES
Will grow anywhere, with a little sunshine, water, and care. You can learn how to grow them, and every other flower of import, from our New Guide to Rose Culture for 1894. If you so request, we will send free, this book and a copy of our Floral Magazine, 'Success with Flowers.'
The Dingee & Conard Company, West Grove, Pa.

The sower has no second chance. If you would at first succeed, be sure and start with
FERRY'S SEEDS.
Ferry's Seed Annual for 1894 contains the sum and substance of the latest farming knowledge. Every planter should have it. Sent free.
D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

What a wonderful thing is a live seed. Immature, old or dead it may look the same. How to know? Old gardeners say that Burpee's seeds grow.
This is the proof of life. When grown we give our word you will be satisfied—your success is ours. BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1894, 172 pages, tells all about the Best Seeds that Grow. The newspapers call it the Leading American Seed Catalogue. Yours free for the asking if you plant seeds.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia.

AN EXTRA SESSION
...OF THE...
CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE.
A RICH PROGRAM
For Franchise Entertainments.
Dramatized for the Use of Local Unions and Suffrage Societies by SARAH M. SEVERANCE.
The stupendous irony of this view of a legislative body in action, makes it more instructive than the ablest lecture, while its keen wit and biting satire clinch the logic of its lessons. It may be adapted to a large or small number of performers.
PRICE—15c. per single copy; 20 or more copies, 12 1-2 cts. each. Address
MRS. H. E. BROWN,
COR. SEC. CAL. W. C. T. U.
132 McALLISTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE WORLD'S WASHER.
Makes wash day easy. Saves all the hard labor. Saves the clothes from destruction. Makes them white as snow.
Child can use it. Price within reach of everybody. Write for price delv'd. C. B. ROSS, LINCOLN, ILL.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,
But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.
H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

GRANŪLA.

"The Perfect Health Food."

Ready for immediate use. Unequaled for children, invalids and persons of sedentary habits. A delicious diet, unsurpassed for Constipation and Dyspepsia. Contains the life-giving principle of wheat, easily digested, readily assimilated. Trial package 25c., by mail post-paid. Send for FREE pamphlet. Manufactured solely by Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, (founder of the Famous Health Institution of Dansville, N.Y.) 37 years ago.

Our Home Granūla Co.,
(Box 100) DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Lovely Complexion.

Pure, Soft, White Skin.

Have you freckles, moth, black-heads, blotches, ugly or muddy skin, eczema, tetter, or any other cutaneous blemish? Do you want a quick, permanent and absolutely infallible cure, FREE OF COST to introduce it. Something new, pure, mild and so harmless a child can use or drink it with perfect safety. If so, send your full Post-office address to

MISS MAGGIE E. MILETTE,
134 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

A SOLID GOLD RING or a dozen heavy Silver plated spoons given away to any woman, girl or boy. All we ask of you is to distribute circulars and talk up our remedies among your friends and acquaintances. Send us your name and address. No money required. HOBB'S MEDICINE CO., Chicago, Ill.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N.Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y

RUBBER GOODS BY MAIL
Ladies or Gents send for Free catalogue. Big Profits To Agents. A. U. BETTS & CO., 51 Water St. Toledo, O.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster.
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

SEND A SLIP OF PAPER the size of your finger and 10 cents in Silver and I will mail you one of these Solid Rolled Gold Rings and my Catalogue of Rings, Emblems, Watches and Novelties for agents to sell. $1.00 an hour easily made. Address C. E. MARSHALL, Lockport, N.Y.

ALUMINUM.

[From Chicago Inter Ocean, Feb. 7, 1894.]

We are reminded of the various uses to which Aluminum can be put by the receipt of a neat lead pencil made of that metal from the manufacturers of "Garland" stoves and ranges.

The souvenir is three-cornered, fitting the hand nicely, and, being as light as hard wood and as strong as steel, is a very acceptable article.

Aluminum was quite costly when first discovered, but is gradually becoming cheaper, and should it ever become cheap enough there is no end of the uses to which it could be put to advantage; for bridges, armor plate, ships, etc., no better metal has been discovered, and while most clay contains Aluminum, the principal cost is in its extraction from the clay.

Experiment has proven that aluminum mixed with iron makes the latter metal pour smoothly, prevents blow holes and liability of cracking, and benefits the iron in every way. As "Garland" stoves and ranges are made of this mixture, and as more of them are made and sold every year than any other stoves, it proves that the Michigan Stove Company's methods are the best.

Publisher's Notes.

...THE...

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO

The WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO of TEMPERANCE AND PROHIBITION LEADERS is attractive, artistic and unique.

Part I contains fine half-tones of

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West.

The first edition will not be a large one, and it will be important that you avail yourselves promptly of the opportunity to obtain this collection, which would otherwise cost you $3, but which you can now obtain for the moderate sum of 35 cents, single copy, or coupon and 25 cents.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

At the suggestion of a few prominent white-ribboners living far from Chicago, and therefore unable personally to attend to various matters of business importance in this city, we have concluded to open a Shopping and Commission Department, not as a branch of our regular business, but as an accommodation to the many friends who desire to entrust shopping and other outside business to reliable parties. We have secured an experienced and responsible lady who has resided in Chicago many years, and is familiar with our largest houses in every branch of business, a woman of keen insight, good judgment, excellent taste and an economical buyer.

We have endeavored faithfully to execute all commissions entrusted to us in the past, but as it necessarily interferes with our legitimate business, we have concluded this new arrangement, which will, we believe, give eminent satisfaction.

In many cases no commission whatever will be charged; in others requiring expenditure of extra time and money, it will be necessary to charge a proportionate commission.

Inquiries, orders, etc., must be addressed SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPARTMENT, and a stamp inclosed to insure prompt reply. If you have business with the Association kindly address all letters Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. If you wish other business transacted, shopping or commissions of any nature, address

SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPT.,
Care of WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

STATE AND LOCAL LITERATURE SUPERINTENDENTS AND OAK AND IVY LEAF SOLICITORS:

All 25c. subscriptions to

Oak and Ivy Leaf

received after this date will send the paper to the subscriber until January, 1895.

For 50c. Oak and Ivy Leaf

will be sent to the subscriber until July, 1895.

This, in view of the change in the young woman's paper which raises the rate as above. The change to take place with the July number.

IMPORTANT.

Important to you and important to us is the prompt transaction of business. This is often interfered with by wrong direction of letters. If you send business letters to the editors, or the various officers of the National, it causes unnecessary delay.

To insure prompt service, please address business letters

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE.
Chicago, Ill.

THE HARTFORD SAFETIES

For BOYS and MISSES
Excel all others.
Are light, strong and finely finished.

For MEN and LADIES
None others can compare at the price.

OUR CATALOGUE WILL TELL YOU ALL ABOUT THEM.

The Hartford Cycle Co., Hartford, Conn.

Out of a bankrupt stock we bought for cash at an enormous reduction these beautiful sets of

6 SOUVENIR SPOONS

They are HEAVY COIN SILVER plated, with GOLD plated BOWLS; each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the World's Fair at $1.50 each; we now offer the balance of this stock at ONLY 99c, for the six spoons, formerly sold for $9.00. Sent in elegant plush lined case, properly packed and express prepaid to any address for only 99 cents in Postal Note, Money Order or Currency. Money refunded if not found as represented.

ONLY 99c worth $9

ORDER IMMEDIATELY. LEONARD MFG. CO., 20 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

A GREAT MOTHER.

There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to the forthcoming volume—"A Great Mother."

It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession, but not often do we find those who are willing to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose.

Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions.

This book, written by her great daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset, will be handsomely illustrated, and will not only contain a full account of Madam Willard's interesting life, but will present her invaluable ideas upon the bringing up of children; give many of her wise sayings, and record the helpful incidents of a household in which she was ever the central feature.

There could be no more beautiful object lesson on the secret of "growing old gracefully" than that presented by this volume. The marvelous chapter entitled "A Great Sunset," which shows this woman of nearly ninety as she crossed into the beyond, must rob death of its terrors, and irradiate the darkness of the tomb.

The book will be issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, of Chicago, and will be out for the spring trade. Its publication will be a notable event, and the name of Mary T. Hill Willard will go down to posterity linked with the name of Catherine Booth, each of whom was truly "a great mother."

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FROM OUR BOYS.

NEWTOWN, March 13, 1894.

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n:

LADIES: I received the watch you sent me last week just in time for my birthday, and I am well pleased with it. But the best part is the new subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL that my mamma loves so well. I thank you very much for it, and will try to take good care of it.

All letters from "our boys" indicate that the watch is just what is claimed for it. We are offering a genuinely good article.

See advertisement on page 16.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill

Notice to Church Societies.

A new and easy plan for raising Money, Books, Carpets, etc., for Churches, Sunday-Schools and Parsonages is offered by the Consumers' Wholesale Tea and Spice Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio. Churches in need should write them for particulars, also ladies who would like to secure beautiful premiums for themselves.

THE EYE. No knife! No risk! Cataracts or scars can be absorbed. Paralyzed nerves. Diseased eyes or lids cured. "We convince all." Pamphlet free. Address, EYE INFIRMARY, Glens Falls, N. Y.

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

WE WANT YOU to distribute circulars, samples, etc., in your locality for our specialties of big advertisers. $3 to $5 per thousand. CASH PAID. No canvassing. Enclose stamp. DISTRIBUTING BUREAU, P.O. Box 1925, New York City.

$2.75 14 KARAT GOLD PLATE

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this watch by express for examination. A Guarantee For 5 Years and chain and charm sent with it. You examine it and if you think it a bargain pay our sample price, $2.75 and express charges, and it is yours. It is beautifully engraved and warranted the best time-keeper in the World for the money and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold Watch. Write to-day, this offer will not appear again.

THE NATIONAL MFG. —AND— IMPORTING CO.
334 DEARBORN ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

BRIGHT, NEW AND SPARKLING!

Oak and Ivy Leaf

To be Enlarged and Improved.

New Departments.

Handsome Title Page, drawn by our own artist.

Oak and Ivy Leaf,

while maintaining its reputation as the World's and National Organ

OF THE

Y. W. C. T. Unions,

will furnish interesting and helpful reading for the Young Woman Reader in general.

Subscribe now for this good paper.

Special Rates.

To July, 1895, including one year of new volume, one copy..... $ .50
To January, 1895, six months of new volume..... $ .25
For club rates address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

An Undesirable Endowment.

A delicate constitution is a most undesirable endowment. Yet it is preferable to certain hereditary taints accompanied by a robust physique. A constitution inherently weak may be fortified by judicious tonic medication. It is a more difficult matter to eradicate a scrofulous or consumptive habit. There is, nevertheless, a medicine which has proved itself in countless professionally recorded instances, adequate to the triple task. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will rehabilitate strength stolen by disease, invigorate the naturally feeble, and expel the scrofulous or consumptive virus from the system. It affords relief to the rheumatic, remedies the anaemia or debility from which many ladies suffer, or cures weakness of the back and lumbar abscesses and checks marasmus and ricketts and diseases that enfeeble and attenuate the childish frame. Its successful career as a remedy for Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and other pulmonary troubles is familiar not only to the public but to the medical profession.

OUR PHOTOGRAPHS are OBJECT LESSONS

The children have been studying our Portfolio of Photographs, and the result is A WIDER KNOWLEDGE, A CLEARER CONCEPTION of the famous cities of the world than they could have ever obtained in any other way. The selections have been made by John L. Stoddard, and with each reproduction he has furnished a complete and entertaining description.

SIXTEEN GRAND VIEWS IN EVERY PORTFOLIO—valued anywhere at $24.

Cut out the coupon printed below, and bring or send it to our office with five two-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to pay the cost of mailing, wrapping, etc., and we will send you series No. 4.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.
ART SERIES NO. 4.
COUPON.

Send Coupon, together with five 2-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to our office, and you will receive our Portfolio of Photographs, No. 4.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

Part I Now Ready

COLLECTION OF THOROUGHLY ARTISTIC PORTRAITS OF FAMILIAR FACES

(See Publisher's Notes)

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents, and we will send you Part I.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART I

Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

A Special Offer

To Our Readers

An advantageous arrangement, just made, enables us to present the most acceptable premium offer ever made. It is this: For one coupon (printed below) and 35 cents in stamps or silver, we will send by mail, postpaid, a copy of THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

The publishers' price of the book is $1.

This is the Coupon!

IT IS WORTH MONEY!

•• COUPON ••

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with 35 cents in stamps or silver, is good for one copy of the

WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

Free by mail to any address in Postal Union

This is the Book!

IT IS WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD!

Economy
Wealth

Temperance
Health

WHAT IS THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK?

A Collection of One Thousand Original and Revised Recipes and Suggestions. Edited by Kathryn Armstrong. A handsome, compact volume of 320 pages, including 40 blank pages for additional recipes.

It is a first-class book of Cookery and Housekeeping, prepared by a practical housekeeper. It is entirely new; copyrighted 1894. While it is not claimed that it is in all respects superior to all other books, we do claim that any housekeeper, even if she have a dozen other cook books, will find this one worth to her more than the full retail price, and that the author has fully carried out her purpose, "To prove that wine, brandy and spirituous liquors of any kind may be dispensed with, and that no culinary requirement necessitates the introduction of these poisons into any household."

Special Advantages of this Coupon Offer:

 Only one coupon is required.  You get the whole book at once.  You are put to no expense for binding or for transportation.  THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK is durably bound in the best quality of cloth (not in paper covers). It is printed on an excellent quality of cream laid book paper. It is cheap only in price. It is the neatest and handsomest cook book ever issued, the cover design, in grained and embossed silver, being a specially unique feature.

Orders will be filled in turn as received, and as quickly as the great amount of clerical work involved makes possible. Subscribers should wait two weeks before making complaint of non-receipt of the book.

More than one copy may be sent to one address, but there must be one coupon and thirty-five cents for every copy ordered. Address

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

Signal Notes.

THE British Medical Association numbers twenty-one women doctors.

THE breweries are said to have control practically of two evening newspapers in London.

THE Mohammedans in Bengal, India, largely outnumber the Hindus, and are increasing.

FIFTY missionaries of the English church missionary society draw no salaries, but are self-supporting.

BETWEEN sixty and seventy peace societies are at work in the United States creating sentiment against militarism and for arbitration.

OF the nine thousand five hundred and forty-two in-patients of London Temperance Hospital, alcohol has been used in seventeen cases only.

THE most practical and gratifying result of the recent conference on municipal reform in Philadelphia is the organization of a National Municipal League.

THERE are seven corporation model lodging houses in Glasgow, affording accommodation for over two thousand men and one hundred and twenty-five women.

Two hundred men are employed by the Social Wing of the Salvation Army to collect waste paper in London, about fifty tons of which are brought in weekly.

THE London and Provincial Domestic Servants' Union has a great work to do in creating an intelligent sentiment in regard to the work and place of servants.

COUNT TOLSTOI, who surely knows from his personal work and experience with the Russian poor, asserts that drunkenness was one of the chief causes of the terrible famine.

THE first Japanese lady physician has obtained permission from the Japanese government to practice in Nagasaki. Miss Suganiana is a graduate of the university of Ohio.

IT is stated that Maine is less affected by the financial and industrial depression of the country than any other northern state. Has the Prohibitory law anything to do with it?

IN connection with the Edinburgh Band of Hope union, there are four hundred and forty-three Bands of Hope, two thousand two hundred workers and fifty-four thousand five hundred members.

THE four great causes of pauperism and of degraded city life have long seemed to me to be these: Foul homes, intoxicating drink, neglect of child life, indiscriminate almsgiving.—Robert Treat Paine.

A RECENT invention, if practical, will bring relief to all public speakers. It is porous glass for window panes, insuring pleasant and healthy ventilation without a draught. What a boon to suffering lecturers!

MISS ELEANOR STREDDER, who has published a book recently, describing the evil effects of opium in China, received a memorandum from the Chinese Ambassador in London, thanking her for her accurate account.

KEIR HARDIE, M. P., asserts that the day is not far distant when labor clubs must decide whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be sold within their walls. He believes a curse follows the introduction of liquor everywhere and every time.

THE Manchester, Eng., Ladies' Health Society employs many health-visitors who are one with the poor people among whom they work. They are adepts in household duties, and can give simple instruction in nursing and in care of children.

THERE is said to be only one really happy woman in Russia, and she is the priest's wife. Her husband's position depends on her, for if she dies he is deposed, his property is partly taken from him, consequently his great thought is to get a healthy wife and to keep her so.

A NEW CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

President Lincoln

used to say that you could fool some people all the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all of the time. This explains why people come back to the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

IVORY SOAP

IVORY

IT FLOATS

FORTY MILLION CAKES YEARLY.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

"A disease known is half cured."

If your house is dirty

Buy a cake of SAPOLIO. It is a solid cake of Scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes except the laundry. Try it.

You are judged by your house just as much as by your dress. Keep it neat and clean and your reputation will shine. Neglect it and your good name will suffer. Do not think that house-cleaning is too troublesome; it is worth all it costs, especially if you reduce the outlay of time and strength by using SAPOLIO.

A PIANO —AND— ORGAN BOOK FREE.

Send us your address on a postal, and you will receive the finest and most elaborate Catalogue of Pianos and Organs ever published. It will show you the latest and best styles, and how to SAVE $100. Send for it to-day. It will more than please you. Write and see how little it takes to get an instrument when you begin right. (ORGANS from $27.50 up.) (PIANOS from $175.00 up.)

CORNISH & CO.,—Established 27 Years.—Washington, N. J.

EVERY WOMAN SHOULD KNOW About ZOA-PHORA—

A True Nerve Tonic.
Not a Stimulant or Narcotic.
Expressly for Weakly Women.

Full information and testimonials sent sealed.
Address ZOA-PHORA MEDICINE CO., H. G. COLMAN, SEC'Y, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to

Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair.

OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best special ties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

Publisher's Notes.

OUR WHITE-RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

This is the age of pictures, pictures of the World's Columbian Exposition, pictures of the Holy Land, pictures of famous countries and famous men and women, and to this collection we are now ready to add one of the finest and most artistic portfolios yet issued. Every white-ribboner will have a heart interest in our portfolio, for it will contain faces beloved by every one interested in the work of the white-ribbon army. We shall issue a series of these portfolios, each number to contain photographs of men and women who have been prominently connected with the temperance and prohibition movement. Think of the pleasure you can give a friend by presenting a copy of our portfolio, containing the thoughtful, intelligent faces of Neal Dow, Frances Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, John B. Gough and the other noted leaders, all in dainty and artistic form, pleasing to the eye and suggestive of the grand reforms to which they have devoted their lives.

We hope to have an order from each one of the two hundred thousand members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for we have selected these pictures with care, the reproductions are artistic and we feel that every home will be honored by the introduction of this refined, chaste and attractive collection into the family circle. It is the large demand with which we believe our efforts will be rewarded that permits us to offer this work of art for the small sum of twenty-five cents, with coupon, or thirty-five cents single number, without coupon. It is hardly necessary to add that cash must accompany order, as on all specialties offered at a nominal price we cannot extend credit.

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ATTENTION BOYS!

FOR SIX NEW SUBSCRIBERS

to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send this watch to your address, postpaid.

FOR FOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Fifty Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Seventy-five Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

THIS OFFER IS

FOR BOYS ONLY

Boys who will thank us for this generous offer to own the best pocket time-piece yet made by any Clock Company. Extreme diameter of case 2¼ inches.

As soon as your mind is made up to secure one of these Watches, write to us. Address

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPYLAED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 13.] CHICAGO, March 29, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs Ursula D Hertick 1029 15th st

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Easter was celebrated in the churches last Sunday.

Capitalists are anticipating the President's veto to the seigniorage bill.

Belgium's cabinet has resigned on account of the rejection by the Chamber of the proportional representation bill.

The Italian government is aiming to recover its financial standing by the imposition of taxes and retrenchment in expenses.

An English dispatch announces that General Booth has just received a legacy of twenty thousand pounds from a London lady.

The Earl of Rosebery, England's new premier, and Princess Maud, youngest daughter of the Prince of Wales, are betrothed.

Reductions in four appropriations average twenty-four million dollars as passed by the sundry civil bill in the House last week.

Five and a half acres of ground adjoining the British Museum have been purchased for the purpose of enlarging that institution.

The fact having recently developed that there is no bill to punish seduction in the District of Columbia such an one was introduced Friday.

Increase in the gold production of the world for 1893 has been placed at eleven million dollars in the latest estimate of the bureau of the mint.

Popular opposition has developed in Canada against the closing of the Welland Canal by that government, finding vent in indignation meetings.

Chicago's police force is engaged in exterminating the nickel-in-the-slot machine where money is offered as a prize, but singularly enough gambling and pool rooms are allowed to run unmolested in the heart of the city.

Bimetallists in an interstate convention at Des Moines, Ia., adjourned March 22, and adopted resolutions pledging their support only to free-coinage candidates for Congress and the maintenance of the parity between the two metals at a ratio of 16 to 1.

Twenty-three thousand six hundred and seventy patents were granted by the American patent office last year, which has just issued the annual report of its labors. The American system has been developed to higher perfection than that of any other country.

The inhabitants of Rio Janeiro are now battling with yellow fever which has become epidemic. All the foreign men-of-war have left the port. The election of Moraes has been declared void, and President Peixoto is considering a ten years' dictatorship. The war is not over.

A new Chinese treaty is under consideration in the foreign relations committee of the Senate, which provides for Chinese immigration under restrictions, and for the protection of Chinese residents and travelers in this country. It is claimed that this treaty if enacted will insure continued friendly relations with China.

The much advertised "army of the commonweal," which was to have started from Massillon, O., March 25, on a march to the National capital to petition Congress for work, did not materialize. Less than a hundred tramps assembled at the appointed hour, more than half of whom were compelled to seek shelter in the town jail from the inclemency of the weather.

Louis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, died in exile at Turin, last week, after a long illness, aged ninety-two years. He was buried in his native land at Buda Pesth, with public ceremonies and highest honor. Riotous demonstrations were made by students and others who demanded that flags of mourning be displayed upon the King's palace and all public buildings.

OUR readers will be rejoiced to know that Miss Willard's health is steadily improving. The latest word from her concerning her home coming is, "Please state that Anna and I leave June 1, for home. I hope to be present at Montreal convention of temperance workers in July, and will attend several autumnal conventions." This is glad news not only for white-ribboners but for our National leader's legion of friends throughout the country.

THE Voice of March 15 has a striking cartoon illustrating the "coining of the juniorage." "While Congress," it says, "is busy about the bill for coining the seigniorage the gin mills are busy coining the juniorage of the country into 100,000 bums and tramps each year." One half of the picture represents the manner in which they go in at the front door to be taken care of by the smiling saloon-keeper, and the other half the manner in which, aided by the saloon-keeper's boot, they come out at the back door to be taken care of by the tax-payers.

THE recent state prohibition convention of Indiana assembled at Indianapolis, with six hundred and twenty-one delegates, sixty of whom were women. That Prohibitionists, like Republicans and Democrats, do not all think alike on the tariff question was exemplified in this convention. The committee on resolutions declared that this question should be placed above party politics and in the hands of a non-partisan commission, and the tariff regulated according to the needs of the whole people. A free trade plank was offered as a substitute for this resolution, but after a warm and lengthy discussion was defeated.

A WELL earned respite from editorial cares is being enjoyed this spring by our managing editor, Miss Margaret Sudduth, at her charming home in the San Bernardino Valley, Southern California. Reflections upon temperance work in that sunny southland of flowers and fruit, where the drink evil passes its blighting hand, will reach our readers through editorial correspondence in THE UNION SIGNAL. Later, we will give from Miss Sudduth's own pen a graphic description of the California Midwinter fair, which she will visit on the homeward trip. Our absent editor is a veritable "tower of strength" to THE UNION SIGNAL, to which she has given seven years of devoted service, and to all the varied interests of our great publishing association.

REPORTS of Neal Dow celebrations are coming in rapidly and may all be summed up in the word used by Mrs. Hoffman as descriptive of the Portland demonstration, "immense." At this meeting, held under National W. C. T. U. auspices, and at which five thousand people were turned away, a magnificent portrait of Neal Dow was presented to the governor for the state house. The flags of all nations and W. C. T. U. mottoes decorated the platform, as also the battered flags of the Thirteenth Maine regiment, Neal Dow's regiment. The governor and ex-governor spoke, and every Maine congressman sent a congratulatory letter. The meeting in New York, March 18, was also honored by the presence of the old hero himself, while at the Chicago jubilee John G. Woolley delivered one of his characteristic addresses, rousing and original. In Exeter Hall, London, Miss Willard, Lady Somerset, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mrs. Ormiston Chant and others addressed a large and enthusiastic audience, and numerous testimonials to the life and work of the veteran Prohibitionist were forwarded by prominent men in England and Scotland. Pulpit and press (especially the religious press) everywhere, have hastened to lay their tributes of gratitude and affection at the feet of the "Father of Prohibition." Even the Chicago Herald, anti-prohibition as it is, takes occasion to remark that "the Iowa mulct law is a sorry reflection on the celebration of Neal Dow's ninetieth birthday." Truly, here is a prophet who is honored in all countries and by all men!

THE execution of Patrick Prendergast, sentenced to be hung March 23, for the murder of Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, was prevented by an order from a common pleas judge, granting an inquiry into the sanity of the prisoner. An Illinois statute provides that in case a person becomes insane after judgment execution shall be stayed until his recovery. It looks as if this law were to be made a means to defeat the ends of justice in this case, the order having been issued in face of the fact that the verdict was rendered against the defendant's plea of insanity.

ONE of the arguments used against the raising of the age of consent to eighteen years in Iowa has been that it would bring into the state numbers of adventuresses, blackmailers, etc. Accordingly, Mr. H. E. Jarvis, of the White Cross Society, wrote to the attorney-general of Kansas, where the age of consent was fixed at eighteen years in 1887, for information concerning the working of their law. In reply he says that the effect of the law is most wholesome, and that there are not a dozen men in Kansas who would favor its repeal. An attempt to repeal in 1889 was defeated by an indignant people, and "only last week," says the writer, "I saw published in a newspaper the names of every man who voted to repeal the law, and those names are held in contempt by all good citizens of our state." Where shall we look for the motive which impels fathers to refuse to throw around their daughters the protection of law? Why should it be necessary to deluge our legislators with petitions in order to shield our girls from the brutalities of men?

"THE pledge of the party is fulfilled!" Such is the triumphant announcement of Iowa Republicans. The mulct tax bill passed the house by a majority of seven, the senate by a majority of two, and before this reaches our readers will doubtless have received the governor's signature and become a law. It appears that one senator was (through the judicious handling of the party whip by friends of the measure) induced at the last moment, when the fate of the bill hung trembling in the balance, to obey the Republican mandate and "come to the rescue of the party." The bill provides for a tax of six hundred dollars per annum upon every person violating the prohibitory law, the revenue thus collected to go, one-half to the county and one-half to the municipality. In cities of five thousand and upward the consent of the city council and also of property holders residing within fifty feet of the place where liquor is sold must be secured before the law becomes operative. In towns of less than five thousand the consent of sixty-five per cent of the voters is necessary, and city councils or a majority of voters may suspend the clause which makes the payment of the tax a bar under the existing law. This act, which is intended to be sufficiently elastic to adapt itself to both city and country, is neither more nor less than permission to violate the law of the state provided the law-breaker pays for the privilege. If this can be done with regard to the liquor law why can it not also be done with regard to every other law of the state? Is not Iowa establishing a dangerous precedent? Is she not letting down the bars for the "regulation" of all kinds of lawlessness? We by no means regard the passage of the mulct tax bill as a set-back for prohibition in Iowa. It will result in increased agitation of the subject, and to the liquor men that means increased irritation. The house has itself strangely enough extended a helping hand to constitutional prohibition and to good government generally by passing the bill conferring school and municipal suffrage upon women. Of course the liquor element both inside and outside the legislature will use all the filibustering methods at their command to prevent this from becoming a law, because for obvious reasons it would render the mulct act largely inoperative.

EASTER HYMN.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

Oh, risen Lord! how fair
  Thy face shines in the dawn,
How with Thy glory burns the sun,
  As day comes on.

In through the window floats
  The sweetness of Thy breath;
Once more Thy life in bursting blooms
  Hath conquered death.

And songs, such songs of love,
  Thy songs, my Lord, they ring
With triumph from a thousand throats
  Upon the wing.

Oh, Easter Sabbath rest,
  Light, life and joy in one,
The triumph of eternity
  In time begun!

Chicago, Ill.

THE BRIGHT EASTER HARBOR.

BY CHARLES N. SINNETT.

"Good-bye, papa," said little Grace in as calm and cheery a tone as if her father were only going to the next port six miles off. She seemed to have entirely forgotten that he would sail away and away from the Maine coast, around Cape Horn to San Francisco.

"Good-bye, dearest," her father bravely answered as he kissed her without a tear in his eyes, though but yesterday they had been as full of shining drops as on other days when he had talked much about the long voyage which he was to make.

And when the good man bade his wife adieu they both were as calm and trustful as their little daughter had hoped they would be. And when the great ship dwindled to a mere speck out on the wide, windy sea, Grace smiled up to her mother as she said: "I'm sure he looks just as he did when I spoke my Easter thought to him yesterday."

"So am I, dearie, and I am so happy you told us how the glad Easter day seemed like the bright and safe harbor where your father brought us once so safely when we had been tossed on the stormy sea. There the winds could not trouble us. And so you told us how Jesus rose from the dead that we might have rest from our fears when our friends went away from us so far that it was almost like seeing them put away in the dark grave. Oh, 'He bringeth them to their desired haven'!—surely, it was such a precious Easter hope for us." And the mother kissed her child with a thankful heart as they gave one more glance across the sea and then went into their cozy home.

They both kept very brave through the long weeks which went by until an old sea-captain came to them one day with the news which he broke to them as easily as he could: "All in the port think that the 'Dolphin' is lost. A New York ship reported her as being driven on the worst part of the coast of Patagonia, and if one person had been saved we should have heard from him two weeks ago."

Then the mother's head drooped under her fears like a plant beaten by the harsh winds and cold rain, and she spoke never a word in answer to this which she had heard rumored in several ways before. Little Grace looked straight into the old captain's bronzed face without the shadow of a single fear in her eyes.

"I guess you never heard my Easter thought which made papa and all of us so glad just when he went away," she said. "Jesus would never have given it so clear and bright if He was going to have our hearts break from papa going down in the deep sea. Please let me tell it to you, Captain Thorpe."

And the child clambered on the old man's knee to tell her story with such faith ringing in every word of it that the mother's head lifted again hopefully before it was half done, and the captain looked much younger than when he came in.

"It is wonderful, wonderful," he said, stroking the child's brown hair. "I can't feel like giving the 'Dolphin' up. An Easter harbor—what a thought that was!"

This story cheered some others who had relatives and friends on the "Dolphin" as the old man told it to them as he went from house to house. But when other long weeks went by, they shook their heads and thought it could not have any deep meaning for them. At last the majority of them decided: "It is no use to hope longer, the owners of the 'Dolphin' have got the insurance upon her, and surely we must not hold out as being so much wiser than they. It is not good we should let another Sunday go by without having a funeral service in church for those we loved so well."

So they sent old Captain Thorpe again to ask Grace and her mother to join them in this memorial act. When he came back where some of these sorrowing men and women were weeping together he said firmly: "They will come with you, you have always been so good to them and theirs, but they do not feel that their hope is gone, so they cannot have one word preached in sympathy for them, save for their weeks of waiting. We must not urge it on them. The little girl's face shines just as it did the day when her father went away. I cannot help believing as she does that we shall see all those who seem so much to us like the dead."

And so the service was held as Grace and her mother wished. And that day her eyes were so bright with hope that the good old minister spoke of it as he lifted his face to heaven in a fervent prayer that her sweet Easter faith might not be in vain.

Before the week ended Grace went bounding to the parsonage to cry gleefully in the minister's ears, "Jesus heard you so quickly. Here is the letter my father sent home, and Nancy Gales has one from her husband and it says the same things, almost."

And this was the news which she laid in the man's hand for him to read:

"My Dear Wife and Wee Girl:—God showed us the bright Easter harbor and saved us to go safely on our voyage. How good it is to trust in Him! Such a storm came on off the Patagonia coast that it drove us straight down towards the rocks. Many of the men said, 'No hope for us there.' And I almost said the same thing myself, when it just flashed on me as a great wave lifted the old ship high in the air, 'There's that Easter harbor my girlie talked about.' With no word to anybody but the captain I sprung aloft where the lookout was. How the mast quivered, and how dark it was before us where we could see the black waves leaping on the blacker rocks. But all at once when the ship was lifted by a great comber I saw a little opening in the shore. When I touched the hand of the lookout and nodded my head, he cried so shrilly that even above the storm I heard his words, 'A shelter!' It was so narrow that the yards of the ship nearly touched the cliffs on either side as we went in. But thank God, we reached it and sailed in, and there was a bay-like place beyond where we were safe for months. For months? Yes, my wife and child; you have heard me tell how down in those latitudes the wind blows and blows from one quarter. We had to wait till that change came in the wind. We were never hungry, for you know how the 'Dolphin' was loaded with provisions. We felt pretty tired some days—till we thought how God had saved us. And when we left it at last, more than one sailor's eyes were full of gratitude as they said: 'Ay, ay, messmate, we'll call it the Easter harbor!'

"So we are safe, and sure God will bring us home to you once more. He gave you your blessed Easter thought!"

"Amen and amen," said the old minister with the tears running over his spectacles when the letter was read.

Chesterfield, N. H.

THE AMERICAN PROBLEM.

I.

Illustrated by Chicago.

BY CLARK WAGGONER.

With millions of citizens threatened with starvation, whose chief hope for escape rests on prompt relief, it is quite pertinent to inquire as to the cause of such deplorable state of things in a country so exceptionally rich in all that constitutes human prosperity. Different explanations are given. Some refer to effects of national policy, as the tariff, while others attribute the trouble to lack of currency; and still others to undue expansion and speculation in trade. Without here undertaking to decide which, if either of these, has been potent in contributing to the present condition, it is deemed entirely safe to state that, at least so far as concerns the great body of the laboring classes and others in moderate financial circumstances, the trouble is chiefly due to waste of means in the purchase of intoxicating liquors, with consequent demoralization and idleness. The habitual use of such drinks is bad enough with any person, but is specially injurious with those dependent for their support and that of their families upon wages of labor. It is a very sad fact that upon this class falls a much larger proportion of the evil consequences of liquor drinking than upon any other.

It has been truly stated that three-fourths of the crime and pauperism of the country is due to this one cause, as also is the fearful increase in insanity and imbecility, while its use does nobody possible good. Well has the supreme court of Indiana recently pronounced the saloon a nuisance, and as such justly liable to exclusion from any vicinity where its inevitable results are liable to be felt.

In this connection may be given the statement by the commissioner of internal revenue, that during the past year this country consumed 6,090,000,000 glasses of whisky, for which was paid by consumers the sum of $609,000,000, being $50,000,000 more than the gross appropriations by Congress for support of the government for the same period. The consumption (almost wholly as beverage) of whisky, brandy and other distilled liquors for the past year amounted to 80,000,000 of gallons, being 100 glasses for every man, woman and child in the country, or 500 glasses for every male adult. The total consumption of beer was 31,562,344 barrels, being 12,785,169,200 glasses, or 200 glasses for every inhabitant, and 1,000 glasses for each male adult. This means an expenditure for this drink alone, at four cents per glass, of $511,406,768, being $40 for each man in the country.

THE MATTER IN ITS LOCAL BEARINGS.

Such general facts so deeply concerning every citizen of the United States might be given indefinitely, and should challenge most serious consideration. The real bearing of the matter, however, will be more distinctly seen by examination of the same in more local connection. For this purpose it will be proper to select Chicago—not that that city is worse than all others in such relation, but because of its prominence among the cities of the land, made exceptional by the wonderful entertainment there enjoyed by so many millions during the past year. Chicago is made the more fitting for the purpose by the fact of its unequalled growth and, as found elsewhere, proportional temptation to excess in evil practices. No city of this country more largely shares the admiration and best wishes of the people than does Chicago.

With such view and purpose, the following statement of facts has been prepared:

CHICAGO SALOONS.

Number saloons in the city, December, 1893	7,500
Same would make continuous solid wall, 30 feet each, miles	45
Square miles inclosed by such wall	126
Dwellings per square mile, lots 20x60 feet	13,200
Capacity of same, 8 persons in each	105,800
Population of city, estimated	1,400,000
Square miles territory for entire population	14
Total population capacity of enclosure	13,340,000
Annual receipts of saloons, $6,500 each	$48,750,000
Same per month	$4,063,999
Same per day	$136,961
Same per inhabitant	$35
Same per voter	$210
Inhabitants per saloon	167
Voters per saloon	31

As here seen, there are now in Chicago saloons sufficient to constitute five solid walls around its entire population, not more compact than are portions of New York. Beside that of Chicago, the one hundred and twenty-six square miles of such saloon enclosure would contain the population of the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and that of the cities of New York, Brooklyn and Detroit, with space to spare.

CHICAGO STATISTICS.

In this connection the following statement has special interest:

Total cost of city waterworks to January 1, 1892	$ 18,000,000
Total cost of public schools to same	58,000,000
Annual cost of same	5,000,000
Annual cost of charitable and reformatory institutions	5,000,000
Total city revenues for 1891	30,118,115
Capital stock of all national banks, January 1, 1892	16,100,000
Capital of three principal street railways	22,000,000
Total jobbing trade of the city, 1890	486,600,000
Cost of Auditorium building, site included	5,000,000
Pupils in public schools 1891	146,751
Annual cost per pupil	$36.70
No. of churches in city	575
Present population, estimated	1,400,000

As seen, the annual saloon receipts of Chicago amount to nearly three times the total cost of the city's extensive system of waterworks to January 1, 1892; to eighty-three per cent of the total cost of buildings and maintenance of the city schools to same date; nearly ten times the current expenses of these schools; the same excess over the expenses of the charitable and reformatory institutions of the city; $18,875,000 more than the total current expenses of the city government; three times the capital stock of all national banks in Chicago; and ten per cent of the aggregate jobbing trade of the city in 1890. Such receipts would meet current expenses of schools sufficient for 1,328,310 children, on the liberal basis of the Chicago schools, being more than the children now attending school in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

GOVERNMENT FINANCES AND CHICAGO SALOONS.

Total receipts from tax on liquors, 1890	$107,818,420
Amount of interest on national debt	23,524,324
Gross appropriations by Congress for 1893	559,000,000

Thus, the saloons of Chicago annually receive nearly fifty per cent of the amount of tax paid the government on all liquors in 1890; more than twice the interest on the national debt; and nearly nine per cent of the total appropriations by Congress for government expenses for 1893.

SALOONS AND AGRICULTURE.

The average cost per acre for irrigation of barren lands in the West for profitable cultivation, is one dollar per acre. Hence 48,750,000 acres of such lands might annually be made productive with the saloon receipts of Chicago, the products of which in wheat, at twenty bushels per acre, would be a gain of 975,000,000 bushels per year, worth, at the low rate of sixty cents per bushel, a total of $585,000,000. Such would supply with bread a population of 97,500,000, or one-half more than that of the United States in 1890.

Lansing, Mich.

A CANNY SCOTCHMAN.

James Whyte, Secretary of the Alliance.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The balance wheel of the United Kingdom Alliance office is James Whyte, and no one who aspires to an intelligent conception of the temperance reform in Great Britain to-day will fail to take account of this "canny Scot," who has for twenty-one years served the Alliance, nine of them as its secretary, and of whom it may be justly said that what he doesn't know about the movement which the Alliance has in charge is not known. The Rev. Canon Wilberforce has said of him that in the management of Alliance affairs he "is the power behind phenomena." To his balanced intelligence, devoted loyalty and unflagging purpose is due in large measure the systematic and successful record that the society has made in recent years. He is alert-minded, a quality which, in the crises so sure to occur in a great society, is of incalculable value. He has scope and outlook, combined with comprehensiveness in generalization. He is ingenious-minded as well, and is constantly devising methods to strengthen the society and extend its influence. Such a man does not often appear upon the scene in the management of temperance work, and when one looks into his history abundant reason is found why he should be exceptional; and I have thought that some account of his training would afford a helpful picture of life in a typical Scotch homestead.

To begin with, he was "well born." His parents were neither rich nor poor. The necessaries of life, or what they deemed such, were fairly within their reach; and they had little or nothing to spare for luxuries. His father was a Scotch tenant farmer, who was just able, by dint of hard work and good management, to keep out of debt, feed and clothe the members of his household, educate his children, subscribe to the kirk, help his poorer neighbors in times of special distress, and generally "to provide things honest in the sight of all men." He was rather an austere man, and hardly popular. He was "a verra guid man, but ower strick, ye ken," so his candid friends said; and it was the very worst they had to say of him. He was but little sought after save in time of special trouble. Then it would be said: "Ye'll better step ower and see the Elder;" or, "I'll hae tae gang an' speak to the Elder." He was never called Elder Whyte, but "The Elder." He was made an elder when quite a young man, almost a lad. His son says of him that he was "a Puritan with the chill on;" and of his mother that she was "a Puritan with the chill off." The Elder seemed to have less of a detestation of vice than of contempt for it, and for those who indulged in it. He had a strong dislike for novel reading, and used to say that he could not understand how anybody should spend time in reading what was not true, and what was more, what was known to be not true; and to his son he said, on one occasion when they had been discussing the question: "Weel, Jamie, when you've read everything you ought to read, have learned everything you ought to know, and have done everything you ought to do, then read novels, but not till then." On the day of his funeral a neighboring farmer, a man of deep religious character, said to his son: "Weel, James, I've known your faither a' his life, and a better man I never knew. . . . He was' na the kind of man to speak unadvisedly. I dinna think he need'it tae bridle his tongue. But I believe that he never polluted his lips wi' an oath, a lewd speech or a lie."

The Elder was physically what is called "a fine man." His son remembers a girl who was fee'd (engaged as a servant) at Crieff market by the Elder, and who remained in the family for a dozen years, telling that after she was engaged she was asked by a friend: "Are ye fee'd, Mary?" "Ou, aye, I'm fee'd." "Wha till?" "I dinna mind his name, but he's the bonniest man in a' the market."

The Elder was of course a great theologian, or rather, perhaps, was deeply interested in theological questions. Ecclesiastical polity was also a special subject with him. Hence in the discussions of the time (and the time was that of the disruption of the Church of Scotland) he eagerly took part. To these discussions the boy who was to become the secretary of the Alliance gave attentive heed. The doctrine that Christ was the Head of the Church and had appointed a government in it with which civil rulers had no right to interfere was strongly held by one party and bitterly derided by the other. "At kirk and market, mill and smiddy," (smithy), indeed, wherever two or three met, debates on such subjects were sure to take place, which were always carried on with great vigor, and frequently with much knowledge and acumen. To listen, first to one side and then to the other, to hear arguments which had seemed sound and satisfactory, refuted and ridiculed, gave the boy a taste for dialectics which grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength. He himself regards as the most valuable part of his mental training that which he obtained on the Sunday afternoons in his father's house. It was the Elder's custom every Sunday afternoon to assemble his whole honsehold and, as Burns phrases it, "to targe them tightly" on the "Shorter Catechism," some portion of Scripture or on some passage from a well known religious book such as the Pilgrim's Progress. The Elder conducted these proceedings from beginning to end himself.

His mother had predetermined him for a minister, and he would have made one of the best. Those who know him most intimately say that he shows vastly more power and originality as a preacher than as a temperance advocate. Of his mother he remembers that she was held by her neighbors to be a "notable" woman, and remarkable for the vigor and pungency of her sayings. He still recalls some remarks which he heard her make when he must have been about seven years of age. Talking with his aunt about some scandal that had arisen in the neighborhood and which the aunt said ought to be suppressed, she replied: "It canna be done, Jenny; ye micht as weel try to keep doon a stink wi a riddle." A young man and his sister were left in charge of a farm; the brother was a lazy, "feckless" sloven, the sister a bright, energetic, hard-working woman. This young woman's hardships were being discussed when Mrs. Whyte remarked to her sister-in-law: "It's the auld, auld story, Jenny. There never yet was a sluggard but there had to be a slave, and, in this case, Johnnie's the sluggard and Jean's the slave." On being told that a neighboring farmer who had been notoriously dissipated and idle was to be "sold up," she remarked: "And what for no? Is't ony wonder that wasters should want and lathrons lie thereoot? [that lazy people are homeless, literally, have to sleep out of doors]." The Shorter Catechism says that "every sin deserves God's wrath and curse, both in this life and that which is to come." This was being discussed one day, and the question of the comparative heinousness of various sins arose. Somebody urged that all sins were alike bad, because they were transgressions against an infinite God. She replied: "I'm no sure that I understand ye. I'm quite sure I dinna believe ye. Naebody will ever convince me that a lie to keep doon din [mischief] is as bad as a lie to rise din." These are a few of her characteristic sayings, which, by some chance, clung to her son's memory.

JAMES WHYTE, SECRETARY OF THE ALLIANCE.

A reproof, given in her characteristic way, which he received from her, made a deep impression upon him. Playing in a wood one day, he saw a young, not fully fledged, mavis running on the ground. He gave chase, caught the bird, put it in his Tam O'Shanter bonnet, and carried it home in triumph to his mother. When he showed it to her she looked very grave. "Where did you get that bird?" she asked. She was told. "Take care o't, and dunna hurt it; come wi me!" she said. She took the boy by the hand and led him towards the spot where the bird had been captured. On the way she asked him how he would like if some one as much bigger and stronger than himself as he was bigger and stronger than the bird would come and take him captive, and told him about slave stealing, the slave trade, and slavery. When they reached the spot where the mavis had been caught she said: "Let the bird go." Then, after a long pause, she added: "Misery must be borne in this sad world; but, my laddie, never do ye mak misery. Never hurt living thing, if ye can help it."

Thirty years or more after his mother's death James Whyte was addressing an outdoor audience on temperance and a publican who had been attracted to the meeting went up to the speaker at the close and said:

"Are ye the son of the James Whyte that was in the Broom-Hills ferm?"

"Yes," said Mr. W.

"I thought sae," said the publican. "Ye dinna mind me?"

"I don't," Mr. W. had to confess.

"Weel, I'm Bob Shairp; I was herd laddie at the Broom Hills for twa year. I was sure it was you—ye've the Whyte look. Ye're faither was a gey hardmouthed customer and frae what ye've been sayin', ye're a wee like him; but, man, ye're mither was a graand woman. She gied me a' the eddication I've got; she tacht me tae read and write in the midday when the ither folk were resting. She made me, man, she made me. Larks, but she was a graand woman!"

Mr. Whyte says of his mother, that her mind was steeped in Scripture and in the old Scottish ballads. She had the greater part of Cowper's poetry "by heart;" Milton she had read a good deal; but the Psalms and the book of Proverbs were her especial delight. Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Holy Wars" she read and re-read and expounded to "the laddies." It was from her that her son inherited his intense love for poetry and romance, which has not been extinguished, perhaps hardly lessened, by his studies in sociology, statistics and political economy.

He tells me that of all his teachers on the temperance question he owes most to Dr. F. R. Lees. He holds that gentleman to be by far and away the greatest thinker in the temperance movement, and designates him the father of rational teetotalism. Other men, he says, had argued the question from experience, but Dr. Lees gave it a scientific basis. Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, who came much later into the field, has more than once said that he has promulgated nothing new—nothing not already brought out by "that great man, Dr. F. R. Lees."

Mr. Whyte has written several valuable monographs which are standards on the subjects treated, the most important being a pamphlet on the Gothenberg system of handling the liquor traffic. A recent remarkable article on the economic phases of the temperance question has been forwarded to THE UNION SIGNAL by my earnest request, and will illustrate Mr. Whyte's remarkable powers of analysis.

It remains to be said that the Alliance secretary has a happy home and several promising daughters—one of whom is already a white ribbon organizer, under the auspices of the B. W. T. A.

Reigate, Eng.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XXIII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

February 27, 1889, Mrs. Hart suggested a temperance dinner to the W. C. T. U., as one had not been given for some time, and the treasury was getting low. Ample preparations were made and March 2, 1889, the dinner materialized in the city hall. It was well patronized and gave great satisfaction. But best of all, it left a good impression socially as well as financially.

The family and large connection of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Foraker had planned so quietly and successfully in their preparations for their fiftieth anniversary of the wedding day that the W. C. T. U. came very near being excluded; but the secret was found out in time to send the following: An exquisite banneret in white and gold from the co-workers of the W. C. T. U. with the inscription:

1839 Golden Wedding. 1889

Congratulations
from
The W. C. T. U., of Hillsboro, to
Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Foraker.

May each coming mile-stone of life's journey prove a fresh Ebenezer until the golden gate is reached.

For our dear sister of Crusade memory the words of the Master seem most fitting:

"O woman, great is thy faith."

About this time it was the pleasure of our union to respond to the call of Miss Pugh, National treasurer, and send our wee contribution and loving sentiments to Frances E. Willard, the one we all "delight to honor," and most especially as she approached that golden milestone, fifty years.

All day prayer-meetings, county conventions, etc., kept all in motion, until it seemed time for Hillsboro to hold a memorial service for our honored Mrs. Hayes. This occurred in July, 1889, as follows, as shown by minutes and recorded in Hillsboro News:

"A memorial service in honor of the late Mrs. Hayes was held in the M. E. church on last Sunday evening under the direction of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Thompson presided. Dr. McSurely read the Scriptures, and Rev. King, of the Baptist church, led in prayer. The remarks of Mrs. Thompson were very appropriate and touching, and she paid a fine tribute to ex-President Hayes for his loyalty to his wife in supporting her in her heroic stand for sobriety in the White House. Mrs. Hart and Mrs. Murray read very excellent papers, and Mrs. Rives gave a thoughtful and happily worded address. Mrs. D. S. Ferguson read an original poem, and Mrs. Wm. Gregg read a poem prepared by Mr. J. L. Boardman. The whole affair was most happily conceived and carried out. The papers, addresses and poems were in excellent taste, and show a tender appreciation of the noble Christian woman, whose courage and truth have entitled her to the respect and love of the Christian world. The services were closed with the benediction by Rev. Murray."

The semi-annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Highland county was held in the M. E. church of this place, May, 1889. Delegates were present from five unions in the county, and were welcomed by Mrs. Dr. McSurely in behalf of the Hillsboro union.

Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, National corresponding secretary, was with us by invitation, and addressed a large evening meeting in the M. E. church, and also led a very profitable service on the following morning in the old Crusade church. She gave much satisfaction, and with many of our citizens is a standing favorite.

Mrs. Alphonso Hart at this convention resigned her office as county president, much to the regret of all parties interested, her husband, Hon. Alphonso Hart, having been appointed to an office that required the removal of his family to Washington, D. C. We were deprived also of her services in our local work; this we felt a very great loss. Mrs. McSurely was appointed vice-president in Mrs. Hart's place from the Presbyterian church, and Mrs. Mary B. Murray, first vice-president from the M. E. church.

About this time, November 23, 1889, Mr. George Woodford, of national fame, came by invitation of the W. C. T. U. to give Hillsboro a week of his temperance zeal and eloquence. Much good resulted, but as our secretary, Mrs. Charles Harsha, says in her minutes, "We can never know the result of Mr. Woodford's meetings until we all meet at the judgment seat, where the men and youths of this town must face the God of justice, in the presence of the man who tried so hard to save them from a fate worse than death."

Mrs. Mary B. Murray, president of the Y's, and a kind and efficient aid to the W. C. T. U., was about this time, December 1, 1889, induced, at the earnest request of Mrs. E. J. Thompson, to accept the position of president pro tem, during a season of severe illness in her family. Thus seconded by her good husband, Rev. James Murray, pastor of the M. E. church, when the bugle note from our chieftain, Miss Willard, sounded the call for a "Crusade camp-fire," in Hillsboro, December 23, 1889, to celebrate the fifteenth anniversary, they were "willing" and earnest, and together with other faithful and tried white-ribboners in the Crusade town and the state, the work moved forward.

Hillsboro, O.

(To be continued.)

WILLARD HALL NOON MEETING.

BY JANE E. ZIMMERMAN, SUPT.

The following extract is from the first letter received since we invited mothers to send us the addresses of sons or daughters in Chicago.

"I have just been reading about the noon meetings at Willard Hall, and your note to mothers who have sons or daughters in Chicago, inviting them to write you giving the name and address.

"I said to myself: 'That must be of the Lord, and I will write at once.' My son lives at ——; and there is not an English-speaking church within two miles of him. I have been praying all winter that the Lord would move upon the heart of W. C. T. Union, deaconess or evangelist to visit that community with the gospel. . . . I visited the World's Fair last fall and spent a few days with him. He acknowledged the unrest of soul he suffered and said he could not get away from his early religious teaching. I keep the important question of salvation before him in my letters, but realize that he needs to come in contact with Christians and religious gatherings. I cannot feel reconciled that his early and mature manhood should pass, and he be doing nothing for the Master; and that while I am spending all my time and strength to 'rescue the perishing,' that one of my own, for whom I would willingly give my life, should be "'Away on the mountains wild and bare.'

Away from the tender Shepherd's care.'

"He has been married nearly three years. His wife is a good girl, but not a Christian. Oh, if our 'House Beautiful' could be their spiritual birthplace! May the dear Lord grant that it may be so, and bless you abundantly in your effort to gather in the wandering ones."

The writer of the above is a faithful temperance worker of the South, one of our own loyal white-ribboners. We need not add how gladly we shall go to visit that son, and bear him and his young wife to the throne of grace. Pray for these dear ones of a faithful W. C. T. U. mother.

Chicago, Ill.

THE LATE MLLE. MARIA DERAISMES.

BY FLORENCE BALGARNIE.

In Maria Deraismes, France has lost one of her most able and devoted women, as well as one of her most gifted and eloquent orators.

The news of her death has come like a thunderbolt upon many of her English admirers, while her nearer friends in Paris, who have watched the heroism with which she has endured her painful and fatal malady, feel that they have lost a leader and inspirer impossible to replace. It is only within the last two or three years that French women have even apprehended the existence of what we in England know as the woman's movement, and in Paris alone is there any sort of organization which at all corresponds to ours, hence Maria Deraismes, whose first efforts on behalf of her sex were made more than a quarter of a century ago was, as a French woman, remarkably ahead of her age.

She is the only woman who has been admitted to the order of Freemasons, and although the general body may refuse her masonic honors, she was undoubtedly received into the Grand Orient Lodge in 1882 and duly donned the badge of membership. The Lodge was called to order in consequence, if not excommunicated, but there is no doubt that the cult of Freemasonry was revealed to her, and that secret she kept inviolate.

Born some sixty years ago, as a child she showed great independence, and although brought up as a strict Catholic her mind revolted against the conventional ethics of the church, and after prolonged study in logic and philosophy she abandoned her childish faith.

It was not, however, until 1866 that she was roused to serious action on behalf of the emancipation of women. She had already made her mark as a debater and journalist, but had no thought of making an appearance on a public platform until a very impertinent article aimed at the higher education of women stung her into reply. After this she and several other writers on the Opinion Nationale arranged a course of lectures on social and moral problems. For the next two years she spoke almost incessantly before large and sympathetic audiences, attracted not merely by the novelty of hearing a woman speak, but also by the singular force and eloquence of the speaker. These lectures were subsequently published in two volumes, entitled Nos Principes et nos Moeurs et L'Ancien devant le Nouveau. Her ready wit and burnished pen were ever ready in the defence of the weak or oppressed. To Dumas' (the younger) book entitled the "Manly Woman" she replied in a brochure entitled "Eve versus M. Dumas," and made a vigorous protest against the so-called realistic school of fiction headed by Zola and Sardou.

For the rights of children, and the rights of mothers to their own offspring, she made persistent advocacy, and during the international exhibitions in Paris in 1877 and 1887, she presided over international gatherings of women called to consider these and cognate questions. There the wonderful versatility of her mind had full scope. She was the heart and soul of the undertakings, and her addresses from the chair transcended in eloquence anything which I had ever heard from a woman in either Europe or America. To the vigor of the Teuton was added the delightful abandon of the Celt, the gaiety and charm of the Parisian; she did not merely arrest attention, but captivated, swayed, roused. For a moment, with her fan in hand and a merry twinkle in her eye, she compelled to laughter; the next, her voice sank into earnest tones, and every head was bowed as she touched a pathetic chord. To hear her was like listening to the fall and swell of an orchestra rather than to words from the platform.

The Revue Internationale, in summing up Maria Deraismes' merits, said: "She is one of the five or six women publicly recognized in France during the last thirty years, and who resembles from an intellectual standpoint Mme. Roland and Mme. de Staël."

In 1881 and 1883, she presided with Victor Schoelcher and Louis Blanc at two anti-clerical congresses, and for some time edited a political paper, Le Républicain de Seine et Oise, and was thereby the means of educating the democracy in her advanced views, and in securing the return of a large number of radical candidates to the Chamber of Deputies.

Her most daring piece of writing was, however, made in a "Letter to the French Clergy," in which she said: "You are the product of a false principle and an unhealthy surrounding; to-day your situation is more anomalous than ever. On every point you are behindhand and contradicted. All vital questions are foreign to you. The undisputed part of science—that is to say, the part ratified every day by experience—is in complete disagreement with you. You are altogether out of place in the domain of positive certitudes. You are now, amongst us, as an antique ruin placed in the center of a Parisian square."

Doubtless her extreme religious and political views weakened Maria Deraismes' position as a leader of those women who desired similar advantages to those for which so large a section of English women are struggling with much greater tact and moderation; and hence with very much greater success. But whatever may have been her fault in method, France has lost in her a woman of singular courage, honesty and whole-hearted devotion to what she believed to be the right and true.

London, Eng.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM OUR NATIONAL TREASURER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am sitting in a country home where quiet and sunshine take the place of the noise and smoke to which for two years I have been accustomed in Chicago. The change is wonderfully restful to tired nerves and eyes. My mother, nearly eighty years old, sits near me quietly knitting and intermittingly reading the news. Nothing pertaining to current events escapes her clear, bright eye and her unclouded brain. It is such a comfort to look into her peaceful face and listen to her intelligent comments as she reads. Old age is beautiful when it tells of life's work well done and keeps a live interest in the activities of the present, while patiently awaiting the blessings of the future. Blessings on all our mothers!

I stopped at Elkhart, Indiana, for a few hours and spoke for the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Deal, the president, and Mrs. Tompkins, her adjutant, both wide awake and intelligent, are leading an earnest band of women and doing excellent work. I reached Cleveland next morning, finding a delightful home with Mrs. S. M. Perkins and her gifted daughter, who is professor of Latin in the college there. I spoke that evening for Central union; the next day spoke for Sorosis upon "Woman's Work in World's Fair," and on Sunday night for East End union, Mrs. Hammond making arrangements. The white-ribboners of Cleveland are already planning wisely and well for the National Convention and I am sure no city would give the convention a more hearty welcome.

I next found myself at Silver Creek, Chautauqua county, New York, where a large audience greeted me the night before their spring election. License and no-license is the shuttle-cock that plays back and forth from year to year struck by the racket of temperance sentiment, or the stronger one of the liquor men in all the towns of New York, thus keeping the friends of sobriety in a continual state of anxiety and uncertainty. How long before the true friends of temperance will learn how unsatisfactory are these subterfuges of local option and similar devices! Cuba, N. Y., also gave me a large audience on Sunday night; they, too, are to vote for no-license commissioner. I was glad to find Alleghany county (my old home) with only three towns that license the saloon. If we could only crystallize the true temperance sentiment irrespective of political affiliation then the liquor traffic would be outlawed.

New York suffragists are in earnest, and hard at work for the constitutional convention that will meet in Albany in May to consider desirable changes in the state constitution. A mammoth petition will be presented, asking for an amendment that will strike "male" from the constitution, and thus remove from the women of the Empire state the political fetters that heretofore have prevented them from the expression of opinion and the possibility of a voice in matters of government. A great change of sentiment upon this question is apparent, and is no doubt largely due to the fact that the Republican League at Louisville and the Democratic Convention in New York, both declared equal suffrage a subject worthy of serious consideration for the next platform of these two "big" parties. Influential papers all over the state are advocating its adoption. What a victory it would be if New York could fall into line with Colorado and Wyoming. Kansas, too, bids fair to honor herself by the adoption of this just measure. The world does move!

HELEN M. BARKER.

Cuba, N. Y.

AN APPEAL TO PURITY WORKERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—One of the latest numbers (December) of THE UNION SIGNAL which we have received has brought to us the painful news that the compulsory examination of young women to maintain their fitness for shame has been instituted in Cleveland, O. We are thankful beyond measure that this legal elevation of the rights (?) of men to practice indecency by constituting physicians the sponsors of the brothel is receiving a bold challenge from women and righteous men. May God enable these valiant warriors to comprehend the real enormity of the crime they are contending against!

Important as it is for us to learn to treat trifling injuries as such and to pass them over as too trivial to engage our attention for long, we are under equal obligation before God and to society to recognize the enormity of a crime which can be committed and to effectually protect the defenceless from its very possibility. And I say without reservation, and after quite a thorough investigation from the standpoint of a physician, as well as a philanthropist, in many parts of the world, that I know of no form of vice which so quickly yields a crop of every form of iniquity, including fraud, seduction, procuring, rape, adultery, slavery and murder, as any form of the state surveillance of degraded women to keep them in proper health for a life of crime.

There is not the faintest shadow of excuse for the existence of such a system of laws in the United States. The claim is that such laws are needful for the proper protection of innocent wives and children from debased husbands. This claim might be made to hold good for an instant, at least, I suppose in England and British colonies, where a wife may be compelled to live with a husband if only he does not beat her in addition to keeping a mistress. But, thank God! the laws of the United States recognize universally that women have the same rights that men have in this matter, so that even this shadow of an excuse is done away by making it no woman's duty to live with a husband who is suffering from the effects of his own vices.

In the second place, even in England, years ago, through the efforts mainly of Mrs. Josephine Butler (not of Mr, Stead, as a recent copy of THE UNION SIGNAL states, for his purity effort was entirely along the line of raising the age of consent), the Contagious Diseases Acts became outlawed, and every crown colony of England has been obliged to conform. But India had been long upheld as the bright and glowing illustration of the success of the C. D. Acts.

In 1888, it was shown in the House of Commons: 1. That disease had increased under the Acts. 2. That prostitution had become a state institution under the Acts, even to the extreme of government-salaried brothel-keepers and procuresses, and that Lord Roberts, commander-in-chief of the Indian Army, had, through his quartermaster-general, General Chapman, ordered younger and more attractive native girls to be put at the mercy of the British soldiers for the benefit of their health. Then England in its righteous fury at such violation of the rights of Indian women, unanimously resolved, in the House of Commons, that any system of even permitting or encouraging the examination of women in India was indefensible. Whereupon Indian military officials set to work to collect evidence from year to year to show the great increase of disease in consequence of this compulsory repeal of the Acts in India.

Now purity workers have always contended that, even if the Acts were thoroughly and rigorously enforced, yet the very system cultivated instead of suppressing disease, and that the increased cultivation of disease was in direct proportion to the increased surveillance. This is readily shown to be the scientific view of the case. The cause of disease is promiscuity and excessive vice. The Acts propose to maintain the cause of the disease in society but annihilate the effects of the cause.

To return to India: The military officials were all ready with an enormous array of statistics at the beginning of the present Parliamentary term, to show the awful increase of disease after the repeal of the C. D. Acts in India by the House of Commons resolution of 1888. The Medical Journal of Calcutta, the Gazette of India and military papers in England had already published the news that these statistics were completed and ready for Parliament, and that these showed a frightful increase of disease under the change of laws.

It was then that Mrs. Andrew and I returned to England, at the request of our workers in the cause there, and gave evidence that the Acts had not even yet been abolished in India. This proof was carried so far that Indian officials were forced to send to England the records they had kept for years in the Lock hospitals of those cantonments which Mrs. Andrew and I visited. After this, we needed but to spread the enemy's own documents before the committee appointed by the government to receive our evidence, and thus prove all our principal accusations by prima facie evidence. General Chapman then came forward to state that Lord Roberts' attempt to evade the accusation of causing fresh, young, attractive girls to be furnished the British soldiers, by declaring he was not aware that such a document was issued, was a false statement. And Lord Roberts had to endure the mortification of having his own Quartermaster-General deny his assertions. In the end Lord Roberts wrote a public letter of unreserved apology to Mrs. Andrew and me, for having said our accusations against the military authorities in India were false. And thus was the cause of purity almost overwhelmingly victorious.

Now what has become of the statistics to prove the enormous increase of disease in India? They will never be brought to the light, for they furnish conclusive evidence, collected by our enemies themselves, that the cultivation of vice in men always insures the cultivation of disease in themselves and their families, and any system that qualifies or is supposed to qualify women for vice, by law, is, of course the cultivation of vice.

The purity workers of Cleveland may then take the bold and unequivocal stand that the police surveillance of vice and the compulsory examination of women increases the danger of physical contamination of the innocent wherever introduced, and by writing to No. 1 King St., Westminster, London, they can procure Dr. Birkbeck Nevins' carefully compiled statistics, which have been gathered from year to year on this point. Orders for literature should be addressed to Miss Forsaith at the above-mentioned place in London. English purity workers will most heartily welcome the opportunity of co-operating in this work. The cost of the literature is merely nominal, and it is to be hoped that all our American sisters who are interested will not be deterred for one instant on account of a seeming obstacle, which does not actually exist, of purchasing literature relating to the C. D. question from abroad, which cannot possibly be secured in America.

KATE BUSHNELL, M. D.

Penang, Malay Pen.

THE BILLS IN THE OHIO LEGISLATURE FOR THE VIVISECTION OF CRIMINALS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Your readers who are interested in effort to suppress cruelty and to teach mercy, will remember that close observers have prophesied that the scientific cruelty so freely practiced on animals under the plea of benefiting human beings, and saving them from experiment, would not benefit them, and, so far from saving them from experiment, would beget a desire for human subjects.

This prophecy has now been fulfilled. Two bills have been introduced into the legislature of Ohio asking for human subjects. One provides that condemned criminals be given over to physiologists for research in the interests of science, the other provides that the criminal shall have the choice between this manner of ending and electrocution. The last named sounds better than the first, but is really little better, as not one in one hundred of the subjects would understand what the acceptance of the alternative might involve.

Of course these bills provide for the use of anæsthetics, but the fact only reminds the initiated that the people at large need enlightenment. There never was a greater delusion than the anæsthetic delusion. These bills promise what their own provisions make impossible of performance. A large proportion of the experiments which interest investigators are of long duration, lasting days or even weeks; but anæsthesia can only be of limited duration, and the results of some of the most elaborate and agonizing experiments would be seriously interfered with by the use of anæsthetics, as they affect the organs under observation, and make an accurate record impossible.

Should any such laws as these ever be passed, human beings would inevitably be subjected to the same terrible torture which has for so long been inflicted on helpless animals in the name of science. No law could be framed which would really protect a man—who could never tell the story—if he were once delivered over to the enthusiasm of research. "The artist in vivisection" (an expression of the great French vivisector, Cyon), thinks only of his art, and not of the feeling of the living body that he carves. Dr. Emanuel Klein, the well known English experimenter, publicly stated while under examination before the Royal Commission, that a physiologist or an investigator "cannot be expected to devote time or thought to inquiring what the animal will feel while he is doing an experiment." Neither will the feelings of criminals occupy the time or thought of those who vivisect them; and, though we who oppose cruelty because it is wrong per se, do not admit that it is really any more wrong to torture the body of a guilty man than it is to torture the body of an innocent brute, yet this very condemnation of cruelty for its own sake, involves active opposition to all attempts at legislation to permit it.

The W. C. T. U. has, at several National conventions, recorded its vote against vivisection as a great evil. The fact that any one has dared to present such bills as those in Ohio to any legislature, proves that we can hardly take an exaggerated view of it, and it will only consist with our former action and with the need shown by present development of the evil if we make fresh and very vigorous efforts. Every W. C. T. U. meeting and convention should notice this iniquitous attempt, and by resolution condemn it and all vivisection, taking care to publish these resolutions in the papers. The National department of mercy has been coöperating with the W. C. T. U. of Ohio in appeals to the legislature against these bills, and we trust that even now their case is hopeless. A letter dated February 26, received by your superintendent from Representative Rowlen, who introduced one of them (the bolder one) says, "I doubt the passage of the bill."

All this should open our eyes more and more to the need of the promulgation of the sweet teaching of mercy to all creatures, and of a thorough understanding of the arguments against all vivisection. There is a constantly increasing number of medical men of unquestioned ability who persevere in saying that the practice does nothing but mislead, and is answerable for many fatal errors. These argue that clinical observation of disease and post mortem examination would give truer knowledge, and that medical science would be greatly in advance of what it now is if more attention had been paid to these methods.

MARY F. LOVELL,

Superintendent Department of Mercy.

Box 163, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

And who is he that will harm you, if ye be zealous of that which is good? But and if ye should suffer for righteousness sake blessed are ye. . . Wherefore let them also which suffer according to the will of God commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator.—I Peter 3:13 and 4:19.

[Mrs. Carse has given the Temple Item column to Mrs. Vie Campbell, president of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., for a purpose which is patent, and which closes the subject referred to. The usual report of Temple matters will appear next week. Those who love the great work to which the W. C. T. U. is consecrated will not forget that "thoughts are things," and send out after Mrs. Carse the strong desire for all those good things they would like should come to pass for our work, and will call believingly upon the Father for all those other good things He has promised not to withhold:—ED.]

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As I have been severely criticised in three of the late numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL because I did what every state president has an unquestionable right to do in her own state—issued a letter to my white-ribbon constituency in my state organ—I desire to say a few words in reply to the white-ribboners of other states, before whom I have been arraigned. It was with no thought of stirring up dissension that I wrote that letter to my co-workers in Wisconsin, and as it had nothing to do with the women of any other state a reply to it ought not have appeared in our National organ.

In the September number of The Motor, 1892, I made an appeal to my unions to turn their attention that year towards raising money for the Temple, giving them all the facts regarding it that I was then cognizant of. After a more thorough investigation of the financial side of the question than I was able to make at that time, I felt that it was impracticable for us to try to raise money to pay for it, and was, therefore, strongly impressed that it was my duty to say so to my unions, and I obeyed the dictates of conscience, little thinking that any one would wish to deprive me of the right to such an expression or would doubt that it was my duty to make it, and the only woman who has a right to question my action has not done so.

I do not think in my letter to my co-workers that I made any statements that I cannot fully substantiate. I think the president of the Board of Temple Trustees labors under a wrong impression when she says that the ruling made by the National, with regard to appeals to unions, referred only to states. The ruling referred to will be found in the National Minutes, and refers to superintendents; that ruling has been quoted by some of the secular newspapers and used as an argument against the W. C. T. U. Permission was formerly asked of the state presidents* to make appeals for the Temple, and all except three gave their permission; one of them asked that her letter of refusal be published. This occurred before I held the position of state president, but I have been credibly informed of the fact.

Wisconsin has two hundred and twenty-nine unions. I have visited towns that have not been on our roster the last year, where unions had gone down before I became the president of Wisconsin W. C. T. U., and I found women there who had received appeals for money. Unions die from local causes over which state officers have no control and consequently they are not "remiss" in duty.

The National Convention voted to adopt the report of the Temple, that is, by so doing, it made that report its own. The words adopt and indorse are not synonymous. To indorse would be to support, hence I am correct when I say it was not indorsed, and such a statement is not "sheer nonsense."

The woman who "looketh well to the ways of her household" ought not to be condemned when she finds the present needs of that "household" so great that she cannot advise investments upon which it is hoped future returns will be realized. To fully understand the difficulties which any state labors under one must be closely identified with the work of the state. Wisconsin, with her large per cent of foreigners and the largest brewery in the world, labors under disadvantages that most states know nothing of. Her unions average less than twenty members. In order to meet the demands of the work in the state they must put forth great effort to raise the requisite funds. It is true of all unions that they can raise a certain sum of money per year, and beyond that they cannot go; hence, as I said in my letter to my unions, every dollar sent out of the state cripples our work just that much. I know whereof I speak, and can name unions that have had to delay sending their money which was needed to carry on the work of the state, because they were putting forth every effort to pay their pledge to the Temple. The income that may sometime return to us will not bring joy to the homes that have been made desolate while "other temperance work is suspended."

I would say to every one, give with a liberal hand to every good cause, but the same blessed book that tells us that the Lord loves a cheerful giver, condemns those who provide not for their own. I think my faith in the great Ruler of the Universe is beyond question, but when we come to financial matters the question of faith or lack of faith, is a different thing. Our experiences in this material world teach that faith without works availeth nothing.

I have no personal acquaintance with the president of the Board of Temple Trustees, but I believe she thinks that the Temple bonds will be paid for when they become due, and no one hopes so more earnestly than I do.

Sincerely, VIE H. CAMPBELL,

Pres. Wisconsin W. C. T. U.

* I do not remember to have written but once to state presidents asking their permission to send documents to unions, and that was when the Temple project was first started. Rev. Watson Trantor a year ago did write to the presidents of states, but his was a movement looking toward direct financial aid for the unions in the states which would, however, ultimately help the Temple.—M. B. CARSE.

A SPRING-TIME THOUGHT.

BY TARPLEY STARR.

What wilt Thou give, O Father, dear
Beyond our mortal want and fear,
(Like zigzag lightning here and there
The words went quivering through the air)
To prove Thy tenderest love and care
To this dear needy earth of ours?

With speed that only sunbeams bear,
With smiles that all the world might share,
With words that bloomed out everywhere,
The dear God answered Zephyr's prayer:
"I give them—flowers."

Berrysville, Va.

STRIPED CARNATIONS.

BY ED CLIFFORD.

Charles Dickens tells us delightfully of an almshouse in East London where the inmates lived in a state of perpetual warfare on the question of old Mrs. Saggers' pail. The quarrel had all kinds of developments, but it started from the root question as to whether Mrs. Saggers had a right to stand her pail outside her front door. From this all the bickering proceeded, gathering fresh food every day, till the pail question paled before fresher and fiercer disagreements.

This story is but a sample of most of the heart-burnings which spoil people's lives. May God deliver us from stumbling over our own particular Mrs. Saggers' pail!

Tom and Hester Moody lived at No. 4 Eastfield street, in a suburb of Birmingham. Hester was house-proud, which is a good quality; and they were both garden-proud. They had a nice little strip at the back, and took a great deal of trouble with it. Their carnations were beautiful, and much admired.

One day, Albert Baker, a small boy who lived at No. 3, jumped over the garden wall to get his ball, and he jumped right on to the best carnations. Some of them were broken off, and most of the patch was trampled down and spoiled.

Hester saw it from the kitchen window, and boiled with anger. She told Tom as soon as he came home from work, and they went into a rage together.

"Do we plant our flowers for that wretched, dirty boy to trample on whenever he chooses? I'll have the law on him," said Tom Moody.

And Hester backed him up well. They talked about it nearly all the evening. They lamented over their beautiful striped carnations, and they used strong expressions about the neglected, untidy garden next door, and about the shiftless, slatternly Mrs. Baker and her dirty, spoiled boy, and her idle husband. And most of what they said was true.

Nevertheless, they didn't have a happy evening. They were cruelly ruffled, and the more they talked about it, the worse they felt, and the more determined to act firmly. It was not the first time they had been annoyed. Once a dead cat had been thrown over, and worse still, there was a particularly disagreeable live cat, which they believed had damaged some white lilies. The matter had been "mentioned" to Mrs. Baker at the time, but had not been well received by her. But the horrid boy actually daring to come into their garden was worst of all.

Now Tom and Hester were sincere Christians, and that night they knelt together in prayer, as usual. They gave thanks for many good gifts, and prayed for many blessings for themselves and others. Tom did not like to leave the quarrel out of his prayers, but he felt it was rather an awkward thing to pray about, though he had no doubt that he was quite right. At last he prayed: "O Lord, guide us about this quarrel. Thou knowest, Lord, how very aggravating these people have been, and we feel it is not right that we should put up with such conduct. Guide and direct us, Lord, for Jesus Christ's sake." They both said "Amen," and went silently to bed.

"We won't do anything on Sunday," said Tom, "but on Monday morning I'll go in and have a straight talk with them."

I think they were glad that as yet they had not acted. Somebody has said, "The words as one has not spoken, one has got yet for to say." This is certainly true, but Tom and Hester had begun to feel that perhaps some of the words they had planned might not be spoken at all. Prayer makes a great difference. The telling a vexation to God calms us down, and often puts things in a different light. Still, it was their fixed intention to take a decided position on Monday morning.

They started talking about the carnations the next morning, while they were getting up, and before church-time they felt almost as hot as ever.

The Bakers did not go to church. They were Chapel people, and only attended services occasionally in the evening.

Tom and Hester had prayed that they might be guided about the quarrel, and their prayer was answered, for after the morning service everything was changed.

The vicar, Mr. Higgins, preached from the text, "Why do ye not rather suffer wrong?" Tom and Hester at first felt indignant and unconvinced, and each of them longed to get up and have their own say back. It would have been, "Do you mean to say, sir, that we ought to let people bully us, injure us, and trample on our striped carnations without protesting? No, no, that cannot be right." But in church people cannot speak out without being thought lunatics, so they sat on and listened, and presently Mr. Higgins said: "The rule is that in quarrels and differences, Christian people are not so much to protect themselves, as to bless others. We are often willing to deny ourselves in money and pleasure in order to help those who are needy! But it is an uncommon form of self-denial for us to bear a little injury without resenting it, and to simply do what is best for the one who has injured us. Do not say to yourself, 'I will have my rights,' but say, 'Lord, teach me what will be best for the person who is willing to quarrel with me.' It is not always the kindest thing to give way, for that may mean that the soul of the other person is hurt and the character spoilt. Many a father and mother, and many a husband and wife has erred in this way by indulgence, and has made the other selfish and idle and unreasonable. But in most of our quarrels, God blesses the kindly yielding spirit. Can we imagine Christ standing up for His rights in such quarrels as, for the most part, occupy us?

"It is wonderful what a power a quarrel has to embitter life and to make us disagreeable. It casts a fog on our happiness, and spoils everything. Good humor and enjoyment are impossible if we are quarreling. Let us avoid quarrels.

"And now may the peace of God which passeth all understanding, keep our hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God and of Jesus Christ His Son."

Tom and Hester both said "Amen" rather loud, and as they walked home they humbly agreed that they would let the matter drop. And immediately they felt happy and peaceful and that they had done the right thing.

Poor Mrs. Baker was leaning on the wall of her little front yard, as they came back. She looked more depressed than ever, but when she saw them coming, she drew herself together as if for a conflict. But Tom and Hester both gave her a pleasant smile and a pleasant greeting. This made her wonder, for she had fully expected to hear about the striped carnations, and she was prepared to say that her boy had a right to play ball she supposed, and that if they did not want the ball to come over, they ought to put rabbit netting to protect their garden, as other people did, and that she was not going to leather the boy, or to hear him spoken against, and that it was not her cat that had broken down those lilies, and that if people went to church it was a pity they could not keep their tempers, and that she was not the only one that complained of Mrs. Moody's fine-lady airs about her house and garden, and that Mrs. Moody's aunt by marriage was not any better than she ought to be.

Instead of this she said nothing, but looked ashamed, and the Moodys knew they had done right.

But, oh, how thankful they felt five days later that they had acted in this way, for poor little Albert Baker fell into a well and was drowned.

Hester went in, full of sympathy, and helped, and tried to comfort the poor mother. She and Tom lent thirty shillings towards the funeral and attended it, and helped with some little things for the mourning. And the hearts of the poor Bakers were won forever, and eventually they were won for Christ.

Tears fell on the little coffin, but none of the tears were bitter. On it lay a beautiful wreath of white roses and striped carnations.

The Moodys were not the only people who profited by the vicar's sermon. It sank into the heart of the squire, and he went home to his invalid wife, and said: "Marian, I will make an end to-day of that wretched money quarrel with your brother. I shall always feel that he has behaved shamefully, but he shall keep that £700, about which we have been hating and bally-wragging each other for more than two years. I shall write to him to-day. I believe it was chiefly his wife's fault. I daresay they want the money more than we do. I do not like to be cheated, but he shall have it, and we will ask their boys here for the Easter holidays as we used to. I will write this very evening."

Lady Tetley, lying on her sofa, looked radiant, and she told her husband that he was an angel, and that there was nobody else in the world who would have behaved so splendidly.

She did not tell him that she had been praying for two years that he might do this very thing. But she thanked God with a full heart, and took courage.

London, Eng.

MOTHERS' CLUBS.
III.
Dr. Ashley's Paper.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

A pleasant day, the interest awakened by the first meeting and a feeling of curiosity as to what Dr. Ashley could say on the "Education of Infants," combined to fill Mrs. Stacy's parlors to their limit of comfort at the second meeting of the club.

According to the plan accepted at the first meeting, Mrs. Norwood presided. At the stroke of three she called the club to order, and announced that the devotional exercises would be conducted by Mrs. Ames, who had consented to act as permanent chaplain. These exercises were short, but particularly appropriate, as Mrs. Ames had had time to collate texts bearing upon the theme in hand.

Mrs. Norwood then introduced Dr. Ashley, who read a very interesting and instructive paper, which can only be quoted in part.

THE EDUCATION OF INFANTS.

"Many parents seem to think that the education of children does not begin until they are old enough to understand what is said to them. Perhaps some of you have been thinking that I have made a mistake in announcing my subject, and have been wondering if I would not be obliged to make an explanation or correct a blunder. But I mean just exactly what my title indicates, the education of infants. You will the more easily comprehend what I am intending by this expression when you recall the primary meaning of the word education, viz., leading out. To educate means, then, to develop, or lead out the natural capacities of the child. With this idea in mind we see that the first breath of the baby is the beginning of its education. Its first unrecognizing look, its first appreciation of an audible sound, its first aimless flutter of little hands is its first education in getting hold of the body, the instrument of all activity. All the environments of the babe are educating it. The tones it hears, the quality of air it breathes, the kind of food given to it, the moral as well as physical atmosphere of the house in which it dwells are all educatory influences, and tend to lead out the capabilities of the child either in one direction or the other. Of course we accept the fact that the child has inherent qualities by dower of heredity, but we also accept as equally true that education is the power that leads out some qualities, while others may perish, because left untouched by surrounding influences. We recognize heredity as a force preserving characteristics both good and bad, but education modifies the general character by leading out certain qualities."

The doctor enlarged upon this idea much to the consolation of those who rebelled at the idea of heredity, because they had considered it as an evil fatality.

"In addition to the indirect teaching of environment, the education of infants is carried on directly by the habits of their lives. Time will only permit us to indicate some of the methods of instruction, but these will be suggestive of others.

"Habits of temperance or intemperance may be inculcated in the baby by the plan pursued in its feeding. If food is given irregularly it is of necessity given intemperately, and the child is thus taught to eat for the gratification of the sense of taste, which is in itself the foundation of intemperance. If the child is fed every time it cries or to still pain, the lesson is to forget present discomfort by putting something into the mouth. It will not be surprising if a child thus taught follows out the teaching in maturity and attempts to quiet sorrow, to drown care, to deaden pain by putting something into the mouth, learning after a time that alcohol has a charm that temporarily annihilates all grief. We thus come to see that the regular habit of feeding infants has in it a moral quality, and is worth our serious consideration. In addition to irregularity as a cause of intemperance in eating, and leading indirectly to other forms of intemperance, we may enumerate the giving babies soothing syrups. I have myself distilled from one twenty-five cent bottle of Mrs. Winslow's soothing syrup sufficient alcohol to make a blaze two inches high which would burn some minutes. These nostrums contain a quantity of opium and this adds to the evil education of the children quieted by their use.

. . . . . .

"The little nervous night hawks who never sleep nor let any one else sleep have had a bad education, perhaps beginning before their independent existence, and no doubt continued afterward. Babies may be taught to sleep without rocking and in quiet darkness, or they may receive a directly contrary education. And this education also begins in the very first hours of life. Infants may be taught to require constant attention, to be held, amused, rocked and walked with, or they may be educated to lie quiet until the inborn vital forces incite them to activity, and they will quietly follow out their own investigations very happily if so permitted. The majority of children need what the old lady called 'a little wholesome neglect." That is, a watchful general oversight, while at the same time there is opportunity to develop according to individual needs through refraining from interference with the right of the child to self-dependence.

. . . . . .

"The importance of educating the infant to an acceptance of conditions cannot be overestimated. One of the fundamental laws of the family is that each one shall have opportunity for work or rest, and the baby must learn not to monopolize the attention either of one or several. He can just as well learn to amuse himself as not. He can also be taught that he does not get what he cries for. The education of the majority of children is that they will get what they wish if they cry long and loud enough."

The discussion following this paper was full of interest. Some mothers were inclined to oppose the doctor's statements on the ground that her ideas were theoretical, whereas their practical experience led them to think otherwise. But other mothers were present who, by their own experience, were able to corroborate all of the doctor's ideas. Discussion was free and informal, and the chairman found her duties not burdensome, consisting, as they did, chiefly in filling up little gaps in the discussion, or in calling the remarks away from personalities by a judicious suggestion of a new thought. The buzz of conversation after the formal adjournment indicated the great interest taken, and many ladies expressed personal obligations to Dr. Ashley for enlightening them on points concerning which they had had little instruction, and to which they had given less thought.

It had been decided to now take up the study of some book, but Mrs. Ellis announced that at the time of the next meeting she would have as guest a kindergarten teacher who, she was sure, would give them a paper on "The Philosophy of Child-training."

This offer being thankfully accepted the members dispersed, promising to be prepared with questions to draw out the wisdom of their expected instructor.

Toledo, O.

SPRING.

"If the apples bloomed to-day,
It would be pink and would be May.
If great gold roses opened soon,
Then it would be yellow June;
If it snowed—oh, I remember!
'Twould be white, and be December;
Just because it's gray and blue,
April! April! that means you."

—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

WHAT SHE SAID.

Grandma Grumpy
Was weak and dumpy,
And she lived across the way.
She looked for hours
At the precious flowers
We were raising for Easter day;
But "Some little sillies
Can grow great lilies,"
Was all that we heard her say.

And by and by
When the April sky
Had coaxed them to open wide,
She lay in her bed,
And all she said,
When we set them down by her side,
Was, "Some little sillies
Are sweet as their lilies,"
And she kind of smiled and cried.

—Youth's Companion.

AN "APRIL FOOL."

BY BERTHA S. ASHTON.

In a bedroom of Cloverdale Seminary sat two girls, studying and talking alternately.

Joe Baker, the elder, was in a rocking chair, while her chum, Leon Newcomer, was seated on a hassock at her feet.

"Do you realize that to-day is the thirty-first of March?" asked Leon of her friend.

"Well, what of that," was Joe's reply. "Yesterday was the thirtieth and the day before the twenty-ninth."

"But, my dear Joe, have you forgotten that to-morrow will be the first of April and it should not go by without our celebrating it? Don't you remember what fun we had last year at Madame Fraly's. To my dying day I will never forget how stern she looked when she called us into her private office. I really thought we were to be expelled, but didn't we get off easy?" and Leon Newcomer gave a merry little laugh.

These two girls were fun loving lassies of sixteen and seventeen, who liked nothing better than to play a joke on some one of their numerous friends.

They were intimate friends and had been away to school together for several years. They were the ringleaders of all of the mischief in their class, and were constantly getting into scrapes, but for some unaccountable reason they possessed the happy faculty of getting out as easily as getting in, so their little jokes never cost them much.

After thinking a few moments Joe exclaimed: "I know what we can do. You remember how Florence Adams dislikes cologne. Well, we will soak her tooth and nail brushes in that, and won't she turn up her nose when she goes to use them? We can send letters addressed to Grace and Edith Sherman from their uncle in India filled with blank sheets of paper. I have an India stamp and Grace loaned me a letter from her uncle not long ago, so I can copy his writing. We can also send one to Mabel Thomas in her mother's handwriting. You know she has been expecting one for so long."

"That would be awfully mean to play a joke on poor Mabel," answered Leon, "especially since we know how hard she has to work to stay here at all. There is such a thing as playing practical jokes and carrying them too far. I like Mabel and am not willing to fool her in that way."

"Oh, you chicken-hearted goosie. Every one expects to take their share of jokes on April Fool's Day, but let's stop chattering or I'll never learn my Virgil lesson. Light the lamp, Leon, and we'll study," and in ten minutes there was not a sound to be heard in the room except the ticking of the clock.

The following morning the girls were up bright and early playing pranks on several of their schoolmates.

Joe told Leon to fix up Mabel's letter as she had the other two to do, and saying nothing about her plans the kind-hearted girl directed the envelope, but instead of putting a blank sheet of paper in she took a five dollar bill from her pocketbook and slipped it inside the paper, saying to herself as she did so: "I just can't fool her and am going to send her this. Papa is so generous I can afford it."

. . . . . .

In a poor little room scarcely larger than the bed itself, sat Mabel Thomas, a sweet-faced girl in a plain, old fashioned gown.

"What shall I ever do for a Cicero and a German reader? Poor mother can't afford to send me any money. I couldn't stay here at all if Miss Anderson wasn't kind enough to let me work for my board and tuition." And with this the poor girl broke down and wept.

Just then a letter was stuck under her door. The writing was not familiar and as she tore it open she said: "It must be an April Fool. The girls are all playing jokes on each other to-day." But what was her surprise to find a five dollar bill in the envelope. She could not speak for joy for a few moments.

I am sure Leon Newcomer must have been fully repaid the next day when she heard Mabel tell about her April Fool.

HABITS OF EXACTNESS.

Habits of exactness in any phase of business life are a safeguard to character. In considerable degree the whole man is exhibited in any of his spheres of thought or action. He cannot, therefore, indulge in laxity in any one of his activities of head or of hand without incurring the risk of growing lax unconsciously in other things. Carelessness or slouchiness in mere surface routine may result in a loss of the sense of care and exactness in matters involving the deeper principles of rectitude and honor. The line between right and wrong, between honesty and dishonesty, has been lost sight of by many a trusted employé, simply because hard and fast lines have fallen out of his general habits of thinking, speaking and doing. Strictness and accuracy have a value beyond any immediately utilitarian purpose; their value is to character.—Sunday-School Times.

SOME QUEER CRADLES.

What queer cradles some little folks have! The Indian baby is strapped to a board and hung up in a tree or carried on its mother's back. He has no toys; and if the sun shines in his face or the storm beats on his head, it does not matter. In Lapland the cradle looks something like a big slipper. The baby is laid in it, covered up with a sheet. There are holes in each side of the cradle, and through these a stout cord is laced across to keep the baby from tumbling out. When the Lapland baby's mother attends church she leaves him outside to keep warm in a hole made in the snow. Sometimes several cradles are left in a cluster, and then the children set up such a chatter that they disturb the meeting.

When the Laps are traveling from place to place, these cradles are slung on the mother's shoulders. And they go through some dreadful storms and snow-drifts.—Sunbeam.

SOME WONDERFUL THINGS.

"Martin," said a wise grammar-school boy to his little brother of six, "come here and tell me what you have inside of you."

"Nothing," said Martin.

"Yes, you have. Listen! You've got a whole telegraph stowed away in your body, with wires running down to your very toes and out to your finger tips."

"I havent, " said Martin, looking at his feet and hands.

"You have, though, and that isn't all. There's a big force pump in the middle of you, pumping, pumping seventy times a minute all day long, like the great engine I showed you the other day at the locomotive works."

"There is no such thing —"

"But there is, though; and besides all these things, a tree is growing in you, with over two hundred different branches, tied together with ever so many bands and tough strings."

"That isn't so at all," persisted the little boy about ready to cry. "I can feel myself all over, and there's no tree or engine, or anything else, except flesh and blood."

"Oh! that isn't flesh and blood; that's most of it water. This is what you are made of—a few gallons of water, a little lime, phosphorus, salt and some other things thrown in," said his brother.

CHILD: "Oh, auntie, I love you—oh, ever so much!"

AUNTIE: "But how will it be when I get old and wrinkled and ugly?"

CHILD, with surprise: "Why, auntie, then you'll need it so much more."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—It was my good fortune to be in a Sunday-school, March 18, where the temperance lesson was taught, as I have no doubt it was in thousands of Sunday-schools all over our land. In this particular school we had been given The Young Crusader on the previous Sabbath, and folded within its bright pages we had found the lesson leaflet, with the fine head of good Neal Dow, "the hero of prohibition." How the boys and girls smiled at the quaint rhyme of old "Father" Hubbard, with its illustrations, which explained the empty cupboard, caused, of course, by drink.

On temperance Sunday, having read The Young Crusader and studied the lesson leaf, all were ready for the good words of the superintendent. Oh, how plainly he pictured to us all the wicked effects of the great liquor traffic, and to make it more pointed he used an illustration. Three boys were invited to stand upon the platform; one was from the infant class, another was about nine years old, and another about fifteen. The superintendent also stood in line. Then he told how he was going to compare the four. The tiny boy represented the amount of money spent for missions in our land; the next the amount spent for schools; the big boy represented the sum of money which would buy all the food used in our country in a year. The superintendent himself (and he is a tall, broad-shouldered man) would have to be a foot higher and as big around as a hogshead to represent in the same proportion the immense amount of money (nine billions of dollars last year) spent for useless and harmful liquors.

Do you wonder that every boy and girl then resolved that they would not swell that big, wasted sum, and that many took home the pretty pledges which were passed, to bring them signed to their teachers the next Sunday?

God will bless the children who sign the pledge and help them to keep it faithfully. Your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

My papa has a fruit farm, but none of the apples make cider. MARY M. FREEMAN.
Clearmont, Mo.

Little brother Ralph loves to hear me read Miss Anna Gordon's story about Mr. Toots Willard. He wants his picture, and is going to earn the twenty-five cents hauling wood for mamma. BETH GEORGE.
Gunn City, Mo.

My papa is a minister, and he does not chew or smoke or drink. My two brothers have promised never to do any of these things. HANNAH HOEKJE.
Fremont, Mich.

Our papas do not drink, smoke or chew. There are no saloons in this town. We are strong temperance girls.
EDITH ZERAN.
Dakota City, Ia. WINIFRED CLIFT.

There are no saloons in Weston now.
Weston, Ore. MABEL E. WHITMAN.

My little brother and I are for temperance, and our names are in the Temple corner-stone.
New Lyme Station, O. MINNIE SWEET.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

282.

A BIRTHDAY ACROSTIC.

—ear and dear, oh, friend and brother;
—very birthday brings thee nearer,
—s it beckons to another
—ife, where every life grows dearer.
—aylight cometh, see the story,
—'er the hills and mountains hoary,
—ritten in prophetic glory!

CELIA BAXTER BRIGHAM.

283.

HIDDEN NAME.

Leave wine alone and do what is right.

EVA F. ROBERTS.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MARCH 8.

274. Ballot.

275. Lady Henry Somerset. England. A temperance leader.

276. Lucy Stone.

Correct answers: Lolla A. Rowland; Belle Sherwood; Lulu D. Lemmon; Grace M. Hinckley; Mary L. Fishburn.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Easter Hymn. By Mrs. S. M. I. Henry 2
The Bright Easter Harbor. By Charles N. Sinnett 2
The American Problem. I. By Clark Waggoner 2
A Canny Scotchman. By Frances E. Willard 3
Hillsboro Crusade Sketches. XXIII. By Eliza J. Thompson 3
Willard Hall Noon Meeting. By Mrs. Jane E. Zimmerman 4
The Late Mlle. Maria Deraismes. By Florence Balgarnie 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Interesting Letter from our National Treasurer 4
An Appeal to Purity Workers 5
The Bills in the Ohio Legislature for the Vivisection of Criminals 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, A Spring-Time Thought. By Tarpley Starr 6
Striped Carnations. By Ed Clifford 6
Mothers' Clubs. III. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D. 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poems, Spring—What She Said 7
An "April Fool." By Bertha S. Ashton 7
Habits of Exactness—Some Queer Cradles—Some Wonderful Things 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Trial by Jury 8
Dangerous Education 8
More "Signs of the Times" 8
THE WATCH TOWER 6
CANADIAN FIELD:
The Month's Happenings 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Illinois—Minnesota—Pennsylvania 10, 11
News in a Nutshell 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Notice.—Department of Foreign Work 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 14, 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

Thou that makest thy boast of the law through breaking the law dishonourest thou God.—Rom. 2:23.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

TRIAL BY JURY.

It is one of the inexorable facts of our existence, which we ignore at our peril, that there is nothing so good that it may not be abused and subverted to defeat the very ends it was intended to serve. Habit, the law of our being designed to establish us in good, becomes by man's perversity, the means of rendering his ruin past retrieve. So it is with every institution planned for the well-being of society.

In nothing is this more clearly exemplified just at present than in our system of trial by jury. At one time in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race, this institution was universally regarded as one of the strongest pillars of our liberty. We believe this view to be correct, and that we shall abolish trial by jury at our peril, yet so great are the abuses connected with it at present that many voices are raised against it.

At no point does personal liberty suffer greater violation under despotic governments than in criminal trials. Against these infringements of liberty the jury system interposes effectual barriers. But, on the other hand, from a variety of causes growing out of changed conditions to which the jury system has not been adapted, this bulwark of our liberties too often works the opposite wrong of shielding from justice those who merit the severest penalty of the law. Various causes may be ascribed.

In the first place, jury service is so onerous and so illy requited that it offers no inducements to any but those least fitted to discharge its duties. From the moment a man becomes a juror until he is discharged, he is a prisoner guarded with greater watchfulness and kept in closer seclusion than the supposed criminal himself. For weeks or months, as the case may be, he can communicate freely with no one except his fellow jurors or the officers of the law. He may not even have a message from home that is not first inspected by his guard. He can read the papers only after every reference to the trial on which he is engaged has been cut out. The pay, two dollars per day, makes no return to the average man for the loss resulting to his business from his enforced absence. On the other hand, it is comparatively easy to escape jury duty by pleading a knowledge of the case which any intelligent person must have in these days of newspapers and telegraph and by affirming that one's mind is made up past the power of any evidence to change it. Strange as it may seem, many actually shirk jury duty in this way. An additional evil is thus induced, demoralizing to society by begetting an indifference to truth and to the duties of the citizen towards the state. As a result, ignorant, incompetent and dishonest juries decide many of the most important criminal cases. The verdicts too often give ground for suspicion that money rather than the evidence was the deciding factor.

The purpose of the restrictions, whose results are so unfortunate, is plain enough. It is to place the evidence before fair-minded, intelligent men and get their judgment upon the facts without any of the warping which may come from knowledge derived from hearsay. But these conditions are absolutely unattainable under our present environment. In these days when the lightnings carry the report of every deed "done in a corner" around the world in advance of the sun, intelligent men, such men as we want upon our juries, will have a pretty thorough knowledge of the affair and will have more or less formed their judgment concerning it. But intelligent, conscientious men with opinions already formed are greatly to be preferred to those who, under present conditions, know nothing of the case or have formed no opinion concerning it. The former is much more likely to honestly weigh the evidence and discard all prejudice than the latter. The jury system should be adapted to its present environment—the newspaper and the telegraph. In so doing the earlier principles upon which it was founded would be partially reinstated.

In the beginning, so far from choosing as jurors those who knew nothing of the case, the very opposite was desired. The jurors were chosen because of their knowledge of the persons and of the circumstances. While a return to this idea which confused the province of juror and witness is not desirable, circumstances seem to demand that a happy medium between the two ideas be sought. This change of principle which does away with the necessity of shutting up the juror to the knowledge of the case to be obtained from the witnesses would also do away with the necessity of making a prisoner of him.

The possibility of bribery ought not to be considered. It is the first principle of our criminal law that the man on trial is regarded as innocent until proved guilty. Why, then, should it regard the men who are trying him as perjurors and bribe takers. Let, by all means, the juror who is unfaithful to his duty be punished with the utmost severity, but let us not act upon the supposition that he only lacks opportunity to accept a bribe. With the removal of this surveillance the hardest part of jury service would be abolished and our juries would be improved by the service of better men than we are able as a rule to obtain under present conditions.

The defects pointed out are, we believe, among the most serious drawbacks to the successful working of the jury system, but we are convinced that the hairsplitting technicalities which are a growing evil in modern legal science are also responsible to a large degree for the surprising verdicts which make law-abiding citizens despair of obtaining justice in a legal way. As we follow some criminal cases, we are at an utter loss to understand why evidence that to the ordinary mind seems peculiarly pertinent and convincing should so often be ruled out and the jury instructed to ignore it in making up their verdict. Yet so it is. One of the purposes of the jury system as stated by eminent writers on the subject, is to rule out over-nice legal quibbles by bringing in the common sense of common people. Yet at present lawyers and judges seem pretty effectually to defeat this end.

There are many other elements in the problem. Whole volumes have been written concerning the unanimity principle alone; but we shall enter into none of these issues, for it is not our purpose to undertake to inform our lawmakers how to reform the jury system. In our judgment, however, it is imperative that the system be reformed and our legislators might profitably divert their attention from some lesser matters to the one in hand. To the very frequent failure of the jury to convict those really guilty part of the blame of the increase of lynching must be ascribed. The remedy invoked by the mad mobs is of course worse than the disease they combat, and more utterly subversive of law, justice and consequently of liberty.

But it is always true that from one evil greater evils flow. If those who are so ready to "take the law into their own hands," would but remember that the law is already in their own hands, that it rests with them, through their representatives, to make it an instrument which shall serve the purposes of liberty and justice, instead of a suspected criminal here and there put to death by mobs, we might have the reassuring spectacle of convicted criminals inexorably punished by the calm, strong hand of a majestic law. So deep seated and reasonable is the dissatisfaction with present results, that unless in the parlance of the day, the jury system is mended, there is ground to fear it will be ended.

DANGEROUS EDUCATION.

We are glad to note that the Old Homestead, a popular family monthly published in Cleveland, O., takes a firm stand on the right side of the liquor question. The recent utterance of President Eliot, of Harvard, calls out severe editorial criticism in a late issue of that paper, and it sends out a note of warning to "endangered homes" which we take occasion to pass on and to emphasize.

At a public temperance meeting in Cambridge, Mass., President Eliot is said to have made the following statement: "I am a moderate drinker. I don't believe it is a sin to drink alcohol in any form; if I did I should not drink it myself." Assuming that he has been correctly reported, says the Old Homestead, his position is as "defenseless as it is dangerous," and we quite agree with that opinion.

When we consider the weighty influence which Harvard University exerts throughout the entire country, we may well stand appalled in the face of such danger as is revealed by this confession on the part of its president. That the man who stands at the head of this character-developing institution should be among the unwise who are deceived by the "mocker" is a fact which should cause widespread consternation and consequent arrest of thought; for the principles disseminated by our colleges and the habits formed by college students, touch more or less directly every home in the land.

The president of this, America's oldest university, is, as the Old Homestead truly remarks, "a public servant in the broadest and most vital sense. What he is and what he teaches is re-stated and lived out in Congress, in the judiciary and in state and municipal governments throughout the country. . . . He is expected, by all the force of his experience, ability and position to direct every student—rather as an educator he is to go before and lead the student—drawing out and developing character that will most surely select such a path."

What shall we say then, when this "public servant" (and it is purely in this capacity that the president of Harvard lays himself open to public censure) leads the young manhood of the nation, if not into the path of certain ruin, at least into the path of certain danger? Not a sin to drink alcohol? Not a sin to dally with the evil, mocking spirit embodied in the wine-cup? Not a sin to walk in the broad road that leadeth to destruction even though the end of that road may never be reached? Not a sin to lead a "weaker brother" in that way which for him means a ruined life and a drunkard's, perhaps a criminal's, grave, and for those who love him disgrace and misery?

No matter what view fathers and mothers may take concerning the use of intoxicants—whether they be prohibition "cranks," or "personal liberty" advocates—few, if any, would voluntarily choose to throw around their sons during college life the temptations to dissipation which come with the punch-bowl and the wine party.

The average enrollment of Harvard college is about one thousand three hundred, and for twenty-five years President Eliot has guided the mental and moral development of men who have gone out through the length and breadth of the land to wield a mighty influence for weal or for woe. We wonder how many Harvard graduates whose lives have been wrecked by the drink appetite—and they are many—could trace their downfall to habits contracted while students in college. To such the term Alma Mater is a travesty, a libel upon motherhood.

If there is one class of persons above another which, for the best interests of the country at large should take a righteous stand for temperance it is the nation's educators. But how often do we find those holding high positions as such blind leaders of the blind! Deceived by the witchery of the wineglass, as are all votaries of King Alcohol however moderate their use of it may be, their judgment is warped, their perception of right and wrong, keen in other directions, is upon this great question, blunted. They do not realize that they are

"Sowing the seed of a maddened brain,
Sowing the seed of a tarnished name,
Sowing the seed of eternal shame."

It may be that the seed has already been sown by a parent's hand—alas! that it should ever be so. In that case college life too often develops and strengthens the noxious growth and sends it out to bear fruit which poisons the life of the nation and wrecks the happiness of its homes. Oh! the terrible harvest which follows such seed sowing!

If the president of Harvard University is by precept and example an advocate of moderate drinking THE UNION SIGNAL, like the Old Homestead, "can never advise the homes it enters to send their sons to Harvard for education."

It is suggested that a college whose avowed policy upon questions of religion is neutrality can hardly be expected to regard the use of intoxicants from a Christian standpoint. But, granting that this "defect in its government" precludes the possibility of this university adopting the basic principle of Christian temperance—total abstinence for the individual—it can at least consider the question from the standpoint of science and philosophy, from the standpoint of the sociologist and political economist. Whatever the point of view, an unprejudiced observer of results must inevitably reach the conclusion which gospel Christianity reached long ago, namely, that the only remedy for the liquor evil is the total annihilation of the traffic.

MORE "SIGNS OF THE TIMES."

"'They call us the Heavenly Twins.'
"'What, signs of the Zodiac?' said the tenor.
"'No—signs of the times,' said the boy."

There are many signs of the times for evil; it is well to note those that are for good. Among them there is none more marked than the fact that the principle underlying the book from which we have quoted, is coming to be more and more largely recognized as the eternal principle of justice. The calmly accepted theory of a double standard of purity for man and woman has been the root cause of all the evils connected with our social life.

Back of drunkenness, back of outward acts of impurity, we have come face to face with this adamantine wall which has effectually barred all progress into a higher life for humanity.

Just so long as it is possible for the majority of men and women to believe that one code of conduct may be right in one-half of the human race while it is unqualifiedly acknowledged to be wrong in the other, just so long will it be impossible for the world to grow out of vice into goodness, out of impurity into moral whiteness.

Are we conscious of the universality of this double standard? It comes to us at times with overwhelming force, as in the trial which is now flooding our papers with tides of corruption where the whole force of the defendant's evidence has gone towards proving the woman to have been previously immoral.

Has it occurred to any one to query how the proving of that point could affect the case per se or lessen the man's guilt? Ought it not rather to increase his guilt in the judgment of all right minds? Yet the whole force of the defense has been given to proving this point, and the moral miasma has so poisoned us all that we have not yet fully grasped just what the trial—one of many—means for our sex and for humanity.

Briefly, boldly put it means: A man may be as vile as he pleases if he can but prove that the unfortunate partner in his crime has been previously immoral. Imagine the force of that argument turned the other way! Imagine a woman finding extenuating circumstances in the fact that the partner in her transgression had been previously immoral! It would not be a difficult point to establish in nine cases out of ten. But what would the woman gain by establishing it? Reinstatement in public favor? Calm extenuation of her sin? Nay, verily, she is on the other side of this moral boomerang and its rebound can work only destruction in her case from whatever angle it is thrown.

The man? For him there is always the fatted calf, the light, the warmth, the resurrection into a favor which he had never really lost.

Verily "there's something rotten in the state of Denmark." This one fact is the outward, visible sign of an inward corruption which must eventually destroy all moral life.

The root sin? Yes, we spoke advisedly—the sin which, viewed from spiritual, moral, scientific or physiological point of vision, is doing more than all others combined to thwart God's purpose—to rob humanity of its inheritance—to stay the oncoming of Hope's future for the human race.

And we accept it to a greater or lesser degree, in spite of ourselves, unconsciously. Do we not? Let us bring ourselves, face to face with the question why the book from which we have quoted, "The Heavenly Twins," affects us unpleasantly despite its marvelous power and its daring handling of the question of the age; and if we are honest with our own hearts, we must acknowledge it is because there is in them still some remnant of this spirit which has come down to us through the ages; we are not quite ready to have the problem solved as effectively as the heroine has solved it. We have some lingering feeling that she might have been more forgiving and therefore more womanly (!).

We are not yet willing to honestly face the fact that vice is not a subject to be treated in the realm of sentiment; that a vicious man or woman is a menace to society as a whole, and that society must protect itself from the contamination of each, equally, if it is ever to work out its own salvation. Will the womanhood of the world ever dare in the cause of righteousness and for the true inheritance of her children a tithe of what it has heroically dared in what was, none the less because of the heroism, a moral and sentimental weakness? God forgive us, but the maternal instinct in the human being has not yet attained the level of the brute's in a true concern for the highest protection of her offspring!

But the signs of the times are abroad, thank God! "The Heavenly Twins" cannot be unwritten nor can the thoughts it has aroused be erased from the public mind. Wherever we look we see something which indicates that the current of thought is deepening.

Reform work for the poor, lost girl is being carried on as never before. She is being recognized as equally with her brother, a subject for reformation. Some day he will be recognized with her as equally a subject for protection. Charles N. Crittenton is one of the "signs of the times." His good work through the Florence Missions, his benevolence to the W. C. T. U., for just this line of work are among the many dawn streaks which point to the coming morning. "The Traffic in Girls and the Florence Crittenton Mission," by Mrs. Edholm, tells the story of the need and of the supply very simply and directly. We hail the issue of that book also as a "sign of the times."

The heroic work of Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew in unveiling the gross immoralities protected by the British flag in India, the latest record of which is to be found in another column of this paper, is, perhaps the most significant sign of all. It means something when women dare to face the world with a sin of whose very existence they have, presumably, lived in ignorance. It means that never again can the dual standard satisfy the woman of heart and brain, but that, in her home, in her church, in society at large she will recognize but one standard of living, and that, "The White Life for Two."

IN the Political Science Quarterly for December, 1893, Mr. George K. Holmes states that seventy-one per cent of the wealth of the United States is owned by nine per cent of the families, twenty per cent is owned by twenty-seven per cent of the families and the remaining nine per cent by sixty-four per cent of the families. Mr. Holmes' figures are based on those gathered in the eleventh census. He is a specialist of the census bureau on statistics of wealth and the Political Science Quarterly is recognized as second to no economic authority in the country. These figures may therefore be accepted as approximating the truth as nearly as any we should be able to obtain. This distribution of wealth certainly cannot impress any one as ideal. In fact so serious is the import of such figures that it would seem to be one of the first duties of statesmen to see if anything could be done to permanently change the distribution of the wealth of the nation. There is no need to reiterate the worn out statement that if the wealth were equally divided, inside of ten years it would have pretty generally returned to its original owners. Any one of average intelligence may be assumed to know that this would be the case if the system remained the same. But a very large question arises. Is a system which necessarily results in such distribution of wealth the best one which the Christian thought of mankind is able to evolve?

THE women of South Dakota are persistent in their efforts to drive out beer. It will be remembered that the Sioux Falls brewery was ordered destroyed as a nuisance. The supreme court has reversed that order upon the extraordinary ground that the statute "does not define beer as intoxicating liquor and proof that the defendant simply sold beer is not sufficient to sustain a finding that he sold intoxicating liquor. As beer is a generic term and applies indiscriminately to malt beer and beer made from extracts the court could not know that the beer was malt or intoxicating without evidence to the fact." Huron women, however, are determined that the beer now in possession of the sheriff shall not be sold and they have caused the arrest of city officials for failure to enforce the law. If the decision now pending to set aside the injunction against the brewing company is unfavorable to prohibition, they will bring another suit. Let the fight go on until the people win!

"Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered,
Her feet were firmly planted on the rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, 'It shall be done,' sometime, somewhere."
—Robert Browning.

***

Glances into past history do much to open our eyes to the real progress of the world. A bit of information has strayed this way, touching the status of the temperance question in the sixteenth century. It is a translation into English of some of the rules of a temperance society formed by the upper classes: 1. To drink daily only fourteen cups of wine. 2. Italian, Spanish or hot-spiced wines are prohibited beyond one cup a day, which must be deducted from daily allowance. 3. For the further quenching of thirst, beer is allowed. 4. These fourteen cups must not be drunk at once, but after at least three intervals. No doubt the "temperance" outlook was as problematic to the good people who nearly three hundred years ago made the above rules as it appears to-day to many noble-hearted workers. Yet what great things God hath wrought, and the end is not yet!

***

A white-ribboner testifies in the following incident to two things—the grand work of prevention done in the field of juvenile education and the awful besetment of the life-path of a young man by the power of evil: "My son Howard (one of your Band of Hope boys) reported for one of the great dailies in Chicago. Last summer he was told that the paper would pay for all the whisky and cigars he used in 'treating.' Finally he was ordered to get a certain man drunk and catechise him. The result was that he resigned his position, as the information wanted could not be obtained without the aid of whisky."

***

Tradition says that the Chinese burn down a house to obtain that toothsome delicacy, "roast pig," and we smile at the child-simplicity that destroys the great to gain the less. Here is a nation wrecking its own house—its present and future prosperity and purity—to gain a pitiful handful of revenue dollars. God pity the short-sightedness of poor human nature!

***

It has been amusing as well as interesting to read the letters which have come to On Duty relative to the use of salt on coal fires. I quote briefly from some of the letters received for the benefit of those who may have given the matter thought.

A good housewife in South Dakota says: "We have tried salting the coal, as per suggestion of On Duty, and pronounce the 'discovery' a grand one; it does all that is claimed for it."

Minnesota sends the following testimony: "I use a half a teaspoonful of salt in a half a cup of water to a hod of coal. Once I carelessly put on more, and so put out my fire, for the coal would not burn. Having a stove in which I could also use wood, I built a fire of that alone, adding other unsalted coal little by little, and in the course of forty-eight hours the extra salt coal had smoldered away to ashes, but it never blazed."

Missouri comes forward with yet another recipe: "I have never tried the salt plan, for the reason that clear water alone improves coal enough for me. This keeps down all dust, overcomes the gas, the coal kindles quicker and burns brighter."

Michigan sends in some conflicting testimonies: "I am much interested, also much puzzled. I had learnt to check the burning of coal by using salt, but as the articles recommended it so highly I talked with others, and found one had become convinced of its being a damper, another had been pleased with the effect of dry salt mixed with coal when shoveled into the bin. Then I tried a little in each scuttle full. Result: Dull fires and much time consumed in bringing up desired temperature. But I have learned this lesson: Throwing in a handful of salt before filling up at night prevents too rapid burning, and thus saves a perceptible amount of fuel."

And now comes Maine to throw a damper over all: "I'm afraid the advice to use salt on coal will, if practiced cause more loss in stoves than saving in fuel. Having lived near the ocean, where a great deal of driftwood has been washed on shore, I have observed that those who have used this wood for fuel after it has been soaked a long time in the salt water very soon find their stoves become warped, cracked and rusty. Perhaps it would be well to tell your readers this, as all must know that salt is very destructive to iron."

ON DUTY.

Canadian Field.

THE MONTH'S HAPPENINGS.

"After a storm comes a calm," is generally a true saying, but the province of Ontario has not allowed the upheaval of public sentiment caused by the plebiscite to subside into apathy, the past month being one of great activity and advancement in temperance reform. The great convention of February 6 made a long stride forward, a deputation therefrom waited on Sir Oliver Mowat and received from him the assurance of prohibitory legislation to the full extent of provincial prerogative.

The Woman's Journal says: "Grand addresses were given by some of Canada's grandest men, but do you blame us for thinking that the best of all was by the earnest-faced little woman clad in quiet garb, the new president of Ontario W. C. T. U., Mrs. May R. Thornley, who voiced the sentiments of the hundreds of women over whom she holds sway, as she pleaded for 'God and Home and Native Land.'" A resolution for the full enfranchisement of women was carried with a will.

Toronto district W. C. T. U. recently held a convention, at which Mrs. Thornley profited and delighted the assembly with an address and a drill on parliamentary practice.

Starmont conuty also held a convention presided over by Miss MacArthur. Mrs. E. F. Williams, of Montreal, Dominion president, gave valuable assistance and enlivened proceedings by holding a school of methods. She addressed a public meeting in the evening with great acceptance, as did also Miss Lillian Phelps.

Miss Agnes Hunter, Ontario's provincial superintendent of work among lumbermen, has given a most interesting account of work done in her department. A missionary agent was employed for three months to visit the lumber camps of the Upper Ottawa, carrying comfort bags and literature with him, and holding services which he reports are well received. Many of the men engaged in lumbering are completely isolated from the outside world during the snow months. One quotation from Mr. Hardy's (the agent) report will give a better idea of the work done than any explanation could.

"January 21, Sabbath:—At ten o'clock had a service where I remained over night. Walked three miles and had two meetings in another shanty, forenoon and afternoon. The foreman wanted to take a collection but I told him the W. C. T. U. sent me free, because they wanted to do the men good and not to take money from them. There were seventy-three men there.

"January 24.—Left literature and promised comfort bags. Had a meeting at noon, where I stayed all night. Drove seven miles, spoke to twenty-four men. Left literature and promised comfort bags."

Many instances have occurred where the men, touched by the kind thought which has gone out to them so disinterestedly, have opened their hearts to lasting impressions of God's goodness.

In Port Arthur, Ontario, a temperance department has recently been formed by the King's Daughters. Copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and Dominion Woman's Journal have been ordered, also two hundred pledge cards. In starting this branch they were greatly helped by a visit from Mrs. McClung, the vice-president of the Manitoba Provincial W. C. T. U.

The white-ribboners of New Brunswick are energetically working for the woman suffrage petitions. In Moncton the town is divided into bands for canvassing for names, with women working in each band. Parlor meetings are also being held in every community, and public evening meetings as well.

The Maritime provinces have also established what they call "Youmans Bands," to be formed in places too small and scattered for unions, but where there are always people interested in the temperance cause. Each member signs a temperance pledge, promises to wear the white ribbon and pray daily for the work, also paying twenty-five cents yearly.

Undeterred by the failure of the woman's franchise bill presented to the Nova Scotia legislature last year, it was brought up again this winter and given "a three months' hoist," so that, though silenced, it is not killed.

Manitoba rejoices in the possession of strong and energetic temperance workers. It means a good deal to read of a gathering "of over sixty ladies at the regular weekly meeting of the Central W. C. T. U. in Bethel Hall, Winnipeg." Mrs. Dolson, the president, gave a paper, entitled "Our Nerves," a subject which in this age can bear a good deal of ventilation. Dr. Yeomans and other ladies took part in the discussion following, showing the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the nervous system.

The South End W. C. T. U., of Winnipeg, took advantage of the presence of Mrs. Emma Shaw Colcleugh, of Selkirk, who was giving her lecture on Hawaii, to tender to her a reception.

It is always a healthy sign to see activity in connection with juvenile work. The Sunday-School Association, of Nova Scotia, has issued a circular calling attention to the great desirability of more thorough and organized temperance work in Sunday schools. The White Ribbon Army is the name selected for this branch of work. The organization is simple and easily worked. The triple pledge is not used, but three separate ones are provided against intoxicating liquor, tobacco and profanity. A bow of white ribbon is the badge worn. An earnest call is made in God's name, to work to secure "a generation of total abstainers filled with the spirit of the gospel that will be able, if we fail in the meantime, to secure and enforce a prohibitory law." In connection with this, Jeannette C. Bullock, maritime superintendent juvenile work, calls upon the W. C. T. U. to do all they can to assist this departure in Sunday-school work.

Two leaflets have been added to Dominion literature stock, "An Open Letter," by H. T. T., and "The Beginning Of It," a story for the Y's, by the Dominion president, Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams. This is a brightly written sketch of what may be done even by one shut in by illness, if the heart and mind are quick to see and feel, and ready to do what lies in their power.

MARGARET G. URE,
Canadian Reporter, Montreal.

ILLINOIS.

SPRING SOWING.

If ever a state reporter ought to be turned out of her stewardship, it looks as if I was that one; and if your Illinois constituency rises en masse, "to a point" of nonforbearance, and "makes a motion" to that effect, my best judgment would cause me to "second that motion" at once. Nevertheless, my heart has been full of good intentions, but the how to perform them, I have found not along the line of state reporting.

It has been a comfort, however, to know that the W. C. T. U. work was going forward, even if unreported in our National organ. Besides the old veteran leaders, there is much warm, young blood in the Illinois leadership. I will not attempt any general report by districts.

Let me give

A BRIEF SURVEY

over this long space of silence. There was a general response in celebrating the Crusade anniversary, which added many new names to the membership. In many cases pastors joined the ladies of the W. C. T. U. in the exercises, and sometimes the Christian Endeavorers and Epworth Leagues. Our state president spoke at Grand Crossing on Crusade Day, where meetings were held in the afternoon and evening. Four of the six pastors were present, and those unable to attend gave assurances of regret. One hundred UNION SIGNALS were distributed. There were carefully prepared programs, in which the pastors took part, and in some instances leading W. C. T. U. women spoke in the churches on the following Sunday.

Moline celebrated at the pleasant home of Mrs. Metzgar, which was decorated with holly and the white ribbon. The husbands of the ladies joined them for supper, after which came a second program, embracing reminiscences, papers on various subjects, and lastly a discussion of this question: "Are the so-called cranks necessary to any reform?" A delightful social concluded the evening.

Close upon Crusade Day came the New Year's receptions; then Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays gave good opportunities for teaching patriotism and statesmanship, and possibly enriching treasuries also, and last and best of all, March 20, is the celebration in honor of the "grand old hero" of Maine—hero of more than a hundred battles. What a pity we cannot count on ninety more "beautiful years" of service here, from this friend of the W. C. T. U. and all humanity!

In the beginning of the new W. C. T. U. year, the

ILLINOIS SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

sent out their messages with suggestions and plans for work with more than usual promptness. The call for the observance of a "Pentecostal week," from Miss Downey, the new superintendent of evangelistic work, met a response in many hearts. Enduement of power for service, and healing for spiritual maladies have been sought in the "upper room" tarrying before God. Here is a paragraph from Miss Downey's earnest words to the women of Illinois, urging them to seek preparation for soul-winning service. The advice will always be appropriate. After speaking of the mission of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, she said:

"No one can face the responsibility of such a mission and fail to see the necessity for the single eye, pure heart, heavenly wisdom, consistent life and the enduement of power. To be strong, one must be well. The heart, sin-sick, cannot bear health to another. Are any of us moral invalids, enfeebled by disease? For instance, has one a chronic self-depreciation, an undue timidity, that has hindered her from doing brave, strong work for the Master? Has another an ugly sore of sensitiveness, that has been more quick to detect a personal slight than to feel the sorrows and sin-burdens of others? Has another a hot fever of temper or impatience that has crippled her influence with those who know her best? Has one that leprosy of contrariness, a domineering spirit, that has made it hard for other toilers to work by her side in the vineyard? Has another that fatal malady, a love of ease that has shifted the heaviest burdens upon the shoulders of the 'faithful few,' already overweighted with responsibility? These, and all our heart's diseases, must be cured, ere we can have full strength for the service incumbent on every child of God. When Christ touched the hand of Peter's wife's mother, the fever left her, and she arose and ministered unto them. Only the Holy Spirit of God can give the healing touch to sin, and the enduement of power for service."

Miss Downey's plan for county evangelistic conferences has been a success. They have proved of great value. Golden lines of light have radiated from every point where she has ministered. Soul-saving work has been done by her and our state president in special meetings.

Miss Mahon, superintendent of

YOUNG WOMAN'S WORK,

has not been idle. The calls for helpers from different parts of the state indicate activity all along the lines. Organizing work has been going forward. Miss Mahon reports delightful meetings among enthusiastic Christian girls. Her standard for Christian young womanhood is high. Harvey Y started out with a membership of thirty. Forty wide awake young women were organized into a Y at Galva by Mrs. Waite, superintendent of that line of work in the seventh district. The Mendota Y has been doing some charitable work among the poor in these "hard times" days.

De Land Y has twenty-four active and twenty-six honorary members. Here is a glance at its programs: First meeting, "Study of an American Author." Second meeting, "Some Particular Branch of W. C. T. U. Work." Third, "Current Events and Parliamentary Drill." The current events are divided into educational, scientific and temperance. Fourth meeting, "Extracts from temperance addresses, reports of work, history of the temperance movement." Music, recitations and Bible readings are interspersed. The De Land L. T. L. enriched its treasury by a concert.

Normal Y is taking up the study of heredity and hygiene. Some unions arrange programs for six months in advance, and have them printed.

The L. T. L. work is being built up and strengthened. I hear reports of her good work as she is on the wing in different parts of the state. Her latest enthusiasm is over the L. T. L. edition of The Watch Tower, which is to be very helpful to her department. She expects to use a five thousand edition of the L. T. L. number of April 1.

Mrs. Brumbach, of

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION

department, with her assistant, Miss Morrow, has been cultivating her field with a great "zeal according to knowledge." The public school teacher in Illinois will be to blame, if not "thoroughly furnished unto all good work."

Mrs. Rankin makes things lively and "smoking hot" along her line of thinking, in the narcotics department.

And so I might make notes all over our Illinois vineyard. Many wise things our women have been doing, of which I would like to speak. Evanston, for instance, has a live union—"always ready for the next thing." It supports a free kindergarten at a cost of eighty dollars per month, raised by subscriptions.

Freeport union has inaugurated the plan of giving prizes for the best essays on the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human body. Nokomis' medal contest had six boys in the race. Rockford union caused quite a stir by calling attention to the evils growing out of card-playing for prizes, among the so-called fashionable women. Bloomington Central union has been protesting against the indecent advertising show-bills allowed by the present Republican administration here.

The removal of the state headquarters to Bloomington caused a little ripple in W. C. T. U. circles. The unions of Bloomington and Normal united in the services connected with the opening of the pleasant rooms from which the Illinois corresponding secretary, Miss Helen Walker, sends forth her messages to the workers. The capacity of the rooms was taxed to the fullest extent. Sisters from neighboring unions were present. Special interest was manifested in the fact that the first mass-meeting of the Illinois W. C. T. U. was held in Durley Hall, in the same building, on the evening of the day it was organized. Durley Hall has since echoed to many W. C. T. U. voices.

The twenty years' march has been a long one, but the Illinois union believes it is facing toward final victory for our cause. The truth of God is marching on. Be swift, my pen, to note its rapid strides.

MRS. G. H. READ,
State Reporter, Bloomington.

MINNESOTA.

COOKING IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

Two years ago the Central W. C. T. U. prevailed upon the board of education of this city to try the experiment of a cooking school. Only one school tried it, but the girls were so enthusiastic and parents so interested that this year, in spite of the financial depression felt in the school board as everywhere else, two additional schools were opened. And on Washington's birthday one class gave a very practical demonstration of what they can do.

The mother of one of the girls opened her beautiful home on Highland Avenue to the girls, who thereupon invited President Aukeny of the school board, and Mrs. Aukeny, President Northrup, of the state university, and Mrs. Northrup, Dr. Jordan, superintendent of the city schools and others, to a dinner to be prepared and served entirely by the girls.

In honor of the day the young ladies were dressed in Martha Washington costumes, and tiny flags with names attached served as guest cards. The dinner consisted of nine courses, and was pronounced a perfect success by the guests, and that the reader may judge something of the amount of work involved, the menu is appended:

Tomato Soup. Croutons.
Celery.
Fried Smelts with Potato Balls.
Slaw.
Roast Turkey, Cranberry Jelly.
Mashed Potatoes. Macaroni and Cheese.
Onions, with White Sauce.
Chicken Salad. Welsh Rarebit.
Suet Pudding, Lemon Sauce.
Doughnuts and Cheese.
Ice Cream. Angel Cake.
Sunshine Cake.
Candy. Nuts.
Salted Almonds.
Coffee.

Even the confections were made by the girls, as were also the dainty bon-bon boxes which contained them.

Several speeches were made, President Aukeny, dwelling particularly upon the importance of the occasion from the standpoint of the city educators, said: "If this dinner had not been a success, Dr. Jordan would have felt obliged to so report to the board of education, and it would have had grave consequences in determining the future of the city cooking schools. Its complete success will have equally important but totally different results. The continuance of the cooking classes is now assured. The enlargement is only a question of time and money."

The girls of the class were from thirteen to fifteen years of age. They were entirely unassisted, even by advice from their elders. The Journal to which I am indebted for the account of the dinner, devoted over a column to it, besides an editorial commenting most favorably upon the success of the cooking school experiment.

COMO UNION, ST. PAUL, was organized about a year ago by members of the Hamline union. A saloon in the beautiful suburb of Como soon became the object of observation by the new union, which quickly discovered repeated violations of the license law. Not only was the place open on Sunday, but children frequently went in and obtained liquor for their parents, and young lads were seen drinking in the saloon. Something must be done, so with prayer for help, they drafted and circulated a protest against re-issuing a license to the saloon-keeper. Miss Bartholomew, president of Como union, and Mrs. Higgins, a well-known worker, carried the protest with one hundred and forty-one signatures before the committee on license. Mrs. Higgins spoke of what she had seen and knew of the violations of the law, and pleaded earnestly that the saloon be abolished. Being asked by the committee whether the W. C. T. U. intended to down all saloons, Mrs. Higgins replied: "God helping us, we do; but we want to close this one first." A motion was made against re-issuing this license, the motion tabled until the return of an absent alderman, the saloon meantime to be closed. But the now aroused saloon-keeper and his friends went to work; lawyers were employed, threats made and a paper circulated favoring the re-issuing of the license. With undaunted courage the women again circulated their protest and also a petition that the prohibitory district which includes Hamline might be extended to take in Como, and so valiantly did they work, aided by the temperance voters, that the license was refused, and a few days later the prohibitory district extended to take them in.

Commenting on these events, Mrs. S. J. Heal, our state evangelistic superintendent, writes to the White Ribboner: "The Como union might, perhaps, have been judged to be the weakest union in the state, few in members, new to the work, hampered by public sentiment which had been corrupted by eight years of law-breaking, vice-breeding saloonism. Could conditions be found more discouraging? Could aught but the love of Christ and humanity, and the remembrance that His strength is made perfect in weakness, have given those women courage and faith to work to the end attained, often misrepresented by foes, discouraged by pessimistic friends, words and ways often declared unwise, and an unprincipled moneyed monopoly against them, 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.'" recently held its first convention in West Duluth. The attendance was good and the papers and discussions varied and interesting. Three pastors spoke encouraging words, bidding the workers Godspeed. The evening session was held in the Presbyterian church, and addresses were made by Mrs. Thompson, county president, Mrs. Merritt, district president, Mrs. Woodbridge, state vice-president, and Mrs. Scovell, state secretary of the Y's.

ST. LOUIS COUNTY

Edgerton union has had seven silver medal contests, and is getting ready for a gold medal contest, which the press superintendent promises to report as soon as it is over. This superintendent, by the way, feels not a little encouraged, because the local editor who at first refused space, afterwards granted it and publishes her contributions entire. Edgerton at the last election voted no-license; if they should vote license this spring two saloon-keepers stand ready to open up their nefarious business. The union realizes the need of earnest work and earnestly hopes to retain the no-license system.

Mayor Eustis' saloon policy, of which THE UNION SIGNAL readers have heard, excites comments from all over the state, not all of them favorable, as witness the following clipped from the Fairmount News: "Mayor Eustis, of Minneapolis, goes into ecstacies over the fact that the saloon men of that city have given eight hundred dollars to the relief fund for the starving poor. How much more than a thousand times that eight hundred dollars the saloon men have taken from the 'starving poor' of Minneapolis, his honor, the wide-open mayor, does not vouchsafe to tell us."

But the mayor was not alone in eulogizing the saloon-keepers for their "liberality." Even our best papers, The Journal included, devoted columns to puffing the donation, and lavishing praise upon the donators, in no unstinted measure.

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

PENNSYLVANIA.

GLEANINGS.

A number of good things worthy of record have occurred since our last communication.

Miss Ida Clothier has been at Bradford and given two very helpful lectures.

A very interesting railroad mass-meeting was held recently in Bradford, at which the state superintendent, Mrs. E. D. C. Mair, was present and made a very excellent address. As a trophy of this meeting a railroad man united with the Presbyterian church on Sunday, March 11th—through the state superintendent's "talk to the boys."

McKean county rejoices in the possession of one of the most indefatigable railroad county superintendents with whom we have ever had the good fortune to meet. She was present at the railroad meeting held at Bradford, and also addressed the meeting. Fourteen copies of The Christian Railroader are taken by her for free distribution in the interest of her department. This is a most excellent paper, and is published at Allegheny, Pa.

The McKean county convention meets at Kane, April 19 and 20.

Miss Crawford, state Y organizer, has been engaged for Y night, and will also fill a number of engagements elsewhere in the county.

Echoes from the Crusade anniversary meetings are as follows:

Crusade Day was observed by the West Pittston, Luzerne county, union. An interesting program was given consisting of praise service, paper on "The Outlook," an address on the "World's and National Conventions." Some interesting remarks were made by the members of the union, and a few new recruits added to the list.

Darby union, Delaware county, observed Crusade Day by a "tea" to which all the friends of the members were invited. The Crusade hymn was sung and Crusade psalm read by the president. Mother Thompson's account of the Crusade was read by a member, and an address on the work of the W. C. T. U. was by Mrs. Woodrow, Hutchinson, Kansas. Two new members were obtained,

The spring convention in Crawford county will be held at Venango, the last week in April.

Westmoreland county convention will be held at West Newton, April 26 and 27.

Lawrence county has adopted the plan of holding a school of methods each month which is in charge of the county superintendents of the various departments.

Mrs. Anna Belle Morris Holvey has been in Lawrence and Mercer counties and pleased all with her addresses. Mrs. Holvey is rapidly coming to the front as an eloquent speaker for our cause.

Philadelphia county is active in every good word and work. The Philadelphia union, Mrs. Mary H. Jones, president, is now preparing for a bazaar to be held the first week in April.

West Philadelphia union, Mrs. H. H. Forest, president, will entertain the county convention April 12. The speakers are Mrs. Anna Hammer and Mrs. Layah Barakat.

The first Y, Miss Thomas, president, has headquarters at 1821 Callowhill street, open day and evening. It has a kindergarten of sixty children. Miss Ida Clothier spoke for this Y in one of the city churches.

The following excellent report of Y work has been kindly furnished us by the state superintendent. Mrs. Anna Hammer, state president, addressed the young women of Allegheny county at a parlor meeting held in Allegheny city, and in the evening delighted all who were so fortunate as to hear her lecture on the "American Saloon versus the American Home."

A fine new Y of thirty-five active members is hard at work in Franklin.

The Harrisburg Y's gave a musical and literary entertainment for the benefit of the poor in that city.

Lumber City Y has gained ten new members since October.

OTHER NOTES.

Our state paper has changed hands, the new editor being Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, and the publisher, Mrs. H. H. Forest. The paper was left free of all indebtedness by its former editor, Mrs. M. H. Jones.

Major Hilton is holding a series of evangelistic meetings in the following counties: Allegheny, Westmoreland and Clearfield.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock will spend a week in Potter county.

Cupid's darts have been falling thick and fast since our last report. Miss Maud Jones, second daughter of our state vice-president, was married recently, and the son of our state president was married to a young lady of Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Esther Bachman, president of Lancaster county, has changed her name to that of Bushong, having been united in marriage to Mr. Henry Bushong, of West Grove. Miss Anna B. McClelland, Mercer county's former efficient superintendent of Y work, was married to Mr. Edward Kribbs.

Since our last report seventeen new unions have been organized.

May the good work still go on until the dramshop is driven from our fair state.

ADDA BURCH,
State Reporter, Greenville.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

BELOIT, Wis., W. C. T. U. celebrated Neal Dow day, March 20.

ABOUT fifty members comprise the Mansfield, Pa., W. C. T. U. who are a hive of activity.

FORTNIGHTLY meetings are held by the Quimby, Ia., union, which is just organized and ready for work.

MRS. HOFFMAN has spent a fortnight in Texas, much to the benefit and encouragement of the local white-ribboners.

MRS. C. M. WOODWARD, National railroad superintendent, was seriously disabled by a fall last month, resulting in a badly sprained left wrist.

A VALUED member of the Dundee, Ill., union, Mrs. Mary E. Adams, has recently passed onward, leaving a bright record of good works.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Central W. C. T. U. loses an active member and Vermillion, S. Dak., gains by the removal of Mrs. Annie Angies to the latter place.

THE West Side W. C. T. U., L. T. L. and Y's coöperated with other temperance organizations of Chicago in the observance of Neal Dow's birthday.

MRS. M. E. L. HERRICK, the retiring corresponding secretary of Florida W. C. T. U., whose accuracy and efficiency are highly appreciated, has laid down the work this year for a much needed rest.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE, National corresponding secretary, has been on the wing recently, speaking at several places in Indiana and Missouri. She reports much interest manifested in temperance and the work of the W. C. T. U.

MRS. LETITIA C. JOHNSTON passed from death unto life, February 2. She was a faithful member of Plattekill, N. Y., W. C. T. U. and mother of Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, World's and National superintendent of peace and arbitration.

A SUCCESSFUL joint debate between ex-Governor St. John and ex-Congressman Wm. E. Mason, was given at the People's Institute, Chicago, to a large audience, under the auspices of the West Side W. C. T. U. Telling arguments for both sides of the great question were heartily applauded.

A RARE example of courage and consecration is found in the leader of the Houston, Minn., W. C. T. U., who for more than two years has been totally and hopelessly blind. Notwithstanding this drawback she has just resumed the presidency of the union which needs the inspiration of her brave spirit.

A CONVENTION of the Prohibitionists of Cook county, Ill., is to meet Thursday, April 12, 1894, at 7:30 p. m., at Willard Hall, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle streets. Governor St. John will deliver an address to the convention, and among others who are expected to speak are Dr. Herrick Johnson, Dr. Gifford and Dr. Henson. Good music will also be provided.

MRS. HELEN BARKER, since visiting her aged mother in Oswego county, N. Y., has been in the field, lecturing at Geneva, Port Byron and Marion. At Rochester, she participated in the Neal Dow celebration. She has also spoken at Buffalo and other points in western New York, in Ohio and Indiana. She returns to the "Treasurer's Corner" in the Temple, April 3.

SAYS a bright Canadian correspondent: "When I read Elizabeth Gordon's letter in a recent UNION SIGNAL, I couldn't help wondering if Miss Willard's own countrywomen and comrades in labor are any more delighted to get news of her whereabouts and glimpses of her daily life, than are we here in Canada. It's just the kind of reading that enthralls loyal white-ribboners."

Two white-ribboners found their way not long ago to the two year old New Mexican village of Malaga. Not finding sufficient material to form a union they turned to the children and soon secured boys and girls for medal contests, the second of which was held February 17, and a third will soon be given. Interest is aroused and the leaven is spreading to an adjoining village.

MRS. HELEN M. STODDARD, Texas' president, writes breezily: "Texas is alive with local option elections and every one is a victory for 'dry' so much so that the liquor dealers of the state hold secret meetings to fight us. Our convention is set for the first week in June. We moved it along to accommodate our many active workers among our teachers who cannot attend until schools close."

MISS FRANCES J. DYER, of Boston, has been for years one of the associate editors of the Congregationalist, the chief denominational organ of the clear-headed body of men and women who preserve the Puritan tradition more completely than any other church in the Republic. Miss Dyer not only fills in the most satisfactory manner this responsible position, but has had for years a Bible class of forty young men and women in Berkeley Temple, Boston, and a week-day class of girls only which numbers seventy or more. She is a strong temperance woman, and it is needless to say her busy pen is consecrated to every good word and work.

Two Stepping Stones

to consumption are ailments we often deem trivial—a cold and a cough. Consumption thus acquired is rightly termed "Consumption from neglect."

Scott's Emulsion

not only stops a cold but it is remarkably successful where the cough has become deep seated.

Scott's Emulsion is the richest of fat-foods yet the easiest fat-food to take. It arrests waste and builds up healthy flesh.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

LOOK HERE LADIES!

We Have the Floor. We Want to Speak; just want to ask, do you wear corsets or waists? We manufacture both, but we believe in waists, and have given a great amount of time, and been to large expense to produce the BEST WAIST for the money IN AMERICA, and we have succeeded. Many try but "don't succeed."

THE ONLY GENUINE
...JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST...

was the ONLY waist on the market to receive from the judges at World's Fair, without appeal, Medal of Highest Award.

One enthusiastic customer, from Philadelphia, writes: "I have worn all the leading waists of the day, finding them exceedingly expensive. Permit me to say that my experience with your waist (the genuine and only JACKSON FAVORITE) is very satisfactory, and I deem it the most graceful, best fitting and cheapest garment ever brought to my attention."

Made in Fine English Sateens. Colors Drab, White, Gold, Fast Black. Clasp or Button Front. Ask dealers for them, or write us mentioning this journal. Mailed, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Sizes above 30, 25c. extra.

Coronet Corset Co., Jackson, Mich

Is Your Child HAPPY?

Our Beautiful Book for little folks will delight and instruct.

Holds the attention for hours.

The NEW MODEL FIRST BOOK is the first book that should be placed in the hands of a child. It is brim full of object lessons from every day life. Elegantly illustrated by Carqueville and printed in colors on stout paper. Board covers and wire stitched.

A boon for TIRED MOTHERS.

36 CENTS will do it. Send 36 cents NOW and receive copy by return mail.

GEO. SHERWOOD & CO., Pubs.,
303 Wabash Ave., - CHICAGO.

SOCIAL PURITY TRUE . . . MANHOOD

A MANUAL FOR YOUNG MEN.

Mrs. F. M'C Harris (Hope Ledyard), Supt. for Mothers' Meetings for the W. C. T. U., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I like the book very much indeed. It takes just the stand that should be taken on these matters, and will be of great assistance to mothers."

The Independent: "We cannot conceive of a book on such a subject, written in a more reverent and cleanly spirit."

12mo, nearly 400 pages, illustrated. Prepaid, $1.65. Best terms to agents. Circulars free.

A. B. STOCKHAM & CO., 98 Market St., Chicago.

When writing please mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,

But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.

H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Sound Discs are invisible, and comfortable. Relieve more cases of DEAFNESS than all devices in the world. H. A. Wales, 674 Ashland Block, Chicago.

Two of our National organizers for the Y. W. C. T. U., Miss Carter and Miss Parrish, have suffered recent deep loss in the passing away of their fathers.

ZION'S church, Neb., W. C. T. U. is a live country union, organized a year ago, which has ably assisted the relief work at Lincoln, by sending provisions, all cooked and ready for the sick poor.

NEAL DOW Day was celebrated by an all-day temperance rally at Covington, Ky., lunch was served at noon, and persons influential in religious, temperance and philanthropic circles made the program a memorable one.

THE local union of Rushford, Minn., gave a charitable entertainment March 20, Neal Dow day. The proceeds were twenty dollars which will be doubled in value by flowers sent to be sold in Chicago for the benefit of the poor.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN is at present in the east, and delivered a glorious oration at the Neal Dow celebration in Portland, Me., March 20. Unions desiring to engage her services while there or en route to Missouri, should write immediately to Mrs. Louise Downs Quigley, 433 Centre St., Orange. N. J.

THE women of Omaha, Neb., met recently in mass convention and nominated three of their own sex for members of the board of education. The political leaders of the three local parties have also nominated the same candidates, thus insuring women representation in the conduct of school affairs at Omaha.

MISS MARY C. GREGORY, the corresponding secretary of Illinois W. C. T. U., who succeeded Miss Hood, writes recently to National headquarters from South Dakota, where she is engaged in active Christian work, and has grown strong in the pure air of the plains. Wherever Miss Gregory is, things will grow better.

"FLORIDA has just closed her eleventh annual meeting," writes a correspondent. "Twenty-two unions were represented by thirty-six delegates. The officers elected for 1894 are as follows: Mrs. E. A. Hill, president; Mrs. L. S. Wells, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. J. Glenn, recording secretary; Mrs. M. J. Crippen, treasurer. The convention continued through four days, proving an inspiring and profitable meeting."

THE "Extra Session of the California Legislature" is pronounced to be an effective object lesson and a most taking performance. It can be adapted to use in any state and will do good work for equal suffrage wherever it is brought out. Treasuries also can be enriched, the presentation having cleared seventy-five dollars each time it has been given. The cost of the pamphlet is only fifteen cents and it is for sale at W. C. T. U. headquarters, San Francisco, Cal. Address Mrs. H. E. Brown, corresponding secretary W. C. T. U.

THE fine Y union at Rahway, N. J., organized not long ago by Mrs. Frances Barnes, has come to stay, having increased in membership from fifteen to fifty-five. They have held weekly meetings, besides parlor socials, and have had addresses by Misses Shaw, Clothier and Campbell. Flower mission, social, L. T L., press, the Temple, the hospital and soldiers' and sailors' relief are all departments of work recently adopted. A choir has been organized, which uses the Y song book, and proves of great assistance in the Sunday temperance meetings.

MRS. RHODA MCLAUGHLIN GAY died recently at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. H. Shaw, in Portland, Me., aged eighty-six years. Mrs. Gay was lovely in person and in character, with her splendid faculties unimpaired. She believed firmly in woman's advancement, achievement and full enfranchisement. She leaves six children, all sorely bereaved, the eldest of whom, Mrs. Abbie Gay Dustin, for years a pioneer brave and successful as president of the old twelfth district W. C. T. U. in Nebraska, will place a memorial tablet for her mother in the Temple.

THE third district Louisiana W. C. T. U. convention held at Jeanerette, this winter, was the second one ever held in the district, of which Mrs. H. C. Pharr, an untiring worker, is president. Mrs. Mary McGee Snell gave Bible readings and held two Gospel services in the M. E. church on the Sabbath after the convention. Prominent among the speakers was Miss Frances Griffin. Mrs. A. M. Zable, state corresponding secretary, gave talks on the different departments of work. A new district department was created for which Miss Inez A. Godman was made district superintendent, to organize unions and L. T. L's among negroes, a work in which she has been engaged several years. Mrs. Pharr was reelected to preside over the large district, which includes seven parishes. The work of temperance education has just begun in southwest Louisiana.

MILLERS, N. Y., has an active W. C. T. U. whose meetings each month are of more than ordinary interest. An afternoon session is held followed by supper, to which honorary members are invited, and an evening program. At a recent meeting the subject of tobacco was thoroughly discussed, and an editorial from THE UNION SIGNAL of March 8, entitled, "An indispensable factor in our work," was read and emphasized.

MRS. LILIAN COLE BETHEL, of Columbus, O., has departed for California in response to an invitation to take part in the Woman's Congress to be held at the Midwinter Fair at San Francisco, in May, and will also fill several engagements in her parliamentary work. Mrs. Bethel, as district president of the W. C. T. U. in Ohio, is a valued leader and the central W. C. T. U. of Columbus adjourned their afternoon session to see her safely started on the trans-continental trip.

A WEST Washington correspondent writes: "Mrs. M. R. P. Johnson, president of Seattle central union, has resigned, and Mrs. T. L. Roberts now holds the position. We have been gaining a little all the time, but in common with other societies feel the pressure of the times. Mothers' meetings are held regularly under the supervision of Mrs. Olive B. Rogerson. We find an encouraging interest manifested therein.

"Our superintendent of parlor meetings resigned and this department has been left to the care of a committee. The last one held was very successful. Among those present were Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, Mrs. M. B. Reese and Mrs. Mattie Graves, besides local talent. Another will be held in the near future, but perhaps no superintendent will be appointed until the annual election.

"The faithful superintendent of temperance literature supplies literature at three depots and to three ocean steamers. She reports three hundred papers distributed the last quarter. These papers average sixteen pages each. Many UNION SIGNALS and some magazines found their way through her hands making a total of some 4,800 pages, and 1,000 temperance tracts of four pages each, giving an aggregate of 8,800 pages. All feel that the superintendent of this department, Mrs. H. O. Morgan, is the right woman in the right place.

"Mrs. H. S. Rockwell, the superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors, also distributes literature but has not reported the amount. She does much personal work in her line. She is much interested in almshouse work. There are regular Sunday afternoon services held at the poor farm.

"Crusade Day was suitably observed with readings, talks and reminiscences. A paper was read entitled, 'A Crusade Memory,' sent by Mrs. Reese. These were interspersed with music, making an interesting program and resulting in the addition of three new members. A Crusade thank-offering was taken but I failed to learn the amount. Three comforters were sent to the White Shield Home.

"In conjunction with the Century Club we placed a woman in the field for a position on the board of education, paying our share of the election expenses. Many of our women worked indefatigably at the polls on election day. We did not elect our candidate but polled a handsome vote for her, and gained a good deal of useful experience. Mrs. Cox gave us three lectures in Seattle, and considering that she came unheralded and unannounced she was very successful."

Official Communications.

NOTICE.

WORK AMONG MINERS.

Some time ago, through the columns of this paper, I requested that all state and territorial superintendents of work among miners would send to me their names and addresses. All have not done so, and it is very important that I have a complete list. I have literature to send, etc. There have been several changes in superintendents in the states. Will you send your names and addresses at once?

MRS. W. F. ENGLISH,
National Supt.

Quincy, Ill.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN WORK.

THE WORK AT ELLIS ISLAND STILL GOING ON.

I notice in the New York state news that Mrs. Graham says: "Miss Colman sends me notes in which she says, 'I am sorry to announce that Mrs. Grubb's missionary work has been given up at Ellis Island, etc."

I am glad to have Miss Colman's interest and sympathy, but very glad to say that the missionary work is going on, not by any appropriation, for that the National could not make, but by faith and prayer. The first of December I wrote to Miss Lindahl that if she would take thirty dollars per month I would see what we could do to raise it and she might go on for at least two months. She consented to do this and the amount has been raised almost unsolicited since. Most of those I wrote to did not feel that they could contribute during these hard times, but so many others have sent in without being asked, that each month the salary has been raised.

I have now engaged Miss Lindahl until the first of May, believing God will send the money for her. It has been a wonderful illustration of God's providence to me. If this month's salary comes in I shall engage her until the first of June and so on, two months ahead as I began.

S. F. GRUBB.

Lawrence, Kan.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The Oklahoma union has much to contend with in the nomadic character of its population and the unsettled condition of everything in the territory, yet Mrs. Minnie D. Storm, their corresponding secretary, says they are doing their best. Three unions have been organized since their territorial convention. They have the minutes and other helpful literature and are now ready for the circulation of the polyglot Petition. They also hold parlor meetings where there is discussion of important topics connected with our work.

Miss Anna A. Gordon, superintendent of the department of juvenile work of the World's W. C. T. U., has called our attention to the fact, that in the financial statement found in her report to the late convention of the World's W. C. T. U., a statement appears, "A friend contributed twenty-four dollars," which was in reality a contribution from friends—Madame Demorest, New York, ten dollars, Mrs. H. J. Bailey, Maine, five, Miss Helen Clement, Vermont, nine.

Only "a slip between the cup and the lip." Mrs. Lavinia S. Mount, president Mississippi W. C. T. U., with Mrs. Snell, our National evangelist, visited the legislature of their state and pleaded for the submission to the vote of electors, of a prohibitory amendment to the state constitution. It was so late in the session that after its reference to the committee on the liquor traffic it was not possible to secure a quorum, which is sorely to be regretted, as Mrs. Mount writes their legislature was largely prohibitory in sentiment. On the last day of the session a resolution was adopted exempting all W. C. T. U. property from taxation.

Mrs. Alice M. Zable, corresponding secretary of Louisiana, makes encouraging report of W. C. T. U. work in her state, where district presidents are diligently at work, and particularly mentions Mrs. J. M. Pharr, whose district convention was attended by a large number of unions having reports that showed an increase in numbers and interest. Other district conventions will speedily follow which is exceedingly encouraging, this being only the second year of district organization.

Mrs. Fessenden writes: "A bird's-eye view of work going on in Massachusetts during the past month reveals ten county and one state president, assisted by recording secretary, visiting through snow and mud, by rail and wheel and runner, each of the three hundred and thirty unions, on the mountain, in the valley, in the city, town and village, encouraging, advising, augmenting in numbers and strength. In one place the membership has been tripled; in another thirty new members at one meeting, while at another one hundred and one men signed the pledge. Ten counties have held conventions, all of which were largely attended. Great improvement in methods of work, an increase of enthusiasm and broader outlook has been noted. Five new unions have been formed, besides the enthusiastic gatherings at our colleges of the Somerset Y's. This work has to be renewed each year as the classes change. Our Neal Dow meetings all over the state, our legislative work, our weekly prayer-meetings at headquarters, attendance upon several elegant receptions, large number of mothers' meetings, great preparation for our Easter sale, parliamentary drills and correspondence involve an amount of unwearying work, calculation and prayerful interest that marks to so great a degree the consecrated white-ribbon army of Massachusetts."

Mrs. Hester T. Griffith, who, at the last state convention of Utah was elected president of the W. C. T. U., has unexpectedly removed her residence to California, and Mrs. Eddy, of Logan, first vice-president, will fill the office for the remainder of the fiscal year.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

IF he asks why you want the DE LONG PATENT HOOK AND EYE, tell him:

See that

hump?

TRADE-MARK REG. APR. 19-92.

Richardson & De Long Bros., Philadelphia.

BEAUTIFUL GLADIOLUS.

No flower so adorns the garden or lawn as does the Gladiolus, or is so fine for cutting for decorating rooms, churches, dining-tables, halls, stores, offices, etc. It is truly the king of summer flowers, and is as easily grown in any soil or situation as a potato. Plant in rows or in masses at any time from April to July; they bloom during July, August, and September. The great flaming spikes of bloom, three to four feet in height, and of the most fascinating colors of every shade and combination imaginable, make a show which no other summer flower can equal. We grow Gladiolus by the million,—the largest stock in the world, covering 150 acres thickly planted,—and offer the very choicest varieties at the following extremely low prices to induce people to try our superior bulbs. They are so fine and so cheap that every lover of flowers should plant them by the hundred or thousand. Bulbs sent by mail, post-paid. Order at once; this offer will not appear again.

Mixed colors, all sorts, extra fine, 30 cents per doz., $2.00 per 100.
Mixed colors, all sorts, second size, fine flowering bulbs, 15 cents per doz., $1.00 per 100, $8.00 per 1000.
Mixed colors, all sorts, third size, but blooming size, 60 cents per 100, $5.00 per 1000.
Lemoinei Hybrids (Orchid Gladiolus), mixed colors, grandly beautiful, 25 cents per doz., $1.50 per 100.
5 Named Gladiolus, 5 fine colors, white, scarlet, yellow, pink, and blotched, the 5 for 10 cents.
15 Named Gladiolus, the 15 finest varieties, $1.00.
SPECIAL OFFER. For only $2.00 we will send by mail, post-paid, or extra large bulbs by express (not prepaid), all of the following: the 15 grand named varieties, 25 Lemoinei Hybrids, and 100 finest mixed sorts, making in all a grand collection.

OUR NEW CATALOGUE

Is an elegant book of 200 pages, composed of three distinct Catalogues bound together—

Seeds, Bulbs & Plants, Nursery Stock.

A work of unexcelled beauty and merit, rewritten and reconstructed in every particular. Every cut new, every line fresh. Printed on fine paper and in lovely bronze violet and brown colors. Many charming colored plates. Nothing like it ever before seen. We offer new and special strains of Flower and Vegetable seeds, all the standard new and rare Plants and Bulbs of every kind. Millions of Gladiolus, choicest Shrubs, Trees, Vines; also new and rare Fruits. The greatest collection of rare things for the garden ever presented, and all at moderate prices. Do not fail to see this wonderful book catalogue. Sent FREE if any of the above Bulbs are ordered.

John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N.Y.

Alaska Stove Lifter,

NICKEL PLATED.

ALWAYS COLD, even if left in Stove Lid.

Sold by all Stove and Hardware Dealers and House Furnishers, or sent by mail, postpaid, for 30 CENTS.

TROY NICKEL WORKS, TROY, N. Y.

Organizers' Corner.

[It is the desire of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL that this Corner should serve the National Organizers as a sort of Lecture Bureau, and to that end they are invited to send their calendar of appointments long enough ahead to secure engagements in the territory to which they are called.]

The following is the list of National organizers for the present year, and whether W's or Y's they are all accredited public speakers and fully prepared to organize W's, Y's, L. T. L's, or speak to the general public and add to the membership of unions.

For terms and dates address as below:

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. L. H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, 69 Maple street, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. E. A. Blair, 936 Cottage Place, Los Angeles, Cal.
Mrs. Maude L. Green, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Newberg, Ore.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, 132 McAllister street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Miss Frances Ensign, Madison, O.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.

I am delighted with this little corner and the news it brings me from my sister organizers in the field, and I am glad to tell you that I am once more helping to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of our great white ribbon army.

In February I was permitted to organize a good union in the western part of Elmira with Mrs. Eva Kenyon, from Boston, Mass., for president. She is a genuine New Englander, and will be an excellent leader. March 5 and 6 I held four meetings in Mount Carmel, Pa., in the interest of rescue work. We have saved two of their young girls in our Anchorage, in Elmira, and they are deeply interested in our work for the fallen.

I presented this subject, March 8th, at the W. C. T. U. convention in Tioga county, N. Y., an d they were very enthusiastic over this new department in our state, responding generously to the appeal for help.

March 11, we began speaking in Steuben county, N. Y., where the dear Father is bringing many new workers into the field. Our first lecture was Sunday evening, in the court-house in Corning, N. Y., where we were greeted with a large and enthusiastic audience, a good number joining the union at the close.

We reorganized the union at Painted Post, March 12, four miles from the city, with a most earnest and competent corps of officers.

March 13 we dedicated the new W. C. T. U. hall in Addison, where an incident of the Crusade was related by the M. E. pastor which very deeply interested me and so I briefly give it to you. He said his mother was one of the one thousand women who marched through the streets of Zanesville, Ohio, and he was not a Christian, but he was so deeply impressed by this movement that it led him to Christ. He said he was clerking in a drygoods store, and when the women went by that store every man would stop work and reverently look upon the procession. One day his employer remarked while the women were passing, "This is a solemn thing, boys, and I must confess I never felt so religiously inclined in my life."

He related the story of one of the saloon-keepers who went to the mayor to have the women arrested, and when the mayor asked him why he wished the women arrested he said: "Vy, your honor, dey preak up my beesness; dey just pray a leetle und den dey sing a 'Jesus, Lover of my Soul,' den dey pray a leetle and den sing, 'Rock of Ages Cleft for Me,' and so on all de time till I'm most crazy. Ven I lie down at night, if I turn on von side und dry to shleep I hear 'Rock of Ages Cleft for me,' and if I turn on de oder side I hear 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul,' und you must stop dese vimen or I must stop my beesness."

I expect to continue work in this county until April 3. I begin work in Potter county, Pennsylvania, April 11, and remain there until the 18th. The second week in May my work will be in central New York, near the line of the New York Central Railroad, and the third week in May I go to Maine to remain a month or more, helping our white-ribboners there,

I could make a few engagements in central or eastern New York early in May if desired. You will soon hear from me again for I expect to keep on the march if God gives me strength. HELEN L. BULLOCK.
1105 Davis St., Elmira, N. Y.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; Endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

At the quarterly meeting of the board of trustees, held at the National Temperance Hospital on March 5, 1894, very interesting reports were made. The house physician reported that thirteen patients remained in the hospital at the last quarterly report and twenty-seven new cases were entered, ten of whom were male and seventeen female patients; six of whom were free patients. Twenty-three surgical operations were performed. There were no deaths. One case was a patient addicted to the use of opium. The cure was complete.

Among the gifts enumerated in the matron's report, was that of the Waterbury, Conn., Y, who sent a white apron as a Christmas gift to each one of the nurses.

The graduation exercises of the Training School for Nurses in connection with the hospital were held on March 15. Five nurses completed their course of training on this occasion. Mrs. M. E. Kline, president, conducted the exercises. The parlors overflowed with interested guests, and the halls and stairways contained a goodly number of the friends who had gathered. Music was furnished by Miss Plumb and Miss Dresser, of Wheaton. The features of the occasion were the address to the class by Dr. John R. Boynton, chief of the staff of surgeons, and of Mrs. L. S. Rounds, state president of the W. C. T. U. of Illinois. The former emphasized the importance of the profession of nurse, second only to the medical profession; the benediction of the presence of these nurses in the hospital, and what it must be in future in a wider field; complimented them on their studiousness, faithfulness and lady-like deportment during the term now closing, and promised them labor and reward in days to come. Mrs. Rounds was exceedingly happy and forceful in her remarks, which closed with the presentation of diplomas to the graduates, to whom she also handed floral tributes from many sources. Dr. Boynton then presented each graduate with a class pin from the medical staff, a beautiful gold monogram of the initials of the hospital, N. T. H. Miss Ruth Coggeshall, of Irving Park, presented the L. T. L. room to the board in a neat little speech to which response was made by Mrs. M. E. Kline, president. Refreshments were served.

The L. T. L. room is pronounced the prettiest room in the hospital. In furnishing it the color and floral emblem of the department have been kept in mind. The carpet is of olive green, besprinkled with daisies; bedsteads, iron, white and gold; dresser and rocking-chair of oak, cushioned in blue and oak and decorated with blue ribbon; stand made and donated by a boy, member of the L. T. L.; dresser covers and tidy in white and blue; oatmeal set, individual tea set, blue and white china; bedroom set of crockery, white, with blue dashes; sugar bowl, creamer, vase, knife, fork and spoon of silverware. The walls have been tinted robin-egg blue, and the whole is very harmonious. Contributions are coming in nicely to cover the expense of furnishing this room, and it is hoped enough more will be contributed to endow the two beds it contains. When occupied by little sufferers, whose pains are here banished, the L. T. L. will have a very real connection with the National work.

Our Library Table.

MANUAL OF EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN. Peter Henderson & Co., 35-37 Cortlandt St., New York City. Comprises over one hundred and sixty pages, and is just what its name implies. Contains a goodly store of information, horticultural and otherwise.

LIGHT ON A DARK PATH. By Alida W. Graves. Published by the American Sunday-school Union, 1122 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

An interesting story of Christian experience, dwelling on the light that may dawn for the soul out of its bitterest experiences and on the fact that to those who accept sorrow's visitations with meekness and trust in God she comes with power to bless.

DAILY THOUGHTS, from the words of Brooks and Drummond. This little volume is arranged for daily use, the "thoughts" for the first six months selected from the utterances of Phillips Brooks, the remainder from those of Henry Drummond. The selections are well made—indeed they could not easily be chosen amiss from two who speak as do these two.

Published by R. H. Woodward & Company, Baltimore.

THE PHYSICIAN'S WIFE. By Ellen M. Firebaugh. Published by the F. A. Davis Company, Philadelphia.

This volume gives in its humorous and yet pathetic pages many a really helpful glimpse into the life of that much tried and not very much noticed member of society, the doctor's wife. It is the outgrowth of a paper read by the author before the Æsculapian Society of the Wabash Valley at one of its semi-annual meetings. But it is not all about the wife of the doctor,—there is many a good word put in for the good man himself, and those who are apt to forget doctor's bills or the fact that doctors need themselves a little of the rest and consideration which they prescribe for their patients had better have their attention drawn to this bright sketch.

THE STRIKE AT SHANE'S. A prize story of Indiana. Written for and published by the American Humane Education Society.

This society is making itself felt as it presses its commands and goes on its errands of mercy to the dumb creation. The celebrated "Black Beauty" was an outgrowth of one of its prize offers, and THE STRIKE AT SHANE'S comes as a sequel to the former. It is a very realistic story, the animals on Shane's farm being driven by his cruelty to take up their own defense. They hold a convention and agree to show their hard-hearted master the error of his ways. In consequence the horses fall mysteriously ill, the cow refuses to come home to be milked, leading the boy a chase every night, the dog agrees to let the moles have their own way in the garden, the cat signs a contract to let rats and mice abound, the robins desert and the worms and bugs eat the crops, and so on. The story works itself out amusingly and with a plain lesson all through that cannot be evaded. The book should be widely circulated among young people.

Address orders to Geo. T. Angell, 19 Milk street, Boston.

If out of order, use BEECHAM'S PILLS.

"THE THROAT AND ITS AILMENTS"
is the title of a new and valuable treatise on Quinsy, Throat Catarrh, Loss of Voice, Goitre, etc., published by The Physicians' Remedy Co., Box 23 S., Cincinnati, O. Any one interested can have it for the asking. Send your name.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Model 35
COLUMBIA.
Price, $125.

A wheel designed for the special use of lady riders only, and equipped more fully and satisfactorily in point of guards, etc., than any other of its class. While in this particular it is brought to the standard of the splendid Columbia Model 36, it can be stripped to correspond with the lighter Model 34.

The artistic and beautiful Columbia catalogue appeals to the good taste of every woman in the land. It is free at our agencies, or mailed for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston. New York. Chicago. Hartford.

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of

BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON

Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.

E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.

Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

Simple ailments neglected may grow deadly. A handy remedy is

Beecham's Pills

(Worth a Guinea a Box.)

in all cases where Liver and Stomach trouble is suspected.

25 cents a box. 12

You Dye in 30 minutes Turkey red on cotton that won't freeze, boil or wash out. No other will do it. Package to color 2 lbs., by mail, 10 cts.; 6, any color—for wool or cotton, 40c. Big pay Agents. Write quick. Mention this paper. FRENCH DYE CO. Vassar, Mich

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

Its merits as a Wash Blue have been fully tested and indorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask for it.

D. S. WILTBERGER, Proprietor,
233 North 2d St., Phila, Pa.

GRANŪLA

"The Perfect Health Food."

"Granūla" is one of the most concentrated forms of food, and contains in proper proportions all the elements of nutrition needed by the human body.

It is made from the best White Winter Wheat grown in the famous Genesee Valley wheat-growing region.

It contains every needed constituent of the grain, and, as wheat is considered the best single article of food, "Granūla" supplies in a palatable form the best and most highly nutritive alimentary principle.

SEND FOR FREE BOOK OF RECIPES. It is ready for immediate table use by simply soaking it in milk or hot or cold water, as it is twice cooked in its manufacture. It may be made the constituent of many palatable dishes. It will keep for years unchanged as to value if stored in a dry place.

Trial package 25c. by mail postpaid. Address, OUR HOME GRANŪLA CO., Box 100, Dansville, N.Y.

ELI BROWN.

FREE.

The following remarkable statement, to which we direct special attention, is from a Tennessee farmer.

My age is 63. I suffered intensely from catarrh 10 years; dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness intense headache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse Everything I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh.

ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment, and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send (by express) Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address,

J. H. MOORE, M. D., Cincinnati, O.

. . . THE . . .

HARTFORD ..

SAFETIES.

Have You Seen Them?

These Bicycles are made for MEN and LADIES at $100.00, for BOYS and MISSES at $75.00, with choice of the Columbia Single Tube Tire or Hartford Inner Tube Tire. Examine these before you buy.

Our CATALOGUE is sent free to anyone sending their address to

THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

OUR NEW 1894 FLOWER SEED OFFER.

A Magnificent Collection of FLOWER SEEDS 200 Varieties, FREE!

An Unparalleled Offer by an Old and Reliable Publishing House! THE LADIES' WORLD is a large 20-page, 80-column illustrated Magazine for ladies and the family circle. It is devoted to stories, poems, ladies' fancy work, home decoration, housekeeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc. To introduce this charming ladies' paper into 100,000 homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following colossal offer: Upon receipt of only 12 Cents in silver or stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months and to each subscriber we will also send Free and postpaid, a large and magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, 200 varieties, including Pansies, Verbenas, Chrysanthemums, Asters, Phlox Drummondii, Balsam, Cypress Vine, Stocks, Digitalis, Double Zinnia, Pinks, etc., etc. Remember twelve cents pays for the magazine three months and this entire magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, put up by a first-class Seed House and warranted fresh and reliable. No lady can afford to miss this wonderful opportunity. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of both seeds and Magazine if you are not satisfied. Do not confound this offer with the catchpenny schemes of unscrupulous persons. Write-to-day. Don't put it off! Six subscriptions and six Seed Collections sent for 60 cents.

SPECIAL OFFER! To any lady sending us 12 cents for above offer, and naming the paper in which she saw this advertisement, we will send free, in addition to all the above, one packet of the celebrated Marguerite Carnation (half-dwarf variety), the only Carnation that will bloom from seed the first season. It produces in great abundance, large, exquisitely fragrant flowers of the most brilliant hues, in the various shades of white, red, pink and variegated, fully 80 per cent. being double. Plants begin to bloom in four months after planting, and continue in great profusion until frost comes. This packet of seeds is alone worth the price charged for the entire combination.

ANOTHER GREAT OFFER! Upon receipt of Thirty-five Cents (our regular subscription price) we will send The Ladies' World for One Year, together with our magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds above described, likewise one packet of the extensively advertised and popular Marguerite Carnation. Address:

S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

HIGH ARM

FREE TRIAL

for ten days in your own home. $60 Kenwood Machine for - $24.50 $50 Arlington Machine for - $20.50 Standard Singers, $9.50, $15.50, $17.50, and 27 other styles. We ship firstclass machines anywhere to anyone in any quantity at wholesale prices. All attachments FREE. Latest improvements. Send for free catalogue and save money.

WE PAY THE FREIGHT. NO MONEY REQUIRED IN ADVANCE.

Address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 W. Van Buren St., Dept. 151 Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Subscription Rates for 1894.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .50
Young Crusader, monthly, one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH-APRIL NUMBER OF OUR DAY.

Photogravure of the Archbishop of Zante, Greece. Frontispiece.

Photogravure of Baba P. C. Mozoomdar, Calcutta, India.

1. Cosmopolitan Christianity in the Twentieth Century. John B. Donaldson
2. Principles of the Covenanters. Rev. J. M. Foster
3. Crudity of Japanese New Theology. Rev. J. L. Atkinson
4. Boston Hymn—Atonement. Joseph Cook
5. Boston Monday Lectures. 19th Year. Shall We Annex Hawaii? The Peerlessness of Christian Theism. Joseph Cook
6. Book Notices: Merriam's Noah Porter—Mozoomdar's Heart - Beats — Pearson's National Characteristics — Paine's Pauperism in Great Cities.
7. Vital Points of Expert Opinion: Reed on Free Trade and Protection—Stoecker on Germans in America—Comstock on Immoral Shows in the Midway Plaisance—Behrends on the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice—Miss Kate Field on Statehood for Utah—Shaw on Proposals for a National Park — Gladden on Municipal Misgovernment.
8. Questions to Specialists: Mrs. Mary H. Hunt on Gains and Prospects of Scientific Temperance Instruction.
9. Editorial Notes: Mr. Gladstone's Retirement—His Proposed Abolition of the House of Lords — College Hazing — Students' Missionary Conference at Detroit—Electricity as a Motive Power on Canals — Progress of Arbitration — Pundita Ramabai's School for Hindu Widows—Photogravures in this Number.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

At the suggestion of a few prominent white-ribboners living far from Chicago, and therefore unable personally to attend to various matters of business importance in this city, we have concluded to open a Shopping and Commission Department, not as a branch of our regular business, but as an accommodation to the many friends who desire to entrust shopping and other outside business to reliable parties. We have secured an experienced and responsible lady who has resided in Chicago many years, and is familiar with our largest houses in every branch of business, a woman of keen insight, good judgment, excellent taste and an economical buyer.

We have endeavored faithfully to execute all commissions entrusted to us in the past, but as it necessarily interferes with our legitimate business, we have concluded this new arrangement, which will, we believe, give eminent satisfaction.

In many cases no commission whatever will be charged; in others requiring expenditure of extra time and money, it will be necessary to charge a proportionate commission.

Inquiries, orders, etc., must be addressed SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPARTMENT, and a stamp inclosed to insure prompt reply. If you have business with the Association kindly address all letters Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. If you wish other business transacted, shopping or commissions of any nature, address

SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPT.,
Care of WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

HAVE YOU RENEWED

Your subscription to Our Day, the magazine devoted to current reform? It is fearless and uncompromising in its condemnation of wrong systems and wrong practices. It is edited by Joseph Cook, the great reformer of the present age. It is able, comprehensive and aggressive, and is furnished at the low price of $1 per annum. Beginning with 1894 Our Day is issued as a Bi-Monthly. Sample copies of January and February issue sent for 10 cents each.

No Wonder He Dreads It,

if his house is cleaned in the old-fashioned, tearing-up way. Why can't a man's wife use Pearline for cleaning house, and let him keep comfortable? That's all she needs—Pearline and water— to make it an easy thing (and a quick one,) both for herself and for everybody around her.

Everything in the house, from cellar to attic, can be cleaned best with Pearline. Besides, with your paint and wood-work and such things, you'll save a lot of wear that comes from useless scrubbing.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE —Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 410 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to

Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D.C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK

UNDER STATE SUPERVISION.

Savings Deposits Draw 4 Per Ct. Interest, Payable Quarterly.

SAFFTY DEPOSIT VAULTS. | Dearborn & Jackson Sts., CHICAGO.

TO ALL WOMEN.

Wealth, Health and Beauty is the Trinity of she who rules the world. I have the best thing IN, ON OR OUT of the earth for the three, and I will take no money until you are convinced at my expense that V.-O. is what every lady in the land needs. I am no quack with a nostrum, but a scientist with a discovery, nothing added or extracted; sent by mail, as man's creator made it. Man never did, can or will compound its equal for woman's health, beauty and wealth. Don't sleep before answering this. Cut it out.

THEO. NOEL, Naturalist, Chicago, Ill.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D. Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalo. free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 26, Chicago, Ill.

$18.50 Carriage for	$9.25.
$12.00 " "	$5.95.
$5.00 " "	$2.75.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

YOUNG LADIES SHOULD WEAR GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS. Permit full breathing.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y

WE WANT YOU to distribute circulars, samples, etc., in your locality for our syndicate of big advertisers. $3 to $5 per thousand. CASH PAID. No canvassing. Enclose stamp. DISTRIBUTING BUREAU, P.O. Box 1925, New York City.

OUR DAY.

The Free Methodist has the following appreciative notice of Our Day: "As a record and review of current reform Our Day has no peer. It is preëminent in its class. Its editorial notes are masterly and scholarly."

Our Day is now issued as a Bi-Monthly at $1 per year, which places it within the reach of all.

Our Day and THE UNION SIGNAL, $1.50.
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A Special Offer

An advantageous arrangement, just made, enables us to present the most acceptable premium offer ever made. It is this: For one coupon (printed below) and 35 cents in stamps or silver, we will send by mail, postpaid, a copy of THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

The publishers' price of the book is $1.

COUPON

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with 35 cents in stamps or silver, is good for one copy of the

WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK

Free by mail to any address in Postal Union

A Collection of One Thousand Original and Revised Recipes and Suggestions. Edited by Kathryn Armstrong. A handsome, compact volume of 320 pages, including 40 blank pages for additional recipes.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

Part I Now Ready

COLLECTION OF THOROUGHLY ARTISTIC PORTRAITS OF FAMILIAR FACES

(See Publisher's Notes)

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents, and we will send you Part I.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART I

Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

PART I CONTAINS

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MOTHER THOMPSON, MADAM WILLARD,
MOTHER WALLACE, MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT,
MARGARET BRIGHT LUCAS, MOTHER STEWART,
HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, NEAL DOW,
CLINTON B. FISK, JOHN B. GOUGH,
MARY ALLEN WEST.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple. Chicago...

A Great Mother . .

The Ably-Written and Delightfully Interesting Biography of....

MADAM WILLARD

will soon issue from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and will prove a rare acquisition to our literature.

It is more than a biography ; it is a setting forth of her sublime

Philosophy of Life,

and a record of her wise, pithy sayings, as well as of the incidents in which she put her philosophy to the test of practical experience.

It should be in the hands of each

. . . Mother . . .

while, at the same time, so vivid is its portrayal and so interesting the facts recorded, each child will find it full of interest.

It will be ready very soon, and orders will be received at once.

Handsomely Bound....Profusely Illustrated....Price $1.50....

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

All Previous Records Broken

We herein invite you to GO WITH US AROUND THE WORLD, and we agree to do it in a very few hours under the admirable guidance and direction of the most noted traveler of the day, John L. Stoddard. Don't think for a moment we are going to rush you at break-neck speed over railroads, incurring the dangers of collisions or derailing. Don't you worry about being tempest tossed upon the angry seas and undergoing the horrible nausea of seasickness. You can make this trip with us in the coziness of your own home and with all your family and friends about you to make the tour more enjoyable. This

SUPERB ALBUM OF ART AND LITERATURE

Will be instructive, for you will see all the wonders both in nature and art in the world. It will be entertaining, for the descriptions of the scenes and places are from the pen of JOHN L. STODDARD.

Cut out the coupon printed below, and bring or send it to our office with five two-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to pay the cost of mailing, wrapping, etc., and we will send you series No. 5.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.
ART SERIES NO. 5.
COUPON.

Send Coupon, together with five 2-cent postage stamps. or 10 cents in silver, to our office, and you will receive our Portfolio of Photographs, No. 5.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

If you have missed any of the previous issues you can obtain them by remitting 25c. By our admirable plan they practically cost nothing. READ IT FOR YOURSELF.

Signal Notes.

OVER ninety per cent of the students of the U. P. church in Scotland are total abstainers.

A MEDICAL missionary stated before the opium commission in India, that she knew a woman who had killed her seven children with opium.

THE French senate has passed a law which gives women who are engaged in business the right to take part in the election of judges of the tribunal of commerce.

CREMATION is steadily growing in favor among intelligent people in the United States, especially in large cities, where the problem as to disposition of the dead is a troublesome one.

BEFORE a native liquor shop in Calcutta seven carts loaded with Glasgow whisky were recently unloaded. Scotland sends noble missionaries to India, but their work is largely undone by Scottish "fire-water."

FLOWER committees, in connection with various church societies have become flour workers this year, during the hard times, collecting and distributing that necessary article in small quantities where they find the need.

THE last report of the New York City Free Circulating Library is most encouraging, there being a large increase in the number of books taken home to read and also an increasing demand for educational and scientific works.

IT is conceded very generally that General Booth's is the largest and farthest-reaching agency for the relief of the poor and distressed in London. Although contributions fall somewhat short of what he asked for, still the funds are wisely used.

THERE is not a ship or gunboat in the English navy but has a branch of the Royal Navy Temperance Society on board, thanks to Miss Agnes Weston. Last year two thousand seven hundred and forty pledges were taken by boys on training ships.

THE eight-hour movement is gaining in England. The war office has reduced the working hours of its nineteen thousand employés to eight without diminution of salary, and it is confidently expected that other departments will follow suit.

THE Indian training school at Carlisle, Pa., lately conferred diplomas on nineteen Indians representing ten tribes. They had completed the course of study and will now work among their own people. Four Indian chiefs were present and made addresses.

IN Victoria a man can get a divorce if his wife has been an habitual drunkard for three years, and a wife can secure one if her husband has been imprisoned three years. If a man has been convicted of wife-beating, he cannot vote at the Parliamentary elections.

THE United British Women's Emigrant Association transplant suitable persons from the mother country to different parts of the British Empire. During the past year three hundred and eleven single women, forty-one single men, thirteen children and sixteen families have been sent out, principally to Canada.

A MERCHANT of Baltimore has opened at a cost of twenty-five thousand dollars, a home for workingmen, called The Workingmen's Residential Club. He is to furnish at a small cost the advantages of home, restaurant and boarding house. The rooms are bright and pleasant and the social feature is made especially attractive, hoping to win men from the saloons and low lodging houses.

AN interesting department of mission work in Japan is the railway mission, organized to evangelize men connected with the railway service in that country, there being thirty-four thousand employed in different ways. Gospel magic lantern meetings, reading rooms, libraries and a traveling secretary, railway work (methods used so successfully by the W. C. T. U.) are among the means used.

AN ASTHMA CURE AT LAST.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

Do You Use

Evaporated cream or unsweetened Condensed Milk, and desire the best? Then obtain from your grocer Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, which ranks first in quality. Prepared by New York Condensed Milk Company.

IVORY SOAP
IVORY
IT FLOATS
FORTY MILLION CAKES YEARLY.
THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

GET A COLUMBIA
IT IS ECONOMY TO RIDE THE BEST

Columbias are built to last. Riders know this; they see the honest old Columbias about and doing good service year after year. Columbias are also built to look well, as everybody knows who ever saw a Columbia.

At $125.00, Columbias present a value which no rider can afford to overlook.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston, New York,
Chicago, Hartford.

Our catalogue for 1894 shows a line of wheels, all newly designed, which for attractiveness excel any bicycles ever offered. It is free at our agencies, or we mail it for two 2-cent stamps.

"Beauty without neatness is a hook without a bait"
FAIR WOMEN
should make their houses look fair with SAPOLIO
Try a cake in your next house-cleaning
COPYRIGHT

A SENSE OF DECENCY

Constrains many people to hide the dirt of their kitchens. They make the kitchen a secret chamber, into which it is forbidden to enter; but half the trouble which they take to hide the dirt and the disgrace which it entails, would keep the kitchen clean, and all its pots and pans bright as a dollar, that is, if they use

SAPOLIO

EVERY WOMAN SHOULD KNOW About ZOA-PHORA—
A True Nerve Tonic.
Not a Stimulant or Narcotic.
Expressly for Weakly Women.
Full information and testimonials sent sealed.
Address ZOA-PHORA MEDICINE CO., H. G. COLMAN, SEC'Y, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

THE STAY THAT STAYS
Can't break, can't wear out, everlasting elasticity.
DR. WARNER'S CORALINE DRESS STAY
Put up in yard lengths, the same as whalebone, also in short lengths, muslin covered. Sample set for one dress by mail, 25 cents. Sold everywhere.
Warner Bros., makers, N. Y. & Chicago.

World's Fair Highest Awards
Medal and Diploma on our INCUBATOR and BROODER Combined.
"Old Reliable" Leads them all.
If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for our 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address
Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co. Quincy, Ill.

45 yards High Class Fowls.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
Take a Course in the SPRAGUE Correspondence School of Law, (Incorporated.)
Send 10c. stamps for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH.
No. 22 TELEPHONE BDG.

At 1/4 Price
Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc. List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

AN EXTRA SESSION
...OF THE...
CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE.
A RICH PROGRAM
For Franchise Entertainments.
Arranged for the Use of Local Unions and Suffrage Societies by SARAH M. SEVERANCE.
A graphic picture of a Legislature in session; the mirror held up to nature reversing the scene, and men asking women for their rights; is at the same time irresistibly funny and powerfully instructive. It may be adapted to a large or small number of performers. PRICE—15c. per single copy; 20 or more copies. 12 1-2 cts. each. Address
MRS. H. E. BROWN,
COR. SEC. CAL. W. C. T. U.
132 McALLISTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

CANCER Its cure by scientific local treatment. 20 Years Experience. Book Free. Drs. McLeish and Weber, 123 John Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

RUBBER GOODS BY MAIL
Ladies or Gents send for Free catalogue. Big Profits To Agents. A. U. BETTS & CO., 51 Water St. Toledo, O.

Unlike the Dutch Process
No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa
which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.
Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WHY NOT HAVE A CHRYSANTHEMUM SHOW AT YOUR HOME?
20 Prize-Winning Chrysanthemums for only $1.00.
This is a grand collection of Prize-winning Chrysanthemums, all the varieties have either won medals or prizes at the different shows. There is no class of plants that is attracting more attention at present than the Chrysanthemums. Every city, town and village must have its show of this flower. The novel and brilliant flowers of the new varieties have been a revelation to the public wherever they have been exhibited. Among the colors are soft, rich yellow, chromes and maroons, pearly white and chestnut browns, with some of them fringed, some of them whorled, curved, twisted, quilled and anemone centered, all labeled. With each collection will be mailed our essay on the successful cultivation of the Chrysanthemums.
ONLY $1.00 Will buy any one of the collections named below, delivered safely by mail, postpaid to any address. The collections are all fine, strong plants of the best varieties and are marvels of cheapness. Every plant is plainly labeled, and there are no two varieties alike in the same collection.
FOR $1.00 I will send FREE, 20 Prize-Winning Chrysanthemums; 20 Fine Single and Double Flowering Geraniums for $1.00; 20 Choice Ever-Blooming Carnations for $1.00; 20 Flowering Begonias for $1.00; 20 assorted Flowering Plants for $1.00; 20 Fancy Leaved Coleus for $1.00.
For $3.00 you can select any four of above collections.
To everyone who sends an order from this advertisement and mentions this paper, we will send FREE a valuable plant. ORDER NOW and ask for our CATALOGUE of BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS for 1894.
CHARLES A. REESER,
INNISFALLEN GREENHOUSES, Springfield, O.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits.
FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair.
OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

JENNESS MILLER
Specialties. Corset substitutes, Empire Waists, Bust Supports, Divided Skirts, Union Suits, etc. Send stamp for illustrated pamphlet, "Dress." Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 34 Central Music Hall, CHICAGO.

Songs of the Pentecost.
Edited by CHAS. H. GABRIEL and Rev. ISAAC NAYLOR.
224 Pages, Single Copy, 30c., postpaid.
Per doz., $3, not prepaid; per hundred, $25, not prepaid.
GEO. HUGHES & CO. Publishers, 62 & 64 Bible House, N. Y.

THE EYE. No knife! No risk. Cataracts or scars can be absorbed. Paralyzed nerves. Diseased eyes or lids cured. "We convince all." Pamphlet free. Address EYE INFIRMARY, Glens Falls, N. Y.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster.
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

SELF THREADING Sewing Needles. Weak sighted or blind can thread them. Finest silver spring steel. One style threads on end, other on side. Sample paper of either kind by mail 10c., 2 for 10c., 6 for 25c., 12 for 60c. Money easily made selling them. C. E. MARSHALL, LOCKPORT, N. Y.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

$3.50 HUNTING CASE GENTS OR LADIES SIZE
FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price, $3.50, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you One Free. Write at once, as we shall send out samples for 60 days only. Address
THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 14.] CHICAGO, April 5, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs Tirsula D Henrick 1029 15th st

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Debate on the tariff bill opened in the United States Senate, Monday.

A measure to re-submit the question of prohibition has passed the Iowa senate.

A bill to enforce the Bering Sea award has been introduced into the British House of Commons by Sir Charles Russell.

Both the Senate and the House adjourned one day last week on account of the death of Senator Colquitt, of Georgia.

At the opening of the International Medical Congress in Rome, March 29, 7,612 delegates and physicians were present from all parts of the world.

The American colony of the Musquito reservation, Central America, have demanded of the Nicaraguan commissioner a provisional government in which the American citizens shall be recognized.

Major W. D. Bickham, the veteran editor of the Dayton, Ohio, Journal, who first applied the term "Crusade" to the praying bands of women in 1873, died suddenly March 27, in hi s sixty-seventh year.

During a speech in the Dominion House of Commons, last week, the minister of finance declared that the government would act upon the principle of protection with the adaptation of the tariff to specific needs.

The expected veto message of President Cleveland contained the suggestion that he will approve a measure for the coining of the seigniorage if it shall also authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue low interest bonds.

A bill has been introduced in the United States Senate for the reduction of government salaries; those from one to five thousand dollars to be reduced twenty-five per cent; from five to twenty thousand, thirty-three and one-third per cent, and above the last sum, fifty per cent.

During the day of prayer at Bloomington, Ill., last week, where a great religious revival is being conducted by Dr. Wilbur F. Chapman, one hundred cottage prayer-meetings were held and nearly every business house in the city, and saloons also, closed for the afternoon, the proprietors and employés filling the churches.

MANY reports of Neal Dow meetings arrived too late for publication in this issue. They will appear in our news columns of next week.

IN this issue is the wonderful address of John G. Woolley delivered in Willard Hall on Neal Dow day. The address is in leaflet form and can be had at this office.

WITH the Easter number our old and valued friend, The Christian at Work, has come out in octavo form and changed its name to The Christian Work. In explanation of the latter the editor truly says that the work is more important than the individual. Men may come and men may go but the work goes on forever. Why not make the name still more comprehensive and euphonious by dropping "The" also?

SUPERINTENDENTS of press work will find an invaluable help in "Points for Press Workers," a manual just issued by the W. T. P. A., and written by Miss Lodie Reed, National superintendent. The "points" are "well taken" from reports and plans of state and former National superintendents and treat of this department in its twofold aim, education of the press and education by the press. The duties of state, district, county and local superintendents are distinctly defined, the details of the last especially being set forth so clearly that no local superintendent who reads and follows these instructions can fail to "magnify by efficient work an office of such great opportunity and responsibility."

THE interest and enthusiasm, not only of temperance people, but of the public generally, which has been such a marked feature of the Neal Dow celebrations throughout this country is largely due to the vigorous efforts of our National recording secretary, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, who so faithfully carried to successful issue the plans of our absent "chieftain" for a fitting expression of the popular esteem and affection toward the venerable pioneer of the prohibition reform.

VERY general dissatisfaction is expressed by Iowa cities regarding the new liquor law, and the authorities declare they will not undertake to enforce it. The Personal Liberty Association of Dubuque, which has over $1,000,000 invested in the liquor business, will contest the constitutionality of the law by entering proceedings to enjoin supervisors from levying the mulct tax. Meanwhile the old system of regulating by fine will be continued. Verily the way of the Republican is hard in Iowa.

As the result of the report of a committee appointed recently to investigate the administration of criminal laws, the Evangelical Alliance of St. Louis will form a society for the prevention of crime, and requests that ministers of every denomination preach upon this subject April 8. We rejoice that the churches are taking the lead in this matter. Whenever the church unites its forces for aggressive action against all evils, legal or illegal, that are dragging men down to perdition, the devil will begin to tremble.

IN an attempt to enforce the dispensary law at Darlington, South Carolina, Friday, two of the state constables and two citizens were killed in a fight and other officers were dangerously wounded. At Florence, S. C., a mob broke open the state dispensary and destroyed the entire stock of liquors. Surely there is opportunity for a crusade in the Palmetto state which will show men that as long as the passion-arousing liquors are dealt with in any form, lawlessness and riots will follow. "Touch not, taste not, handle not!"

A STEP in the right direction has been taken by Harvard, which, in view of an editorial in our last issue, "Dangerous Education," we are pleased to report. The ancient custom of serving punch on commencement day and class days will hereafter be "more honored in the breach than in the observance." The university authorities have decided to exclude punch and all distilled liquors upon such occasions, and Harvard alumnæ throughout the country have been so notified. We trust that ere long this prohibition will extend to wine and beer, which at present are prominent features of college spreads.

IT seems probable that Massachusetts will try the Gothenburg system for regulating the liquor traffic. The commission appointed last year by the governor to investigate the same has reported favorably to the legislature and has prepared a bill whose fifteen sections are patterned after the Norwegian plan. We do not desire to discourage the Old Bay state in its attempts to "regulate," for we look upon all these movements as educatory, but we feel sure that the people of Massachusetts are doomed to disappointment if they expect this system will, upon trial, work as satisfactorily there as in Norway, for the reason that the political conditions of this country are—what they are. While not in any sense indorsing the Gothenburg, or any other compromise plan, for any state or any land we realize that, like the schoolboy puzzling over a mathematical problem, in order to be convinced of the right method of solution people often have to try the wrong method, perhaps many wrong methods. We all learn by the mistakes we make and experience is God's own teacher.

A WRITER in the Popular Science Monthly for March says that among other things one "practical effect of prohibitory law is to increase the demand for liquor and to produce the appetite for drink where it did not exist before." The Champion (liquor organ) thereupon pronounces the article in question to be a "graphic and pointed statement of the real nature and effect of prohibition." Queer, isn't it, that liquor dealers and liquor organs oppose prohibition so vehemently?

ANOTHER of our state presidents, Mrs. N. Munnell, of Kentucky, has been called to pass through deep waters. Her husband, who was her friend and companion in the truest sense, was called up higher March 22. Mr. Munnell some years ago resigned a successful journalistic career to engage in home missionary work, and was organizer and pastor of the Central mission in Louisville. He was a man of deep convictions, wonderful political foresight, and a friend indeed to the W. C. T. U.

THE "army of the commonweal" still goes marching on toward Washington, gaining somewhat in quantity if not in quality as it goes. While the leaders are popularly regarded as visionaries, there is in the movement, viewed in connection with the general unrest and discontent of the times, a certain significance which the thoughtful cannot fail to note. We regret that the management, while inscribing the name of Christ upon their banners, should neglect to honor the rest day held sacred to Him.

THE "Open Parliament" of Christian Endeavorers, which is an attractive feature of the Golden Rule, discussed last week the question, "How the Christian Endeavor pledge has helped." The various responses show that effort "to do whatever Christ would have me do," settles many a question for the young Christian and leads him to "trust in the Lord Jesus for strength." "Whatever," says one, "touches every moment of life and makes even little duties important and sacred." "The pledge has helped" says another, "by throwing the responsibility of my Christian living upon myself and not upon my environment or the actions of others." No Endeavorer who thus realizes the significance of the pledge he takes—and none should take it lightly—can fail to decide right the question of total abstinence for the individual, and that of his duty as a Christian citizen toward the drink evil.

MANY of our readers may have read an announcement of the Polyglot Petition world trip that has been made within the past few weeks in the daily press and other papers. The publication was premature. THE UNION SIGNAL has not published any official announcement of the round-the-world commission simply because the date of starting on the expedition is still a "floating figure," as our president has called it. If everything seemed favorable it was proposed to sail next autumn, but Dr. Lunn of London, to whom the details of the enterprise had been entrusted, asked for a longer time. It took him fifteen months to arrange the great and successful trip to Palestine that has been carried out this winter, and it will be important to leave the question of the exact date open for some time yet owing to the minutiæ of plans which are involved in an expedition so extensive, and which includes a journey to countries not frequented by the typical caravan of tourists. When plans are fully matured THE UNION SIGNAL will publish the full details of the momentous project which contains nothing new or surprising to the white ribbon women, who have been working for years on the Petition and who have been cognizant of every step of its progress. Indeed, they can say with more emphasis than any other class of people in Christendom, "all of which I saw and part of which I was."

THE LAND OF PROHIBITION.

BY MRS. HARRISON LEE.

No broken windows or hanging doors,
No greasy walls or dirty floors,
But pretty homes and gardens gay,
Scent of sweet flowers miles away
In the Land of Prohibition.

No "raggit weans," no weary wives,
No women in fear for their wretched lives,
But merry maids and bonny boys,
And streets alive with gladsome noise
In the Land of Prohibition.

No aching hearts and dragging feet,
No unemployed in any street,
But bounding step and cheery song,
Work for the willing, brave and strong
In the Land of Prohibition.

No frowning jails or prisons drear,
No criminals in training here,
But far and wide our banner waves
O'er men who never shall be slaves—
In the Land of Prohibition.

No public debt to make men frown,
No breaking banks to crush them down,
No empty coffers in the state,
For debts are small and incomes great
In the Land of Prohibition.

Dear, far-off country of my birth,
The grandest spot upon the earth,
Oh, may I live to see the day
When all thy woe shall pass away,
And glorious, beautiful and free
Thou shalt arise victoriously—
The Land of Prohibition.

Victoria, Australia.

THE MEMBER-AT-LARGE.

IV.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

"No," said the member-at-large, "I do not want to say anything more at present. I am living down the impression that seems to have gone abroad that I think the club ought to supply black silk of a high order to all its needy but deserving members. At least that is the way it came to me. A cheap black silk only accents poverty. Government should have a storehouse in every town, with black silk on tap, as it were; rich, soft, heavy silk sold at cost, and then we could all have one. But cashmere is a good substitute. In short, I am tired of the general stir over the poor little proposition, and want somebody else to define our next need."

"Discussion is precisely what is wanted, so never mind what rendering is made of your suggestion," said the chairman of the science committee, whose turn it was to provide, and who had just heard from a fascinating biological lady that she would be happy to prepare the paper needed. Naturally, then, she was at peace with all the world, for the reader was not only a pretty woman with distinct Delsarte tendencies, but an authority in her special field.

"There is only one danger," the chairman went on, after a moment of silence. "It is simply the most desirable thing that could happen to get her, but she is likely to go to pieces at any moment she is so overworked. She never has a moment, and it gets worse and worse. In fact, we none of us have many moments. I don't know what we are going to do about it, but something must be done. So I want you to think it over and say a little word at the end about women at work and how, perhaps, things can be made easier."

"But you can't make things easier by act of legislature," said the member-at-large. "It is a matter for the individual to decide. Of course there is something to be said, but after all, I doubt if it will do any good."

"Don't doubt. It vitiates the word," said the chairman. "Only the thing that one believes tremendously does any good in this doubting generation, and that is where you come in, for you have an assortment of beliefs that I mean to draw on again."

"Draw when you like," said the member-at-large, "and you shall have them for what they are worth, only I don't see that my words have the slightest place as epilogue to a lecture on the origin of life."

"Everything belongs to everything else," said the chairman who had been born among the New England Transcendentalists and retained this turn of mind. So it happened that the member-at-large went on the appointed day prepared to speak or be silent as might seem best, and being much moved by the hollow eyes and worn look of the pretty speaker rose, when the right time came and looked about apologetically.

"Dear Club," she said, "you are all so good, and listen so really as if you cared, that I want to read you another letter which has its word for all of us. Most of all I read it to the speaker who has delighted us, for certainly part of its message is for her, and the rest we will divide among ourselves as needed. It is a letter and my thought about it just as I shall send it to the writer. It is a typical one—I get many such—from a young lady teaching in a New England high school who begs for advice as to some better management of her time, in order to accomplish more in her various pursuits. These include five hours of daily teaching, with not less than one more of outside school work; three devoted to a course of reading under the guidance of the 'Society for Study at Home'; one to music, and from two to three on alternate days to chemistry and painting."

"'I make so little sensible progress,' she wails, 'and though I seldom visit, find myself always far behind what I have planned. Yet I cannot see how to do more, and am heartbroken at my own inadequacy, when this world of attainment lies before me unconquered. Oh, for more time!'

"Poor souls! Poor souls! for their name is legion, and not from one alone, but from hundreds and thousands, the cry for more time goes up, as if eternity had been abolished and one must pack the work of an eternity into seventy years. The burden of the nineteenth century is upon us all, this restless, grasping, feverish nineteenth century, in which reformers are bent upon ending all need for other reform in any time to come, and eager workers are seeking to assimilate at once the long-accumulating mass of knowledge, every department of which receives daily new facts and opens out new possibilities of acquirement.

"The old cry sounds again, 'we are the people and wisdom will die with us'; but for this generation it is the voice not of self-sufficiency but of self-distrust—a note of warning to each gatherer-in of stores, to hasten the work, lest those who come after despise us as a people who missed their opportunity. For a few the troubled uncertainty of miscellaneous yet apparently equally imperative interests has ceased, and they have taken up the special pursuit to which a life may well be devoted. But for the many with whom life must always hold not one but a myriad duties, and who, in the midst of all the perplexing cares and worries, besetting the American woman to a degree unknown to any other civilized nation, still long precisely as you are doing, for broader paths, a truer knowledge, a more genuine culture, there is this word to be said.

"Brain and body seem to be at war, and it is these bewildering masses of books that act as sappers and miners in the siege. Let there be added the passion for acquirement, which, after all, can end for the many only in a smattering of everything—the wear and tear of the most exacting climate in the world, the struggle for wealth and all material advancement, the dissatisfaction with simplicity in living, and the craze for the newest thing in art or science or literature, and what remains for the woman of æsthetic tastes but a final loss of any possibility of repose for mind or body, and nervous prostration or paralysis in the end?

"One sees in many faces the eager, brilliant eyes, the look of intense expectation and intention, seeming to urge one on to a like emulation, to the same feverish grasp after more and more attainment. But how many are there that carry any suggestion of quiet power, of a strength sufficient for all who claim it, and a settled calm as soothing and yet as inspiring as the calm of mountain tops? There are faces looking sometimes from the shadow of close Quaker bonnets, sometimes from more worldly surroundings, with an expression of peace that suddenly shames our mad rush and flurry and for a moment makes being seem better than doing. But often the lesson taken then to heart fails in application, and we work to be peaceful with an energy and a fury very American and always defeating its own ends.

"'So tired!' is the moan, and 'so tired!' it must be until we have learned not so much how to rest from any work as to rest in work, to keep faculties in full exercise yet never overstrained, to choose the wisest methods for body and soul and mind, and to follow them through every chance and change of this mortal life; learn what to leave undone, what to slight, and what to pursue steadily. Rest must be daily—not a month of 'resting like fury,' after eleven months of working in the same fashion, but a deliberate stopping to be still, to collect forces and draw the long, full breath without which climbing is impossible.

"Climate, natural predisposition and inherited instinct are all impelling forces with the native American, man or woman; and for each one must be the firm, deliberate purpose not to rush and pant and strive, but to give Nature her due, sleep the full amount demanded for health, make recreation as vital a necessity as work, and through all remember that 'something must be crowded out.' No day has ever dawned whose hours could hold all that we hope for from our vanishing time. Work as we may, it is still only the alphabet that we gain, whose best uses are unknown till the larger time of eternity shall give room for the progress unattainable now."

"An admirable little sermon," said the speaker for the day after a moment of silence. "May I ask if you live up to your own doctrine and expounding?"

"My dear madam," replied the member-at-large; "do you look for consistency from me more than from other wiser women? This is my faith and I practice as far as life admits. You must bear in mind that I said rest was possible in work as well as without it. Gladstone is a very good illustration of that."

"Gladstone has never had to keep house with one girl or interregnums of none at all," said the excitable member rising with a bounce and fixing her pretty eyes on the member-at-large, with a look which might have been called threatening if it had not been also appealing. "I do think under the circumstances that torment us all, being expected to be housekeepers and well read, and teachers for our children and properly dressed, that somebody ought to devote themselves to telling us how admirable we are instead of hectoring us and making us feel as if we never could really amount to anything."

"It is only the people who amount to a great deal who ever feel that," said the member-at-large with a laugh, for her nearest neighbor turned a distressed countenance upon her. "But we are overworked, and must all take stock to find out what is worth while and what isn't."

"And that you never can find out because in each case it is a different set of circumstances," said the speaker for the day. "In short, if I may be allowed to sum up before the president uses that gavel, already in her hand, I should say that every word of the sermon is true, but that each of us must take the bit that best fits our own case and experiment in reforming till we know what our share really is. And if I may add something not on the program and perhaps quite out of order—"

The speaker moved toward the piano and struck the opening chord of the beautiful "Oh, Rest in the Lord," her pure, clear contralto filling the room and carrying with it the very spirit of the words spoken. She colored a little as she rose, for it had been a sudden impulse, but as the members crowded about her with moved faces, knew that she had not blundered, and that the master musician had better defined rest than spoken word was ever likely to do.

Madison, Wis.

THE INVENTOR OF DIMENSIONS IN POLITICAL RIGHTEOUSNESS.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

An old man sits at life's west window; on his head a glorious crown of hoary hair, for he has walked the way of righteousness for seventy years of life and twenty of immortality; in his face the flush of the century's afterglow and in his eyes the quiet mystery of lights far out at sea.

. . . . . .

He is a statesman who years ago pronounced sentence of death upon his own "prospects" for truth's sake and duty's—a Yankee Cato; a politician who came upon the stage of action when "Drink" was governor, and the Church tetrarch to the animalism and moral incapacity of the usurper.

. . . . . .

And he is a prophet, not one who in a gloomy frenzy seizes a pen and writes he knows not what; or with transcendent vision outwits the future and lays bare its strategies, or, nightly wandering in Egerian groves, hears the gestation of events to come; but one who, having eyes, sees what lies about him here in the open—a seer.

. . . . . .

Much of what passes current as "spiritual insight" is strabismus, gotten trying not to see the shapes that crowd our paths and shame our lust of indolence claiming consanguinity—and, as to many, rightfully, for that mere introversion of the eyes is all the motherhood the crime-germ needs or knows,—and Christian apathy, like a sleeping sow, suckles the saloon and all its loathsome brood; and when betimes it looks the "good man" in the face and says: "Speak to me, I am thy child," it is no answer to reply with face averted, "Begone, I love thee not!" It never asked for love, nor wished it, but only recognition, and that it has, for Congress and some forty legislatures vouch to-day for its legitimacy as our proper offspring, out of wedlock, to be sure, but ours indisputably.

They lie!—the brute is none of ours but a mongrel monster of genealogy untraceable, unclassable, sexless, soulless, something of louse, hog and devil mixed, and only ours by estoppel, because we did not, would not see that calling us "father" unrebuked, and so being endured and trusted for our sake and upon our credit, it made us liable for its support and all the debts it may incur. God help us at the pay day! "Where there is no vision the people perish."

. . . . . .

But this man saw every fact that touched him, and looked into the face of every form that walked his way of life, and to every salutation answered like a man, shirking nothing; and now resting here, and wearied by the heat and burden of the day if the whole peerage of the saloon—the quarter of a million liquor lords, each with his royal letters patent in his hand, should file into the room to taunt and greet him "kinsman," he would look straight into their swinish eyes and say, "Thou liest!"

. . . . . .

What a palatial memory is this lifting its splendid front here in the gloaming, with the century's sunset beams illumining its window panes! Enter, reverently, and let us look about, for there must be some wondrous paintings on the walls. Take off your shoes, walk softly. I will be guide, and where I know the portraits they shall act again, and speak to you.

. . . . . .

Himself, in the first picture, a young, rich man, taking his ease in his own parlor, before an open fire whose piny resins shoot delicious pyrotechnics, odor-laden, into the weak eyes of many lamps. . . . His wife, almost too happy, opposite, with gleaming needles that click like frostbells, knitting a song of her own heart into meshes of soft, bright wools for dainty feet that she has never seen except in dreams. . . . Entering there, a neighbor woman, young, too, and beautiful, a wife and mother, with a face that fairly chills the sense to see it, and eyes dilated to the iris edge by an unspeakable horror about to speak. Listen!

"I can keep my secret no longer; my husband is a drunkard; my children are starving; my heart is breaking; you are his friend; find him for me; bring him home to me, quickly, for the love of God."

. . . . . .

What's to say when a woman talks like that? the terrific calmness of it is noisier than a riot, and confuses sense and banishes speech, except the shallowest. Out into the night he fares, the blindest man in Maine, because the adder, "drink," has never stung his heart nor made him hang his head for shame, nor struck his wife's sweet face with its foul lash, nor goaded him to borrow, lie or steal; he has seen men and women but as trees walking, and has inhaled the hot breath of the saloon for a generation, and yet not seen it save as one catches glimpses of some slimy, crawling thing and turns his eyes away no wiser.

. . . . . .

A saloon, the squid of life's high sea with vibrant tentacles that suck the sap of business, honor and the pride, and strength of youth, and labor's wages, and the blood of human hearts; and squirts ink into the crystal wave of every providence of rescue while it seeks its cave and slams the door of Christian law into the face of Christ.

Pyramids of barrels each monogramed with the nation's signet. Ranks and platoons of bottles dressed to a city license on the right,—the liquor laws, militia, bodyguard, each bemedaled on its helmet with federal insignia, . . . the keeper, cuffed and aproned, brusque and business-like on duty at the bar. In a closet in the rear, hidden away like a stolen dog—a man, dead drunk in his soul, but in his body, writhing on the grill of restlessness—a good man three days since, but now, a creature ready to commit murder for a stoup of rum.

. . . . . .

His friend, no coward—the blind are brave—though forbidden, finds him out and in horror turns to the master and says: "Help me to take him away." He replies: "What is it to you? Let him alone to go home when he pleases." "But his children are crying for food and his wife weeping her eyes out for love of him; we must get him to them, I tell you. I'll call a carriage. Don't sell him any more drink." And the man says: "No, not if he hasn't the price."

"What, man! Do you mean to say you would sell him more drink when he is already mad with it, and his home is without a crust, and his wife lies on the floor yonder just a clot of sorrow in the heart of Jesus Christ?"

"Yes. By ——! I sell whisky. It is my trade and as lawful as tanning—more lawful. What have you to show for your tannery? Look at that license, d'ye see, with the names of the selectmen, and the city seal and the arms of the state of Maine? To —— with your preaching. Get out! Go to the meeting-house and talk through your sleek hat!"

. . . . . .

Propped in the corner of a carriage, like a sack of sodden rags, the drunkard—and his friend. The clock in the stone tower strikes midnight—tolls midnight, and the moon rolls down behind the pine woods like a tear of God.

"Now, driver, home! home to the snowy marriage bed with the bridegroom! home to the bride's empty arms with her lover! home to the true wife with her husband! home to the prattlers with their father!"

. . . . . .

The drunkard in his bed tossing and moaning, with throat that cracks with its gasping thirst, and blood that crawls like a migration of maggots along the flaccid veins, and breath that sickens, and stinks, and makes one look for red-crested grave worms to crawl out of lips and eyes and nostrils, and burrow into the puffy cheeks of the cadaver, sloughing visibly.

. . . . . .

Still the same scene; the night wears on, children sit up in bed and mock the lone, sleepless watcher—by crying, "Drink, mamma, drink;"—the lamp burns low—goes out; the darkness turns gray; the hot evening horror has boiled down and the tortured ones are still, at last, rigid, like flies in tar; out of the shadow a form stoops and searches for live coals in the ashes, vainly. It is the drunkard's wife. God pity her!

. . . . . .

The young rich man is back by his parlor fire—sitting alone. There is that about his mouth that was not there before, and the atmosphere suggests ozone. For once, a saloon has given value to the world. Neal Dow sees.

. . . . . .

Leave the pictures,—sit here—and I will tell you what he saw: "Drink"—everywhere; Nero—Drink on the throne fiddling while the city burned; Tarquinea—Drink in the chariot crushing her dead father's face beneath her bloody wheels; Catharine—Drink at the altar murdering the innocents; Borgia—Drink in the castle with butchery and incest; Lucretia—Drink in the home—mad with her wrongs poisoning parents; Machiavelli—Drink in the Cabinet publishing lies; Rahab—Drink in the brothel putting out Virtue's eyes; Barabbas—Drink on the road robbing the poor; Pizarro—Drink in commerce plundering the simple; Sinon—Drink betraying cities with gifts; Epialtes—Drink leading the enemy through the defenses of his native land; Arnold—Drink selling his country; Belshazzar—Drink scorning Heaven and praising the Gods of Gold; Jeffreys—Drink on the bench wresting the law; Lord Chancellor—Drink selling injustice; Juror—Drink in the box ignoring law; Sheriff—Drink in charge of the jail; Alderman—Drink in the council taking bribes; Mayor—Drink in the chair selling indulgence to corruptors of the youth; Chief—Drink in charge of the police; Drink—M. C. in the Congress; Drink—M. D. at the cradle; Drink—D. D. in the pulpit; Drink—LL.D. in the college; Judas—Drink with the disciples selling the Son of God for silver.

. . . . . .

You ask me if this is really memory, or pictures painted by a madman's mind on memory's walls? It is memory, true as light, and this man saw it all, and looked at it and pondered it in his heart, and then stood up and said: "By God's help we will stop all this!" . . . And the Quaker went to war, and one honest mayor shook the continent. Had there been then a church, clean-handed, clear-eyed, faithful, militant, to take on board this Viking, it would have swept the sea of licensed pirates and filled the earth with the knowledge and glory of our God.

. . . . . .

Yesterday I heard this gallant man impeached for lack of loyalty to a sect because he took his name from a church book. But he had given his heart to God, aye, and his two hands and his feet and his shoulders, and his name is written in the sacred history of the holiest warfare ever waged for God and home and country. To-night heaven kindles in his soul, universal humanity honors him by public meetings in a thousand cities in his own and foreign lands, and posterity will bless his name when sects have ceased in dusty desuetude. For I do hold that he lifts up the Son of God who lifts another man without a scrap of creed beyond the testimony of the act itself; and he did that not only, but a sovereign state as well, and a great cause. For when Maine's homes were lighted up, and industry revived, and wealth began to flow into her lap, and jails gave way to schools and saloons to savings banks, the whole world recognized the time was epochal.

. . . . . .

When the temperance movement was a child it thought as a child and understood as a child and spoke as a child, but in this man's leadership it became a man and put away childish things, except so far as they are merged into the character and fibre of its manhood. The pledge, the ribbon, the rescue mission have a splendid history and doubtless still a noble place and work in these great days, but they are not the temperance work of to-day but the plain ordinary business of the church and school, and have their greatest value in helping on the greater thing which is, in fact, the cause of temperance—the war on the saloon; lacking that value it is doubtful if they have any as special work, however benevolent and praiseworthy in their motive. The great societies, such as the W. C. T. U., the Good Templars and the like, have retained and magnified their office and their power by growing with the world's growth and keeping at the forefront of the fighting; but that manner of gospel temperance that coddles the saloon-keeper and loves everything but Prohibition, died on its own hands years ago. At best the old lines have no large outlook to them, when exclusively persisted in, in the great light of these days. The rescue of the people by arguments addressed to scarce one-fifth of them, and that one-fifth in largest part the sodden incapables, reckless or vicious, unreasoning, unreasonable, is too slow, though noble, and those who refuse to advance beyond that to the great question of environment, do very well to adopt a theory of millennial proximity which creates an appetite for failure and eliminates the largest hope from human effort.

. . . . . .

So, he took up the cause of men, of Maine—of MAN—and led it for fifty years, all honor to him! The history is made and will be written. I may not touch it now. Men called it madness. Divines, wise in their own conceit, shook what they call their heads and said "fool,"—and looked it. The howling party dervishes danced about him and waved a dirty flag and babbled. Cowards, weaklings, trimmers, came and sat about him—Bildad, Zophar, Eliphaz, Elihu and the rest—and said: "The flag will not fly, drag it." But Neal Dow's heart was too high for them and stopped at nothing but the throne of God, where he had audience with the Royal Man and said: "Oh, Son of God, Messiah, Jesus, is it all in vain? Art Thou He that should come into the hearts and homes and laws and votes of men, or shall we give it up and look for something else?" . . . . And we who lovingly watch the old man's face can read there that he has seen Him and is satisfied.

. . . . . .

I went to the Auditorium the other day to rest my body while my soul went surf-bathing in a sea of music. It was early; a man was placing sheets of score upon the racks. Can he play Tannhäuser? No, only the cymbals; but others came in, tightened a string, keyed the harp, laid the drumsticks ready to the hand—sixty of them, eighty ninety. Can they play Tannhäuser? No, it all depends on Theodore Thomas. I looked again and saw his back, his face is only for the ninety whose hands are ready to play; he raises his baton; in him the orchestra lives and moves and has its being; he can play Tannhäuser.

O friend! days and nights are the spaces and lines, and men the notes of the score—eighth, quarter and half notes, tied, dotted and slurred; chords, octaves and scales, major and minor; a few of us cymbal players. Put it before your eyes in tear-blotted sheets. For Jesus' sake—the conductor—read it, and watch His hand. I think He's about to begin. Ninety facing the leader can make the nine thousand behind him sit still and think, and wish to play. So one at the front compels the rear thousand, and every new player multiplies his own thousand by ten—two shall control ten thousand. Infinite mystery, power, progression of union—when God leads!

Neal Dow is not the leader, he only beat the cymbals in the rude beginning, and put the notes upon the players' racks, and they will play them later on when he has gone. He taught American politics to look up. He taught the church to look out. He taught orthodoxy to believe in God. He taught humanity to believe in man. Neal Dow's contribution to the world is not yet comprehended by the many. He is known and honored to-night mostly for the invention of a novelty, the Maine Law. What he did was to grasp and apply a great principle and raise the general level of civilization. Ninety-nine hundredths of the men who will praise him to-night will charitably overlook, as the one blemish of his splendid character, the greatest thing he did by far, and I am going to lay my simple spray upon his one political failing, and salute him chiefly as the author of the movement for a national Prohibition party—the inventor of dimensions in political righteousness. And finally, I want to honor him for the glorious heterodoxy that refuses to believe that any need to perish, and to end with a word of exhortation as touching both salvation and citizenship.

. . . . . .

We are of the blood of mountaineers; the proof of it is in the universal consciousness. We are in the valley but we are of the heights, and feeling this, and a certain consequent *un*locality or misfit of environment, we were taught to speak of "the fall."

. . . . . .

It is no great harm to call it that, but it is a depressing phraseology. We are no outcast forfeiters of filial rights—attainted people of an outraged king, but sons of God, conceived by the Holy Ghost, being born of the virgin earth, suffering under a Pontius Pilate age of trial, cowardice and unjudgment, being crucified, dying, being buried, descending into hell, rising again, sitting at the right hand of God, and judging the world—now, and what we have been taught to think proof of "the fall," is but the restless prepotency of God's blood pent up in earthy arteries, that makes us ill at ease in the long drudgeries of our apprenticeship.

. . . . . .

As little children, stolen away from home, always remember something of their earliest childhood, and are constantly reminded of it even by the smallest things, so we, though eternities of time and distance stretch out between us and our divine begetting, yet carry with us, like faint inscriptions on an ancient palimpsest, some vague views and odors of Eden and some ineffable limning of our Father's face.

. . . . . .

And the royal blood, instinct in every vein of the world, has set all nature expecting, so that even muscles, nerves and glands have hope and memory.

. . . . . .

You know sometimes a simple taste of food or sweetmeat whisks you back fifty years or more in a chariot of recollection drawn by your sense of taste, and while in fact you sit crowned with gray hair and burdened with the care of millions of money, propped up in life by multitudinous responsibilities, surrounded by your grandchildren, in an instant of muscular retrospect you are a towheaded boy, possessed of nothing but a pigeon, a dog, an alley taw and an awful appetite, dangling your slim legs beneath your grandmother's table.

The swish of a whip, the call of a quail, the "long roll" of a woodpecker, a pheasant drumming, the sough of the wind, the monody of cottonwood boughs, the echo of a rifle shot makes you a boy again. At the touch of a soft hand you start and say, "That's mother!" and she dead these forty years. And sometimes as you pass along the street engrossed by cares, a single strain of an old song bewitches you and whips you like magic with the air and, without even an "abracadabra, tum, tum," tumbles you into your cradle, sixty years away.

I never catch a whiff of camphor but I am led back by the nose to Sammy Drayer's funeral, nearly forty years ago, and at the sight of pink lemonade my maxillary glands stampede to "James Lake's greatest and only circus and menagerie combined" to get popcorn to match and supplementary peanuts.

Mignon saw the swallows flying southward,—up leaped her soul and on their wings returned to Italy and home.

So it is with all of us; something of Eden clings to us; quick visions of its trees and streams and winding ways fly past our weary eyes, and in pursuit of them we cross the flood of years, and in our Father's veins walk 'mongst the trees of paradise. Evolution might evolve us, but not account for our ideals; they are memories. Our aspirations prove our parentage, but not our fall.

We did not start from nowhere, but we are of the House of God, and voyagers seeing the universe, and the ways are long and many lights confuse, and life is full of falls and loss and mystery; and so, what wonder that the human soul has learned to stand at partings of the ways and say, "I'm lost," and like a child parted from its mother in a crowd go on, startled, puzzled and in fear, crying for help. Every awakened soul feels insufficient and dreads to be alone. We are all brave enough in crowds, but in the solitude we are all afraid. Solitary confinement drives the hardest ruffian mad, and if you lay your ear over the mighty pulsing heart of human kind you'll hear it cry, at every throb, for company and help. And if a human soul is ever lost 'twill be for lack of help in its environment and not from choice.

. . . . . .

And there is help in sight, but heavy-eyed humanity looks down in snow and leaves and shadows to find a trail, and will not look aloft, until in some appalling sense of failure it gives up the tangled, labyrinthine ways of creeds, and idle wanderings to and fro, and "lifts" its eyes up to the level, up to the horizon, "up to the hills," the pilot-points of life, the signs that stay; the land's end, Godward; the sources where infinity impinging on rocks, correlates into concrete and finite; where the moisture of God's breath lodges in crystals and transfigures into springs which pour out the blessing of the hills upon the plains where wells are made, deep cups, to catch the honey of the mountain dews; whence the beautiful feet of the sunbeams hasten forth to publish peace and plenty to the world below, where argosies of clouds cast anchor to put ashore the riches of the sky.

. . . . . .

It was the old gospel this man preached and the text, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills."

"I will lift." It is not a prayer but a decision. Salvation is that too—and statesmanship. . . . So is hell. . . .

I fix my eyes upon the hills because they are the highest things in sight; there are surely greater heights beyond, and these I'll scale and seek out God who made the hills and sends me help. . . . And with my eyes upon the summit of my world, and heavenward aspiration always leading, my feet shall never slip, the omnipresent vigilance of God shall keep me safe by night and day in all my goings, now and ever more. . . . And help "cometh,"—not "will come if you believe." Cometh to good and bad alike; but it is nothing—except a man "will." Will you?

Delivered in Willard Hall. The Temple, March 20.

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

III.

Production; Relation of the Parts.

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

The last lesson gave such a picture of constantly increasing wealth, and that, too, with an ever decreasing effort, that the question might be asked is not the supply of nature exhaustible? Certainly not, for no force, or matter, is ever lost. Man himself being an emphasized part of these, subject to the same constant round of transformations, yet becoming more and more capable of controlling these changes, as his knowledge of himself and the material and psychical world about him increases.

In this diagram let the lines represent Supply and the spaces Demand, each of which are supposed to stretch out to infinity. Place man at the center at birth, where the supply is greater than the demand. This natural condition is but the first indication of God's care for mankind. With growth, demand increases. Then, between demand and supply, God has set exertion. Before material wealth, labor; before spiritual peace, prayerful seeking; before intellectual culture, study; before moral virtue—resisting temptation.

As the supply is infinite, so should the demand be also. As civilization advances, if liberty, fraternity and equity be preserved, this very growth of individual character and of the social organism will make it increasingly easier for each succeeding generation to overcome resistance until demand, resistance and supply become the keenest of pleasures—God's method in the evolution of society, but one which man himself can resist or retard. For, behold! this social organism already seems to possess a body, with cities for its ganglionic nerve centers, connected by rail and telegraph for bones, nerves and muscles. It has a body, but not consciousness.

Let us examine the relation or function of its parts, remembering the broad classifications. The function of land is to furnish forces, standing room and materials for labor to work into wealth. The function of capital is to assist labor in the four modes of production: In adapting, by furnishing him with tools, machinery, factories, etc. In growing, by furnishing tools, seed, cattle, fences, drains, barns, etc. In exchanging, by furnishing stores and supplies, also tools. In transporting, by furnishing him means to take advantage of horse-power, winds, streams, oceans, steam and electricity. Capital, then, is but little more than the multiplication of the powers of labor—called by some, "stored up labor." The steam engine, alone, is daily performing more work for man than one thousand million men could do, and electricity will in the near future do vastly more.

The function of labor is to direct the whole, simply to move, change, transform. Labor, then, is not out of employment because there is not capital enough to employ it; for capital is also out of employment, and is turned into wealth, for the time being; but were there a quick market, it would soon reappear as capital ready for labor to employ it,—for it is labor that employs capital, and not the opposite—since capital is the child of land and labor. Neither does capital maintain laborers; they maintain themselves by selling their labor and by consuming their wages.

Wealth, then, is the result of the power labor has obtained over the resistance of matter. Value measures that power; and money measures value. To illustrate: If labor possessed some fairy's wand, which, by waving it in the air, trees, stones, sand, iron ore, etc., could be made to turn themselves into proper shape, and then, by another wave of the wand, these materials should form themselves into a house of any size or shape labor wills, we could easily see that the house (or wealth) was the result of the power labor had obtained over the resistance of matter so as to fit it to satisfy human desires. That is exactly what labor has done, but by a slower process. What is the value of that house? The labor power it will require to make another like it,—measured in money, perhaps, one thousand dollars. Mr. A. has on hand a thousand dollars which sum represents the stored-up labor value of his own, or his father's exertion. He hands it to B. and B. gives him possession of the house.

But, it will be asked, did not the material cost something? Yes, but the cost of material is also a labor-value, but one showing itself under an entirely different form, viz., in the value of the land from which it is drawn. Where the land has no value, this material costs nothing. The value of land depends upon the number of laborers competing for its use, rising as those numbers increase; while the value of such things as are properly termed wealth falls as laborers increase, as has been already shown. So long as there is a demand for these things there will be no limit to the supply, till the limit of land is reached. There is really no limit to land; but as all land does not yield equally of these natural materials—that yielding the best being limited—the competition of labor for these advantageous places fixes the price of land, and this, in turn, fixes the rate of wages and of interest, as we shall see more clearly in the next lesson.

What must be especially noted now is that value of land is also a labor-value. Were there no laborers competing for its use, land would possess no marketable value, even though it contained fertile plains, deposits of gold, or safe harbors.

Neither would laborers compete for its use, except that each one, in seeking to satisfy his desires by the least exertion, naturally seeks the land which will yield him the most for the least effort. Since all do the same, the price of land becomes a thermometer which shows the labor saved in producing a certain amount of wealth upon different locations. The same law holds, whether this wealth is produced by adapting, growing, transporting or exchanging. Let an oil well suddenly burst forth from land where there is a large population, or, within easy reach of such. The ease with which wealth is suddenly produced upon this land is at once reflected in the price of it. Labor gets about the same wages, and capital about the same interest.

The same result would follow were a gold, coal or copper mine discovered, or if a large factory containing important labor-saving machinery should suddenly be erected in a populous district, or run a new railroad into a quiet, sleepy town. Fresh facilities for transportation causes a land boom. This also explains why land in great cities, where wealth is rapidly being produced by exchange, is of such high value; for such land is, in its way, exceedingly productive; also why rich farming land lying a long distance from market is often of less value than poorer soil lying nearer a market; also why the worn out lands of New England which to-day possess neither fertility nor advantages of market, have so decreased in value, while prairie lands in touch with the world's markets, by growing towns and increase of railroad and steamboat facilities, possess a high value.

This also explains why wages and interest are but little higher than they were fifty years ago, when compared with land. Yet labor produces certainly eleven times more wealth, generally, and in special industries many thousand times more; yet neither wages nor interest are eleven times higher; but the price of land is much higher. This increase in the production of wealth, under present conditions, will not flow to wages or interest, but results in raising the price of land, or economic rent, as it is termed. The market value of land in this country has increased enormously during the last fifty years, not all equally, but in proportion to its wealth-producing capacity. Some farming lands have decreased in value, yet choice spots can be found in all our great cities, valued at the rate of nearly fifteen million dollars per acre.

To recapitulate: The value of all such things as are termed wealth (things produced by labor), is a labor value, while the value of land is a labor saving value, which increases as population increases.

Wollaston, Mass.

*Copyrighted.

A STRONG WORD FOR TEMPERANCE.

BY MAY FRENCH-SHELDON, F. R. G. S.

Strongest testimony in support of a cause frequently could be supplied by persons who are not pledged advocates of that cause, if they would only freely state personal experiences without prejudice, and give the facts honest publicity; hence, this statement from one not a total abstainer, although a believer in temperance:

When providing the requisite supplies for my African expedition, through the advice of most experienced and noted travelers, I added several cases of wine and liquor, urged that there were times during every African traveler's journey when spirits were absolutely necessary for the preservation of life or the alleviation of the ravages of African maladies.

My observation during brief anchorage of our steamer at various ports en voyage was far from corroborative. Habitués of the ports were constantly indulging in, according to the vernacular of the coast, "pegs," consisting of brandy and soda, or plain whisky, or even rum, and no dinner or breakfast seemed complete without a quantity of champagne. No matter if one was overcome by the sun, with a rapidly rising temperature, or whether afflicted with a chill, as the harbinger of fever, stimulants were taken or administered by one's own volition or under medical advice. The consequence naturally was that no invalid's real condition could be ascertained, and when a collapse ensued mortal power was of no avail. Moreover, many of the young men had a besotted, enervated, languorous appearance, and seemed to have lost the higher sense of manliness, were lackadaisical, without ambition, deficient in energy, took life too much as it came without disposition to better conditions. However, another cause for the utter and sad indifference of the men is, I think, largely due to the absence of white women's society, to stimulate their sentimental nature and compel them to dignified, circumspect deportment, to keep in abeyance the don't care spirit that gradually but most invidiously, like a social mildew, creeps over the majority of men left to themselves.

As soon as I started to march with my caravan, and had the opportunity to inform myself before leaving the stations where white men were eking out a miserable existence, it became clear that there were many serious objections to resorting to stimulants on all and every occasion, yet I was not willing to discard from my supplies the cases of liquor, but resolved to employ them only during some possible emergency; determining to put to the test, and strictly follow out, certain simple rules of hygiene and note results.

When men travelers in tropics are oppressed by a sense of suffocation and heated and drenched with perspiration, immediately they strip off every article of clothing they can decently spare, and frequently even do not pause at this stricture. They feel drowsy and exhausted, take a good drink of spirits, possibly indulge in a smoke, throw themselves down on the ground, a blanket only intervening between their half stripped bodies and the malarious earth—to soon fall into a heavy slumber, inhaling the subtle miasmatic vapors, while rapid condensation takes place on the surfaces of their reeking bodies; their pores are suddenly closed, a chill supervenes; they too often waken to find African fever lurking in their systems, followed by helpless delirium and torturing agony. The country is condemned as pestilential when the verdict should justly be "result of human idiocy."

To the contrary, whether wet from rain or from swimming and fording streams or from perspiration, the moment we halted I put on an extra light silk garment, covering me from head to foot. Although at times even this slight addition seemed insupportable, prudently did I keep it on, cognizant of the safeguard it afforded, and when the excessive heat abated a chill was unknown. Then by the morning and night use of hot water baths, boiling and filtering all water used for drinking or cooking, sleeping two and one-half feet above the surface of the ground in my palanquin (which took me out of the strata of miasmatic mists) and using as a constant beverage and stimulant, coffee, hot or cold, I never had the slightest intimation of fever. During the entire period of my expedition, marching at the head of my caravan, enduring greatest hardships and fatigues, I did not partake of a single glass of spirits or wine, exclusively using coffee as a substitute. Mocha coffee in the berry I carried in small sacks. It was fresh roasted each day or every alternate day, ground and distilled twice daily. My gun-bearer carried a bottle of cold coffee and my extra wrap. Hygiene, common sense and forswearing spirits I hold as the guarantee of my immunity from the so-called inevitable African fever.

Chicago, Ill

FROM THE SOUTH.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have just returned from a four weeks' tour in Texas and Mississippi, with a few days in New Orleans. I went to Texas through the Indian Territory, stopping at Vinita and Muskogee, where I found live, loyal unions, in spite of much surrounding apathy.

At Muskogee I was the guest of Miss Alice Robertson, whose mother, Mrs. A. E. W. Robertson, is counted the finest Creek translator living. She has received the title Ph. D. from Eastern schools for her attainments in this line. She has translated the New Testament and Psalms, together with about twenty-five of our finest hymns into the Creek language; has given all her life, as her father, Rev. S. N. Worcester, did before her to this people. Miss Robertson is also a teacher among the Creeks. A short time ago she was sent out to collect money for the mission, which she did with great success; while thus engaged she received two thousand five hundred dollars as a personal gift. With this money she has built a comfortable, commodious home for Indian girls attending school, naming it "Minerva Home," in honor of the donor's wife.

Texas is full of bright, active, wide-awake women. They invigorate one like the breezes of their own wide plains. A very successful "Woman's Congress" was held in Dallas last fall—the first, I think, that any state has held. This marks a new era, and the Texas suffragists are determined to keep things moving. One of the pastors in Dallas thinks this "woman movement" is beginning to "trouble the church." If the church has been right in regard to her teaching about woman, what is there to fear? There are many noble exceptions, yet the majority of ministers do seem to be a little bit afraid that women will get out of "their sphere." Wonder if women really have not as much sense of propriety and fitness of things as men and ministers?

Mrs. Stoddard, the president of Texas, is constantly in the field, and the work is growing, in spite of every hindrance and fear. Just before I entered the state Mrs. Stoddard was to speak on temperance teaching in the public schools. Notice of the same was sent to the schools, including the Bailey University, which is a co-educational institution. The president read the notice at chapel exercise, and then advised the students not to hear women speak in public until they (the women) had grown whiskers and moustache. I've been wondering ever since I heard of this remarkable remark how much hair has to do with ability to present truth. Perhaps some reader of THE UNION SIGNAL can tell.

At Houston one of the pastors lectured for the W. C. T. U. He very naturally thought some of the sisters should be on the platform, or more properly in the pulpit with him, as the address was given for the union. The recording secretary of the state was chosen to represent the union. But some of the officials were so horrified over the sacrilege of a woman sitting in the pulpit (she did not open her mouth, but learned in silence) that they have not yet recovered their equilibrium. Poor souls! It reminds me of a story I have heard of Miss Griffin, who had consented to speak for the colored people in their own church; but when she started up the pulpit steps a good colored brother pulled at the skirt of her gown, saying, "We don't 'low no 'oomans in de pulpit." I must say, however, that this is not universal with our colored any more than with our white brethren. In Texas and Mississippi I spoke from pulpits of both races; and there, as in the North, some churches refused to open their doors for "women speakers." In the good days near at hand, how we shall laugh at this ignorance and prejudice.

There are no truer, braver, more capable, or more loyal women in all our ranks, than our white-ribbon sisters of the South. We are disposed to think that temperance and suffrage sentiments are much stronger in the North than in the South. But in proportion to the white population in the South, I believe we have quite as many W. C. T. U. and suffrage women there as in the North. In Mississippi there are two hundred and fifty thousand more colored than white people. The states are sparsely settled and have few large towns.

All this makes reform work hard, but the women of the South, with their sisters North, are beginning to question those "traditions of men taught them for the commandments of God." Unless the church is reasonable and just toward women, the day is not distant when she will be more troubled than now over this "woman movement." The average woman everywhere has worshiped the church more than God, and this is true of men as well as women; but everywhere women are reading and thinking for themselves; and slowly but surely the power of tradition, superstition and misinterpretation is losing its hold, and forever. Thank God for this.

In New Orleans I spoke for the Portia Club, organized two or three years ago by that pioneer of the South in all work for woman, Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick. The purpose of this club is to study public questions and woman's relation to the government. My theme was suffrage, and I had a fine and appreciative audience.

I found my hearers ready for the most radical utterance on that subject. For years Mrs. Merrick has led the battle for woman's equality. Her husband's high position at the bar, and her own wise and lovely personality have given her wide influence.

While her guest in New Orleans we were invited to a reception given by the Ladies' Physical Club. The members gave an exhibition of their agility, grace and prowess that proved woman has only to be divested of the long, trailing, cramping, abominable garments approved by custom to become as active and strong as her brother. The actors were all in short, convenient garments. After awhile we shall find it possible to wear such raiment outside the Physical Culture Club. God hasten the day when woman shall not be "cribbed, cabined and confined" by every garment she wears.

Mrs. Mount and Mrs. Snell went before the state legislature of Mississippi in the interest of prohibition, and found a strong sentiment in its favor; but before action could be reached, a very prominent Methodist churchman came out with his biennial interview, in which he heartily advocated the local option law, and disapproved of any change for the better, notwithstanding the emphatic declaration of the M. E. Church that the liquor traffic "cannot be licensed without sin," and in defiance of his own previos uutterances.

This is an old act repeated. When will godly men cease to play into the hands of rumsellers, and the official representatives of the church truly represent her by leading the pews up to her grand platforms. The church is an inverted pyramid to-day—the pews on top.

I spoke once in Birmingham, Ala. Found a handful of true, faithful women holding aloft a white banner in the midst of wine-drinking, fashionable circles, including scores of church members. I trust Mrs. Spencer, the state president, will write THE UNION SIGNAL an account of how a good Presbyterian pastor in Birmingham came out in a sermon for the W. C. T. U. and equal rights for women as well as men.

So the battle goes, North and South, East and West.

CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

En route, March 16.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

Finally, be ye all of one mind, . . . love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: . . . and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that is in you.—I Peter 3: 8, 15.

Now that Mrs. Carse has started on her journeying for the Temple, and, like the Wandering Jew, will keep going, going till her mission is accomplished, one thought seems daily uppermost, and it is this to which Lilian Whiting recently has given wings: "To come into an intelligent and reverent recognition of God and of the work and example of Christ, and of the true way to live and work in accordance with spiritual laws is even more important to success in life than it is to recognize intelligently the law of gravitation or the fundamental truths of mathematics. The more fully one comprehends the spiritual laws, the more can he control the conditions of his life—on the material side of it. . . . . The higher dominates the lower. . . . . He can arise in his spiritual integrity and say: 'I have such and such a purpose in life. I will work it out to such and such ends. I will control the currents; I will not be controlled by them.' . . . 'For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him.' . . . . It is the wealth, the power, the spiritual motor of a lifetime to enter into the entire comprehension of these words. A completer faith would place all life on a basis so new, and one commanding an outlook so vast, that it would be practically a new heaven and a new earth." What are a million dollars to the Controller of the universe! Walking with God puts one in the line of the "all things" which belong to those who believe. So it does not astonish us that an hour after a little prayer among a half-dozen the other day, in which this journey and its object were, like other spiritual things, laid on the altar, one of our own sweet women met Mrs. Carse, and said: "I've been thinking to head your $1,000 class," and wrote her name for that amount. And we were looking for it when, a few days' later, another blessed woman, whose deeds do follow her, wrote her name the first in the $10,000 class. It has given us much joy that two of our own women of Chicago have been the leaders in the new classification.

***

Mr. L. R. Morgan, Bridgeville, Pa., sends $10, with the friendly wish that he could make it "ten times ten." Mrs. Laura M. Thomson has forwarded $10 accompanied by the same words, and an expression of faithful intention to interest all her friends in the Temple. Mrs. Mary C. Douglass, East Hamilton, N. Y., has filled up one of the pledges for $100, to be paid before January, 1895. She states: "This pledge is in keeping of a wish expressed by my sister, Ellen E. Douglass, who died last June, that $100 be sent to you for the Temple, and mother's name be inscribed in Willard Hall." The W. C. T. U., of Westwood, Ohio, sends $10 for the Temple, through its treasurer, Mrs. Jas. N. Gamble. The Medina county union contributes $20 toward having the name of Mrs. E. J. Gray on the Ohio tablet. Five dollars are given by veterans for recording their names in the Willard Hall record book; these names are: Mrs. Mary F. G. Weed, Mrs. Mary E. Gardner, Mrs. Sallie Knapp, Mrs. E. N. Bishop, and Mrs. Louise Kimler. Twenty-two good, substantial Medina babies, too, sent their names with twenty-two dimes, "to make them welcome," the letter from the secretary, Mrs. D. A. Wilcox, said. Bless their bright eyes! they and their grandmothers are welcomed with tender joy. May these blessed babies never suffer the woes entailed by drink. God grant that our work may make this world a safer place for them. Mrs. E. M. Denny, for the Vermont W. C. T. U., sends $25, contributed by individual members, with the promise of $20 more soon to be forwarded. The letter says: "We feel great interest in the Temple, and loyal confidence in Mrs. Carse." Mrs. M. E. Golladay, president of the Holden, Mo., W. C. T. U., writes: "A few months ago I saw a story in THE UNION SIGNAL of a little girl who had a 'penny poppy show.' I thought, 'What a little girl can do an older girl can try.' Last week I had my 'show,' calling it an 'Art and Loan Exhibit.' A ten-cent admission fee cleared us $14.71, which I take great pleasure in sending for the Temple, our union having previously sent $37.91 on a $100 pledge."

***

Mrs. Martha D. Walton, Nine Points, Pa., aged eighty-two years, writes for a mite-box; she wishes to secure the souvenir spoon. The Columbian souvenir she already possesses. Another of our veterans, Mrs. Sarah E. Butterworth, West Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "I received the Columbian souvenir, and think it very beautiful; so do all who see it. I wish to enter my name now for a Temple spoon. I want it for a wedding present for my daughter, that it may remind her that she must never allow intoxicating drink to enter her home." Mrs. Anna H. Lloyd, Beverly, N. Y., writes of her Columbian souvenir: "It certainly is a little beauty as it lies in its pretty, dainty casket, so pure, substantial and emblematic." Mrs. I. H. Clark, Winchester, O., says: "We had our Columbian souvenir on exhibition at our New Year's reception, given by the Y's. I trust very many white-ribboners will become the happy possessors of the treasure. The Temple is more than all I had pictured in my mind it could be."

***

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

SAY IT.

When you've got a thing to say,
Say it! Don't take half a day.
When your tale's got little in it,
Crowd the whole thing in a minute!
Life is short—a fleeting vapor—
Don't you fill an eight-page paper
With a tale which, at a pinch,
Could be cornered in an inch.
Boil it down until it simmers;
Polish it until it glimmers.
When you've got a thing to say,
Say it! Don't take half a day.

—Texas White Ribbon.

A LEAF FROM PATTY'S LIFE.

BY LIZZIE M. REESE.

Was it the sharp patter of sleet on the window pane, or the shrill call of a factory whistle three blocks away, that caused Patty to open her eyes just as Miss Prim's hall clock struck seven? One nice cozy stretch, one sigh of luxurious comfort, then a toss of the bed-clothes and Patty is out on the tiny strip of carpet by her cot, and is quickly dressing.

Her little attic chamber looks very bare and forlorn in the dreary half light of early morning. The sleet on the tin roof right overhead, and the howling wind do not sound very cheering, and the loose window-sash surely lets in the cold more than usual.

Patty's fingers are almost too cold to tie her shoes, but they are finished at last, and after capturing all her stray curls and waves into a demure knot, and giving her face an icy bath, she comes to a stop and looks round her small room—not sadly or gloomily, or even as if she were depressed by its cold and dreary aspect—but smilingly, happily. It is her room, all to herself.

There are a bed, a looking-glass, a curtain, a box for her clothes, another to hold her toilet articles, and a rocking-chair. Ah! Patty feels rich to possess these treasures. There was a time when she lived on the streets—a dark, weary, hopeless time, when she was often cold and always hungry. Then came life at the mission; and at last Miss Prim appeared. She wanted a child who had "no belongings," to train.

Patty answered to that; there was no one really belonging to her in this whole big world, so Miss Prim took Patty and a new life began.

Miss Prim's boarding-house was well known in New York. She had kept it for twenty-one years. Patty had been there just six months, and Miss Prim declared she had found in the child, "solid comfort."

Patty never found her work heavy or tiresome. She lived in a world of her own happy imagination. She always played she had a mother. The old rocking-chair in her room was never empty, but filled by a sweet, tender presence. While Patty cleaned all Miss Prim's knives, she soared away in thoughts, and would talk with her dear play mother about a country home, or a walk in the woods, or a trip on the cars.

"Good-bye, mother; I must go down. Now put your shawl over your shoulders. Are you warm and comfortable?" Tenderly Patty speaks, bending over the old rocking-chair, and then goes out to begin her day, the first duty being to knock at No. 12 and see if Miss Rushwood is ready to have her gas logs lighted and the steam heat turned on and her maid called.

Miss Rushwood is a very rich lady who spends two months every winter at Miss Prim's on her way to Florida. She is very languid, very tired of everything, and to Patty is very interesting. To the child's gentle knock a weary voice answers: "Come in."

Patty gives her eyes a rapid feast as she opens the door—lace curtains, soft rugs, couches, easy chairs, a silk screen, a lovely white draped bed, pictures, lamps, a dressing table, with silver topped bottles, and a faint, delicious odor of violets everywhere. Miss Rushwood's pale, weary face is the only cloud on the picture.

"Light the logs quickly, child," goes on the weary voice; "perhaps that will make it more cheerful. It has been such a long night, and a stormy day will not be much better."

With a touch of the match the logs burst into flame; then Patty turns on the steam, and is walking out to call Patience, the maid, when Miss Rushwood speaks again: "Thank you, Patty. You seem to be a very useful little girl. Does your mother live here in New York?"

"I haven't any real mother," answers Patty, and opening the door, goes out.

Miss Rushwood sat up in bed and repeated wonderingly; "No real mother! What can the pretty little creature mean?"

When Patience came in she saw a look of animation in her mistress' eyes, and was surprised by Miss Rushwood's asking her if she had ever particularly noticed Patty, "And can you tell me, Patience, what the child means by saying she has no real mother?"

Patience answers as she begins helping Miss Rushwood to dress: "Yes, Miss, I do know; it is just the touchingest thing—the poor child has not a soul belonging to her, but if you are near her when she is working her face looks so happy, and she is often talking to her play mother, as she says. It is a sad pity," Patience continues, as she gently brushes out her lady's long, soft hair, "that such a child can't have a real mother to love instead of a poor shadow."

. . . . . .

Miss Prim finds this rainy day just the one into which to crowd a hundred neglected duties.

"Come, Patty," she called, "there is still time before luncheon to put in order the linen closet. Such a day makes me feel like work, and I do so enjoy doing things myself."

Miss Prim is thin and frail looking, but Patty is sure a regiment of soldiers might tremble before her when she felt like "doing things herself." She did more work in a few hours than all her maids in a day.

Four shelves are done, and stand in beautiful, immaculate order, when Miss Prim is wanted in the parlor.

"Now, Patty, you must finish the other two; I can't trust them to another soul. Four rows on each shelf, and nine pillow-slips in each. Count, and be very careful to keep them perfectly straight. Then lock the door and give Eliza the key." Miss Prim takes off her apron, gives her bangs a nervous pat, and leaves the room, while Patty works on, alone (she imagines) for the first time since morning. It will be nice now for mother to have her walk, she thinks; and as her little hands are busy, so her thoughts carry her away, away in happy dreaming. It is Central Park; and in summer. Birds are singing. Radiant sunshine floods grass, flowers and trees. "Mother," softly speaks Patty, "let us sit here and see the swans. Is not the grass soft under your feet?"

Then she begins counting the pillow slips on the second pile—"one, two, three." The little hand pauses and the voice goes on. "Oh! may I put my head in your lap and look up through the trees at the sky?" Another second of silence, a long drawn, happy breath, and the realities of life are back once more—"four, five, six, seven eight, nine. One pile done."

There is a slight rustle. The child turns her head and sees Miss Rushwood going out of the room. She thought to find Miss Prim here, thinks Patty, and goes on with her work—and play.

Miss Rushwood has heard Patty as she talked with her shadow mother, and in those few moments has felt and realized the need and want of her life. Her heart swells with a great and joyous thought that some good angel has sent; and although her eyes are full of tears they must be happy ones, for her lips hold the very sweetest smile when she enters Miss Prim's parlor.

It is so rare a thing for Miss Rushwood to come into that room that Miss Prim looks up at her visitor somewhat startled, and comes to meet her with outstretched hands.

"I hope there is nothing the matter. Don't let this storm frighten you off to Florida immediately," she exclaims.

"Oh, no, Miss Prim, I'm not thinking of the storm. Let us sit down; I have something to ask you." With a hand trembling with excitement she draws Miss Prim to a seat beside her on a low couch.

"Tell me about Patty, your little maid," she eagerly asks, her cheeks showing a faint color and her eyes glowing with interest. "It is so sweet and pathetic—her playing mother."

Miss Prim is a close observer of human nature. Being at the head of a big boarding-house for so many years has given her great opportunities for the study of people. Now she felt and saw that Miss Rushwood was agitated by some strong and happy purpose, so she did not question but answered with her usual directness.

"A better child never drew breath, nor a more lonely one, for she hasn't one belonging to her; and yet the love in her poor little soul must lavish itself somewhere, so she plays she has things."

Miss Rushwood reaches down and takes one of Miss Prim's hands in her own beautiful jeweled ones, and earnestly exclaims: "Oh! my heart is just starving for such love. Can I not take Patty and be something real to her?"

Miss Prim would like to kiss her rich, aristocratic boarder, but contents herself by giving the soft hand a warm pressure. A big tear rolls down her cheek and a torrent of words from her lips.

"My dear Miss Rushwood, it is a heavenly desire and I know it makes you happy. Your life will be full of interest; you will get well. Oh, I wish I could take half the poor little friendless creatures right here in New York and mother them all. There is no one but me to ask about Patty, and I thank God that I can give her into such good and tender keeping."

. . . . . .

"Seven, eight, nine, the last pile done. Mother, we must go home now, the sky is all red with the sunset." Patty speaks softly, and closes the closet door and takes Eliza the key.

. . . . . .

One morning just two years later, in the Grand Union Station, I came upon Miss Rushwood and her adopted daughter. They made such a pretty picture bending over the flower counter. Miss Rushwood was so changed—her face having a look of happiness and vigor; and the lovely little girl at her side seemed herself the embodiment of spring and flowers and sunny joy. As I drew near to say how glad I was to find their train for the sunny south would be mine also, I heard Patty say:

"Mamma, let us send Miss Prim as a good-bye the biggest bunch of violets we can buy."

—New Church Messenger.

BABY'S RIGHTS.

III.

BY MARY C. GLASS.

Babies have a divine right to all the fresh air and sunshine they can possibly absorb. Two noted scientists of Great Britain, Harold Wager and Auberon Herbert, in a joint paper in the Popular Science Monthly for May, say:

"We suspect that no class of human beings suffer so much from the poison of foul air as infants. Older children and grown persons are seldom so much shut up, and the diseases by which so many infants die, infantile diarrhœa, convulsions and infantile pneumonia, strongly suggest the irritation likely to be produced by breathing these waste poisons, though improper food must also bear a share of the blame."

But don't give the baby sunshine in just the way some Pasadena ladies do. They put on a broad-brimmed hat, raise a large parasol over themselves and carelessly leave the top of the baby's cab turned so that the blazing afternoon California sun shines fairly and squarely into the baby's eyes. That is one thing which always makes me indignant, and another is to see a baby left in the care of a rough, ignorant, coarse nurse-girl, while the mother goes for her afternoon drive, holding in her arms her dear poodle dog.

Baby has also a right to become acquainted with its father when he has to wait a few minutes for his dinner. Be sure the baby is sweet and kissable, and then lay it in its father's arms. Don't be alarmed,—he is not "going to let it drop" (in his heart he is delighted to be allowed to hold such a wonderful miniature of himself); if you do that a few times they will both longingly expect it. Don't, I beg of you, as soon as your baby begins to say two or three little syllables begin to teach it to tell "what the rooser says," the hen, the kitty, the "bow-wow," the "old moo," the "too-toos," the horse, the ducks and every living thing on the place. This stimulates that tender little brain more than is good for it, and if you are not careful you will "rue the day" that you were tempted to make your baby show off. Keep the little brain quiet, let the baby eat, sleep and grow, which is all that ought to be required of it.

When baby is quietly sleeping never allow it awakened and shown off—no, not even if five hundred aunts come to see it at once. If they understand that you never do it they will wait and respect you all the more. Some babies are extremely nervous and they especially need to be kept as quiet as possible in body and mind, and as you value your child's future health and happiness never allow any one, under any circumstances, to tickle it; physicians say many cases of "St. Vitus' dance" can be traced directly to this practice.

Always speak kindly and gently to your baby, for although it seems to know very little now, it is really a little human phonograph laying up tones and expressions of every voice it hears and will give them back to us at some unexpected time. Do you know that nearly all of the so-called mischief which a baby gets into is either from some inherited trait—as sulkiness or impudence—or is an imitation of us. When you in a state of nervous hurry empty your spool basket into your lap in a frantic search for some missing buttons—and as you find them put them into your mouth for safe keeping—you sometimes forget that some one is looking on; and when you go into the next room down comes the basket into baby's lap and buttons and many other articles go into his mouth for "safe keeping" too. If he sees you take a dish from the table, why should he not try to do the same thing, and he does not know that the dish is heavy and full of cooked beans, and that it will drop from the little hands and break into a dozen pieces. When that happens what do you do? If you have buried two or three babies, and the spirit of Christ abides in your soul, you will take the scared little one in your arms for a few moments and will kiss the dismayed, startled look away from the precious little face before telling it to "not touch"; but if you are overworked, tired and thoughtless, and have never seen a "waxen baby" of your own in its last sleep—you may strike your little one a blow which will hurt the baby heart even more than it does the tender, quivering flesh; and when you do it don't forget that "He who died to save us all," said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto Me." When all mothers become wise, and tender, and patient and strong, then will dawn the "golden age of babyhood."

My sister, resolve and plan and then "carry out," that you will have at least a few minutes of real rest every day. No matter if the parlor is not dusted, if your crazy-quilt is never finished, if your crocheted lace is never any longer, if the baby's new dress has to put up with five instead of seventeen tucks, and if there is no cake for supper. I make this plea for babies because so many of them are so cruelly treated in even respectable families. They are fed on cold, sour milk, are left for hours in damp clothing, with cold feet; are trotted up and down as if they were rubber dolls instead of the most tender, sensitive little creatures the Lord ever made; they are thrown up in the air, scolded, tickled, jerked up by one arm, are allowed to scream for days with chafed places on their poor little bodies, and are neglected in many ways—even by their own mothers. May the Lord have mercy on such mothers! If I were able I would like to have that wonderful, "Inasmuch" verse printed in letters of gold and hung up in every house in the world where there are little children.

Just love and "mother" and cuddle your babies to your heart's content. I don't believe wise loving ever spoilt a baby or any other creature; remember, it will not be for long; one-fourth of the human race sleeps to-day in baby graves, and the rest soon grow out of our arms, and many of them are heirs to a hard life.

"Oh, little feet, that such long years
Must wander on through hopes and fears,
Must ache and bleed beneath your load;—
I, nearer to the wayside inn
Where toil shall cease and rest begin,
Am weary, thinking of your road."

Pasadena, Cal.

NO!

BY MAUD PAYNE.

A little word, yet hard to speak—
Hard for us so small and weak.

Weak of body, but strong of mind,
Legioners often are, you'll find.

No cowards among us, not a knave,
Only the true, the tried, the brave;

A gallant, great and glorious band,
To drive King Alcohol from our land,—

No! No cider for us, no beer,
No wine for Legioners, far or near!

Nothing for us so fraught with woe;
No intoxicating drinks, no, no!

When looking on their sparkling glow
We're brave enough to say no, no.

And all can fight this deadliest foe,
With that one strong weapon, No!

W. Berlin, Vt.

HEART GARDENS.

Hearts are gardens where we sow
Every day such tiny seeds;
It depends on you, dear child,
Whether you reap flowers or weeds.

What you sow that shall you reap—
Seeds of peace or discontent,
Seeds of days filled with kind deeds,
Seeds of days and hours ill-spent.

Seeds of love or seeds of hate,
Seeds of right or seeds of wrong,
Seeds that you must reap with tears,
Seeds you garner with a song.

Sow the seed, ah! carefully,
Seeds once sown are past recall;
Tears, repentance, are in vain;
"Too late" comes alike to all!

Crowd each day with loving thoughts,
Fill it full of loving deeds;
And heart gardens will be crowned
With fair blossoms from such seeds!

—Florence A. Jones.

KATY'S GUESS.

With twelve white eggs in a downy nest,
The old hen sits in a box in the shed,
And the children yesterday stood and guessed
Of the thoughts that were hid in her speckled breast,
Of the dreams that danced through her red crowned head.

"She thinks," said the labor-hating Ned,
"Of a land where weasels are all asleep,
Where the hawks are blind and the dogs are dead,
Where are heaps of corn as high as the shed,
And plenty of earth-worms for her to eat."

"She remembers the county fair," says Bess,
"And the prize she took at Hampton Town."
"No, she doesn't," cried Jenny, the less,
"She dreams of the little ducks, I guess,
And wonders why they don't get drowned."

"And what say you, little curly pate?
I see a thought in your merry eyes."
"She finks," said the bright-haired baby Kate,
As she lifts the latch of the garden gate,
"Tere'll be tickens to scratch for by-and-by."

"Three cheers for the wisdom of three years old!
Who told you the secret, little pet,
That love is better than ease or gold,
That labor for love pays a thousand fold?
'Oo finked it oorself!' Well, don't forget."

—The Household.

MATIE.

BY MRS. S. ROSALIE SILL.

Hearing a timid little knock upon the door, it was opened, and we saw standing there a little girl, who said:

"I want to come in, please."

The face of the child was fair, with large hazel eyes, which reminded one of a young fawn.

"I wanted to come in, 'cause Harry said this was a home where no one ever was drunk. I wanted to know how it would seem, please, 'cause papa always gets drunk, and over at Tina's house her papa does, too."

"Where is your other shoe, and what is your name, little girl?" I said to her.

"My name is Matie. Papa threw one of my shoes in the fire last night. Oh, it was awful last night. Papa put the baby up on a high shelf, and said it must learn to take care of its own self. And the dear little thing reached out its hands and made such a sorry cry for some one to take it down. But papa would not let mamma when she wanted to, and turned to push her away; while his back was turned Harry took down the baby and ran away. Papa started after Harry, but was so drunk he fell down, so Harry got clear away."

"What made your papa put baby up on the shelf?" was asked.

"'Cause he cried when he was hungry. He don't cry when he has enough to eat, 'cause when Mrs. Barker gave him some milk, he never cried the leastest mite all day. Mamma tells me never to cry, 'cause if I do I'll never grow to be a woman. I 'spect baby will grow to be a man if he does cry. Don't you think womens has a harder time than men?"

Could it be possible this mite of humanity had been long enough in this world to learn so much?

"I don't want to grow to be a woman, though!" and there came a pitiful little sigh, and the small frame quivered.

"Tell me why, dear?"

"'Cause womens has to marry men, and they get drunk!"

On being told a woman did not have to marry if she did not choose to—not unless she loved some one better than all the world beside—and he was good, and did not drink, Matie looked up at me with those large, questioning eyes and said:

"Truly?"

"Yes, truly."

It would have done one good to have seen the pale little face grow luminous as she said:

"Then I do want to grow to be a woman!"

Matie was given all she wanted to eat, another shoe was placed upon the small foot, and the child went out from us feeling comforted.

We left for the South soon afterward, not returning until the end of the winter. Our traveling garments had scarcely been laid aside when Matie's brother, Harry, came over saying:

"Matie is dying, and wants to see you."

"How did it happen? Has Matie been ill?"

"Father pushed her over, and she was injured internally, the doctor says."

When we arrived poor little Matie was in great distress, yet she knew me, and tried to speak.

"Does Matie know she is dying?" her mother was asked.

"I guess not. I hated to tell the poor darling," and the mother burst out in an agony of grief.

Leaning down close to Matie, I said: "Do you wish to go to heaven, dear?"

"Who said I was going away? I wanted to grow to be a woman—after you told me—and now—I—never—" and the large hazel eyes were turned upon her father, with a look of such pitiful pleading it would have touched a heart of stone.

"Oh, Matie, child, stay! Stay, and I promise you upon my knees I'll never touch a drop of liquor again!" and the man was upon his knees with the deep fountain of his heart broken up.

It did seem as though Matie understood. For a smile dawned upon her face, although it might have been because of the knowledge of the glory beyond.

"It's always so!" sobbed the man. "The innocent suffer for the guilty. From Calvary down it's always been so."

Beside the body of little Matie, in the marble-like repose of death, the father signed the pledge.

The offering of her pure spirit had breathed a new life and earnestness of purpose within her father's heart.

Riggs, Ohio.

If you have done wrong, then go and confess it. If your lesson is tough, master it. If the garden is to be weeded, weed it first and play afterward. Do the thing you don't like to do first, and then, with a clear conscience, try the rest.—Christian Advocate.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Our Cozy Corner story writers have been silent for so long that I am sure you will welcome this continuation of the little story written by our "Daisy Dimpleton."

ELSIE'S GOLDEN RULE.

Elsie is a little older than when I wrote about her before, so she has learned to serve Jesus better.

She now lives in the city. One day in the spring-time she asked her mother if she might pick a few of the blue and white violets which grew in their small garden.

"You may have them all if you wish, dear," said her mother, "but do not let any one come inside of the garden wall."

Elsie promised, saying, "I want only a few to wear."

She was just going to leave the garden when she heard a faint sigh.

Turning, she saw a ragged little girl looking down on this, the only green spot near.

"Would you like some flowers?" asked Elsie, kindly.

"Jest wouldn't I," said the child.

Elsie was going to tell her to come in and pick some, but she remembered what mamma had said about not letting any one come inside the wall.

"I might pick her some," thought she, "but I want to read my new book."

Then she remembered her rule, "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." So she picked quite a large bouquet and handed it to the girl who went away delighted.

Then Elsie went into the house, and I think she must have enjoyed her book much more than if she had been selfish.

And we quite agree with the little author in her last remark, don't we?

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I am a farmer boy nine years old. I have a temperance cat named Blackie. My mamma reads out of THE UNION SIGNAL, stories to me. I wonder if any little writers have as far as I do to go to school—three miles. When the roads are good I ride on my bicycle.

Big Foot Prairie, Ill. CHARLIE R. HERITAGE.

Blessings on the farmer's boy who goes three miles to school.

I am a little girl eight years old. I think the letters in the Cozy Corner are very good. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and I belong to the J. C. E., to the J. T. and to the Mission Band and attend the Congregational Sunday-school. This is a temperance town.

Viroqua, Wis. MAMIE E. LEMEN.

Dear me, what a lot of societies for one little girl to belong to!

When we left Scalby, near Scarborough, England, I left my Persian cat, Phrynne. Her beautiful black coat has turned gray now. She is weak and blind and sleeps most of the time in her basket. When THE UNION SIGNAL arrived my grandmother and aunts were so pleased, and they write be sure and send us the picture of "Toots" to our "Rest Cottage." HAL THOMPSON,

"Tooting for Prohibition."

Glen Avon, Duluth, Minn.

It was thoughtful of you, Hal, to send your grandmother the famous picture of Toots.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

284.

CHARADE.

A temperance man well known to fame.
If you would know his given name
Just bend your knees and you will see
The letters that the sounds convey.
He's been a long time in the fight
Through days of darkness and of light.
To O add head and tail aright
And then his whole name comes to sight.

SAMUEL HUTCHINSON.

285.

ENIGMA.

My whole, composed of twenty-three letters, expresses the sentiment of the majority of the people of Maine.

When a man in Maine is accused and found guilty of selling 6-17-15-2 or 13-1-19-2-21-8-13 of any kind, the people get stirred up and their blood 14-10-9-23-13 for they look upon the man as being as bad as a 8-4-12-15-18; so they 20-3-11-18-5-13-20-22-8-15 his stock of goods and land the man in 1-2-7-13-10-16. H. B.

286.

BEHEADINGS AND CURTAILMENTS.

1. Curtail a great temperance leader's first name and leave the name of a country.
2. Behead to be healthy and leave a fermented liquor.
3. Curtail a great temperance worker's last name and leave a means of travel. EVA F. ROBERTS.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MARCH 15.

277. Neal Dow.
278. B-rave.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, The Land of Prohibition. By Mrs. Harrison Lee ... 2
The Member-at-Large. IV. By Helen Campbell ... 2
The Inventor of Dimensions in Political Righteousness. By John G. Woolley ... 2, 3
Economic Principles. III. By Eliza Stowe Twitchell ... 4
A Strong Word for Temperance. By May French-Sheldon, F. R. G. S ... 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
From the South ... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Say It ... 6
A Leaf from Patty's Life. By Lizzie M. Reese ... 6
Baby's Rights. III. By Mary C. Glass ... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, No! By Maud Payne ... 7
Poems, Heart Gardens—Katy's Guess ... 7
Matie. By Mrs. S. Rosalie Sill ... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts ... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
A Newly Discovered Saurian ... 8
The United Kingdom Alliance ... 8
The Age of Consent ... 8
THE WATCH TOWER ... 8
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Western Australia—The Martinique—New South Wales—Queensland Notes ... 6
World's Wave Crests ... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Maine—Eastern Washington—Vermont ... 10
News in a Nutshell ... 11, 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ... 12
Temple Receipts ... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ... 13
SIGNAL NOTES ... 14, 15
... 16

There is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.—Gal. 3:28.

A NEWLY DISCOVERED SAURIAN.

The study of geology has made this earth a much more fascinating planet than it could possibly have been before the mystery attending its evolution was so fully unveiled. Who has not reveled in a return to prehistoric days, dwelling, in imagination, on most friendly terms with the polysyllabic monsters who have left here and there traces of their once proud proprietorship. Not the naturalist alone rejoices when the bones of an Ichtheosaurus or Mastodon are exhumed, and he is once more forced to appear upon the planet after his coy withdrawal of a score or two of ages.

But it may be questioned if the chief cause for enjoyment does not, after all, lie in a comfortable sense that we have left these amiable creatures so far behind in the evolution of the ages that we can afford to dwell leniently upon their personal idiosyncrasies—their lack of grace and general inutility. "It feels so good when it stops hurting," may be applied to each step in the ascent of life, and we question if even a Darwin or an Agassiz would care to return in propria personæ to the paleozoic or silurian age, however enthusiastic they may be in exploring their relics.

The world of thought has its science of geology, not so clearly defined as is the more material science; its various strata overlap each other with less strongly marked points of departure; the denizens of one epoch may be found intruding, with unjustifiable pertinacity, upon the territory of another; nevertheless to the trained eye the differentiation is clearly apparent and whenever the ploughshare of progress turns up the bones of some extinct thought (or lack of thought) it is comparatively easy of classification in the Museum of Mental Antiquities.

Such a discovery has but recently come to us, and it is with keen delight that we present to our readers the most perfect specimen of prehistoric ages with their ungainly, monstrous, exaggerated forms of life that has come to light within a quarter century. The specimen in question is called "Bible Studies on Woman's Position and Work in the Church," and is the fruit of the mentality of Rev. James D. McLean, of Dallas, Tex.

We wish there were space in our columns for a comprehensive review of this remarkable document. Starting with the proposition that "there is no more practical question before the church to-day than that concerning the position and work of women," it proceeds to settle that question once for all, with the assurance of a master of destiny. From the Bible (as it is read) it deduces the proposition that God is "a jealous God," not only of the fact, but the manner of His worship. The inference from the carefully adduced passages is that God would prefer no worship at all rather than worship, however genuine, in a form not prescribed by Himself.

Just where God's plan for His own worship changed from the elaborate Jewish ritual to the simplicity of the various Protestant churches our friend does not feel called upon to state, but that the change has been made and can be clearly proven to have been made, we are sure, from the fact that he is himself a Protestant of Protestants.

Now, since God has shown how He is to be publicly worshiped; since woman was created "after the man," "for the man," "of the man" and "as a 'help-meet,' or 'companion' for man"; since no woman was called to follow Christ among the twelve apostles; since Paul clearly declares that the Corinthian women are not to "speak" in the church, it follows as a logical necessity that no woman can speak in a church anywhere without violating God's command; that no woman can be even apostolic, and that all women are "cursed of God by being placed under the subjection of the man."

The fact that only Jews were called to be apostles would not, in the eyes of our friend, prove that no Gentile could be apostolic, nor does the obvious lack of compliment to the masculine nature appear to suggest itself to him from the fact that woman's subjection to man could be regarded as a "curse." Neither does he consider that a literal following out of Paul's behest would sweep our choirs and our Sunday-schools empty of women's voices, for the verb "to speak" is of a broader interpretation than merely "to preach," and the "silence" enjoined is absolute.

There is one concession in the little volume which like the fly in the pot of ointment, may prove a dangerous precedent. In speaking of women as prophetesses, Deborah, Miriam and the like, the author says: "But these were undoubtedly exceptional cases and inspired for special occasions. When God makes an exception by special inspiration then it is right." But who is to say that the impulse to "speak in meeting" among the womanhood of to-day is not an "exception by special inspiration" to the general principle deduced by our brother that woman's position "should be one of silence and subordination to her brethren in the Lord as regards public teaching, ruling and praying." The question of just where inspiration ceases requires inspiration itself for its solving.

But we have no further space to devote to this mental Saurian. Its arguments have been answered so many times, its false logic refuted and its grotesqueness made so manifest that we have no heart to thresh again the old straw.

We only refer to it with the genuine pride of a naturalist, and with something too of his rejoicing that the age from which this type has been exhumed is, after all, an extinct age; that though this is doubtless the most perfectly articulated specimen of the epoch it is still but a "specimen," "dry bones" only and never again can it move ponderously down the march of the ages to the obstruction of higher forms of life. The type is buried too deep for a vital resurrection and the specimens of its survival, however perfect, must be relegated to the forefront in the Museum of Mental and Moral Curiosities, and can henceforth be "regarded" only "in a bony light."

THE UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.

A remarkable group of men constitutes the leadership of the United Kingdom Alliance, the chief temperance organization in Great Britain. In the center stands Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the hero of a hundred battles, but never so strong in experience, or so thoroughly girded by the coöperation of the best men and women in Great Britain as to-day. He has wit and wisdom in equal parts, and if he wins it is because he is in the best sense of the word "winsome." He is not obtrusive in his profession of piety, "yet the man doth fear God though it seemeth not in him, by reason of large jests which he doth make." He is a Liberal in the highest sense of the word; he believes in woman's suffrage, and he even goes so far as to state in public that he thinks women ought to preach.

Thirty years ago the temperance folk, then a feeble minority, asked him to present their bill to the House of Commons. He answered with his usual promptness: "I will do so gladly if you can get me a seconder; we will begin the temperance education of our lawmakers at government expense, for we shall at least get a debate on the question." What a brave reply this was from the staunch champion so rightly beloved for that very bravery's sake! How different from the shuffling attitude of the typical politician! Another Member of Parliament was secured as seconder, and a division of the House revealed thirty-seven men willing to go on record for the most unpopular measure that could possibly have been introduced at that period. Thirty years later Sir Wilfrid's measure had an undoubted majority in the House of Commons, and this had been secured by the unfaltering faith and honest hard work that alone merits success.

Next to Sir Wilfrid stands Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., his sturdy and genial lieutenant, a strong, convincing speaker, and a man who has made his mark in the House of Commons and elsewhere, and has before him the best part of a noble career. These two, with James H. Raper, Esq., the witty, brilliant temperance orator, whose whole life has been invested for the cause and who is such a favorite with the people that he cannot be in a temperance audience, whether on the program or not, without being called on for a speech, constitute what may be called the triumvirate of the Alliance upon the platform.

The association has, from the first, been fortunate in its executive, which has consisted principally of hard-headed Manchester manufacturers and merchants. It never was stronger or more efficient than it is at present, and the need for strength and wisdom was never greater than to-day, for the government in power has taken up the question of temperance legislation and it is necessary that those who direct the energies of the greatest temperance organization in the United Kingdom should know when and how "to take occasion by the hand."

All who have an inside view of the temperance movement in England are well aware of these facts. Mr. Alexander McDougall, J. P., who is chairman of the executive and an honored leader in the philanthropic and religious work of Manchester, gives daily attention to the work of the Alliance. There are few mornings on which he fails to visit the offices, to consult with the secretary as to the more important business of the day; to meet deputations, and to help in the solution of the many difficulties which arise in the administration of the affairs of so great an organization. Mr. McDougall was only about forty-five years of age when he had realized what he deemed a sufficient fortune to enable him to retire from business and devote himself to the service of man. Such as he are the salt of the earth.

Rev. James Clark is another of the pillars of the Alliance. He has been described as genial, wise and firm, an embodiment of calm common sense; a man to whom those who know him intimately instinctively turn in times of trouble and difficulty. Mr. Clark has been a member of the executive of the Alliance for upwards of thirty years.

Frederick Smith, Esq., of Manchester, is as influential as any other in the council room and the exchequer. He is a fine, brawny young Englishman, devoted to business, highly successful in it, level-headed, and thoroughly trustworthy. Mr. Smith belongs to the younger generation. Rev. Canon Hicks, an Oxford examiner, a university extension lecturer, a specialist in Greek and archæology, and a hard working and much beloved clergyman of the Church of England, serves the Alliance well, both on the platform and in the board room. Another clergyman of the National Church on the executive is the Rev. Robert Catterall. Like Mr. F. H. Smith, he belongs to the younger generation, and like Mr. Smith, is a notable athlete, and possesses, in rather exceptional measure, those blessings so often prayed for in the rustic homes of Scotland and the North of Ireland—"health of body and soundness of mind."

The Alliance has its chief offices in Manchester, which is England's strategic point for reform workers. The men and the money are in the North. Manchester is the mother of movements; it was the centre of the free trade agitation; the Sunday closing movement has its headquarters there, and it is a proverb that "what Manchester thinks to-day London will think to-morrow."

The total income of the Alliance from subscriptions last year was £12,430. Thirty regularly salaried agents are employed. Most of these are what are called "district superintendents." The country is divided into districts, each being under the care of an accredited agent, whose business it is to manage the affairs of the Alliance in that district under the direction of the head office, which is in Manchester. A very large proportion of the work of the Alliance is done by friends of the movement, who receive no remuneration whatever. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M. P., Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., and Mr. J. H. Raper, each do as much work for the Alliance as if they were paid for it. It is now about fifteen years since Mr. Raper resigned his position of parliamentary agent for the Alliance. Since then he has not taken a penny for his magnificent services in the interests of the organization and of the movement which it exists to promote. Lady Henry Somerset, who is a vice-president of the Alliance, attends many of their large meetings, and, it is needless to say, is eagerly asked for.

The number of meetings, either organized or paid for by the Alliance, or organized and paid for by somebody else and addressed by representatives of the Alliance, amounts to 3,500 or 4,000 yearly. Many of these meetings are very large, and are addressed by speakers of great influence and power. The staff of the Alliance is a remarkably efficient one, several of the members of it being men of great originality and power. The editor of the Alliance News, which is the organ of the society, is Mr. H. S. Sutton, a poet of good standing. Emerson, on his first visit to England, became acquainted with Mr. Sutton, who was then a young man, and said of him that he was one of the most promising of the men whom he had met in the country. Mr. Sutton has had much to do with forming and directing the opinion of the people of England on the question of temperance legislation. In the early days of the Alliance Dr. F. R. Lees was its most prominent fighting man. Samuel Pope, Queen's Counsel, is still, and from the first, has been Hon. Secretary of the Alliance. The organization owes much more to the broadmindedness of Mr. Pope than will ever be generally known.

THE AGE OF CONSENT.

A very general awakening is taking place among friends of girls all over the country with regard to their better protection. Discussion of the age of consent is beginning to draw forth the inquiry from those who oppose regulation of vice in all its forms, Why should there be any age of consent? Is crime less criminal because two persons, or any number of persons, agree to its commission? Once turn the thought of the people in this direction and progress is rapid.

The following communication from Dr. Mary Wood Allen, of Toledo, O., National superintendent of our purity department, will be read with interest:

"Since taking charge of the purity department I have received so many inquiries as to the legal 'age of consent' in the various states and have myself felt so much the need of an authoritative, tabulated statement that I had been half inclined to formulate such a statement, and at last a request from THE UNION SIGNAL has crystallized my somewhat nebulous purpose into definite action. Some of the state superintendents included this information in their reports for 1893, and this I considered authoritative. I have written to the other state superintendents, or to state presidents where no superintendent was known, and have received reports from nearly all states. A number of interesting things have developed in this correspondence, which I will share with the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL.

"A letter from Aaron M. Powell, editor of The Philanthropist, says: 'The age of consent legislation, concerning which you inquire, is of old English common law origin, and was sometimes ten and sometimes twelve years. Several of our American states still remain at these ages. My own attention was first called to the general subject, and I was led to investigate as to the state of New York and subsequently other states and the District of Columbia, by the action of the British Parliament, following Mr. Stead's revelation. I was amazed to find that, while the British government had raised the age to thirteen and again to sixteen, in New York it was but ten, in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and District of Columbia, ten. Our New York committee took action in the matter for New York and New Jersey in 1885, by petitions, legislative committee hearings, etc. We invited the coöperation of the W. C. T. U. and Mrs. Burt, of New York, and Miss Willard were coöperative and helpful, and the first state to amend its age of consent law was New York, in which the age was raised from ten to sixteen, where it remains. New Jersey next took like action; Pennsylvania followed and later Congress raised the age from ten to sixteen in the District of Columbia.'

"It is interesting to know how much effort has been made by the W. C. T. U. to secure a more just law for the protection of girls. Also interesting to learn how often men have defeated these efforts. In Arkansas, the efforts of the W. C. T. U. to have the age raised to eighteen were defeated in the last legislature. It remains at fourteen. I have as yet received no reports from Alabama, Alaska and Arizona. M. C. Woody, of North Carolina, reports: 'The age of consent is crystallized in the North Carolina law at the tender age of ten. For eight years we have tried in vain to have it raised. Last winter we got the bill introduced, referred to committee and reported back for thirteen years, but it was tabled as soon as read.'

"M. E. Cables, of Connecticut, says that the age has been raised within the last few years from seven to fourteen. I have always seen Delaware quoted with the age of consent law at seven years. Through the kindness of Mrs. Marks I have a letter from Charles M. Curtis, attorney, showing that an outrage upon a girl under seven is felony and punishable with death; but by a later law the age of consent is raised to fifteen. He also says that cases are rare where the death penalty is enforced. In Idaho the age was ten until last year, when by the persistent effort of the W. C. T. U. it was raised to fourteen. Efforts in Indiana to raise the age above sixteen have failed. In Minnesota in 1893 the W. C. T. U. asked that the age be raised from twelve to eighteen and secured sixteen. In Texas in 1891, the age was raised from ten to twelve years, largely through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. The bill passed at fourteen years and was then referred to the free conference committee by which it was reduced to twelve. The W. C. T. U. are purposing to make another effort to raise it to sixteen.

"In Oregon the W. C. T. U. appealed to the legislature to have the age raised but it remains at fourteen. The superintendent of Missouri reports the law at fourteen but not well enforced, the courts practically declaring, according to the old law which placed the limit at twelve years, claiming that the supreme court of the state has never declared the new law constitutional. In Wisconsin the state president reports the age as twelve years and says: 'We tried two years ago to have it raised but failed. One member of the legislature said that it was left on a solid foundation with twelve years as a corner-stone.' The Wisconsin W. C. T. U. hopes to be successful in the near future. The influence of the W. C. T. U. in Wyoming raised the age from fourteen to eighteen. In all cases where I have had reports from state presidents or state superintendents, I give their figures in my tabulated report. In cases where I have had no report from the state, I take that given The Philanthropist a year or two ago.

Alabama	10	Michigan	16
Alaska		Minnesota	16
Arizona	18	Mississippi	14
Arkansas	14	Missouri	14
California N		Montana	15
California S	16	Nebraska	15
Carolina N	10	Nevada	14
Carolina S	10	New Hampshire	13
Colorado	16	New Jersey,	15
Connecticut	14	New York	16
Dakota N	16	Ohio	14
Dakota S	16	Oklahoma	14
Delaware	15	Oregon	14
District of Columbia	16	Pennsylvania	16
Florida	16	Rhode Island	14
Georgia	10	Tennessee	16
Idaho	14		years and one day
Illinois	14	Texas	12
Indiana	16	Utah,
Indian Territory	12	Vermont	14
Iowa	13	Virginia
Kansas	18	Virginia W	12
Kentucky	12	Washington E	16
Louisiana	12	Washington W	14
Maine	14	Wisconsin	12
Maryland	14	Wyoming	18
Massachusetts	14

"If this table should be in any item incorrect I shall be very glad to receive and publish the correction. I have done the best I could with the data furnished me."

As will be seen all states have not reported, and "probably," writes Dr. Allen, "many who have failed to answer my request for information will find fault because I have not been accurate in my statements. I fancy the quickest way to get the knowledge we want will be to give some one this chance to find fault."

THE literature pertaining to physical culture admirably covers the wide field of the department which is under the National superintendency of Mrs. Frances W. Leiter. The material consists of a series of able leaflets from such authorities as Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Mrs. Helen Gilbert Ecob, Annie Payson Call, Dr. J. H. Kellog, Dr. Robert L. Dickinson, Bertha Morris Smith, Dr. Seneca Egbert, Mrs. Emily Bishop, Mrs. George Archibald, Dr. William Blaikie, Dr. Wm. Anderson and Mrs. Frances W. Leiter. There is still, in spite of the flood of educational light being poured upon all who will, a deplorable, if not willful ignorance of this mortal body, so fearfully and wonderfully made, and if the W. C. T. U. could do no more than clearly preach and instill the physical gospel the world would even by this one forward movement be blessedly nearer the millennial dawn. In this department of physical culture every white-ribboner may become a missionary by herself reading and then placing in the hands of others these inexpensive but indispensable leaflets.

CHEERING news comes to us of the great favor with which the Polyglot Petition is received by the Danish people. From one town alone more than five hundred signatures are reported. "It has been a great pleasure and satisfaction," writes our informant, "to carry the Petition from house to house. We are thereby enabled to introduce the temperance cause in every home, and in places where we least expected it we found the most touching sympathy with our cause."

"Bear ye one another's burdens." "Every man shall bear his own burden." It looks contradictory to the superficial reader, but there is nothing contradictory in the whole Book. These words are in the sixth chapter of Galatians. Read the first verse; "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one. . . " Spiritual. Now then; we who are spiritual are to bear the burdens of the one "overtaken," the one less spiritual; but when we carry His burden it becomes our own and we are thus obeying the seeming contradiction. On the other hand the weak brother is not to depend abjectly upon another, but as far as in him lies "bear his own burden." Does it not recall the picture of Him who toiled up Calvary bearing our burden of sin, making it His very own? So may we be like Him and laying on our hearts the burdens of those about us, carry them as our own to the great Burden-Bearer, and "so fulfill the law of Christ."

***

What seems so dark to thy dim sight
May be a shadow, seen aright,
Making some brightness doubly bright.

The flash that struck thy tree—no more
To shelter thee—lets Heaven's blue floor
Shine where it never shone before.

—Adelaide A. Procter.

***

It was a very felicitous error made by a good sister present at a temperance gathering where she heard eloquent allusions to a coming celebration which she understood to be a "Kneel Down Meeting." She pondered the subject gravely in her mind, not sure as to the nature of such a meeting, and at last asking for information, was enlightened as to our Grand Old Man and the prospective Neal Dow gathering. There is a smile in the little incident, though one involuntarily thinks of the countless "kneel down meetings" present at which have been varying numbers from "one with God" to the assembled thousands which have made possible the Neal Dow jubilee just passed.

***

On Duty, ever on the alert for signs of the times as they point to woman and woman's work, was made to hoist a little pennon of gratulation from her Watch Tower by reading in the New York Christian Advocate the following significant paragraph: "Of all that has been published in view of this anniversary (Neal Dow's) THE UNION SIGNAL'S special number is entitled to highest commendation, and its portrait is one of the best ever presented in a periodical of the kind." They say straws tell which way the wind blows. Is this a prophetic wisp?

***

The sensitive plant is a curiosity in nature but the poets do not sing its praises nor artists put their choicest touches to its reproduction. We are very familiar with that class of people—women, we had almost said—who go about placarding themselves with the statement, "I am so sensitive!" thus keeping friends and acquaintances in perpetual dread of touching them and causing the delicate foliage of their "feelings" to fold itself away at the rude intrusion. Far better in this o'ercrowded life where elbows have hard work not to jostle one another in the hurrying to and fro, is the rugged spirit which says, I would not let it hurt me! Many a touch on the leaves of the sensitive plant is one of well meant, though rough admiration; some are prompted by a curiosity, painful, perhaps, but mixed with no baser motive; it may be the wandering fingers from which the leaves shrank so hastily away, did not know of their own straying since the thought behind them was busy with its own pains or plans, but the egotistic little herb cares not for that, it was touched and must resent the unmeant act. Then again, the passer-by sees some unsightly caterpillar or destroying insect about to mar the beauty of its fair growth and stretches out a friendly hand, not because it likes to handle the little depredator but because it would save the victim. But no—this is a sensitive plant and it withdraws itself from salvation hugging close to its bosom the very enemy of its life and loveliness. Fewer sensitive plants and more staunch oaks, tenacious ivies, hardy trailing arbutus blossoming under the snow, friendly pansies that have a smile for foe or friend—aye, the plain everyday grass of the field which the heat of summer, the cold of winter and the heel of the oppressor cannot frighten out of cheery greenness! If you have a sensitive plant in your window-garden, let it give place to a worthier growth that shall bless and not repulse.

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

MOTTO: "For God and Home and Every Land."

OBJECT: To unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over.

BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.

HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.

METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.

DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed by representatives of over forty countries. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

W. C. T. U. COLONIAL CONVENTION.

It is with a song of praise on our lips and hearts overflowing with gratitude to our loving heavenly Father for His "loving kindness and tender mercy" to us during the first year of our work here, that we give a brief record of the second annual convention of the W. C. T. U. in far-off Western Australia. Far off! ! Yes, it seems very distant to some of us who only come from the Eastern colonies, but what must it seem to our American sisters?

I suppose some of your readers know that Western Australia is generally known as the Cinderella of Australia. Although it is the oldest colony, it is the most backward, chiefly through its having been branded in the early days as a convict settlement. However, great things are predicted of Western Australia in the near future, and we have every reason to believe that our brightest hopes will be realized, especially as the gold fields are turning out so well, among them being the world-wide "Coolgardie."

It was to this out-of-the-world quarter of the globe that your round-the-world missionary, Miss Ackermann, came, in June, 1892, and organized the W. C. T. U. As workers in and loyal members of this grand, world-wide organization we can never thank our Heavenly Father enough for sending Miss Ackermann here, and also for the faithful work she did while amongst us. Our only regret, however, in connection with Miss Ackermann's visit was that she had to leave our colony immediately after she had organized the W. C. T. U. for foreign service. The difficulty was that we were all novices in the work, indeed some of us had never been engaged in any Christian work before. But although Miss Ackermann had left us, we soon realized that best of all, God was still with us, and thus we were enabled to throw ourselves on the arm of Omnipotence, and we have proved day by day and week by week that "His grace has been and is sufficient for us."

Our Colonial executive invited Mrs. E. W. Nicholls, (Colonial president of South Australia) to come to Western Australia and preside over our convention; and we cannot speak too highly of the very efficient manner in which she presided over all our meetings. The Alliance and Temperance News of South Australia said: "This convention assembled in Wesley Hall, Perth; morning and afternoon sessions for business and evening meetings being held each day. In addition to colonial officers and superintendents, delegates attended from six unions. Mrs. Traylen, president of the Perth union, gave the address of welcome to the delegates, and Miss Turton, president of the Guildford union, responded. In addition to the able and thoughtful address of the colonial president (Mrs. Hensman), and the report of the corresponding secretary (Miss Murcutt), the following departments were reported: Mothers' meetings, sailors' work, prison work, press work, unfermented wine.

"Papers were read on Drink, Women as Temperance Workers, Scientific Temperance Instruction, Temperance, Miss Mary Allen West, Juvenile Smoking and Woman's Suffrage. The latter was so good that it was read both in a business meeting and in the evening. Animated discussions took place on some of the questions dealt with; also on, How can we best raise funds for our work? A school of methods, including some of these reports and papers was conducted by Mrs. Nicholls. Bible readings were given at noontide each day. The newly elected officers were, Mrs. Hensman, president; Miss F. J. A. Murcutt, corresponding secretary; Miss A. L. A. Murcutt, recording secretary; Mrs. David Ross, treasurer. Delegates to attend Australasian convention and Colonial superintendents were elected.

"It was decided to try to secure land for erection of sailors' rest at Fremantle, and for a home for discharged female prisoners; to ask permission for members of the union to visit the prisons at Bunbury and Geraldton: to issue suffrage petitions for signatures, and to circulate 'Sixteen reasons why women want to vote.' Resolutions condemning boxing contests or prize fights, Sabbath desecration, juvenile smoking, the employment of barmaids, the paying of wages partly in liquor, social impurity, were passed, and also resolutions upon other topics and of thanks to all friends and helpers. The evening meetings were well attended and successful, the chairman being the late Bishop Parry, who less than a month later entered into rest, Mr. G. Throssell, M. L. A., Mr. W. Traylen, M. L. A., and Mr. Justice Hensman. The speakers represented all the temperance societies and all sections of the Christian church."

During convention Mrs. Nicholls had the honor of speaking at the first public meeting held in the interest of woman's suffrage in Western Australia. Mrs. Nicholls delivered a very able address in which she spoke of woman's influence and ability, and urged the necessity of women having a voice in the framing of the laws by which they were governed.

Thus, our union here has now entered upon the second year of its labors, and we pray that God's blessing may rest upon our endeavors, and not on ours only, but on all those who are trying to extend His Kingdom in like manner throughout the world. Greetings to all our sisters in America.

A. L. A. MURCUTT,
Colonial Recording Sec.

Fern Lodge, Adelaide St., Fremantle.

THE MARTINIQUE.

LETTER FROM A WHITE-RIBBONER.

In his charming book, "A Midsummer Trip," Mr. Lafcadio Hearn has forgotten to note an important particular about the customs of the population of the Martinique. He praises the island with its picturesque sights, blue sea and green trees, but he does not say what habits of drunkenness are found amongst the inhabitants, "with their so gentle manners, their clothes so delightful to the eye." However, he that has stayed for some time in a town of the colony has been able to observe easily that the drunkards are very numerous.

The Rhum, that is to say, the fermented sugar-cane juice, is, over all things, the popular liquor. The Martinique workman drinks to get warm, to take refreshment, to forget his grief, to rejoice, to recover the health, etc. He drinks before each meal, for appetite; he drinks when he receives or pays a visit; always you see upon his table the decanter of rhum and the syrup bottle. If he invites a friend for a holiday, "My dear," says he, "come and drink some rhum"—Mon chè vini bonè ti boui'n rhum. He composes ballads about his favorite beverage. "Rhum, you are my father, you are my mother, you are everything for me." Rhum cé ou ki papa moin cé ou ki mammam moin.

It may be said that the alcohol is the origin of all crimes that are committed among that population, so peaceful and so kind. Alcohol fills up, also, the hospitals with lunatics, paralytics and other diseases. It is a thing sad to say, this calamitous habit is met with the people of high rank, and often you see the homes ruined by intemperance, either of the husband or wife. It is not necessary to say that the public government takes no care to repress the traffic of alcohol; these honorable gentlemen have questions more interesting than morality and health of the people to employ themselves in.

Lately a Colonial great man exclaimed in the local council that alcohol ought to be free from every tax, so that each one be able to buy cheap that beverage that is the wine of the workman.

Some items to finish: The Martinique has 176,000 inhabitants, who, during the year 1893 have drunk 3,062,332 litres of rhum and paid $249,923 of tax. (The litre is equivalent of an English quart, about.) What a ground for the white-ribboners to sow.

ALICE TITI.

Fort de France, Martinique, West Indies.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MISS ACKERMANN'S WELCOME.

On Tuesday, 16th January, two meetings were held in Sydney, at which Miss Ackermann, Australasian president, was enthusiastically welcomed on her return from Chicago via England.

The first meeting was held in the afternoon, when three hundred and fifty members of the W. C. T. U. assembled to welcome Miss Ackermann, on behalf of that organization. Mrs. Nolan, Colonial president, had charge of the meeting, which was an informal one, the hall having been arranged as a drawing-room, and decorated with palms and stands of flowers, etc. Addresses of welcome were given by Mrs. Nolan, on behalf of the W's, and Miss Goodin, on behalf of the Y's. A beautiful bouquet was presented to Miss Ackermann on behalf of the Sydney Y's. Miss Ackermann's rising to respond was the signal for cheers and hearty applause.

After briefly responding and saying how glad she was to be with us once more, and giving also a short resumé of what she had accomplished during her absence, Miss Ackermann moved among the members who welcomed her return. Members of the Sydney Y brightened the proceedings and also served the refreshments.

At night the second meeting was held, being a public welcome to Miss Ackermann. Mrs. Nolan again presided. There was a very large and most enthusiastic audience. Addresses of welcome were given on behalf of the Rechabites, Sons and Daughters of Temperance, Good Templars and Local Option League. All expressed their thankfulness for the great work done by Miss Ackermann in this land, but all sounded one note of regret that she was so soon to leave us.

Miss Ackermann responded in an earnest and eloquent address, which was frequently interrupted by cheers, loud and long. The Sydney Y's attended in white gowns; their simplicity, and the freshness of youth and vigor brightening the scene. They sang choruses from the Y song book.

On Thursday, 18th January, Miss Ackermann attended the first Demorest medal contest ever held in New South Wales, and presented the medal. She also gave a short address. Many contests are being arranged by Miss Lucas. At least forty will be held before 31st March, when the children's temperance demonstration in connection with the second triennial international convention will be held. Seven to eight thousand children are expected to take part. Miss Lucas is secretary for this work.

RUTH LUCAS.

2 Francis St., Hyde Park.

QUEENSLAND NOTES.

In spite of midsummer heat several of our unions undertook special work at Christmas. One or two were even energetic enough to forego the recess which has hitherto been considered a necessity in the hottest part of the year.

On Christmas eve the Ipswich W. C. T. U. had, in the center of the town, a stall for fruit, cooling drinks and literature, which, they believe, was successful in keeping many from drinking at hotels.

The Y's were to the fore again with Christmas treats. Gympie Y's gave a tea and entertainment to one hundred poor children, for the expenses of which the girls collected mites, mostly from outsiders. They also gave a hospital concert and fans to all patients.

Maryborough Y union arranged a specially attractive social, at which they raised enough money to give a tea to three hundred children and to furnish a handsome Christmas tree for the little ones. These same energetic girls collected twenty-two pounds in response to Miss Ackermann's appeal on behalf of the women in India's zenanas.

The women's unions in and around Brisbane occupied two booths at the summer show, and although the venture was not a financial success, good seed was sown in the form of literature.

One district, Wallambilla, has carried the first clause of our local option act, giving total prohibition. This is the first time this clause has been attempted in the colony, and the successful result was largely owing to the constant and effective work of our W. C. T. U. women.

The unions on the railway lines are working in concert to supply effective placards for the station, some of which are especially telling.

Our ranks were increased last month by a baby son coming to our Colonial corresponding secretary, Mrs. Carvosso, who works so earnestly and enthusiastically throughout each year for the W. C. T. U. all over Queensland. Brisbane Y's claim him as an honorary member, because his mother is their president.

A pleasing little incident occurred at a meeting of the Colonial executive when our organizer, Mrs. Britten, was presented with a "love-offering" of golden coins from the local unions, in slight recognition of her valuable aid on all occasions.

We are eagerly looking forward to the triennial (Australasian) convention for inspiration and help. Seventeen delegates who go from our colony are entitled to vote, and several visitors, tempted by the attractive program promised, will attend, so we expect to have at least thirty representatives from Queensland. We feel keenly the disappointment of not having another visit from Miss Ackermann, so we are all making a special effort to go south in March and bid her goodbye. Her memory will occupy a very warm spot in the hearts of hundreds of Queensland women.

FLORA B. HARRIS,
Union Signal Correspondent.

Sherwood Road, Toowong, Brisbane.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE returns show that women voters are making general uses of the franchise in New Zealand, and are fully alive to the importance of the powers bestowed on them. Of the four large cities Dunedin possesses the greatest number of women voters and the women of Christchurch came out in largest proportion.

A MEMBER of the New Zealand Parliament who has just been prosecuted for obtaining votes by bribes, beer and other disreputable means, was, after a six days' trial, unseated and disqualified for a year. The verdict is generally conceded to be a just one and the details of the trial have led to the agitation of a law to close up public houses during the hours of polling on election day.

TEMPERANCE text books have been introduced into the public schools of Natal, South Africa, by the decision of the council of education. The W. C. T. U. of Umzumbe is working indefatigably to pay the debt on their headquarters, and Mrs. Bridgman, former president of Natal, is conducting each week two columns of temperance matter in one of the leading papers of that colony.

DURING last winter Mrs. Lee, superintendent of legislative work in Victoria, Australia, made a trip through Queensland, and in four months took 2,000 pledges and gained nearly 500 new members for the W. C. T. U. As superintendent of this department, Mrs. Lee takes occasion to write a strong appeal, whenever a new member is elected for parliament, asking for his vote on the right side.

ONE of our correspondents in India pays a just tribute to Bishop Thoburn, in the following words: "He is as loyal to the W. C. T. U. as possible. He presided at our first public meeting here, and was most cordial, as he always is. The impulse he has given to woman's work and advancement in these Oriental countries can scarcely be estimated at its full value, it is so great and far-reaching. He is, indeed, a true brother to women."

THE Y union at St. Stephen, New Brunswick, has been resurrected through the efforts of Miss Ellen Todd, daughter of the president of St. Stephen W. C. T. U. A new idea comes from them which they call "soothing powders" for sick people. They cut paper the size and shape of small powders and on the inside print some texts of a comforting nature and then fill the box with them. It pleases the invalid to open it and read them.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH, who went to England to do evangelistic work under the auspices of the British Women's Temperance Association, and who has been holding most interesting meetings for several weeks, feels unable, on account of infirm health, to fill the many engagements that have been made for her. Mrs. Smith continued to work until the end of February after which she intended spending several weeks in an hygienic home.

THE Victoria W. C. T. U. is vigorously pushing forward the effort to prevent publicans serving children under sixteen with liquor, and also the sale of tobacco to minors. They are also going through a campaign for woman's suffrage. Recently one of the white-ribbon women in New Zealand has been sworn in as justice of the peace; she was elected lady mayor two months ago, the first in Her Majesty's dominions. Last year the W. C. T. U. were instrumental in defeating the bill to lessen the age of protection to girls, and have succeeded in many instances in securing the enforcement of Sabbath observance laws.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET has received £500 as a gift from Miss S. E. Hinton, of Cheltenham, for the Industrial Home for Women Inebriates which the British Women's Temperance Association is engaged in founding. Miss Helen Hood, secretary of the department of organization of the B. W. T. A., has gone to Ireland to found local branches of the Association, and there will undoubtedly be hard upon three hundred new branches to report at the annual meeting. Lady Henry has been addressing, and is to address, twenty-five great meetings at centers of population in England, which have been remarkably well attended.

It has just come to our knowledge that a paragraph in our World's Wave Crests some time since innocently did a great injustice to the young women of whom Miss Alys Pearsall Smith, of London, is leader—the club of factory girls from Somerstown, Lady Henry Somerset's London property. The information given, supposed by us to be from indisputable authority is in several points not in accordance with facts, where the personal conduct of the girls is referred to. Their secretary writes the following correction of the statement, which we gladly publish: "The girls come from very respectable, happy homes, and have a great feeling of pride in their factory and comradeship in their work. There may have been faults in conduct due to high spirits, but the girls can hardly be called 'rough and untaught specimens of humanity.'"

Madame Antoinette Stirling sang at the memorial meeting in London, in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Gen. Neal Dow. This meeting was held in Exeter Hall on the evening of March 20, Lady Henry Somerset presiding, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Miss Willard, Mr. J. H. Raper, Mrs. Ormiston Chant and several other leading speakers made addresses. The singing was led by the Temperance Choral society (in connection with the National Temperance League). Special Prohibition songs were sung; and between six and seven o'clock selections were played by the West Ham Temperance Crusaders' Band, which played at the great temperance convention in Covent Garden Theater. The tickets issued for reserved seats bore striking and finely executed portraits of General Neal Dow, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Mr. Raper.

The letter in another column, from the Martinique, comes from a French woman, who has recently signed our pledge and donned the white ribbon. That our work will be forwarded by the interest and enthusiasm of this bright French woman, is certain. On receipt of the Convention minutes, she writes: "I have read with delight the addresses of the great Convention, especially those of Miss Jessie Ackermann, Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew. What a difference between the French woman and your country women! Whilst we are educated in the cage like the parrots, they travel in the world, accomplishing some wonders of activity and energy in the behalf of their like. . . . . The World's W. C. T. U. begins to be known. My sister learns English, and soon will be able to translate the literature of the union. She has signed the Petition, so have my mother and my aunt."

The White-Ribbon of India has the following interesting item: "Early in January Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell arrived in Rangoon, where they again took up temperance work in completion of their round-the-world tour. Concerning their visit Miss Ranney, of Rangoon, writes: 'The days they were with us were full of prayer and praise and sweet spiritual communion. A series of six public meetings was held, with daily increasing interest and audiences. The ladies presented their subjects in a logical manner and in the power of the Spirit. Many were stirred to ask, 'What can we do to advance purity in our city?' Many were led to examine their own hearts and cry to God to cleanse them from sin. We believe that the cause of temperance and purity will, by God's blessing, receive a great impetus through the visit of these dear sisters.' In Maulmain and Mandalay a number of meetings were held, both for Europeans and for Burmese. Altogether, their visit in Burma has resulted in a greatly increased interest in the cause of temperance; numbers of new members for the W. C. T. U. were secured, and many pledges taken."

The white ribbon women of Weymouth, are among the most devoted in the British Women's Temperance Association. It seemed that their representatives at the annual meeting in London in May last were so stirred in heart that on going home they helped to institute in the local auxiliary a systematic arrangement by which when the working people go to their toil at four o'clock in the morning some of these women have hot coffee ready for them at a central location as an antidote to their tendency to visit the public house. The members take turns in preparing and serving the coffee, which is much appreciated, and has been most helpful in reducing the patronage of the publican. More than this, the same society undertakes to cater in a legitimate and wise fashion to the amusement of the people, and on Saturday night convenes one thousand five hundred or more in a public hall, and delights them with music, addresses, magic-lantern exhibitions, etc. The people flock to these entertainments, and there has never been an average patronage of the bar so small as at the present time in the good old town of Weymouth. If this is not practical Christianity, it would be hard to say what is.

News from the Field.

MAINE.

OBSERVANCE OF NEAL DOW'S BIRTHDAY.

At least one prophet has been honored in his own country. The 20th of March, 1894, will long be remembered as a red-letter day throughout the length and breadth of the state. All things conspired to make the occasion delightful. The day was warm and brilliant with sunshine, and in the evening a full moon lit up the skies. General Dow rose early as has been his life-long habit and ate a hearty breakfast.

During the forenoon he held

AN INFORMAL RECEPTION

to the many friends and neighbors who called to present congratulations. The rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers, and the General was assisted in receiving by his son, Col. F. N. Dow, and his daughter, Miss Cornelia, who is the president of our largest county union. His ninety years sit very lightly upon him and his spirits rose perceptibly as messages began to pour in by mail and telegraph.

Among those from whom congratulations were received were many United States Senators and Representatives, several ex-governors of Maine, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Canon Wilberforce, Hon. Mr. Talcott, Joseph Cook, ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, and ex-Governor Long, of Massachusetts (a native of Maine), Mrs. L. Ormiston Chant, Sir Leonard Tilly, Miss Lillian Phelps, Dr. J. W. Bashford, Mrs. Sallie Chapin and six comrades representing as many states who were confined with General Dow in Libby prison. Many birthday presents were also received.

VISITS FROM DELEGATIONS.

At 2:30 p. m., a delegation arrived from the city government, General Dow being the oldest living ex-mayor of Portland. At the same hour came a delegation from the veteran firemen, the General being the oldest living ex-chief of the fire department. It may not be generally known that it was in protest against the vote of this company to furnish liquors for an anniversary occasion, that the great reformer's maiden temperance speech was made. It must have been a forcible one, for the vote was reversed, and no liquors were furnished during his long connection with the company. This was in 1827 when he was but twenty-three years of age.

Of all the great meetings held March 20, throughout the civilized world, none could have equalled in Portland, for there Hamlet himself was present. Every inch of standing room in the largest hall was packed. Three thousand people succeeded in getting in, but it is estimated that at least five thousand were turned away. The decorations were most suggestive. In the rear of the platform were draped the banners of Neal Dow's regiment—the Fifteenth Maine. At one side was suspended a banner, in the center of which were the figures 1804 surrounded by a wreath of flowers, and opposite a similar banner bearing the date 1894. Our motto, "For God and Home and Every Land," was conspicuous, surrounded by flags of many nations, Miss Willard's picture and the picture of the Temple were placed on draped easels. Beautiful cut flowers were used. In front of the platform were banks of flowers and overhead were wreaths of laurel.

THE EVENING GATHERING

When, serene and smiling, the old hero took his seat, the great audience (composed, it must be remembered, of conservative, undemonstrative, New Englanders,) leaped to their feet,

CHEERING AND WAVING HANDKERCHIEFS

until their arms fell from sheer exhaustion. When quiet was restored, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens called the meeting to order and presented Mayor Baxter as its chairman. The High School orchestra and the large chorus of young voices which furnished the music for the evening then broke into singing the Battle Hymn of the Republic. Rev. C. F. Allen, chaplain of the legislature when the Maine Law was enacted, then offered prayer.

STIRRING ADDRESSES WERE MADE by ex-Governor Seldon Conner, Rev. Mr. Hughes, representing the Portland clergy, and Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Missouri. Mr. Hughes paid a splendid tribute both to General Dow and the cause which he has championed: "We must have men who have not cotton strings instead of backbones. We must stifle that pessimistic whine of 'Prohibition is a failure.'"

Mrs. Hoffman's address can best be described by the one word, magnificent. Of course she did not forget the movement for equal suffrage, and made the hall ring with applause for the name of Susan B. Anthony.

Mr. Angus McDonald, of Edinburgh, presented the greetings of the Scottish temperance societies. A poem from the pen of Caroline Dana Howe was read by Miss Lucia Kimball. A pleasant feature of the evening was the presentation to the state of

A FINE OIL PORTRAIT OF GEN. DOW.

The presentation speech was made by Mrs. Hannah Bailey, Governor Cleaves eloquently responding. A dainty silk flag had been hanging from a gilt rod at the rear of the stage. At the right moment, without visible cause, it rose toward the ceiling, disclosing the portrait which will be placed in the state house.

One unexpected, but most welcome guest, was present, the last survivor of the famous Hutchinson family. He recounted how more than fifty years ago William Lloyd Garrison attempting to speak from that same platform, had been silenced by the clamor of an indignant mob which the Hutchinson family succeeded in quieting by their music so that the Abolition leader was able to make himself heard. He then stepped to the piano, and in a voice still clear and strong, rendered the Prohibition rallying song, "Roll it Along." Mrs. Stevens' pleasant task was to read selections from the hundreds of congratulatory telegrams received during the day and evening.

It was after ten o'clock when

GENERAL DOW ROSE TO ADDRESS

the audience. Disdaining the support of the desk, he stepped briskly to the edge of the high stage. Absolute silence fell upon the great gathering, many of whom had been standing during the entire evening. A flush was upon his cheek and his face was beaming. Despite the excitement of the day, he seemed but little fatigued. He began with the salutation of the gladiator to Cæsar, "I who am about to die, salute you." The first words were a trifle indistinct, but soon the old fire came into his eyes, and in the most distant corner of the spacious hall was heard the voice which for sixty-seven years has fearlessly uttered his convictions upon the greatest question of the day. His speech had but little reference to himself. He did not waste what may have been the grandest opportunity of his life in relating reminiscences of the past, but went straight to the discussion of present needs. He expressed his faith in the ultimate triumph of prohibition throughout the earth and its fast coming triumph in this nation as the people are made to understand their duties at the polls. Among his most cogent utterances were these: "To do anything in legislation you must not depend upon soft words and honeyed appeals. No, my friends, you must make yourselves an object of terror to the politicians, and when you've got them afraid of you, then you can begin to do something." Further on, "When the church wakes up to her duty with her five millions of voters, there's the end of the difficulty." How like this man whose face has always been set toward the future! Let us hope that his words may sound as a bugle call to time-serving Christians of this and of every land.

AT AUGUSTA.

A public meeting was held in the First Baptist church. To one member of this union there the occasion was of peculiar interest. When it was known that Neal Dow would try to secure the enactment of a prohibitory law, good Mr. and Mrs. Williamson invited him to make their house his home during his stay in the city, which he supposed would be a few days or at the most two or three weeks. But so many efforts were made by the liquor element to stop the wheels of legislation that the bill was not passed until the last day of the session, and Mrs. Williamson's guest had to remain three months. She gave over her parlors and an adjoining sleeping room to his use, and from morning till night a steady procession of callers came to discuss the bill with its author. Mrs. Williamson is still an active member of the union and still "given to hospitality," feeling that in the early days of her housekeeping she did "entertain angels unawares."

The president of the Augusta union presided and made the opening address. A sketch of Gen. Dow's life, personal reminiscences, ten minute speeches by six clergymen and a symposium from The Union Signal were given. The I. O. G. T. was represented by a member of the union whose husband is at the head of the order in this state. Though not present in person Gen. Dow was represented by a fine picture surrounded with potted plants.

Auburn Hall was

ANOTHER CENTER OF ENTHUSIASM

being the scene of one of the best temperance mass-meetings ever held in the city. It was the evening of the weekly prayer-meeting, but by invitation of the union all the churches united in doing honor to the man who had done so much toward the removal of the greatest hindrance to the work of the church. The platform was decorated with flags, blooming plants and portraits of Gen. Dow and of our state and National presidents placed conspicuously on easels.

DO YOUR Corset Stays BREAK?

How vexatious it is! often painful; always damaging to other garments. There is speedy relief in wearing a

Genuine Jackson Favorite Waist

They are stayed with our patented system of banking cords, which cannot break. They are much easier than a corset, lighter in weight, and just as durable.

NO ONE CAN TELL THE DIFFERENCE.

They are just as beautifully modeled; give equal grace and style to the figure as the corset. Once wearing is to be convinced and wear them always.

BE SURE TO GET THE GENUINE.

There is only one, and that is the

ORIGINAL AND GENUINE JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST

Ask your dealers for them, or write us mentioning this paper. Postpaid for $1.00. Drab White, Gold, Black. Made in English Sateens.

CORONET CORSET CO., JACKSON, MICH.

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of

BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON

Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.

E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.

Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS

(Tasteless—Effectual.)

FOR ALL

BILIOUS and NERVOUS DISORDERS.

Such as Sick Headache, Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Giddiness, Fullness, Swelling after Meals, Dizziness, Drowsiness, Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, All Nervous and Trembling Sensations, and Irregularities Incidental to Ladies.

Covered with a Tasteless and Soluble Coating.

Of all druggists. Price 25 cents a Box.
New York Depot, 365 Canal St. 13

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

FOR MAN AND BEAST.
Manufactured by
THE J. L. Mott Iron Works
84 to 90 Beekman Street,
NEW YORK.
311 & 313 Wabash Ave.,
CHICAGO.
Catalogue on Applicatio

'The STANDARD"

The only Dripless Strainer in the World

No drip to soil table linen. No wires to clog spout. No falling off. Beautifully nickel-plated.

Agents Wanted

Sent to any address on receipt of price, 25 cents

Standard Strainer Co., 34 Maiden Lane New York City

Sound Discs are invisible, and comfortable. Relieve more cases of

DEAFNESS

than all devices in the world. H. A. Wales, 674 Ashland Block, Chicago.

The president of the union introduced the newly elected mayor to preside over the meeting. A fine male quartette furnished beautiful and appropriate music. One song written and set to music by a member of the quartette was rendered with specially fine effect. This is the opening verse:

O'er all the earth this day are gathered
The friends of temperance true,
To honor one whose name forever,
Shall last the ages through.

CHORUS:—

His name we sing with joy and gladness.
All honor to him now.
The father of our own Maine law,
We sing his name—Neal Dow.

All the clergymen of the city participated in the exercises. The Grand Army Post, Relief Corps and Good Templars accepted invitations to attend.

OTHER MEETINGS.

For some time previous to the 20th the papers contained notices of coming meetings called by unions in honor of Gen. Dow all over the state, among the places mentioned being Warren, Livermore Falls, Turner, Greene, Corinth, Bath and Columbia Falls. In many of the smaller places all the congregations united in a Sunday evening service at the invitation of the unions. Many pastors preached temperance sermons. The day was also observed quite extensively by the Good Templars of the state.

No native of Maine except Longfellow has ever been so signally and universally honored by the people of our commonwealth.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

The North Yakima union gave a successful Demorest contest recently. Miss Daisy Boyle won the medal. Her subject was, "How to curtail the liquor traffic." The Yakima Herald gave more than a column to this interesting event.

Colfax union sends cheerful greeting, with the good word that new members are being added at almost every meeting. Services are held in the jail on Sunday afternoon. Gospel temperance meetings are held frequently in the court-house, with the coöperation of the pastors. Besides the regular subscriptions two copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken for distribution.

This union has aided the Y. M. C. A. to the amount of forty dollars toward establishing a free reading room, and has also pledged one hundred dollars toward the Temple, part of which has been forwarded.

Roslyn union has just forwarded ten dollars to our state treasurer for a life membership.

The Waitsburg union sent for their state president recently, and gave her a royal reception. A severe storm prevailed but it did not prevent the gathering of a large number of noble women at the Baptist house of worship in the afternoon. Potted plants and early wild flowers added to the good cheer. Appropriate songs and recitations had been carefully prepared, which were followed by a Bible reading and prayer by their guest. After which there were held a question box and an informal conference.

The questions indicated a live interest, and a reaching out after best methods. A cheering letter from Miss Willard was read. With reluctance at five o'clock the meeting adjourned. In a few minutes chairs were removed, tables wheeled into place, and a delicious luncheon spread. This breaking of bread, cake and other good things together, proved most enjoyable, and strengthened the bond of unity already existing.

At seven o'clock, despite the darkness and the storm, the Presbyterian church was filled with a most attentive audience. Here also flowering plants and sweet singers, led by cornet and organ, evidenced the loving thoughtfulness of the dear women of this union. At the close of the address many copies of THE UNION SIGNAL were distributed.

Gracious words of appreciation and encouragement greeted the speaker, who cherishes great expectations from the faithful workers of this union, in the various departments of their work.

Walla Walla:—One of the marked results of the recent revival meetings has been the awakening of the best men and women to the existing evils of the saloon and places of ill-repute. For three successive Sunday afternoons two churches have been filled, the one with men, the other with women, to learn the extent of these evils, and to implore divine guidance in efforts to suppress and overthrow. When Christian men will vote as they pray, and when Christian women may have the same privilege, these troublesome questions will be quickly settled forever.

JULIA B. COLE,
State Reporter, Walla Walla.

VERMONT.

SOWING THE SEED.

As I write the delightful fragrance of freesias fills my home with their sweetness, and I wish each white-ribbon sister had a spray of these lovely blossoms As spring advances our W. C. T. U. workers begin to feel new enthusiasm. First I will tell of the work being done in

ORLEANS COUNTY.

The Clarions, of Melrose, Mass., have been in this county giving concerts in Newport, West Charleston, Irasburgh and West Derby. These entertainments were greatly enjoyed in all of these towns, were well attended, and the temperance talks have set others to thinking and talking, thus starting the ball of public opinion rolling. In West Charleston five members were added to the W. C. T. U.

Wm. A. Lord recently lectured in Irasburgh. Mr. Lord was one of the first to take the drink cure at Montpelier. His lecture was a fine production, and he is now a promising man, and will no doubt yet make his mark.

The Y's of Derby have filled a box with bedding, towels, and other useful articles for the home for friendless women which is under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. in Burlington.

WASHINGTON COUNTY

reports a good degree of interest, and in some unions a steady growth.

Barre union holds monthly temperance meetings, in which the pastors coöperate cheerfully. These are held in the opera house, are well attended and are of high order.

Montpelier union aids inebriates to courses of the drink cure at the institute located there, and in which the W. C. T. U. have reason to rest much confidence. Through the untiring exertions of Mrs. Belle Whitman, of Berlin, Loyal Temperance Legions are springing up in a very gratifying manner. Ten dollars have been raised for Temperance Temple. Some may say this county is not doing much to boast of, but the unions can be depended upon, and are loyal and true.

Newport, in this county, has had a temperance revival, conducted by the Clarions. They came highly recommended by several ministers and public men. The Clarions consist of three very interesting, earnest young ladies, who are doing all they can to help along the temperance cause. It was their first appearance in Vermont, but it is hoped it will not be the last.

ORLEANS COUNTY.

East Corinth has had a medal contest.

Chelsea has had Mrs. E. A. Kenyon for a week. She conducted two mothers' meetings which were well attended, and many who are not members expressed a desire to have them continued. The W's and Y's have voted to hold one public meeting every quarter. The subject of the last meeting was health and heredity, the pastors giving the encouragement of their presence. One of the Y's read an original and excellent paper on "Preservation of Health a Christian Duty." Extracts from Mrs. Barnes' writings, and "Hygiene of the Home," were read. Songs and recitations filled up the remaining time.

West Randolph has sent two barrels to the Home in Burlington.

RUTLAND COUNTY

will hold their annual convention in Poultney, in May. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore gave a lecture in Rutland on suffrage. The Rutland union is very much interested in the drink cure. A great many men of nearly every profession testify to the efficiency of the treatment and are free men again.

WINDSOR COUNTY.

Cambridgeport has held six regular meetings since the annual meeting. The topics have been as follows: "Temperance Items of Interest," "How Does Hygienic Living help the Cause of Temperance," "Some Dangers that Threaten our Land," "National and World's Convention of 1893," "What is Going on in the World," and "Encouragement in Christian and Temperance Work." Since Crusade week three new members have been received. The county convention will be held in Cambridgeport in May.

ADDISON COUNTY.

A new union has been recently formed in Monkton.

In Middlebury an evangelistic superintendent has been appointed, and they are holding weekly prayer meetings. Mrs. Ida H. Read, our state president, and Mrs. L. D. Dyer, our county president, held a mothers' meeting in East Middlebury. The attendance was good and much interest was manifested.

In Bristol several new members have been added to the union. At the last gospel service the women of the W. C. T. U. took charge. Remarks were made, and a paper read on "Why not join the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?" The pastors heartily coöperate with the union, and their sympathy goes far in making these meetings successful. Sixty names were put on the pledges. A special meeting was called on Gen. Neal Dow's birthday.

MRS. E. S. FARR,
State Reporter, Bristol.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

NEAL DOW CELEBRATIONS.

THERE was a large and enthusiastic meeting at Wichita, Kan., to do honor to the "Father of Prohibition." An original poem was written for the occasion by J. S. Jennings.

FORTY members of the L. T. L. at Villa Road Baptist church, Schenectady, N. Y., participated in the anniversary exercises on Neal Dow day. The program was arranged from THE UNION SIGNAL, Advance Guard and Young Crusader, and was pronounced very fine.

THE Princeville, Ill,, union celebrated by an appropriate program well carried out. A good number of the members, and several visitors were present and they feel that they gained a new inspiration. Half of the collection is to be sent to the World's W. C. T. U. This union is gaining in numbers and in efficiency.

WILLARD union of St. Paul, Minn., gathered at the residence of its president, Mrs. P. B. Groat, March 20, for a parlor meeting. The life and labors of General Dow were presented in papers. The handsome Dow souvenir card, with a card containing Miss Willard's mottoes for 1894 attached by the white ribbon, were borne away by the pleased guests.

AT the Southern California meeting in Los Angeles, Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, National superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors, delivered a timely address upon "General Neal Dow, the Soldier," in which she reviewed his life as a general in the United States army; as a warrior against the rum power, and urged young men to emulate the virtues of this great soldier, patriot and Christian.

THE demonstration at the Nation's capital in honor of the prohibition hero was, perhaps, the largest in attendance of any in the United States. It was the unanimous opinion of the vast audience that it was the most inspiring temperance gathering they had ever attended. Miss Willard's name was greeted with applause. Full particulars of the notable event are given in a later paper.

OIL CITY, PA., was well sown with prohibition literature on the occasion of the Neal Dow celebration by the two W. C. T. Unions. Two thousand two hundred pages were distributed at the meeting and the Neal Dow number of THE UNION SIGNAL was used in large numbers. Miss Ida Clothier, who is always welcomed to this town, addressed an audience which taxed the seating capacity of the church. The ministers of the city were upon the platform and assisted in the exercises.

GENERAL Dow's portrait in charcoal taken from the fine frontispiece of the Neal Dow number of THE UNION SIGNAL attracted much attention at the Neal Dow meeting in Oberlin, Ohio. This was a thought-inspiring and memorable occasion in which leading professors of Oberlin college took part. A biographical sketch of Neal Dow was given by one speaker; his career as a temperance worker was depicted by another. The outlook for temperance work was cheeringly portrayed, a declamation was given on "Our Gladstone," and the closing address presented "Neal Dow as a Moral Hero." The effect of the whole was to arouse a desire that "some man of resolute, unselfish and unfailing courage may appear to do for Ohio what Neal Dow has done for Maine."

GENERAL Dow's ninetieth birthday was suitably and enthusiastically honored in Charlestown, S. C., by both the W. C. T. Union and the Y's. A fine account breathing the full inspiration of the gatherings, has been forwarded to the old hero by Mrs. S. F. Chapin, president of South Carolina W. C. T. U., who was active in the local preparations. The hall, W. C. T. U. headquarters, was decorated with rare taste and appropriateness, the handsome state banner and a fine portrait of General Dow being the centers of attraction. Flowers, such as only the Southland can furnish, were everywhere in profusion. Rev. J. L. Stokes delivered the address which was worthy the occasion. Short speeches were made by visitors and others, and music was well rendered. The whole occasion was most creditable to the earnest workers of South Carolina who confidently believe that Gen. Dow will live to see prohibition the law of the old Palmetto state.

Walking, Riding, or in any occupation incidental to a woman's life, from childhood to motherhood, comfort, grace and health are secured by using the FERRIS' GOOD SENSE
Corset Waists.
Worn by over a million mothers, misses and children. Clamp buckle at hip for hose supporters. Tape-fastened buttons. Cord-edge button holes. Various shapes—long, short or medium. For sale by all Leading Retailers.
Marshall Field & Co. Chicago, Western Wholesale Depot.
Send for illustrated circular to FERRIS BROS.,
Manufacturers,
341 Broadway, N. Y.,
Branch Office: 537 Market St., San Francisco.

For Your Spring Dyeing
USE
DIAMOND DYES
THE KIND
That's Easy to Use
32 FAST COLORS FOR WOOL
16 FAST COLORS FOR COTTON
Direction Book and Sample Card Free.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

The Natural Body Brace
Cures Female Weakness, restores health and vigor
After wearing your Natural Body Brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished.
MRS. JESSIE FISHER,
Spruce Creek, Pa.
I am pleased beyond expression with the Brace. I would not part with it for any money.
MARY F. ADAM,
Neosho Falls, Kas.
I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything to help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do any kind of work.
MISS LUCINDA FIELD,
Oscar, Texas.

Money Refunded if Brace is not Satisfactory.
Send for Full Information.
Natural Body Brace Co.,
SALINA, KANSAS.
Howard C. Rash, Man'g.

Knox's Sparkling Calves' Foot Gelatine
THE PUREST MADE
Received the only Medal and Diploma at the World's Fair, Chicago, on Package Gelatine for table use, for STRENGTH, PURITY and GOOD FLAVOR.
The only Gelatine positively free from odor or taste. Our new package has Rose Gelatine in top of each package to make fancy desserts. Your grocer has it if he keeps the best.
CHARLES B. KNOX, Johnstown, N. Y.
Send a 2-cent stamp for little book, "DAINTY DESSERTS FOR DAINTY PEOPLE."

AGENTS COIN
Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Latest and best cooking utensil ever invented. Sells at sight. One Agent sold over 1700 in one town. One sample Cooker free to good agents. Advertising matter furnished. For full particulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, BALTIMORE, Md.

ALASKA STOVE LIFTER
will not get hot even if left in the lid. Heavily Nickel Plated. Price by mail, postpaid, 30 cents.
TROY NICKEL WORKS, Troy, N. Y.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, president Louisiana W. C. T. U., writes of the annual convention that will be held at Shreveport, April 12 to 15, at which time they hope a trio of National speakers will be in attendance, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Mrs. Mary McGee Snell and Miss Carrie Lee Carter. On Y evening an address will be delivered on physical culture, by the gifted superintendent of the department, Miss Clara Baer. Mrs. Goodale says: "Notwithstanding temporary discouragements the true W. C. T. U. spirit is in the hearts of our women and the work is steadily progressing."

Bertha C. Mason, of Thorp's Spring, Tex., writes enthusiastically of the work of Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president Texas W. C. T. U., saying: "She addressed us one week ago when passing through to another appointment, and we hailed her return with delight. Last evening after her enjoyable talk on the work of the W. C. T. U. volunteers were called for the white ribbon army, and this morning the organization of a Y was completed, when fifty-one members were enrolled." Surely a magnificent beginning.

Word comes from Mrs. M. H. Switzer, president Oklahoma W. C. T. U., confirming our thought that there is neither state nor territory where our work cannot be made a power if there is love, perseverance and consecration in the hearts of workers. Mrs. Switzer writes that "all branches of the work are carried on as successfully and enthusiastically as in any state of the Union, especial interest being taken in Demorest medal contests."

Mrs. E. A. Hill, president Florida W. C. T. U., writes with delight of their annual meeting from February 27 to March 2, at Kissimmee and says: "The fact was patent to all that W. C. T. U. women are growing grandly; more thoughtful, more methodical and more earnest. The success of the convention was largely due to the Y's of the place. We have decided, if possible, to build a dormitory adjoining Somerset Park, similar (though smaller) to the dormitory of Chicago, that will be cozy and comfortable for those who may make a winter visit to the sunny South." We bespeak patronage for our sisters (without charge for advertisement!)

From Mrs. M. P. Stamm, corresponding secretary of New Mexico, we learn that the territorial annual convention of the New Mexico W. C. T. U. will be held in Albuquerque in the first week in June. The local union of the W. C. T. U. have founded an orphans' home in Albuquerque and are taking steps to incorporate. It is the first institution of the kind under protestant management in the territory.

A friend writes: "Major and Mrs. E. T. Scotts' two weeks' meetings in Wichita, Kansas, were well-nigh phenomenal, all things considered. Often five hundred attended the afternoon meetings addressed by Mrs. Scott. By special request of the superintendent of public schools and the principal of Lewis Academy, Mrs. Scott addressed the pupils. Over sixty young ladies and girls signed the social purity pledge. An organization was effected, the first of the kind in the country. All honor to Wichita!"

The Hutchinson (Kan.), Daily News of March 16, says: "Another W. C. T. U. was formed here yesterday. It starts out with a membership of thirty-five. The name given to this new union is the Scott W. C. T. U. in honor of Mrs. Major Scott, who has by her culture and gentle manner, won all hearts to her."

Our loving sympathy goes out to our sister, Mrs. Nannie Munnell, president Kentucky W. C. T. U., who, ill herself, has been called to bid farewell to her beloved companion, who has passed to his home beyond. Also to our Mother Stewart who is seriously ill. We pray the divine Healer of the flesh and the spirit to abide with these dear ones.

Mrs. English, superintendent of work among miners, writes us that "A miner in Wales received the prize offered by The Woman's Signal for the best postal card answer to the question, 'Why am I a total abstainer?' Nine hundred and eighty-one replies were received."

Miss C. E. Rowell, corresponding secretary of New Hampshire, wishes "she could give a glowing account of the work in her state that would prove truly inspiring to our white ribbon army," and says, "but we are a small people in a small state, heartily at work doing our best. Our interests as a state union are largely centered in our Mercy Home, which is doing a grand work. We are just now mourning the loss to us, but gain to her, of Mrs. C. E. Albee, for many years county president, and who by personal solicitation all over the state made the Mercy Home possible."

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

Arkansas—Lemar: Mrs. Nourse, $1; Van Buren: Y. W. C. T. U., $3.65; Little Rock: Y. W. C. T. U., $25.

Connecticut—New Haven: W. C. T. U., No. 1, $10.20; Hartford: Mrs. E. J. E. Geer, $1; Eliza J. Simpson, $2.50; W. C. T. U., $5; South Coventry: W. C. T. U., $5; Branford, Miss Helen Borman, $1.70.

Florida—Melbourne: Miss Ethel Stout, 30 cents; De Funiak Springs: Mrs. R. F. Moore, $12.

Illinois—Chicago: Miss Isabel Greenlee, $1.40; Sixteenth district W. C. T. U., $33.40; Peoria: Clara K. Wooly, $3.75; Jacksonville: W. C. T. U., $1; El Dorado: W. C. T. U., $1; Dundee: W. C. T. U., $1.25; Eagle Point: W. C. T. U., $1; Lake City: W. C. T. U., $1; Girard: W. C. T. U., $5; Milmine: W. C. T. U., $3; Second district: Marie Chapel Mission, $14.84; Quincy: W. C. T. U., $10; Western Springs: Harry and Minnie Maxted, $1.65; Englewood: Mrs. Mary A. Monroe, $20; Thomson: Margie J. Lewis, $1; Kansas: L. T. L., $1; Amboy: W. C. T. U., $9.50; Belle Plain: Herbert Wineteer, $1; Belleville: Mrs. Amanda J. Wilderman, $1; Melrose Park: Mrs. Emma Becknell, $5; Waukegan: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Stranger visitor to Temple, $1.

Indiana—Worthington: C. N. Shaw, $100; Centerville: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Rochester: Marion Ross, 9 cts.

Iowa—Des Moines: County union, $14; Scotch Grove: W. C. T. U., $28.52; Marshalltown: Miss Ella Moffatt, $1; Iowa City: Ellen F. Pratt, $1.57; Pierson: Mrs. Helen L. Benson, $4; Burlington: Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, $15; Mt. Ayr: W. C. T. U., $7.80; Harlan Township: Mrs. M. E. McKee, $100.

Kansas—Garden City: W. C. T. U., $6.50; Parsons: W. C. T. U., $40; Hill City: Mrs. Garnett, $3.75.

Maine—East Machias: Roderick H. Harmon, 81 cts.; North Yarmouth: Winslow, Francis and George Baston, $2.

Massachusetts—Lynn: Mrs. Mary Noyce, $1; Summerville: Bessie M. Westgate, $2.50; Boston: Mrs. Mary H. Mitchell, $2.50; Pepperell: W. C. T. U., $2.50; N. Scituate: Mrs. Edwin Bailey, $2.50; Amherst: W. C. T. U., $42.

Michigan—Kalamazoo: Pengelly W. C. T. U., $19; Vermontville: W. C. T. U., $8.73; Glenwood: A Friend, $5; Lawrence: Mrs. L. A. Crissey, $5.

Minnesota—Etna: W. C. T. U., $5; Glencoe: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Lakefield: Mrs. R. Pollock, 20 cts.; St. James: W. C. T. U., $25; Hancock: W. C. T. U., $3.40; Montrose: W. C. T. U., $13; Brainerd: Miss Laura Veon, $1.70.

Montana—Helena: Frances E. Willard W. C. T. U., $3.65.

Nebraska—Wilber: Mrs. Alice Cox, $1; Lincoln: Carl Hartley, $3.65; Grace R. Powell, $3.65; Hebron: Mrs. M. R. Evans, $1.20; Tecumseh: 50 cts.; Aurora: Mrs. Sarah Burt, $1; Mrs. Dora Hallash, $1; Tamora: Mrs. J. A. Thomas, $2; Benedict: Mrs. Martha Shapland, $1; For Woodward Tablet, $1.70, and for Ferguson Tablet, $5, per Kate B. Northup; Rock Island Railroad Boys, Lincoln and Omaha Division, $1, per Mrs. Ruth Hollingworth.

New Hampshire—New Hampton: W. C. T. U., $5; Francestown: Stella N. Dunklee, 10 cts.; Newport: W. C. T. U., $3.10.

New Jersey—Lakewood: W. C. T. U., $2; Island Heights: W. C. T. U., $2; Barnegat: W. C. T. U., 50 cents; Perth Amboy: Mrs. Sarah J. Waite, $3.82; Mrs. Marie Pierce, $3.91; Mrs. Parsons, $3.75; Mrs. Emmeline Storer, $1.68; Helen Owens, 55 cts.; Crawford: W. C. T. U., $5; Mullica Hill: Clara Peterson, $1.38; Bridgeton: Mrs. T. Waters, $3.65.

New York—Rochester: Twelfth Ward W. C. T. U., $10; Brooklyn: L. T. L. of F. E. Willard union, $1.60; New York: Mrs. L. C. Weeks, $4.90; Cattaraugus: W. C. T. U., $3.50; Medina: H. Elsie Merritt, $2; Rochester: Erratic W. C. T. U., $5; Purdy's: Mrs. M. C. Teed, $5; Philmont: W. C. T. U., $5; Burke: Mrs. Wilbur Cook, $5; Fulton: L. T. L., $13.06; Hopkinton: Mrs. Paulina Atwood, $3.65; Plattsburgh: Mrs. John Carter, $3.65; Mrs. Wm. Chappel, $2.75; Mrs. M. Myres, $3.60; Mrs. Distin, $1.90; Mrs. Al Baker, $3.65; Lucy Coats, $3.65; Mrs. Pattison, 59 cts.; Margret Pike, 25 cts.; Mrs. F. Palmer, 25 cts.; Ruth Hewett, 25 cts.; Carrie French, 20 cts.; E. Luby, 25 cts.; North Nassau: Hattie B. Robinson, $2.50; Matteawan: W. C. T. U., $2.

North Dakota—Ellendale: local W. C. T. U., $14.10.

Ohio—Medina county: W. C. T. U., $30; Dresden: W. C. T. U., $2.25; Wellington: Mrs. Sarah Cady, $3.65; New Portage: Mrs. C. P. Chapman, $4; Gurneyville: Ethel M. T. Hawkins, $3.65; Springfield: Pleasant Grove, W. C. T. U. $10; Greenfield: Miss Mary Ghormly, $5; Newark: Mrs. Evelyn Graham, $25; Seward: Johnnie Buck, $1.25.

South Dakota—Meckling: Mrs. Mary L. Hardin, $3.65.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
Financial Secretary.

To Nov. 1, 1893.

Our Library Table.

THE METHODIST YEAR BOOK. 1894. Contains facts and statistics concerning the growth and spread and general activities of Methodism.

Hunt & Eaton, New York City.

The April ATLANTIC MONTHLY is graced, in its articles of fiction, by one of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps' powerful and pathetic stories, "The Oath of Allegiance"—a story of the war.

Houghton Mifflin & Co., 11 East Seventeenth St., New York City.

"Life Under Water" is an article of much interest in the April number of SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE. It is a picturesquely written description of the work and thrilling experiences of those who go down into the deep waters, divers. The illustrations are by Carlton T. Chapman.

Charles Scribner's Sons, New York City.

The April number of THE FORUM contains among its richly attractive and valuable array of articles one by J. Castell Hopkins, entitled, "Lord Rosebery and the Liberal Crisis in England," which gives a very comprehensive consideration of the new Prime Minister and the work which lies ready to his hand.

The Forum Publishing Company, Union Square, New York.

April ST. NICHOLAS is overflowing with the good, the beautiful and the laughable for its young friends. Palmer Cox takes his Brownies into fairyland, and Mark Twain goes abroad with Tom Sawyer for the last time. Those who have followed "Toinette's Philip" through the varying experiences bid him good-by in this issue with the hope that Mrs. Jamison will "write some more like it."

The Century Company, Union Square, New York City.

"The Story of a Lost Letter," by Arthur Field, in DEMOREST April issue gives with an amusing thread of narrative many valuable and not widely known facts concerning Uncle Sam's intricate but perfectly regulated system of postal regulations and methods. W. Jennings Demorest, editor of this bright periodical, gives a strong, uncompromising word for prohibition in a page article entitled, "A Policy of Infamy."

Office of publication, 15 East 14th Street, New York City.

The current number of the POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY gives a very interesting sketch of "The Late Professor Tyndall," by his friend and cotemporary, Herbert Spencer. Other valuable articles are, "A Century of the Telegraph in France," W. Lodian, finely illustrated, "Trusts their own Corrective," by George A. Rich, and "A Chapter on Legal Development," by William W. Billson.

D. Appleton & Company, 1, 3 and 5 Bond street, New York City.

Two vigorous pens wielded by women's hands make rich the table of contents in WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE for April. These are Lilian Whiting and Mary A. Livermore. The former contributes a thoughtful article full of power on "The Means of Achieving Success," and the latter draws a picture of lurid colorings and startling situations in her war depiction, entitled, "One of the 'Forty-Niners.'"

A. D. Worthington & Co., publishers, Hartford, Conn.

THE QUARTERLY ILLUSTRATOR holds a unique place among the magazines, and is rapidly making for itself a name and a fame. The special spring number is rich in contents, giving nearly four hundred illustrations by well-known artists. But it must be severely censured that it admits to its pages studies of the nude in art. It would lose nothing and improve a good opportunity to take an uncompromising stand on this vital question.

Published by Henry C. Jones, 92–94 Fifth avenue, New York City.

The April number of THE CHAUTAUQUAN contains a beautiful tribute to the late George William Childs, by E. Jay Edwards. Speaking of the universal love and reverence in which the great philanthropist was held, Mr. Edwards says: "Men preeminent in state, in literature, in intellectual association with the people, have made of the world a sorrowing friend while mortal illness dragged its course; Garfield, but he was president; Grant, but he was the hero of war; Sherman, but he was the war's romantic adventurer; Tennyson and Longfellow, but they wrote the nation's songs. Mr. Childs alone, perhaps, of Americans without other than private station or without literary sway, had so lived that dying his countrymen looked upon him as of kin and mourned.

Dr. Theodore L. Flood, editor, Meadville, Pa.

GRANŪLA:
The Best Food. : :
The Best Medicine.

GRANŪLA, Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson over 30 years ago, is a scientifically prepared and twice-cooked food containing all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley winter wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and readily assimilated.

It has been called "The Perfect Food." As such it is a remarkable remedy for certain diseases, and if persistently used will remove Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and kindred ailments.

Granūla should be eaten daily by children, as it builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities.

Manufactured by
OUR HOME GRANŪLA CO.,
Box 100, Dansville, N. Y.
Trial Box, prepaid, 25c. Pamphlet free.

What a wonderful thing is a live seed. Immature, old or dead it may look the same. How to know? Old gardeners say that Burpee's seeds grow.

This is the proof of life. When grown we give our word you will be satisfied—your success is ours. BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1894, 172 pages, tells all about the Best Seeds that Grow. The newspapers call it the Leading American Seed Catalogue. Yours free for the asking if you plant seeds.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia.

WHY DO YOU WORRY along with dull knives and shears when . . . . .
75 CENTS
will buy an 8-in. Grafton Family Grindstone?
Each stone is mounted on a neatly japanned iron frame and will last a life-time. Notice that each stone is provided with an iron screw clamp for fastening it securely to the table. Shipped by express on receipt of price. Agents wanted.
GRAFTON STONE CO., 51 River St., Grafton, O.

A Swell Affair.

Did You Ever Look Like This?
DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM
STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY
DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS
Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich.
THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS $10 a day at home selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating Jewelry, Watches, Tableware, Bicycles, etc. Plates finest jewelry good as new, and on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. Anyone can plate the first effort. Goods need plating at every house. Outfits complete. Different sizes, all warranted. Wholesale to agents $5 up. Big profits, good seller. Circulars free.
H. F. Delno & Co. Dept. No. 6, Columbus, O.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK
UNDER STATE SUPERVISION.
Savings Deposits Draw 4 Per Ct. Interest, Payable Quarterly.
SAFFTY DEPOSIT VAULTS. | Dearborn & Jackson Sts., CHICAGO.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair.
OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

JENNESS MILLER
Specialties. Corset substitutes, Empire Waists, Bust Supports, Divided Skirts, Union Suits, etc. Send stamp for illustrated pamphlet, "Dress." Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 34 Central Music Hall, CHICAGO.

BAKER'S COCOA
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Indisputable Evidence

Or the Successful Treatment of Consumption and Chest Diseases by the English Method as Discovered and Practiced by George Thomas Congreve.

SIXTH INTERVIEW,

By the Special Commissioner,

With Mrs. PHILLIPS, of 17 St. Clair St., Glasgow, Relative to the Case of her Son (which was published in the weekly papers) in February, 1892.

Had Mr. and Mrs. Phillips followed the course adopted by many people and sat down with folded hands when told that there was no hope of saving their only son's life, they would beyond all question have had to mourn his loss; but as a perusal of the following lines will show they took another course.

This boy had had a severe attack of influenza, which left him with a harassing cough and offensive expectoration. He had pains at back and front of both lungs. The body was wasting, but the feet were swelling alarmingly. Altogether his position and his prospects of recovery, under ordinary treatment, were very slight indeed. But when ordinary treatment failed, Mr. Phillips having, as will presently appear, some previous knowledge of Mr. Congreve, applied to him.

In conversation with Mrs. Phillips recently I asked her what was the condition of her son at this time, and she replied:

"He was very ill—very near death. There is no doubt that he was in a deep consumption."

"What was your reason for thinking that, Mrs. Phillips?" I asked.

"I knew the symptoms only too well, for I have lost three sisters in consumption."

"I understand that you had called in medical advice?"

"Oh, yes, but the doctor who was attending him gave him up."

"Well, you didn't give up hope, evidently. Tell me, please, what was the result of his taking the medicine Mr. Congreve sent him."

"In a few days the expectoration became much less offensive, and gradually both that and the cough disappeared. The swelling of the feet ceased. He made steady progress from the first, and soon gained both flesh and strength."

"Now, Mrs. Phillips, what do you suppose would have happened if your son had not been placed under Mr. Congreve for treatment?"

"He would have died—nothing could have saved him."

"How is your son now?"

"He is keeping well and strong. He has absolutely no weakness. As Mr. Phillips wrote: 'I look back to the time when he was nothing but skin and bone, and thank God for Mr. Congreve's medicine, for now he is strong and hearty, and better than he ever was in his life.' He is at work at a situation in Buchanan street."

Before I left Mrs. Phillips told me how it came about that her husband applied to Mr. Congreve. Mr. Phillips' father was a Baptist minister at Suailbeach, and he had recommended Mr. Rowson, who is now a minister at Welshpool, to try the treatment, and wrote to Mr. Congreve for medicine. "Mr. Rowson could hardly walk (said Mr. Phillips), but he became a fine, stout man; I hardly knew him, such was the change."

That Mr. Phillips' confidence was not misplaced will be the firm opinion of all who read the brief account of the restoration to health of his son.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs or Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis; together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order of $1.00 bottle of my Balsamic Elixir.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR can be obtained from many drug stores, but it will take some time before it will be introduced into all of them throughout this vast country. If your druggist has not yet put it in stock, it will be sent you, carriage paid, from my own depot, on receipt of 50c., $1, $1.75, $3.75 or $7, according to the size of the bottle ordered.

CANADIAN BILLS AND STAMPS cannot be received. Send Money Order.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE,
London, Eng., and 4 Wooster Street, New York.

Druggists supplied by
C. N. CRITTENTON CO., NEW YORK,
OR
John D. Park & Son Co., Cincinnati.
☞Mention this paper.

It is significant to note the stand so many of the college girls and boys are taking on the temperance question. Wellesley, Holyoke, etc., have active workers. The University of Minnesota helped in circulating the Great Petition, and all the students of Bellevue signed the temperance pledge on College Day in January.—Exchange.

Ques.—Is it true, as stated in Review of Reviews, that Lady Henry Somerset serves wine to her son's guests?

Ans.—It is not true, as I am informed, and would know without any information, that Lady Henry serves wine to anybody, much less to her own son or his guests. It must be borne in mind, however, that the control which a mother has over her children is not the same among the nobility in a monarchy that it is in a republic.

Lady Henry's son may have banquets where she is not present and which are managed by persons over whom she has no control.

The writer adds to this question, "This has troubled some of our union. If you can throw any light upon it, you will help us over a hard place." Now, my dear sister, it should not make it any harder for any individual to stand by her colors if all the world failed to reach the standard. Be true to your own convictions and to your God, without reference to the habits or customs of any other. Then, again, let us trust each other more. If gossip or the press say injurious things of those whose record is above reproach, whose heart and hands are engaged in good work, let us turn a deaf ear and trust.—Our Message.

The Responsive Reading for January, 1894, published by the W. T. P. A., Chicago, is by Mary Wood Allen, National superintendent of purity department. The subject is "The Pure in Heart," and the leaflet is a most worthy one to circulate.—Our Message.

Maine was made a prohibition state by sowing it knee deep with literature.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant told an English audience that during her visit to this country, she traveled for days in Maine without seeing a ragged child, or hungry-looking man or woman, while she never was among so many people who were the owners of their own homes.—The Organizer.

The W. T. P. A. is soon to issue a book that will attract much attention, the record of the life-work of one who "made of motherhood the holiest of professions"—Mrs. Mary T. Hill Willard. It is entitled "A Great Mother." Written by her daughter and another relative, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset, and handsomely illustrated, its publication will be eagerly watched for by many readers.—Our Messenger.

We all continue to think THE UNION SIGNAL the best paper we have ever read; count it next to the Bible. May it ever continue to be of the same high order.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Your efforts in the past on behalf of THE UNION SIGNAL have been and are much appreciated, but there are many to whom as yet the paper is practically unknown, and these we covet as patrons, believing that with the large constituency of the W. C. T. U., the excellent qualities of our National organ, together with its low subscription price, ought to give us at least 100,000 annual subscribers.

We feel no hesitancy in asserting that for $1 its equal is not to be found among the journals of the present day, possessing as it does, the combined attractions of several papers in the one, for it treats of matters pertaining to religious and philanthropic work, as well as of the temperance reform in all its phases, thus making it of great value to the W. C. T. U. worker and all others who are laboring to uplift humanity, while it is most acceptable for the home circle reading.

In order to reach the 100,000 mark we need and must have the coöperation of every white-ribboner. We are making a special effort through "Our Boys." Will you not encourage them to help swell our list and secure for themselves an excellent time-keeper?

Nearly two hundred boys have announced their intention to secure the premium watch we offer. These boys have sent us over one hundred and fifty new subscribers, and the boys write us they are well satisfied with the watches and thank us for the opportunity to secure them.

We are daily receiving requests to send UNION SIGNAL to some one who is unable to take it, but regret to say our philanthropy fund is so nearly exhausted it is impossible to accede to these requests.

"You are giving us fifty times our money's worth. THE SIGNAL itself is second to no paper in the world, according to our ideas in this home."

No bicycle ever made at all approaches them in beauty and style joined to excellence of construction; none so strongly appeals to the experienced rider as meeting every requirement of a perfect mount.

The need of repairs for Columbias will be infrequent under our new system of inspection, which now begins with a scientific analysis of the raw material by a metallurgist, and only ends when thorough tests have been made of the complete machine and all its parts.

1894 Standard Price, $125.00.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Seven newly designed wheels are shown in our 1894 Catalogue which will interest every cyclist. Our agents furnish it free, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

BOSTON, NEW YORK, CHICAGO, HARTFORD.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to

Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

☞ Cut this out and send it with your inquiry. ☜

A Great Mother . .

The Ably-Written and Delightfully Interesting Biography of . . . .

MADAM WILLARD

will soon issue from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and will prove a rare acquisition to our literature.

It is more than a biography ; it is a setting forth of her sublime

Philosophy of Life,

and a record of her wise, pithy sayings, as well as of the incidents in which she put her philosophy to the test of practical experience.

It should be in the hands of each

. . . Mother . . .

while, at the same time, so vivid is its portrayal and so interesting the facts recorded, each child will find it full of interest.

It will be ready very soon, and orders will be received at once.

Handsomely Bound....Profusely Illustrated....Price $1.50....

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

House Furnishing

has many branches. We concentrate our entire resources on wall papering. Pretty effects—new designs. 100 samples mailed for 8 cents. Prices, 5 to 50c. a roll.
A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1624 Chestnut St., Phila.

To Clean False Teeth
As they should be cleaned, use the Florence Dental Plate Brush the only brush made for the purpose. Reaches every crevice. Outwears three ordinary brushes. Sold everywhere. Price 35 cts. | Florence Mfg. Co., Florence Mass. Makers of the Prophylactic Tooth Brush.

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 DAYS TREATMENT FREE by mail. DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY
Entirely New. Abreast of the Times. A Grand Educator.

Successor of the "Unabridged."
Everybody should own this Dictionary. It answers all questions concerning the history, spelling, pronunciation, and meaning of words.
A Library in Itself. It also gives the often desired information concerning eminent persons; facts concerning the countries, cities, towns, and natural features of the globe; particulars concerning noted fictitious persons and places; translation of foreign quotations. It is invaluable in the home, office, study, and schoolroom.
The One Great Standard Authority.
Hon. D. J. Brewer, Justice of U. S. Supreme Court, writes: "The International Dictionary is the perfection of dictionaries. I commend it to all as the one great standard authority."
Recommended by Every State Superintendent of Schools Now in Office.
A saving of three cents per day for a year will provide more than enough money to purchase a copy of the International. Can you afford to be without it?
Have your Bookseller show it to you.
G. & C. Merriam Co. Publishers, Springfield, Mass.
WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY
Do not buy cheap photographic reprints of ancient editions.
Send for free prospectus containing specimen pages, illustrations, etc.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address
ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE, 2819 OLIVE ST., ST. LO., MO.

The Sound Disc For Deafness.
AN INVENTION THAT OUTRANKS ALL OTHER DEVICES OF OUR AGE.
An inventor in the Ashland Block, Chicago, named H. A. Wales, has given the world an invisible device for deafness, which, by practical demonstration, outranks all discoveries of the kind. As it concentrates the sound waves on the drum head its possibilities are indeed very great. Its advent can be hailed with joy by both physician and patient.—N. E. Medical Journal.

If out of order use BEECHAM'S PILLS.

The Unvarnished Truth and no Bombast.

In advocating the claims of a deserving remedy no less than of any other meritorious article, exaggeration is as unwise at it is unnecessary. To avoid anything approaching flamboyancy, to adhere to the rigid limits of truth, is, as we have ever believed, the most politic as well as the most honest course. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda has been adjudged worthy of unqualified commendation by leading physicians on more than one continent of this and the old hemisphere. Experience has proven its ability to successfully antagonize Consumption and lung troubles; a trial convinces any one who uses it that its flavor is unobjectionable and the unsollicited representation of a host of living witnesses show its tonic and flesh-creating properties in wasting disease. No less positive is the evidence that for Scrofulous and Rheumatic ailments it is a most serviceable medicine. Every one of these statements is authenticated by ample proofs in the hands of the manufacturers.

A GREAT MOTHER.

There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to the forthcoming volume—"A Great Mother."

It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession, but not often do we find those who are willing to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose.

Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions.

This book, written by her great daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset, will be handsomely illustrated, and will not only contain a full account of Madam Willard's interesting life, but will present her invaluable ideas upon the bringing up of children; give many of her wise sayings, and record the helpful incidents of a household in which she was ever the central feature.

There could be no more beautiful object lesson on the secret of "growing old gracefully" than that presented by this volume. The marvelous chapter entitled "A Great Sunset," which shows this woman of nearly ninety as she crossed into the beyond, must rob death of its terrors, and irradiate the darkness of the tomb.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

At the suggestion of a few prominent white-ribboners living far from Chicago, and therefore unable personally to attend to various matters of business importance in this city, we have concluded to open a Shopping and Commission Department, not as a branch of our regular business, but as an accommodation to the many friends who desire to entrust shopping and other outside business to reliable parties. We have secured an experienced and responsible lady who has resided in Chicago many years, and is familiar with our largest houses in every branch of business, a woman of keen insight, good judgment, excellent taste and an economical buyer.

We have endeavored faithfully to execute all commissions entrusted to us in the past, but as it necessarily interferes with our legitimate business, we have concluded this new arrangement, which will, we believe, give eminent satisfaction.

In many cases no commission whatever will be charged; in others requiring expenditure of extra time and money, it will be necessary to charge a proportionate commission.

Inquiries, orders, etc., must be addressed SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPARTMENT, and a stamp inclosed to insure prompt reply. If you have business with the Association kindly address all letters Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. If you wish other business transacted, shopping or commissions of any nature, address
SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPT.,
Care of WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

POWER OF A LEAFLET.

A dollar expended for a leaflet or message of temperance truth can be made to reach a thousand homes, and in the aggregate thousands of readers therein.—Dr. Theo. Cuyler.

DELIGHTED WITH THE STORIES.

"'Black Beauty,' 'Helping,' 'Van and Vet,' 'Prove It,' 'We and Our Friends,' 'Boys and Other Boys' are being circulated among the members of the Legion, who are delighted with the stories."

HAVE YOU RENEWED

Your subscription to Our Day, the magazine devoted to current reform? It is fearless and uncompromising in its condemnation of wrong systems and wrong practices. It is edited by Joseph Cook, the great reformer of the present age. It is able, comprehensive and aggressive, and is furnished at the low price of $1 per annum. Beginning with 1894 Our Day is issued as a Bi-Monthly. Sample copies of January and February issue sent for 10 cents each.

Notice to Church Societies.

A new and easy plan for raising Money, Books, Carpets, etc., for Churches, Sunday-Schools and Parsonages is offered by the Consumers' Wholesale Tea and Spice Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio. Churches in need should write them for particulars, also ladies who would like to secure beautiful premiums for themselves.

SOUND ABROAD THE FAME OF
THE UNIVERSAL FAVORITE
CRAB-APPLE ∴ BLOSSOM ∴ PERFUME

AND THE WORLD RENOWNED
CROWN ∴ LAVENDER ∴ SALTS
EXCLUSIVE PRODUCTIONS OF
THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.,
177 New Bond Street, London.
Asked For all Over the World. Annual Sales More than Half a Million Bottles.
Sold only in Crown Stoppered Bottles as shown above.

HARTFORDS
ARE BICYCLES FOR EVERYONE.

The PRICES are low and the QUALITY high, which represent true economy for all.
Examine them, try them and buy them. Our CATALOGUE is free. Send your address.
THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO., Hartford, Conn.

.. Have YOU Seen ..
OUR WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO
Part I Now Ready
COLLECTION OF THOROUGHLY ARTISTIC PORTRAITS OF FAMILIAR FACES

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents, and we will send you Part I.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART I
Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

PART I CONTAINS
FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MOTHER THOMPSON, MADAM WILLARD,
MOTHER WALLACE, MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT,
MARGARET BRIGHT LUCAS, MOTHER STEWART,
HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, NEAL DOW,
CLINTON B. FISK, JOHN B. GOUGH,
MARY ALLEN WEST.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

Signal Notes.

FOUR Chinamen have been recently enrolled as cadets in the Salvation Army in Calcutta.

IT has been decided in New York that a newspaper has no right to publish pictures of persons without their consent.

THE University of Michigan has a Japanese students' association, consisting of thirteen members.

THE women of Liverpool have formed an association, the object being to insist upon shopkeepers providing seats for their employés.

A TRAINING college for lady teachers has been opened in Bombay. The course will take two years, and is to be irrespective of creed.

THE English law prohibiting marriage with the deceased wife's sister is strictly enforced in India as well as in the mother country.

THE Moravian church sends out one in sixty of its members as foreign missionaries, while one in five thousand is the average in other Protestant churches.

THE eminent French statesman, M. Jules Simon, has entered most heartily into the Continental agitation for limiting the term of conscription and of enforced military service to one year only.

As the enormous brewing interests of New York City are wholly favorable to Tammany Hall, there is little chance or hope for improvement, according to the New York Sun.

THE president of the Ohio Wine and Spirit Association announced at the annual meeting that every member of the Ohio legislature had been interviewed and all agreed that there would be no legislation hostile to the liquor interests.

SENATOR FRYE'S bill for a national commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic will probably meet the fate of all such bills. It will be smothered in the House. The Temperance Advocate says, "The brewers and distillers and their allies are in the saddle, booted and spurred in the present House."

THE factory inspectors of New York state report that in the 11,068 separate factories, workshops and sweat-shops visited, they found 412,237 persons employed. Over 48,954 women under twenty-one and 6,660 under sixteen were employed. The report shows that there has been a reduction in child labor this past year.

PROF. J. J. MCCOOK, who has been investigating the subject thoroughly, says that of the German, American and British tramps whom he has interviewed, sixty-three per cent are confessedly intemperate. He recommends uniform laws in every state, committing drunkards and vagrants to places of detention, where they shall be compelled to work.

A GREAT celebration scheme has been proposed by Dr. W. F. Crafts. It is nothing less than to celebrate the 1900th birthday of Christ. The essentials to its success are four: 1, It will be preëminently Christian. 2, World encircling. 3, Extending over a whole year will make it a jubilee year. 4, A round-the-world tour of a thousand associated missionaries and Christian tourists.

MR. HUDSON TAYLOR, the founder of the Chinese Inland Mission and one of the greatest living authorities on all Chinese matters, says: "To our mind, nothing is more clear than that the Chinese had both the right, the power, and the will to stamp out the use of opium in China at the time when they first came into collision with England. We feel convinced that but for England they would have accomplished this; and hence we feel that England is morally responsible for every ounce of opium now produced in China as well as for that imported."

DO YOU HAVE ASTHMA?

If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is reported a positive cure for the disease. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, have such faith in this new discovery, that they are sending out free by mail, large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card.

Good Cooking

Is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Take no substitute for the Eagle Brand.

IVORY SOAP
IVORY
IT FLOATS
FORTY MILLION CAKES YEARLY.
THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

No other dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.
WALL PAPER
Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples . . . .
Beautiful Gold Paper 5 cents per roll.
We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to our nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.
ALFRED PEATS
30-32 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

Even the little pig in the picture is a more agreeable companion than a man with a dirty collar or a woman who presides over a tawdry house. But nobody wants the reputation of being a pig under any circumstances.

ARTISTIC HOMES
A Beautifully Illustrated Book that tells the whole story from Cellar to Garret. It contains a large number of Designs and Plans of costing from $500 to $18,000; also Designs for laying out and beautifying your grounds.
BEAUTIFUL HOMES
This book will make you familiar at once with all the latest ideas and best home building methods.
Sent to all who contemplate building for 10 cents postage.
DON'T FAIL TO SEE OUR NEW 1894 BOOK.
How to Plan and Build Them.
GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects, Box 106, Knoxville, Tenn.

A SOLID GOLD RING or a dozen heavy Silver plated spoons given away to any woman, girl or boy. All we ask of you is to distribute circulars and talk up our remedies among your friends and acquaintances. Send us your name and address. No money required. HOBB'S MEDICINE CO., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,
But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.
H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster.
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

6 tubs in one. BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.
E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo.

14 KARAT GOLD PLATE
CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this watch by express for examination. A Guarantee For 5 Years and chain and charm sent with it. You examine it and if you think it a bargain pay our sample price, $2.75, and it is yours. It is beautifully engraved and warranted the best timekeeper in the World for the money and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold Watch. Write to-day, this offer will not appear again.
THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO.,
334 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Publisher's Notes.

"NEAL DOW NUMBER SETTLED THE MATTER."

So writes a correspondent who had been thinking she could no longer take THE SIGNAL.

"I have taken THE UNION SIGNAL a number of years and should be lost without it and perhaps backslide from the dear cause I have at heart. I am one of the original Crusaders of Cleveland, O., and cannot step outside of the widening circle."

OUR DAY.

From a correspondent we have received the following:

"I have always considered Our Day the choicest of reform magazines—courageous, and on the right side of all needed reforms, and I will continue my subscription to it as long as it maintains its excellent standard."

OUR WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

What do you think of it? The orders in every mail answer the question. Write to us for terms for one hundred copies and make some money for your unions.

FROM OUR MESSAGE.

The Young Crusader, with its New Year's greetings, presents some new features, which will surely meet the approval of its old friends, and, we sincerely hope, challenge the subscription of new ones. It hopes to establish closer relations with the children, through a department called "L. T. L. Letter Box," containing letters from children, and another entitled "Our L. T. L. Superintendents," with brief reports from State, National and World's L. T. L. leaders. It certainly merits the abundant patronage of the whole L. T. L. constituency.

One copy per year, 15 cents; clubs of ten 12 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A CLASSIC TOWN.

By Frances E. Willard.

This book tells the forty years' story of Evanston, the seat of the great Northwestern University from the date of its inception, the 31st of May, 1850, "in a prayer meeting," as Miss Willard says, "held by appointment at the law office of the Hon. Grant Goodrich in the city of Chicago," the object of which was to consider the project of founding a school that should be "a fountain of Christian scholarship for the Northwest."

It is a story of town and character building well worth reading by any one who has an ambition to leave the world better for his having been in it.

FROM THE WISCONSIN MOTOR.

I would refer all superintendents to two leaflets that will be very helpful to your work in the union.

Department Leaflet, No 71. "A Child's Worst Habit." This will be a helpful leaflet to use in Mothers' meetings.

Department Leaflet, No. 61. "Purity in Literature and Art." This will be a stimulus to all. Could every W. C. T. U. woman feel the force of every word in this last-named leaflet, our success as temperance workers would be assured for a near day.

The most of you know that these leaflets (and many others of equal value) can be purchased of our Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and the price each 1 cent, or 15 cents per 100.

With the love that comes with the bond of the White Ribbon, I greet all of the Wisconsin sisters.

Loyally yours,
EVALINE E. PRATT.
Ashland, Oregon, Feb. 6, 1894.

STATE AND LOCAL LITERATURE SUPERINTENDENTS AND OAK AND IVY LEAF SOLICITORS:

All 25c. subscriptions to

Oak and Ivy Leaf

received after this date will send the paper to the subscriber until January, 1895.

For 50c. Oak and Ivy Leaf

will be sent to the subscriber until July, 1895.

This, in view of the change in the young woman's paper which raises the rate as above. The change to take place with the July number.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 15.] CHICAGO, April 12, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance

Mrs. Ursula D. Hettrick 1029 16th St. Den. Colo.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Iowa women can vote on certain municipal questions.

Senor Borgono is acting president of Peru, South America.

The tariff bill is the theme of oratory for Republican, Democrat and Populist in the Senate just now.

Navigation of the great lakes is open and will give employment to thousands of unemployed seamen.

The Massachusetts senate has hindered the work of the century by refusing women the right to vote at municipal elections.

A further stay of execution to July 2 is granted Patrick Prendergast, and the trial to determine his sanity is set at May 21.

The meeting of King Humbert and Emperor William, at Venice, Saturday, was an occasion of great rejoicing by the people.

Charles Edouard Brown-Sequard, the noted Paris doctor, author and discoverer in medical science, is dead, at the age of seventy-six.

The disastrous riots by striking Hungarian laborers in the coke regions of Pennsylvania have ended in the imprisonment of the rioters.

Laws which give effect to the Bering Sea arbitration decision for the protection of fur seals have been passed by England and the United States.

The "army of the commonweal" continues on its march to Washington, receiving aid from sympathizers en route and numbering four hundred at last report.

Home rule for Scotland in the form of a grand committee of eighty-seven members, including all the Scotch members of the lower House, has been passed by that body, voting 180 to 170.

The ninetieth birthday of General George W. Jones, a venerable soldier, statesman and jurist, was observed in a signal fashion by the Iowa legislature who, by a special act, made him guest of the state for the day.

Senator Kyle has introduced a bill which is directed against the sweating system. It prohibits the sale of clothing in one state made in another, in an uncleanly room or in rooms used for sleeping or eating, and requires a tag to be placed upon all clothing giving the street and number of the house in which it was made.

Judge Jenkins, of Milwaukee, issued Friday a modification of his famous Northern Pacific strike order. He still maintains the illegality of strikes and his decision is in strong contrast to that of Judge Caldwell, at Omaha. A Congressional committee was appointed Friday to investigate Judge Jenkins' order restraining strikes.

WE are glad to add the report from New Mexico to the tabulated statement of Dr. Mary Wood Allen, published in our last issue. Mrs. Borden, state president, writes that through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. the age of consent in that state was raised from ten to fourteen, seven years ago. With such encouragement we hope the white-ribboners of New Mexico will continue to keep the question of prctection for girls before their law makers.

AMONG the attractions of the Midwinter Fair the management has offered a fight "to a finish" between a grizzly bear recently captured and a ferocious lion. The California exposition should have a board of lady managers. We are pleased to note that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has taken the matter in hand and has secured the coöperation of the mayor and chief of police in suppressing the barbarous and brutalizing exhibition.

As a sign of the times the municipal elections held in many of the states the past week are significant. While in a general way encouraging to Republicans, they, at the same time, indicate a decided growth of the non-partisan idea for local government. They may be regarded as a hopeful revolt against bum-and-boodleism in general and saloon dominance in particular.

THE legislature of Iowa adjourned without attempting to reconsider the vote upon the bill for the manufacture of liquor within the state, it having been discovered that the opposition held the "whip hand." So that while Iowans may violate the prohibition law by selling intoxicants imported from other states, they may not traffic in liquor produced by home industry. And this condition of affairs has been brought about by the party which poses as the champion of protective tariff!

To the Hon. Jeremiah Wilson, attorney for the plaintiff in the Pollard-Breckinridge case, is due the thanks of all women for his public enunciation in a court of justice of the principle, one code of morals for both sexes in society as well as in law; and for his adopting this line of argument on behalf of his client. One good result of this disgraceful trial will be to stir public opinion as it has never been stirred before to the iniquity of our laws concerning this form of vice and to excite a wider interest in the cause of social purity. It has been nauseating medicine and such as we naturally shrink from seeing administered to the public, but we doubt not that through the wisdom of Him who brings good out of evil and ever keeps watch above His own, it will bring a needed lesson into many a home.

MUNICIPAL elections in Colorado possess unusual interest this year for the reason that they are, in a true sense, the voice of the people. Reports so far have been highly encouraging to advocates of woman suffrage and to friends of good government generally. Even our opponents testify to the wholesome influence of woman's presence at the polls. Those who are watching results under the new political régime say that the temperance question is to be a leading issue, and that it is evident that candidates who are not pronounced friends of the cause may expect but little support from women voters. In Kansas also the influence of women was such as to compel the nomination of "clean" men—men pledged to the support of the prohibitory law. Results in both states show that rather than submit to "petticoat government" by risking the election of a woman's ticket, male citizens preferred to secure the nomination of officers acceptable to the "better half" of the voting population.

THE whisky rebellion in South Carolina has been one of the sensational topics of the week. Two counties have seen fit to defy the state constables, denouncing them as "spies"; have actively resisted the enforcement of the dispensary law, and loss of life on both sides has been the result. The governor has taken summary action in asserting the authority of the state, even to the extent of controlling railroad and telegraph lines. While, as our readers well know, we would make not the slightest concession in dealing with the liquor traffic, we at the same time oppose most strenuously any action of a law-defying character. Governor Tillman merits the commendation and support of all law-abiding people, whether prohibition or anti-prohibition, for his determined stand in upholding the law. Had his methods been less stringent and prompt he would have been false to his trust. If after a fair trial the law is not acceptable to the people who made it let the same people repeal it. Like all plans for the regulation instead of the abolishment of an evil, it will sooner or later be written of the dispensary law, "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

A PROMINENT Chicago daily bewails the fact that in American cities saloon-keepers are a privileged class—and the "peerage of local politics." Yet, after the manner of high license supporters, while denouncing the saloon as the "unit of American degradation" and the "fecund source of private ruin and public corruption," it declares that the business is necessary to satisfy a public demand and is not in itself disreputable. Local option carried to its "logical conclusion" is suggested as a check upon the power of the saloon-keeper—that means that "the people of a given number of acres or squares ought to have the right to say whether they would tolerate saloons within their acreage." The Haskell bill now before the Ohio legislature provides for just this "carrying down" of the principle of local option by permitting every ward of a city or town to decide the liquor question within its own boundaries. This is an advanced step, but still it is not local option carried to its logical conclusion. That can only be when the people of a given locality, men and women, exercise control, not only in the making but in the enforcing of liquor law. The journal referred to uses the word people, but we are afraid it means voters.

AN important decision was rendered at Omaha last week. In the wage contest between the Union Pacific railroad and its employés, Judge Caldwell decided that what is lawful for organized capital is also lawful for organized labor; that labor is capital, consisting of brain and muscle. But while not unlawful for either employers or employés to associate together for the purpose of furthering their own personal interests, Judge Caldwell characterizes all such organized movement as the "promptings of enlightened selfishness." This fearless jurist evidently believes with all progressive thinkers that the relation between employer and employed should be one of coöperation and that the interests of both demand union with, not union against each other. What both need is a more enlightened selfishness, that higher form of selfishness which recognizes humanity as the one great indivisible self of which each individual forms a part. This decision adds lustre to a name already held in high repute, not only in judicial circles but in temperance ranks. For Judge Caldwell has rendered most efficient service to the cause in his own state of Arkansas. To his influence both as jurist and platform speaker is largely due the strong prohibition sentiment which exists in that state

---

THE decision of Judge Gibbons of Chicago in the case of the people of Illinois against the Distillery and Cattle Feeding Company has brought consternation to the whisky trust. The company is declared to be a dangerous and illegal combine in that it has absorbed the property and rights of eighty-one distilleries and limits or increases their production in whatever way its own interests may dictate. One point in the plea of the defendant is worthy of special mention, because, strangely enough, it is one upon which the whisky trust and Prohibitionists entirely agree, and that is that "whisky is not a necessity." Since when have the leaders of the liquor interest taken this advanced stand? Answering the claim that because it is not a necessity the public is not harmed by the operations of the trust, Judge Gibbons forcibly remarks upon the illegal nature of monopolies in general. "Combinations and trusts exist," he says, "with the good-natured toleration of the public, but the time has come for the courts to recognize the danger and to apply the law according to its true spirit and effect." Perhaps it is not so much good-natured tolerance on the part of the public as a knowledge of its inability hitherto to cope with these moneyed powers in courts and legislative halls. The righteous decision of Judge Gibbons will, however, tend to urge the people to more aggressive and united effort against all dangerous corporations.

WHY?

BY HATTIE HORNER-LOUTHAN.

He couldn't write, he couldn't read,
  He little knew nor cared
About the people's wrongs and need;
How others lived he took no heed,
  Nor how they fared.

The big saloon he couldn't pass,
  Nor pools of any type,
He couldn't live without his glass,
And he was miserable, alas!
  Without his pipe.

On public streams, whiche'er the way,
  He could do naught but float;
And on the questions of the day,
He couldn't think, he couldn't pray,—
  But he could vote.

She couldn't drink, she couldn't swear,
  She couldn't even smoke;
Nor could she open wrongs declare,
Nor with a ballot did she dare
  The right invoke.

She loved the people and she knew
  The questions passing by
Were weighty; her conclusions drew,—
And out of these convictions grew,
  The how and why.

She kept herself outside the rut;
  From leading minds could quote;
She had opinions clearly cut;
Could write and read and reason,—but
  She could not vote.

Chicago, Ill.

ONLY A FAITHFUL SOWER.

BY J. F. COWAN.

Little, patient, untiring Miss Ruth! With waterproof, umbrella and storm overshoes, she went trudging and splashing through the rain and mud on that cold, blue, dreary March morning, to the little stuffy room, partitioned off the vestibule of the church, where she had met her infant class Sunday after Sunday, rain or shine, summer and winter, for the last fifteen years.

Not the same boys and girls, to be sure, for they came and went—came wee toddlers in short frocks and knee pants, and, by and by, before she realized it, had grown large enough to be promoted into some of the older classes. But still it was "Miss Ruth's class," and most of the children loved dearly to be in it, and were sorry when the time came for the superintendent to come in and take them by the arm and conduct them out into the big room, to place them under the care of another teacher.

Faithful little Miss Ruth! How could she stay away for rain or snow or headache or Sunday sickness, when the memory of all those bright, little faces came up before her, and the thought of all those sweet, impressionable little lives was ever with her?

"Well, I declare!" a voice greeted her over the palings of a front door yard, as she trudged along; "not going to Sunday-school such a morning as this, I hope? Why, there'll be nobody there."

"I shall be there," said the cheery, little voice, with a sort of gratified chuckle.

"Well, what's the use?"

"And some of the children, I am sure," she answered more seriously; "and how disappointed they would be to have no teacher."

"Well, let the superintendent appoint a substitute for this once. You know you are ailing, and one ought to take care of one's self."

"Oh! by and by will do to take care of myself, when the harvest days come and I am sure of my sheaves. But this is the sowing time, and I must sow, sow, if I would reap by and by."

"Well, I declare! I am clear out of patience with her!" said a half fretful voice, as the head which was conspicuous for the knots of white paper, displayed in irregular rows across the front and around the sides, was withdrawn within the window. "Just as if somebody else couldn't teach those children, or just as if their mothers couldn't teach them at home, on such a stormy morning as this! It's too heavy a cross for a weak little body like her to bear."

But dear little Miss Ruth thought it no cross; to her it was a joy. She thought of the bright, little faces that would be upturned towards hers; of the strange and interesting questions and the quick answers. She thought of the pleasure of reviewing the last Sunday's lesson, and the one before that, and earlier ones still, to see how much the little minds had treasured up of the seed thoughts she had been dropping, dropping, dropping into them. And how it would thrill her through and through to find that in some little heart the seed had found lodgment, and, nurtured by some kindly influence at home, was growing, growing into fruitage for the Master by and by.

As she climbed the steps leading into the church entrance, stopping on every third or fourth one with a little exclamation of fatigue, followed by an asthmatic wheeze, she was counting them up on her fingers; Jimmie, Susie, Charlie, Mary, Tommie and the rest who would likely be there, in spite of the rain. "Dear little hearts!" she said to herself, her face lighting up with a tender glow, "how disappointed they would be if 'Miss Ruth' did not come!"

The day's work was over. The little figure in black was plodding down the street again, umbrella held aloft in one hand, and skirts raised from contact with the sloppy pavement with the other. Her head was throbbing and her heart was weary. One or two new scholars had been more trying than usual that day upon her patience, or else her nerves were in a condition to stand less. "After all," she was saying to herself, "perhaps I ought not to have gone. Perhaps it was not my duty to go. Perhaps—" But then the thought came to her: "This is the seed time; some one must sow, sow, sow!"

If she could only have known into what soil the seed had fallen that very day!

. . . . . .

"Charlie!" exclaimed a loud, harsh voice in one of the two rooms of a tenement house, in one of the hardest quarters of the town, "are you going to do as I tell you? You had better do it, pretty quick! Leave that brat alone, I tell you, and go along with the bucket; and don't waste any time in getting back here, either."

The boy to whom this rough command had been addressed from the lips of a slovenly looking woman, was, in appearance, in keeping with his surroundings, although there was in his cleanly scrubbed hands and his bushy hair, combed into something like a half-way civilized appearance, and his shoes, glistening from the effects of patient rubbing with a brush which had been first moistened and then introduced to the bottom of a kettle, which showed an attempt had been made to put himself on something like a Sunday footing. He was low-browed and square jawed, and had a deep set eye, that, when he was first addressed, gave out a sullen look of defiance, but which, when he turned to pick up the crying child who had fallen in the gutter near him, might have been noticed to soften and almost gleam with a different emotion.

He carried the little one carefully back into the house, smoothing her tangled locks as he went along and soothing her by the most endearing terms with which he was familiar. Then, the look of sullen defiance coming back into his eyes again, he deliberately picked up the bucket from the table and started off down the street without deigning to notice or answer the threat of his mother.

"I'll do it this time," he muttered to himself, "I'll do it now, but I'm sick and tired of it, and the time is coming when I won't stand it any longer. She says it ain't right, and I'd believe anything she said. What if I should meet her. I'll sneak down the alley, though I don't suppose there is any danger of it. But I don't like the sneaking much better than I'd like meeting her. I hate it! I like what she tells me. I'm going to be that kind. I despise the other kind!" And he ground his teeth together as he uttered the last sentence.

Then, repeating something over to himself softly, which, if little Miss Ruth could have heard, would have been a very cheering assurance to her that blue afternoon, he went thoughtfully on his way toward the groggery where the pail was filled with beer and soon returned, setting it upon the table where he had found it, and going to hunt up the little one whom he had been comforting.

What a picture that would have been for little Miss Ruth to gaze upon that afternoon! But she did not know. She did not know but she had faith. And faith sometimes is stronger than knowledge. And when the burden of loneliness and responsibility became heaviest, she fell upon her knees before her little cot and poured out the burden of her heart before the Lord. And one of the things which she laid upon Him that afternoon was the new boy of her class, with low forehead, square chin, deep set and sullen eyes, which sometimes she thought flashed back into hers looks of intelligence—at least she hoped so—but that most of the time seemed to indicate nothing but stolid indifference to all that she had been saying. The years went by, three, five, ten and more. Then there came a time when there was no longer a "Miss Ruth's" class in the Sunday-school.

Up the steps of the parsonage there stamped a tall, broad-shouldered young man. He appeared to be a stranger in the city. He was hunting for some place or some one, and did not know exactly where to go.

It was the pastor himself who answered the ring. His open, kindly face at once invited confidence.

"May I inquire," asked the stranger, "if you can tell me where a certain Miss Ruth, who used to be a teacher in the church yonder, lives? I do not know her other name. I never knew it."

"Miss Ruth? Miss Ruth?" repeated the minister, at first shaking his head, and then apparently recollecting. "Yes, I do remember, now, hearing something about her. She was a good little body, they said—that is, kind and clever with the children; but not what you would call a capable or well-trained teacher, according to present standards. She—"

"I do not know what others might call her, sir," the stranger interrupted, impatiently, "but for me she sowed the seed faithfully and patiently as God gave her ability, and the fruit of it is in my life. I owe everything to it."

"Ah?" exclaimed the pastor in a tone of interest, and with a rising inflection.

"Yes, sir. And if you can only tell me where she is—"

"My dear young sir," it was the pastor's turn to interrupt now; "I am sorry to tell you that she is no more. Her removal from her sphere of activity here antedates my appointment to this charge. I am sorry, sir, but—"

"I am sorry, too," said the other, hastily brushing a tear away with the back of his hand, "for I hoped to have borne to her ears the good news that her sowing was not in vain. But she will know it; she will know it. Already she has begun her rejoicing, and her sheaves are in her hands." And he turned on his heel and left.

"Yes," commented the pastor to one of his flock, to whom he mentioned the little incident later, "it is strange how our best theories are sometimes upset. I learn upon inquiry that the young man was at one time a ragged boy upon our streets, the son of a man who died in a drunken debauch, and of a woman whose life was sinful and debased to the last degree. They had two children. The little girl was weakly and pined away and died. The boy disappeared, no one knew where; but he carried away with him the truths that faithful little woman had tried, in her weakness, to teach him. As I learn from the clerk at the hotel where he is stopping, he is a prosperous physician in a western city."

"Yes, I remember her," was the response. "They removed her from her class several years before her death. It was the opinion of the superintendent that she was never much of a teacher, anyway, and it was better to put the little ones in charge of some one who paid some attention to normal methods and could interest them by object teaching and so on."

"But," concluded the pastor, "she was a faithful sower. God knows that. She sowed the seed; and after all what can any of us do, whatever our methods or our training, more than that?"

Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE AMERICAN PROBLEM.

II.

Illustrated by Chicago.

BY CLARK WAGGONER.

CHICAGO EXPOSITION STATISTICS.

In this connection facts and results of the great Exposition have special interest. No other in the world's history has commanded the attention directed to that wonderful event. The years devoted to preparation and millions of money required for its success, justly challenged exceptional consideration. A few figures in such connection are pertinent here:

Total cost of construction and general expenses to close	$25,540,347
Construction expenses	18,322,622
General and operating expenses	7,127,240
Expenses for six months of open Fair	3,540,037
Gate receipts	10,626,330
Chicago city appropriation	5,000,000
Average daily expenses for six months of Fair	22,405
Receipts per day same time	89,501
Total receipts from all sources	28,151,168

As seen, the money annually paid the Chicago saloon-keepers is nearly twice the combined construction and general expenses of the great Exposition; about five times the total gate receipts and nearly ten times the city's appropriation for the same. During the six months of the Fair the saloons received not less than three times its gate receipts—$3,000 going to them for every $1,000 paid the Fair.

THE SALOON AS SOURCE OF RELIEF.

This matter has special bearing with the work of relief for the distressed subjects of poverty now so largely challenging the active sympathy of charitable people. As already suggested it is the saloon, chiefly, that has wrought such state of suffering. It becomes pertinent, then, to show what the means absorbed by that agency of evil might accomplish for relief of the distress it has caused. For such purpose the following table has been prepared. It shows what could be done, first in furnishing homes for the destitute; second, in supplying such with the necessaries of life. It is assumed that these would be located on lands to be had at comparatively low rates, the homes to cost $750 each, and to be supported on an annual allowance of $250, each to accommodate six inmates. The first column of figures shows the number of homes thus to be furnished from year to year; the second, the aggregate of such; the third, their cost; the fourth, the number of inmates provided for; the fifth, the annual cost of supporting all the homes.

YEAR.	Homes Provided.	Total Homes.	Total Cost.	Capacity.	Annual Cost of Livings.
First	48,750	48,750	$ 36,487,500	292,500	$ 12,187,500
Second	36,562	85,312	63,964,000	526,830	21,327,000
Third	27,423	112.735	85,551,625	676,413	30,185,500
Fourth	20,610	133,335	100,008,000	795,073	33,336,000
Fifth	15,412	148,758	111.589,500	894,753	37,189,000
Sixth	11,560	160,318	122,408.000	961,841	40,078,500
Seventh	8,670	170,038	126,788,000	1,015,731	42,246,000
Eighth	6,421	175.410	129.904,500	1,052,610	43,852,500
Ninth	4,897	180,307	133.730,625	1,096,995	45,076,000
Tenth	3,748	183,981	137,984.625	1.119.036	45,988,500

We find the average annual supply of new homes to be 18,388, with capacity for 110,388 inmates; the annual cost of such homes, $13,798,350; the annual cost of supporting all the homes, $34,946,400; the annual cost per home for expenses, $250, and that per inmate, $41.66. So much to the close of the tenth year; after which each of the homes would receive $264.66 per annum, which, it is believed, would be ample for comfortable support, with judicious management, being eighty-three cents per working day of the year, without charge for rent.

The cost of providing homes would be $750 each. They would have one-fourth acre of land each, to cost about $30, leaving $720 for building, which sum is believed to be sufficient to provide better quarters than are now the average of workingmen's homes. Such premises would occupy 46,080 acres of land, being seventy-two sections, (eight by nine miles in extent). As one street they would reach 2,294 miles, and would enclose 348,329 square miles exceeding the territory of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. The quarters thus furnished from Chicago saloon receipts would provide homes and permanent support for eighty-five per cent of the present population of that city.

THE SALOON AND LABORING CLASSES.

The average pay of laboring men in this country is $2 per day, or $620 per year. As seen, the combined wages of 78,645 hard-working men would be required to support the saloons in Chicago at the present rate, leaving nothing for their own living or that of not less than 250,000 dependent members of their families. Such being the case in one city, what must it be in the country?

A CASE IN POINT.

While the charitable people of Chicago and Milwaukee are active with means for relief of the many thousands of those cities calling for deliverance from impending starvation, caused mainly by the use of intoxicating liquors, it is noticeable that a corporation of English capitalists, known as the "Milwaukee and Chicago Breweries," with a capital stock of $11,000,000, issues a statement of its beer productions as follows:

	Barrels
Year ending September 30, 1890	610,421
Year ending September 30, 1891	637,803
Year ending September 30, 1892	638,111
Year ending September 30, 1893	736,473

The actual profits of this corporation for the year past, it is stated, would justify a dividend of fifteen per cent. It cleared one dollar and forty-five cents per barrel on its beer. Can it be just matter for surprise that there are poverty and distress among the classes contributing so largely from their limited means to such enormous gains? With widespread stagnation among most of the useful manufactures of the country, it seems that neither the tariff, lack of currency, nor other question of public policy embarrasses the brewers in their business, this large establishment the past year selling one hundred thousand barrels (nearly sixteen per cent) more of beer than ever before. The profits alone of this one establishment in that year would provide at least one thousand five hundred comfortable homes for nine thousand persons, and support the same for one year.

THE DEMAND OF THE SITUATION.

In view of the showing thus made, comment can hardly be called for here. The facts presented tell their own story, and make their own suggestions as to what is demanded at the hands of the people of the entire country; for let none suppose that this is a matter of locality or region. The evil presented pertains to all sections, in greater or less force, and should be promptly and vigorously met. As showing that Chicago is far from alone in this connection, it may be stated that the cities of New York and Brooklyn have now 13,000 saloons, with annual receipts at $6,500 each (a very low estimate), amounting to $84,500,000. This would be one saloon for every 177 inhabitants, and for every 29 voters, against 187 and 31, respectively, in Chicago; while the receipts in those cities are $36 per inhabitant, and $216 per voter, against $35 and $210 in Chicago. Like showings could be made in other cities, all uniting in demand for radical change of condition, to be had only through more vigorous and persistent efforts of all citizens concerned for the welfare of a deeply afflicted country.

Lansing, Mich.

IN HONOR OF NEAL DOW.*

BY CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

MR. PRESIDENT, GENERAL DOW AND GOOD FRIENDS: — What would the world do without its brave men and women—its heroes and heroines? There are always wrongs to right, always injustices to combat, always the weak and defenseless to protect, and there are always, thank God, great souls stirred to their depths by the anguished cry of the sorrowing and oppressed.

Since the morning stars sang together, since Buddha, the Good, left his palace, and Christ, the Infinite—His throne —human hearts have responded to human woe. It is the spark of divinity that in spite of sin and self, blazes through its human environment and reveals our kinship with the All Merciful.

In the earlier, ruder ages of history, the world eulogized its warriors of a thousand bloody battlefields, and crowned with laurel its Hannibals and Cæsars, its Bonapartes and Wellingtons. These were the days of force, when muscle prevailed over mind, when might conquered right. Happy are we to behold the opening of a new era, when without prophetic eye, we may discern the swiftcoming of "sweeter manners, purer laws." To-day, we weave chaplets for the lovers of humanity—leaders of thought, generals who marshal ideas instead of armed hosts, ideas that develop, and deepen, and broaden—and conquer. We venerate the memory of the grand men and women, who have projected into the clang and clatter of a busy world ideas pregnant with blessing for humanity. How tenderly we speak their names—Savonarola preaching a higher morality; Luther battling for a purer doctrine; Pestalozzi living for the little children; Cobden battering down the odious, oppressive corn laws; Lord Shaftesbury standing with position and influence between the greed of the employer and helpless children; Phillips and Garrison hurling the anathemas of an aroused Christian sentiment against the infamy of American slavery; Lucretia Mott and Lucy Stone demanding, with gentle but unyielding insistence, justice for all women, everywhere. What battles they fought! What victories they won! These victories blaze, like the noonday sun beside the tallow candle, triumphs heralded by roar of battle, and chronicled in human blood.

To-day we crown with laurel men and women who have dared for humanity's sake to antagonize long established and time-honored codes, creeds and customs, who have denied the traditions of men taught for the commandments of God, and have chosen rather to stand with a despised minority in the right, than a triumphant majority in the wrong. To-day we come to honor the men and women who yet live to see the century's descending sun throw a golden splendor upon deeds so nobly wrought. We will not wait to heap flowers upon their coffin lids, but bring them now to soothe and delight with beauty and fragrance. We will not tarry to write flattering eulogies when life's day is ended, but come now with words of love, and gratitude and appreciation. They are with us still, and their names are household words:—Tolstoi, the peasants' friend; Gladstone, the Christian statesman; Neal Dow, the father of prohibition; Susan B. Anthony, the dauntless and unselfish; Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the philosopher; and Frances E. Willard, the peerless, beloved chieftain. He who plants a tree does well; his deed is not forgotten; but who plants a good and noble thought in human soil does better. The fruitage shall be garnered throughout eternity.

It is eminently fitting on this honorable occasion, that a representative of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the largest society ever composed of and controlled by women, should bring a tribute to lay upon the altar of moral heroism. But for the seed sown in this Alpha of the states, this sentinel by the sunrise gates of a mighty continent, this society had not been; the Crusade fires had not blazed from heart to heart and state to state; woman had not dared to wage her peaceful warfare "for God and home, and every land."

"This seed was blown to other sod,
By wings and winds prepared of God."

It took root in fourteen states; later to be torn out by the treachery of the base and self-seeking. Its fate had been the same here, too, but for the courage and devotion of the veteran honored by this magnificent audience to-night, and throughout the English-speaking world. How small the seed! How large and glorious the tree of its outgrowth! Into the fertile, consecrated brain and heart which set this wondrous demonstration spinning through Christendom, fell the little seed. Its evolution in that heart and brain brought forth the theory of "Home Protection," and marshalled womanhood under banners inscribed "Total Abstinence for the Individual and Prohibition for the State." Under the leadership of Frances E. Willard—called of God, the white ribbon hosts swept across the continent, from ocean to ocean; through British province on the north to sunny gulf on the south.

"The plains and mountains passed
They reached the circling seas at last."

And on each continent and island planted the standard of total abstinence.

Some of you, at Boston in '91, and in Chicago in '93. saw the women of every hue and every tongue, gathered in convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union; you heard with what unanimity these women of the world, in its best sense, demanded freedom for woman, and protection from the blood and brain poisons which degrade and destroy. When you saw these wondrous gatherings that caused heaven to rejoice, did you consider that but a single decade had passed since the inception of this mighty movement, that has girdled the earth with the white ribbon, and stirred the hearts of women in every land? If this be done in one decade, what may not be done in two or three? What in the next century? Have you looked for the distinguished of earth in these ranks of womanhood? They are here. Behold our leader, "the best known and best loved woman in the world," and to herself and for the cause greater than herself, she has drawn the choice and cultured, and Christian, Lady Isabel Somerset, of England, Pundita Ramabai, of India, and a host of scholarly, consecrated coadjutors in every land. "And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they spun."

With doubting Thomas, and in true American fashion, do you still question, and ask for fruitage here at home where the seed was first planted? Gladly we spread it before you. See, more than fourteen millions of children learning in the public schools all that science can teach of the dire effects of alcohol and narcotic poison on the human system; all the Sunday-schools with quarterly instruction in the same line; churches, one by one banishing the ensnaring poison from their Master's table; these are laying foundations broad and deep! Look into our great city police stations and see the motherly-hearted matron receiving erring girls and women. Talk with soldiers and sailors, miners and lumbermen, cowboys on the western plains; they will tell you, "white-ribboners care for us."

Like the old veteran we honor to-night, women have demanded the uttermost concerning the liquor traffic—absolute outlawing first, complete extinction last. They have not puttered and played with license and local option; these have been the astute statesmanship of men—and behold, how signal the success! With the clearness of vision given Mary to behold the angels in the tomb, women have seen the inconsistency and criminality of Christian men voting with and for the liquor traffic,—bishop and brewer, deacon and distiller, Sunday-school superintendent and saloon-keeper! They have protested with surprise and indignation, and sometimes (?) alienation instead of repentance has come to the church. But the seed is sprouting, the leaven is working! Now the temperance reform waits the ballot in woman's hand. The liquor traffic sees this clearly, and it is beginning SLOWLY to dawn upon the church.

When a nation has light and will not mete out justice, God bars the way to victory. When Fort Sumter was fired on, men of the North by the tens of thousands sprang to arms; the very earth shook beneath the tramp, tramp, tramp of armed hosts. Then Maine's "grand old man" led forth the thirteenth regiment, flaunting its brave new flags which hang here to-night, all stained and tattered and torn. What mighty impulse flung these thousands to death on southern soil?

The freedom of four million slaves? Nay! The preservation of the Union. Then came the defeats and Bull Runs of '61 and '62. God was teaching the nation that freedom is dearer to Him than states, that justice is more precious than the republic. Not until the emancipation proclamation was flung to the breeze did victory come.

To-day, victory waits woman's emancipation from political thralldom. Set her free! Give her voice! And no longer shall merchandise be made of girlhood and womanhood; no longer shall government draw its revenue of blood and shame from the vices of its people. Set woman free.

Portland, Me.

"WHAT will it matter by-and-by,
Whether my path below was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light,
Under a gray or a golden sky,
When I look back on it by-and-by?

"What will it matter? Naught, if I
Only am sure the way I've trod,
Gloomy or gladdened, leads to God.
Questioning not of the now, the why,
If I but reach Him by-and-by."

*Address delivered at the National W. C. T. U. meeting in Portland, Me., March 20, in honor of Neal Dow's ninetieth birthday.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."

BY MARY MC GEE SNELL.

Recently I went to one of the oldest towns in Louisiana, the next in age to St. Martinsville, where it is said the prettiest women and children of all the South are to be seen. My comrade in this W. C. T. U. itinerancy was one of the most loyal and enthusiastic white ribbon women I ever knew. She had persistently tried, for three years, to secure an opening for temperance work in this seemingly hermetically sealed place. Being unwilling to wait longer, she sent on ahead, engaged the opera house, secured rooms in a hotel, and had printed circulars announcing my lecture and my coming scattered throughout the town, and we soon followed according to date.

From the moment of my arrival, I found the curious old community of absorbing interest. The immense live oaks, centuries old, draped in the somber Spanish moss, the floods of melody from mocking birds, the fragrance and beauty of the orange trees gloriously freighted with waxen white blossoms, the almost mysterious flow of the deep, wide bayou four feet above the level of the town, kept in its channel by levees stronger than those along the Mississippi, the old convents, the historic tree with a tall, white marble cross high up amid its stretching branches, awoke my thought most delightfully.

We walked from the depot to the hotel followed by an Acadian who carried our bags; he must have overheard our conversation, for with wonder expressed in his wide opened eyes, he said, questioningly: "Be you the lady that is to give the free performing exhibition at the opera house to-night?"

I learned afterward that as never a woman had ever "spoken out in meeting," and as never since "long before the war" had a temperance address been heard there, my coming was rather looked upon as a strange kind of show decidedly original, if not very attractive in its object.

"The sleight-of-hand artist, the great and only Signor Bosco, master of the black art;" I read his title from his flaming red poster on the wall, was the only "amusement" in the way of shows in the town when we arrived. We found him in the hotel, and at the first moment of our coming he and his wife, a large woman, dressed in flowing tea-gown of blue satin and gorgeous red front, a pet dove perched on each shoulder, seemed anxious to be social, mistaking us for members of the traveling "tramp" troupes so numerous in the quaint, French portion of Louisiana. The Signor, in a confidential kind of inquiry, said to us: "How have you found business in the towns you have visited?" When he learned that our work was philanthropic, and that my comrade was the wife of one of the sugar kings, he retired into the seclusion of his own mystic calling.

Opposite the hotel was an old courthouse and the most dismal jail I ever saw. The windows were like the loopholes in a ship, only there were both iron bars and shutters closing them, as if the breath of heaven was too great a luxury for prisoners.

Our landlady was in somewhat of a flutter over our arrival; the elder daughter evidently in quite a pout about it. "So you are temperance women?" her mother began. "My old man keeps a saloon. I reckon you've come to break up his business, haven't you?"

"Not this time, madam," I replied; "I hardly think we will disturb him much just yet."

She drew nearer, and touching my white ribbon said "What do you wear that for?"

I began to tell her. "It means I never drink wine, beer, cider or anything that intoxicates. It means purity, goodness, truth—," she interrupted me impatiently with:

"Say, where are you from?"

"Mississippi," I replied, "the splendid prohibition state, Mississippi."

With a gesture very eloquent and in a tone of exquisite appreciation of scoring a point against me, she exclaimed: "You see that jail? Well, listen to me; there are seven Mississippi men in there!"

I spoke to a large audience that night. The only member of her family who went with us was her youngest child, a little girl of ten years of age. She sat in the front row, and her face from the very beginning showed the absorbing interest she felt. When we returned to the hotel her mother and the young lady daughter were awaiting our return in the office. The little girl rushed into the room ahead of us, saying with much earnestness: "Oh, mother, mother, I must join. I want to take the temperance pledge! I never knew before what I heard to-night! I must join; do let me, mother. I never will touch a drop of wine, beer or cider again as long as I live."

"Why, Carmen, you don't understand what you are saying, child," her mother replied. "You have drank wine and beer ever since you were large enough to go to the dinner table. You couldn't be healthy without your wine at dinner."

"Yes, indeed, I could, mother," she urged. "I never knew before that it is wrong. I know now, and I think we have too much drinking in this house. I must take the pledge; please don't say 'no.'"

The elder daughter drew nearer and with flashing eyes showing the impatience she felt, said: "Let her take the pledge, then make her keep it. I will see to that. I will drink your share of wine, Carmen; you'll be sorry enough after you get over this spell of feeling, but I will see to it that you don't get a drop. Yes, let her take the pledge."

The little one by this time was deeply moved; the big tears, like splash of rain drops were wetting her cheeks. "Whether you let me or not," she said, "I will never, no, never touch the drink again so long as I live."

The mother seeing the child's grief, half reluctantly said: "That's the way with you, Carmen; no need to tell you not to join. I see you've set your heart on it so. Let her join, ladies, I won't object any longer."

I wish I had a photograph of that scene. How pretty she looked, her eyes bright and glad, her cheeks rosy, her whole bearing eager and intent. My friend recited the grand old pledge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, "God helping me, I promise," etc. Carmen repeated every word as if she knew it lifted her from the old life into a new endeavor for time and eternity.

I tied the little white ribbon, the precious, sacred bow, whose silken meshes hold in union more human hearts than any other little badge in all the world—I pinned it over her fluttering heart; how like a star it gleamed! My soul went out in great floods of prayer to God for the child. I could not bear to leave her—one small rushlight in midnight darkness.

There were tears in the mother's eyes now—the young lady had turned away—and smothered sobs in her voice, as shaking her head, she said softly: "There's no telling what is going to come out of this. That child is her father's idol. My old man won't have peace any more. That child will talk to him day and night, and nobody can resist her sweet little ways. I told you I thought you had come to break up my old man's business, but I did not think of it being done this way!"

We went to our rooms that night with the hush of God's touch upon our hearts. The next day Carmen with childish enthusiasm was explaining to all in the house the meaning of the white ribbon she wore. When the dinner hour came the wine glass was absent from Carmen's place at the table. I heard her mother say:

"I can't do it, I can't drink wine with that child sitting near me with that white ribbon on! I did not think it would make me feel so, but I might just as well take my wine glass from the table. I couldn't drink now—it would choke me."

Later, I saw her fold her darling to her heart, and I turned away to hide my emotion as I heard her say: "Carmen, Carmen, dearest, do you know I drank only water to-day at dinner for the first time in forty years? Just think, child, how strange that seems! But, daughter, I have made up my mind that I must help my little child to keep her pledge. Go ask the lady if she'll make a little bow for me to wear. I never would have believed I'd do such a thing as that. What a time my old man is going to have!"

Columbus, Miss.

NEAL DOW DAY AT THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—That day, as you know, the ninetieth birthday of Neal Dow, was celebrated here by the Congressional Temperance Society, the oldest organization of its character in the District, as well as by auxiliary temperance associations. The meeting was held in Convention Hall and speakers of national reputation paid tribute to the grand old man.

At the anniversary meeting of the Congressional Temperance Society, held the night before at the Metropolitan M. E. church, Rev. F. D. Power severely commented upon President Cleveland's action in pardoning John Shea, the South Washington saloon-keeper. The audience was deeply in sympathy with the speaker, and supplemented his remarks with prolonged applause. Dr. Power, the secretary of the society, read his report, which embodied the following facts: Once in thirty years the people of the United States drink the full value of all their property. Three millions of wage earners walk the streets empty-handed, while one thousand million of dollars of the people's money goes yearly to satisfy the rum king. Lately a procession of eighteen thousand men walked the streets of Chicago, bearing a banner with the inscription, "Our children cry for bread." Then they went to a grove, settled down—and drank one thousand four hundred kegs of beer.

Silver agitates the people from sea to sea, though the entire coined money is less than $500,000,000. Tax, tariff is a problem, though it amounts to less than $300,000,000; the great pension question amounts to less than $150,000,000, but the nation's liquor bill is $1,000,000,000.

The speaker next commented upon the prohibition cause, as indicated by the work of the Temperance Congress of the World's Fair last summer; the recent statutes against public drunkenness, considered in the House of Commons, in Great Britain, which denied the right of any man to be a drunkard or to be seen tipsy on the streets. The subject, he said, which a few years ago was given over to a few temperance "fanatics" was now studied by scientists, legislators and sociologists, and even by the children in the public schools.

"The recent decision of the supreme court of Indiana, declaring the saloon a nuisance under the common law, and its keeper responsible for any damage to surrounding property following on the establishment of his business," said Mr. Power, "was commented on by the trade liquor papers as the greatest blow at the retail liquor trade that has ever been struck in the United States."

"Why," asked the secretary, "should the people of Washington object to the establishment of contagious diseases hospital near them, or the people of Oakland, Ill., object to a pole-cat farm in their neighborhood, when the saloon is permitted by law?" Other victories of the cause, the recent prohibition election in Ontario, were spoken of as evidence that the prohibition cause is God's cause, and that the saloon, like ancient Carthage, must be destroyed.

WINE AT STATE DINNERS.

"At the first dinner of the season given at the White House," said Mr. Power, "at each plate there were six wine glasses, except at the place of the hostess, where, as heretofore, only water glasses were seen. This practice of wine at dinners is a social precedent, that it is difficult for prohibition workers to fight against. All honor to the first lady of the land who tacitly added her personal protest to it." At a recent dinner given to the President, the Cabinet and the British Ambassador, by Mrs. Secretary Carlisle, no wine was served. No practice can be more reprehensible than that of serving punch to young men, and the young ladies who do it were likened to Macbeth's witches, who serve an accursed broth like that brewed by the weird sisters.

The address of the secretary was followed by short speeches from Mr. Morse, of Massachusetts, Mr. Johnson, of North Dakota, Mr. Pickler, of South Dakota, Mr. Ellis, of Oregon, and ex-Governor Elliott, of Maine.

The alertness and unceasing vigilance of the brewers to prevent an increased tax on beer ought to furnish an object lesson to the friends of the temperance cause. They have worked as one man to keep the present tax on beer unchanged. They are said by politicians to be the best organized people in America, with political influence of the strongest kind. From the same authority we learn that the government gets more revenue from a tax of 50 cents a gallon on whisky than by a $2 tax. The latter led to heavy frauds; the proposed $1.20 a gallon will, it is said, lead to evasions of the law. Thus we hear the tariff discussed by those whose only feelings in the matter is the expediency.

. . . . . .

Mrs. Clara Bewick Colby gave at one of her usual Saturday receptions, an opportunity to her many friends to hear Madame Pogosky, manager of Russian cottage industries of New York, speak in behalf of the work of the Russian peasant woman, to show which was her object in attending the World's Fair. Madame Pogosky was afterwards received at the White House, and presented Mrs. Cleveland with a handsome shawl, knit for her by a Russian woman of rank.

At Mrs. Colby's reception, Mr. King Hirai, the Japanese Buddhist who attended the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, was a guest of honor. Attired in his native costume, which is seldom seen even in cosmopolitan Washington, Mr. Hirai excited a great deal of interest.

Representative Curtis, of Kansas, has introduced a bill before the Immigration Committee of the House, that provides an educational and property qualification for those who are in search of a home in this country. Under its provisions every immigrant must be able to read or write, and must possess a small sum of money. Heads of families must have $500; single men $300, and women $100. "These amounts are probably excessive," said Mr. Curtis, "and I should be willing to amend the bill, striking out the property qualification so far as it applies to women, and reduce it somewhat in the case of men. There is not much fault to be found with the women who come to this country from abroad. It's the men principally whose numbers I desire to limit. As a rule the man who has the qualifications for good citizenship ought to be able to accumulate something at his home before coming to this country."

LUCY PAGE STELLE.

Washington, D. C.

STATE REGISTRATION OF VICE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—What will India do now? When I was a child, and my mother, who did not believe in "spoiling the child," proposed a whipping as good for my moral uplifting, I used to sometimes ask the privilege of cutting a stick of approved size for the chastisement. India has begged to be allowed to cut her own stick for chastisement, and to this end has sent to England three draft-bills proposing punishment for herself of different degrees, should she be again disobedient.

I need not say that these draft-bills will none of them be accepted. England will, herself, fix the character of the penalty. But the fact that India now proposes punishment for herself, since Lord Roberts' apology, further proves the completeness of the victory of purity and righteousness; and in addition it clearly indicates a new principle of law which even the enemies of purity believe now to be inevitable. And that principle is that no woman can have her sense of modesty outraged with impunity even when the plea of public health is made, and much less for any other conceivable reason. And this principle will be inserted in the law of the British Empire just as soon as the House of Commons can get to it. The government of India has already promised, through its under secretary, Mr. George Russell, such legislation. And Mr. Gladstone has given his word that the matter, as it relates to the enforcement of law in India, will be attended to at as early a date as possible.

Now two things of immense importance to women have been clearly recognized by the British Empire. 1. That the compulsory examination of women is utterly indefensible. This was done as far back as 1888 for India. 2. That there should be penal consequences provided by law for any such examination.

Now I am most eager that our Cleveland sisters, as well as all our white ribbon army, should recognize these two just principles and act upon them. It is the dearest wish of Mrs. Josephine Butler's heart that in every part of the world these principles should be clearly embodied in law for the protection of the rights of women. And I am very sure that for America, at least, the time is fully ripe. Have not our women "come into the kingdom for such a time as this"? Who will take the lead in working this enormous revolution? My individual belief, and Mrs. Andrew concurs in it, is, that if a law were carefully framed to the effect that "any person guilty of the offense by fraud, force or reward of inducing one of the opposite sex to expose the person in an indecent manner shall be punished by imprisonment in jail of not less than one month." That is a small penalty, but a small jail punishment is worth more to the morals of a community than a fine of thousands of dollars. Let no fine take the place of imprisonment, for the fine simply is prostituted into hire and bribe.

Moses provided by law that in cases of seduction the man must marry the girl or pay her a large sum of money to make up for the injury done her. Josephus attempts to describe this law and states that the penalty of seduction was compulsory marriage, or, where it was not desirable, the payment of the price of prostitution. Such is the interpretation of the law (which provides for money equivalents for virtue) which the libertine law-executor always seizes upon. These are not only unsafe laws, but themselves provoke prostitution by assuming that there is a money equivalent of virtue.

I scarcely need to refer to the fact that the laws against rape are shockingly obscene in their wording, and that the trial of these cases in our courts is demoralizing to all who listen to the proceeding—from the victim to the judge. There is nothing more difficult to prove than criminal assault; and the proof on the present status requires the criminal outrage of the sense of modesty in the victim and the criminal outrage of the public moral sense. Such a law as the above mentioned would punish attempts of this nature more effectually and more decently than a discussion of the degree of violation could possibly do. I hope and pray that women may grasp the importance of this matter, which is so difficult to even discuss decently, and will make a desperate crusade for a law somewhat of the form we suggest.

Further, such a law as above suggested would be the inauguration of an attack on the house of ill-fame itself, of a more just and of a different order from that of "pulling" the house and causing all the blow to fall on the girls—victims, often, and not vicious. It is well known that the police usually inform men when to keep away from a house of ill-fame while they masquerade as reformers by making a raid on the women inmates. I say that the protection of law and public sentiment should be on the side of decency in woman or man, even if that decency is only the desire of the hour, and never existed before. How much more should this protection be in existence for those who have never yielded for an instant to impure desire.

A Wesleyan minister's wife told us the following: "In the days when the C. D. Acts were in vogue in England she had a most intimate friend, a noble Christian girl. The brother of this girl quarreled with a policeman. One night the brother and sister were walking on the street close to their own home. The brother was accosted by a man who drew him aside for a few words privately, (was it a plot?) the sister said she would not wait but would go on to her home which was plainly in sight. The brother feeling perfectly safe about her, paid no further attention to her but went home later and immediately to bed. In the morning, to the horror of the family, they discovered that the sister was not in her room. A careful search and the girl was found; she had been seized before she reached home, forced to the examination and branded with shame, by the policeman who had quarreled with her brother. She was a raving maniac and died in an asylum."

A Christian mission teacher in South Africa told us that she knew a perfectly respectable girl who had been forced for two years to go periodically to examinations.

Another Christian mission worker in South Africa told us she heard a keeper of a house of ill-fame threaten to blast the reputation of a police inspector if he did not use his influence to keep in her power a young woman whom this mission worker was trying to rescue. The inspector yielded the point and had the young woman registered. The mayor of a city in South Africa told us that when some of the citizens of the city sent a petition to him for the inauguration of these acts one of his councilmen of notoriously bad life was especially eager for their introduction. One day he met this councilman on the street and as they were talking a respectable looking woman passed by, and the councilman said with evident satisfaction, "When we get the law, we can get that woman," or words to that effect, which thoroughly aroused the mayor to the danger to which such a system of laws would expose every woman. I could go on citing such instances from the testimony of creditable witnesses until my pen fell from my fingers from very exhaustion.

It was fully proved by Sir Pope Hennesey, when governor of Hong Kong, that from an affected desire to protect Chinese women the use of this system of registration, with the use of Christian England's money, degenerated into too vile a thing to speak of. The whole matter came to light through an inquest held upon the dead bodies of two Chinese women who had fallen from the roof of a house, whither they had been chased on their little bound feet by these over-zealous enforcers of the law of registration.

We hold in our possession at this moment Parliamentary documents relating these facts concerning Hong Kong. I mention this to make it absolutely clear to the reader that on this point I am not reciting rumors nor drawing on a defective memory of something that has been told to somebody, sometime, somewhere. Our enemies constantly accuse purity workers of wild, sentimental, excited, unreliable statements. The truth of the matter is, for very decency, we cannot do more than touch the mere fringe of the subject. It is unspeakably horrible, and now that the insult has been flung in the face of American women by the recent agitation for the Acts in New Orleans, New York and elsewhere, particularly since the outrage has been actually perpetrated in Cleveland, I hope and pray that it will so sting and smart in the moral sense of American women that they will refuse rest day and night until every state of the Union shall record on its statute books that no indecent act shall ever be extorted from any woman, no matter how vile she has become in the eyes of a corrupt police force.

We may not be able to make man moral by act of legislature, but, thank God, we can and will keep man from making woman immoral by act of legislature.

KATE C. BUSHNELL.

S. S. "Nerbudda," Bay of Bengal.

A WORD FROM THE ENGLISH NAVY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The temperance work in the British navy is doing wondrously well. Every war ship, cruiser, gun boat, torpedo boat and Her Majesty's yachts have all their bands of Christian and temperance men. H. M. S. Victoria carried down some noble souls, and in a letter received by a widow, written the day before the accident, the writer says: "We are hard at work, tell Miss Weston, for Christ and for temperance and took thirty pledges yesterday." This letter, arriving long after, the writer had gone home to God, speaks for itself. You will also be glad to hear that Her Majesty has taken much personal interest in the work. I was privileged to send her many accounts of the stricken homes connected with the "Victoria." She has graciously conferred the title of "Royal" upon both the Sailors' Rests, through the secretary of state, and I trust that we shall live up to our honors.

I hear occasionally from Mrs. Sarah McClees and also from Miss Antoinette Jones, of Falmouth, Mass.; she is connected with the society of Christian Endeavor Floating Branches. If you can suggest to me anything for the United States navy I will gladly do it. I am more at home in national navies than among merchant Jacks. I send the monthly letters to the American Navy, do temperance work where I can, and have official permission from Washington for all that I do, but the fringe is not touched. The short service system which obtains in your navy is a great difficulty, but that could be overcome. I feel that I do so little for your seamen that I am holding an office in the W. W. C. T. U. under false pretences.

AGNES E. WESTON.

Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, Eng.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith; and hath not works? Can faith save him?—Jas. 2: 14.

Let every wise-hearted and earnest woman remember that each day at 12 o'clock in National Headquarters a half-dozen busy workers leave their desks for a few moments at the mercy seat—a little talk with God about our Temple matters. A faithful sister echoes our heart in a recent letter: "May God inspire every white-ribboner to remember Mrs. Carse in their daily prayers. We know all things are possible to them that believe. Christ never asks us to go where He has not led, and the divine leading is our continual support and success."

***

Miss Augusta Crehore, treasurer of Norfolk County, Mass., W. C. T. U., sends $10, saying: "At our last county convention this resolution was passed: Resolved, That we continue our unfaltering faith in Mrs. Matilda B. Carse and her management of Temple affairs and we renew our pledge to sustain her efforts as far as we are able." Hyde Park, Mass., sends $10, and an almost identical resolution accompanied, stating the expectation of supplementing this gift continuously till the Temple is paid for. Mrs. Alice E. Loud, Boston, Mass., sends one dollar each for the Whittier and Madam Willard tablets. There is inquiry made about the Lucy A. Switzer tablet. It would be a nice thing if our East Washington sisters would hasten the completion of that tablet in which they have so deep an interest.

***

Such a piquant and sensible reference to last National Convention affairs drops on this desk to-day, that there's not enough self-restraint en evidence to prevent our readers enjoying it, as follows:

"I think the women of the Convention showed a harmonious spirit and great forbearance toward each other. The Temple matter was fully discussed and the multitude of questions, chaotic, idiotic, and despotic some of them, were all satisfactorily answered. The whole trouble was the old question of spiritual law and natural law getting adjusted. We have been going on the principles of a theocracy, and the 'natural man' among us called a halt. We had to stop and explain to him. The Temple was built, as was the tabernacle of old, each bringing an earring of gold, etc., and if there had been any outsiders in Moses' time they would have inquired: 'Who made Moses trustee?' 'Is he responsible to the donors?' 'Is his private fortune liable in case of his death?'

"What a monument of faith is the Temple; what a demonstration that the principle which ruled Abraham is in the hearts of a multitude to-day; what an object lesson to know that that building, magnificent, great, substantial, in Chicago had no incorporate trustees till noon of the second day of the Convention; built by full communion of the saints its only guarantee. Very well, it is a Temple, and Christians of all nations and color shall come up to it from the ends of the earth, and it shall be a pillar to our God. It is not the first time that God has ordained a monument, and I would like our dissenting sisters to take notice that all the temples God ordained were good ones. Three hundred thousand dollars for headquarters would not be sufficient for the sort of thing which we are thinking about, and which God showed Mrs. Carse the pattern of."

***

Mrs. Ruth Hollingsworth, of South Bend, Neb., sends $1 as she says: "Dimes, nickels and pennies, gathered from the Rock Island railway boys of the Lincoln and Omaha division. When the times are better they will do more, for they know the Temple and our Jennie Smith." We know how much brave, hard work this represents, and none in the land more have our love than the "road boys," whose daily life is heroism. A money order for $2 comes from little Homer Briggs, of Durango, Cal., who would rather help "a good cause" than himself. Nothing is truer, however, than that he who serves a good cause is more helped than the cause itself. The infant class of the First Congregational church of Bradford, Conn., sends its temperance offering for a year, $10, to the Temple, with a request for four Columbian souvenirs. The children of Santee Agency district school, Nebraska, send $1.50 and a stamp for a mite-box for little Maud Ira. Of the contents of the mite box of Mrs. Maybelle Moore, Creary, N. Dak., $3.70, Mrs. T. G. Stevens, who forwards the money, says: "I have had four mite-boxes; this is the third one filled, and I have gotten six yearly and nine short time subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL. This is all outside work, for I know of no union near here." We have heard before that some shall "come in" before the children of the kingdom—and we think this earnest temperance woman is one of these.

***

Mrs. H. Elizabeth Smith, Demorest, Ga., forwards $1.04, "a pittance," she calls it from a mite-box at the Chautauqua assembly of Habersham county. If everybody sent these mites there would be enough and to spare of Temple funds. Mrs. Alice Cox, Wilber, Neb., is another faithful friend who keeps in mind that mites make the "mickles." Bless those who remember to do so.

***

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A PLACE BY HIM.

BY DAISY H. CARLOCK.

Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock.—Ex. 33: 21.

Fiercely beats the heat of noontide,
As I journey wearily;
In thy shade, O Rock of Ages,
Let me find sweet rest by Thee.

Father, I am faint and lonely,
And the way I dimly see,
There is peace, and joy and safety
In that promised place by Thee.

Lift me, Jesus, to that refuge,
Near thy side I long to be;
Satisfied if in Thy presence,—
Keep me in the place by Thee.

Berea, Ky.

"MY BOY."

BY HANNA A. FOSTER.

"Good-evening, Mrs. Draper, come in."

"No, thanks, I cannot stop. I am on a very unpleasant mission, Mrs. Henderson; it is about Claud. It will grieve you to hear it—still, I think his mother ought to know."

"About Claud! Of course I ought to know; what is it?"

"Well, as he was passing our home on his way from school in company with several other boys, about ten minutes ago, he deliberately shied a stone through the bay window into my sitting-room, shattering the ceiling lamp, some fragments of which fell into baby's crib almost on her face!"

"Is it possible? What a dreadful thing, to be sure! But why do you say it was Claud? Did you see him do it?"

"No, but my sewing girl, Anna Pratt, who was in the room above, saw him throw the stone."

"Oh, is that it?" replied Mrs. Henderson in a haughty tone. "I would like to know how, in a troop of school boys, none of whom have the honor of her acquaintance, the girl should know Claud Henderson! Indeed, my dear, there must be some mistake, for I am sure my boy would never do such a thing; he has been too carefully trained."

"Anna did not say it was Claud Henderson. She said it was the tall boy in long gray ulster, blue muffler and astrakhan cap, whom she saw throw the stone, and from her description I know it was Claud."

"Really, Mrs. Draper, this is absurd! I must say I consider your accusing Claud in this way—on the questionable authority of a sewing girl—most unneighborly! But as you seem determined to believe him guilty, to satisfy you I will investigate the matter," and with a chill "good-night" Mrs. Henderson abruptly closed the door, reseated herself in the rocker before the cheery parlor grate, and the incident was soon forgotten in the magazine article she was reading when interrupted by her unwelcome caller; but when Claud, fresh from an hour's coasting, entered the room, it was instantly recalled. He was a fine looking boy of twelve years, robust and energetic mentally and physically, with regular features and handsome eyes—a boy any mother might be proud of.

"I want to ask you a question, Claud," said Mrs. Henderson, "not because I think you guilty, for I do not; but just to satisfy Mrs. Draper. She says you threw a stone into her sitting-room this afternoon; did you?"

"Why, mamma! what do you take me for, anyway? Did I? No, indeed! and whoever says I did is"—

"Mistaken, my son; but never mind what she thinks, dear, so long as you are innocent," said the fond mother, soothingly, as she kissed his cheek, not noticing how the hot blood had suddenly flushed his face to the very roots of his brown, curling hair.

The "investigation" so satisfactory to the mother was not so convincing to her indignant neighbor, and a spirited interview between Messrs. Henderson and Draper followed. The matter was, however, promptly settled by Mr. Henderson's check for an amount to cover all damages, and between the two families friendly relations were ere long restored.

. . . . . .

Ten years later, a young man, member of a family in good social standing in the city of C—, was arrested on a charge of high-handed forgery. Proofs of his guilt were so convincing that little time was required for the trial of his case, and, manacled and guarded, he was soon passed over the road to the state penitentiary. His closely clipped hair and prison garb could not, however, disguise the fact that his previous surroundings had been those of plenty and refinement. Although his crime was of unusual gravity, there was something in his face and bearing which gave one the idea that he was not a hardened criminal.

"You seem strangely out of place here, my young friend. Do you mind telling me how it all came about?"

The questioner was a dear W. C. T. U. woman whose ministrations in that crowded institution have been for many years most welcome and blessed. The young man dropped his eyes, and a distressed expression swept over his face, but after a brief pause he looked up, and speaking slowly, as if weighing every word, replied:

"For my crimes, madam. This is not my first experience behind the bars. I think my mother is responsible! A cruel thing to say, but I believe her training made me dishonest and sent me to this cell."

His listener making no reply he continued: "I was a spirited boy, and like all such, was full of fun and mischief, sometimes of serious character. But my mother would never believe me guilty of anything I denied, and often said in my hearing, 'It is a principle with me never to doubt my boy's word.' Whenever I was charged with wrong-doing it was so easy to get out of the scrape by telling my own story and having it implicitly believed. But as I grew older I was sometimes absolutely certain she knew better, and that greatly weakened my respect for her, so that whatever influence for good she might otherwise have had over me was lost. Yes, my mother's inability to see anything but perfection in the boy who was her own, her neglect of wholesome teaching that would have made me worthy of her confidence, her indifference to pure, stalwart, character building, left me at the mercy of temptations I knew not how to meet. In short, my poor, indulgent mother confirmed my selfish, reckless, untruthful and dishonest tendencies. That is all there is of it, madam."

There were tears in the eyes of the good woman whose question had called forth this confession. Her heart ached for the young convict, but far more for the wretched mother.

Let us be increasingly helpful to train the mother to realize that all government is wasted which does not teach a child to be self-governed.

Berea, O.

MOTHERS' CLUBS.

IV.

The Philosophy of Child-Training.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

Dr. Lois Ashley in the chair called the meeting to order at three o'clock in the afternoon sharp, and introduced Mrs. Linn, a kindergartner, and the guest of Mrs. Ellis, who had come to fulfill the promise Mrs. Ellis had made the club at its previous meeting.

Mrs. Linn, with a most winning manner, rose and said: "As I did not arrive here until late last evening and as I had no forewarning of the honor done me in inviting me to address you this afternoon, I have not come before you with an elaborately prepared paper, but with your permission and kindly forbearance, I will talk informally upon the subject chosen, 'The Philosophy of Child-training.'

"The topic is too vast to be discussed in the limits of one hour, and I shall not attempt to deal with it in an exhaustive manner. I shall only try to outline some of the principles which guide the kindergartner in her work, and shall be glad of any questions on various points. In the first place, then, I may say that we do not look upon the child as a package labeled 'Total Depravity,' and consequently to be beaten into goodness. We rather consider him as a bundle of possibilities of various kinds, and our office is to choose which shall be encouraged to grow and which shall be allowed to atrophy through inanition. Beecher once said that a child at birth is a piece of white paper, upon which are many inscriptions, written with invisible ink, and the fire of circumstances will make the writing legible. This is to a great extent true, and we find that the gentle warmth of love draws out sweet and charming inscriptions upon our pieces of paper, while the fierce flame of anger will mar them with black and ugly hieroglyphics.

"With many parents child-training means arbitrary government, the breaking of the child's will, the exacting of implicit obedience without any consideration of the child's inclinations. With the kindergartner the purpose always is to cause the child to desire to do that which is required of him, and never to enter into a contest of wills. The breaking of the will is a most undesirable process. In this world of temptation and struggle each individual needs all the will he can have, but he needs to have it so trained that he will always want to will to do right. Our aim should be to strengthen the will, and at the same time to guide the reason so that will may walk in harmony with good judgment.

"It is the unwise parent who brings about a contest between his will and that of his child. Not long ago a lady called on a friend, who was very proud of her little son, and yet always entering into contest with him, and the father was doing the same. During the call the boy came into the room and was introduced to the guest. Then the father said: 'Come and sit on my knee.' The boy rebelled, and ten minutes was spent in conquering his will, and with what result? The guest was made uncomfortable, the mother was mortified, the father was irritated and the child rebellious, and nothing was accomplished worth the struggle. Would I say, then, that he should not have been made to mind? I see no reason for the command. Perhaps the boy felt his manliness lessened by the command, hence his rebellion. A wise parent would not have precipitated such a combat, and his influence would have been greater when a reasonable order was given.

"Again, we irritate our children by thwarting their wishes and giving them nothing in the place of that which we take away. The nervous mother springs at the child and snatches the scissors, saying: 'You'll put your eyes out.' A few minutes later she sees the child with a knife: 'Oh, you mischief,' she cries, 'now you've got that knife to cut yourself.' Again she takes his treasure but gives him nothing in its stead. She ought not to be surprised at his shriek of rebellion, nor to find that he is soon in some other form of mischief. He is an investigator, a discoverer, and in that which she calls mischief he is trying his powers, and learning the secrets of nature. He is just as much justified in rebellion as the parent would be if some stronger power were always taking away the work in hand and substituting nothing in its place. Supposing that mother had said when she saw the little one playing with the sharp-pointed scissors: 'My dear, if you will put the shears away where they belong you may come and make bread, or sew with me,' thus getting rid of the evil by replacing it with something more desirable, she would have had no rebellion and would have acted according to the philosophy of child-training in directing the activity of the child instead of thwarting it. Then if a wise mother, she would buy a pair of blunt scissors which could be the child's own to use and take care of, thus furnishing a means of employment, teaching him the care of property and adding to his self-respect.

"This last is an important item. We fail to see the need of cherishing the self-respect of our children while we are very exacting in regard to our own. We snub them in the presence of strangers, we ridicule their deeds and words, we laugh at their ignorance, we thwart their wishes on every hand, and act the arbitrary tyrant and then wonder that they are not angelic.

"If I were to put the philosophy of child-training into few words it would be the effort to secure a harmonious development, physical, mental and moral, to direct the normal activity into laudable and allowable channels, and to create in the child a desire to do that which is required of him.

"It needs far less genius to whip or shake a child into a rebellious submission than to patiently invent methods of leading him to love goodness and to yield ready obedience, but it pays. It is for this reason that I welcome such organizations as this Mothers' Club. The child at the kindergarten may be under approved methods of education, but if at home the greater part of the time, he is treated as a rebel, a rascal, and a torment, interspersed with occasional outbursts of parental indulgence and unreasoning love, the good work of the school is more than offset by the evils at home. If each parent, father and mother, could know and appreciate the glorious work intrusted to them in the training of a child, and realize that success or failure is a commentary upon their own intelligence or ignorance, I think we should not have as many adults who are evidences of the disastrous twisting and dwarfing processes of ordinary training as we now have. It is doubtful if a child would ever be angry, discourteous, dishonest, impudent, or unlovely if his training were not at fault."

After the earnest and helpful discussion following this talk had ended, the chairman announced that it had been decided to hold occasional meetings open to fathers as well as mothers, and the first one would be held in two weeks in the lecture room of the Methodist church and its pastor, Rev. Dr. Wayne, would present the topic for discussion.

Toledo, O.

TYPICAL LESSONS FOR LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION TEACHERS.

XIII.

Review.

BY MARY E. RUDD.

We come now to the last lesson of the quarter. Gather up to-day the tangled ends of songs, thoughts, etc. Strive to make some song a little more familiar, some thought a little more definite, some impression a little deeper. Gather from all the suggestions made whichever is needed most by your own children. Using your own discretion as to how much or how little, let the conversation touch upon the sorrow you feel for some little children whose parents give them beer or wine to drink instead of pure sweet water, such as Dot and Trot had. Some little children are even sent to the saloon to bring beer for their fathers. After all, no one has a right to make any one else drink the poison stuff, if we will only say we will not, and if we know little children who think they must drink such things we can tell them they don't need to. And if they drink them because everybody else does we can tell them how much better milk and water taste and how much stronger they will grow if no wine or beer goes into their stomachs.

How queer it would be if we had to wash our clothes in whisky! Do you think we would like the smell of them? Suppose we had nothing to make bread of but beer. How sour and nasty it would be. How glad we are that God sent the springs and the rivers of water instead of whisky.

In all the conversation let the tone be that the child would no more think of drinking liquor than he would throw himself before a moving train or jump from a high window if he knew the danger. Why would he do such a foolish thing when he could do things so much more reasonable? Why should he want to drink sour beer when he can get something so much better?

Make it a grand review of all that has been said or done during the quarter, and make it the pleasantest day of all by ending with a soap-bubble party. Show the rainbow inside the little sphere, and recall our rainbow story. Let it be an orderly, good time. Let it give the children the desire to come again, and find new and better things farther on.

Finally (and is there a better finale than this?):—"Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might," and "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

Chicago, Ill.

FOR LITTLE JOE.

BY EUDORA STONE BUMSTEAD.

A heavy lumber wagon rattled along toward The Corners. The horses were rough and bony. The driver was Fritz Reinhardt, an honest, good-natured German, and by his side on the high spring seat were two sweet children, with great blue eyes and flaxen hair. Baby Joe was hardly more than three. Katy, always his loving sister, now his faithful "little mother," might have been forty, to judge by her wise and serious face, but in size and years she was still a child. They were talking together in their native tongue. Many a time they had talked of the same thing. It was the family mystery. If they had spoken in English it would have run something like this:

"Oh, that is nothing, my good little father," Katy was saying; "my clothes are well enough. But all the same I am always sorry we could not find Uncle Joe. I should love him with all my heart. And maybe there would be cousins."

"Is cousins good to eat?" asked little Joe, solemnly, with a craving look in his big blue eyes.

The father laughed but Katy only smiled and gave Joe a great hug.

"There would have been the best of good eating and plenty of it," said the father, presently, "if I could have had your Uncle Joe's advice. He could always see the right way. I was a blunderhead from the first, and the worst of all my stupid tricks was to lose his American address almost as soon as I got it. But I thought we could inquire at New York. I did not know what it was like there, you see, Katy. I was as far from the truth as little Joe, in his notion of eating cousins." With this he laughed again, for Fritz Reinhardt was seldom sad.

"We'll find him yet," he declared, hopefully. "Stranger things than that have happened. And when we do, everything will be different. You shall go to school then, my Katy—though I believe you can read and write as well as the best of them, now. You shall have a piano, too."

"But the best of it is," said practical Katy, "that we won't have to wait for that to get a little coal."

"No, indeed," said her father, "though you know, Katy, we owe something at the grocery. But I am sure Mr. Green will tell me to get the coal. And we shall not mind the storm, then, even if it should be a real blizzard. Now here we are, you see, and I'll just step in and speak to him."

So far the talk had gone in readily spoken German, but the English was not so easy.

"I haf not forget dot fife tollars," he said, as he stood before the counter. "I can so leetle vork find dis vinter. I haf only seexty cent. Und ve all dis time burn corn-stalks. But now it is coming von shtorm. I need dot seexty cent for coal."

"That's all right," said the merchant, cordially. "Get your coal and keep the children warm. Why, you've got 'em out in the wagon, have you? Bring 'em in and let 'em toast their toes before you start home."

"Dot is goot!" said honest Fritz. "Here, Katy, mein kind, come by de fire while I for de coal am gone. Und took goot care of dot leetle Joe."

The children came timidly forward to the big, red-hot stove and Katy placed her precious baby in one of the clumsy wooden chairs, pulled off his queer little mittens, rubbed and patted his cold hands, and then removed the poor shoes, quaintly cobbled by herself, and let the fire-light shine on the coarse stockings, that seemed to be all one pains-taking darn.

The merchant was now busy with a customer—not one of the plain farmers from the surrounding country, nor yet one of the small tradesmen nearer by, but a pleasant, prosperous-looking man from the other end of the county, who chanced to be driving through. While Mr. Green was filling a paper bag with the best of his little stock of sweetmeats, the stranger turned to look at Katy and little Joe.

Katy did not notice, she was looking at the little fellow in the carriage, for whom the bag of goodies had been bought. If little Joe could only have a jacket and a cap like that! Such a boy would never be cold, and would always have good things to eat; not corn bread and pork day after day. Such a boy's father would never—but Katy stopped there. The dear father, who meant so well, and was so loving, never came in for any blame. And yet she knew the mother might now be living, if she had been supplied with a comfortable home, and had not been forced to work beyond her strength. It had been three years, but Katy remembered.

The big, pleasant man had paid for his purchase, when all at once he noticed the troubled look on Katy's face. He turned back to the counter, threw down a quarter, gave a hasty order, and then drove away.

It was very little for him to do, but the nuts and candy presently delivered to the children seemed a great deal to them. They almost made Katy forget the dreadful anxiety that was beginning to creep over her, because it had been so long since father went after the coal. It could not be that he would spend the money for—anything else? He had not done a thing like that for a whole month now. He had tried so hard. If it were only not for the dreadful saloon! His old friends asked him in. He had refused them all the month, but it was not easy. And there was the odor that floated out to him if he passed the place, and drew him like a pair of strong, wicked hands. The poor father!

When they came to Nebraska and rented a little farm near The Corners the saloon had not been started. All had gone well, and though there was great grief for the dear mother, lately buried in another state, there was great hope that the father would be able to hold to his good intentions and make a home for them, and, more than all, give little Joe a chance. But after a year of fair sailing the saloon was established, and Katy's hopes and plans were all undone. Father did not manage the farm well after that, and next time he had to take a poorer one, with only a wretched shanty to live in. It had been hard times since then. But a month ago he had attended a temperance lecture and signed the pledge. Would he keep it? Could he keep it? Katy was not sure.

All these things went back and forth in her mind, while little Joe munched the candy, trying now and then to persuade her to taste some of the prettiest. The storm was coming on—and the night. It was colder—even the red-hot stove did not keep out some hint of it. And the sound of the wind was terrible to the poor child, as she thought of the ride home and the small, cracked stove and damp corn-stalks that would hardly keep them from freezing. She was sure by this time that there would not be any coal.

"Let me drive, father," she said, when at last he had come and was about to help them into the wagon.

"Oh, no, my little Katy," he answered, and even the familiar German speech was clumsily uttered now. "It would surely freeze you. You must keep little Joe in your arms. He will need all the blankets. I shall cover you all up—so. Now don't even put your head out, for it will let in the cold wind on little Joe."

She knew it was of no use to coax. Joe shrank from the wind and cuddled close. It was quite dark under the blankets. Outside it was early twilight. She heard her father clamber up to the high seat. She heard him loosen the brake and crack the whip, urging the gaunt old team to their best paces.

It was a fearful ride to Katy. The roar of the wind, the clatter of wheels and hoofs on the frozen ground, the numbing cold, and still more numbing dread. Baby Joe was soon sleeping in her arms.

They clattered swiftly across the bridge, and Katy drew a deep breath. It seemed so long since they had left town, and all the way she had been dreading the bridge. There was a tiny hole in the blanket over them, and she could see that it was nearly dark now. After another dread waiting they bumped and banged over the railway crossing. It was very cold, and not one ray of light came in. Katie could not hear her father speak to the horses as she had at first. "It must be because the wind is higher," she thought. But the tears trickled over her cold cheeks. She would not sob and wake little Joe. They went down and up the steep banks of the draw. That meant that they were almost home. And it did not seem very long after that till they stopped, and Katy dried her tears and sat waiting and wondering whether it would be safe to give little Joe into his father's arms—whether he might not stagger and fall with him.

But the father did not come. And presently Katy was chilled again with awful loneliness and fear. She slipped away from little Joe, and left him sleeping, wrapped in the blankets. She groped all around with desperate haste. Her father was nowhere in the wagon.

"Perhaps he thought we should be warmer under the blankets till the fire was made," she said to herself. "The dear, good little father! I will go and help him. The corn-stalks in the stable will be dry. We can make quite a good blaze after all." But even while she tried to assure herself, she seemed to know he was not in the house. Then she stood on the snowy threshold and called him, but her own voice was strange to her, and she did not expect any reply. She tried to think she would soon find him, but in her sad, frightened heart she knew he must be lying on the frozen ground—perhaps far back on the road. She felt he must be dead.

It was dark and snowing fast. She went into the house, lighted the lantern, and opened the bed for little Joe. She carried him in and covered him with all their poor bedding. He still slept.

The wind had abated, but Katy did not notice. She went groping, slowly yet hurriedly, along the familiar way. It seemed very far. She searched a mile of the prairie road, which brought her to the roughly graded crossing. And there she found a quiet form, already partly covered with the snow. It took but little time to make her sure that life was gone. Very white—very weak—she staggered to the nearest house. She knocked with all her feeble strength, and then sank on the door-step sobbing, "Oh, the dear, good little father! oh, the poor baby! Poor, poor little Joe!"

(Concluded next week,)

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—On a nice, quiet street, not far from Lincoln Park, Chicago, is a plain but solid looking building with a picket fence, a grassy yard, and a pleasant arbor. Along one side of the structure, which is as many stories high, are three wide, breezy verandas Ascending the flight of steps leading to the front door, and being admitted, we find a welcome in the matron's bright and cheerful parlor. Surely, this must be a temperance home, you think, on seeing the two large, beautiful pictures of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, our great temperance leaders.

"The L. T. L. room?" says the matron, in response to an inquiry, and she leads the way down long corridors, and up stairs, past many inviting looking rooms whose doors are ajar and bear little labels: "Y room," "Illinois room," "Frances Willard Room," etc. Entering a room at the rear of an upper hall, we all exclaim with delight, "How pretty!" There's the bluest of blue walls and ceilings and woodwork; two of the most inviting little beds; a soft carpet sprinkled with daisies on olive green; the cunningest little dresser commode, with all the furnishings; such charming pictures on the walls; and what is this?—a pretty cradle with two dolls and their wardrobe. Besides all these there are books to read, and a pretty china set from which the little patients can eat.

"Patients!" I hear you say, "Oh, now I know where we are, it's the National Temperance Hospital, and this is the room which the Loyal Temperance Legion has furnished."

You've guessed it as I knew you would, and aren't you glad to have helped in preparing such a pleasant place for little sick ones to enjoy? It is by far the prettiest room in the hospital.

How many can tell me what the National Temperance Hospital aims to do?

Affectionately your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

Helen S. McAllum, Nova Scotia.
Edna Lyman, Iowa.
Almon Knowles, New York.
Bertha F. Starn, Nebraska.
Tessie Rowland, Wisconsin.
Roy C. Jackson, Maine.
Bertie McEwan, Canada.
Carrie Spikeman, Mich.
Alice F. Maris, Pennsylvania.
Eva Belle Stillwell, Grace M. Hinckley, Hila R. Brock, Belle Floto, } Illinois.

My mamma and papa are both in favor of temperance and I am too. I am twelve years old.

MARGUERITE FISK HERR.

Red Bank, N. J.

I am a temperance girl through and through. I will not take whisky for a medicine if I know it, because I do not think it will help a bit. We have three saloons here in this little village which we hope to soon "get away with." My temperance cat and I would like to join the Cozy Corner. OLIVE G. ANTHONY.

McClure, O.

My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I belong to the L. T. L. EDWARD A. SPARKS.

Plainfield, Wis.

There are a great many saloons in Burlington, but when so many are working for the right how can the wrong stand? LUCIA B. BLAKE.

Burlington, Ia. ORA L. HURD.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

287.

BEHEADING.

1. Behead keen and leave cunning.
2. Behead parts of the hands and leave charity.
3. Behead to extend and leave every one.
4. Behead fanciful and leave to trade.
5. Behead a tag and leave Cain's brother.

The beheaded letters spell the month of showers.

J. A. S.

288.

DECAPITATION.

There's an all it is true
In saloons and their ways,
But there's also great two;
That's what Judgment says.

SOLON.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MARCH 22.

279. E-late. A-bet. S-elf. T-art. E-vent. R-end.—EASTER
280. He is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when He was yet in Galilee.
281. Trust in the Lord and He shall direct thy paths.

Correct answers: Eva C. Page; Mary Lee Fishburn; Edna Lyman; Louie J. Rowland; May N. Arrowsmith; Genevieve C. Williams; Almon Knowles; Edith I. Shott; Ruth Higby; Mrs. H. M. Wilder; Edward A. Sparks.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Why? By Hattie Horner-Louthan ... 2
Only a Faithful Sower. By J. F. Cowan ... 2
The American Problem. II. By Clark Waggoner ... 2
In Honor of Neal Dow. By Clara C. Hoffman ... 3
"A Little Child Shall Lead Them." By Mary Mc Gee Snell ... 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Neal Dow Day at the National Capitol ... 4
State Registration of Vice ... 5
A Word from the English Navy ... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, A Place by Him. By Daisy H. Carlock ... 6
"My Boy." By Hanna A. Foster ... 6
Mothers' Clubs. IV. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D. ... 6
Typical Lessons for Loyal Temperance Legion Teachers. XIII. By Mary E. Rudd ... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
For Little Joe. By Eudora Stone Bumstead ... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts ... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Stand in Your Place ... 8
Opinions—As They are Given ... 8
The Solid Saloon ... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ... 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Massachusetts—Iowa—Colorado—California—Wisconsin—Utah ... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ... 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Announcements ... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ... 12
Temple Receipts ... 13
World's Petition ... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ... 13, 15
SIGNAL NOTES ... 16

Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand.—Eph. 6:13.

STAND IN YOUR PLACE.

The superiority of an army over a mob consists in the fact that in the army each individual has his own place and his own special duty. That duty is a small matter in itself. In battle it consists principally in standing as a target for the enemy and firing his own single weapon though ordinarily very little harm results to the enemy therefrom. Yet upon every one doing the little that falls to his share depends the issue of the battle.

The sole aim of military discipline is so perfectly to teach each one to know his place and his duty and so to fulfill the requirements of both that the entire army shall be like a vast machine which obeys instantly the touch of the master. One private standing bravely at his post when death is all around him, often serves to hold to their posts all those in his immediate neighborhood, an influence which tends to spread in concentric circles throughout the entire army, while the cowardice of one man has more than once demoralized an entire regiment. The higher we go in the ranks, the more depends upon the individual. Some of the most stirring pages of history are those which narrate how the unexpected arrival of the commander turned rout into victory. The death of Cyrus the younger, just as the enemy was flying before him, reorganized its scattered columns and disintegrated his own army.

What is true in the savage contests we call war, is true throughout all of our life. The parallelisms are peculiarly strong along lines of organized work for reform such as our own W. C. T. U. Every member of a local union knows how inspiring is the faithful, persistent work of those who are always on hand and do without fail the work appointed them. Sometimes it seems as if the very life of a union depended upon some one quiet, unobtrusive worker, "gentle as sunshine, persistent as fate." The more responsible the position and the greater the influence and ability of the worker, the more important is the work. In our peaceful warfares, as in the fierce contests of brute force, the presence of a trusted leader has served to wring victory from defeat.

One of the hardest things we have to meet is the dropping from the ranks, or at least from the posts where they have been so efficient, of these trusted workers. This is the result of the conditions of our work. Our workers are for the most part busy women who have to plan the use of all their minutes with the utmost care to find time for the work of the W. C. T. U. It is a labor of love for, with the exception of a few of the highest officials, who are obliged to give up their time almost exclusively to the service of the union, we pay no salaries. It is a pity this must be, for very often could we pay but a small remuneration, enough to enable the busy wife and mother to hire a part of her housework or sewing done, we might have in return services which would be simply invaluable. As it is, we cannot blame those who have been long in the work for thinking that it is some one's else turn to bear the burden and heat of the day.

But, dear sister, before you thus let the work fall from your hands stop and consider whether that "some one else" can be found. The work you are doing in the W. C. T. U. may seem to you very little, and yet more may depend upon it than you realize. Weigh carefully the assurances of your sisters, that the little you are doing is absolutely essential and that no one else can be found to undertake it if you give it up, and then settle the matter in the closet with your Master. There is diversity of gifts. One because of social position, another because of abilities or education along certain lines; another because of peculiar influence with certain classes of people, may be specially fitted for her distinctive post, and there may be no one else in the community who could at all approximate the work which these different ones are doing, each in her own line. For one such to drop out not only leaves her own work undone, but also, where the union, as is often the case, is the result chiefly of the enthusiasm and energy of one person, frequently demoralizes the whole force.

We have in mind just now one of our state presidents. In her state the W. C. T. U. has to combat an amount of prejudice which would appall our sisters in more favored sections. The union is in the midst of most disquieting discussions, and needs a wise, calm and trusted hand at the helm. It has just such a one in its president. Her social position, her Christian character, her activity in good works of every kind, secure for the W. C. T. U., of which she is the most prominent representative, a respect which it could not possibly command without her. Moreover, she is so wise, so calm, so dispassionate, that she is fully trusted by all within the union itself, however sharply divided they may be on any subject. To lose her would be one of the severest blows the W. C. T. U. of that state could sustain.

But what is true of her is also true in varying degrees of many of our women. When you feel, sisters, that you must lay down your work, first make very sure just what will be all of the consequences. It may be that your loss to the cause involves the demoralization of that part of the army, be it smaller or greater, with which you are immediately connected. An important part of one's life-work consists in making sacrifices of strength, time and money. Be very sure before you leave the place to which the voice of your sisters has called you, and where that voice importunes you to stay, that there is any other place where you can so efficiently use whatever gift you may chance to have, be it wealth, social position, leisure or natural powers of heart and mind in the service of the Master.

OPINIONS—AS THEY ARE GIVEN.

The Independent of March 29 publishes an interview with the author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men"—Mr. Walter Besant. The subject of that interview is Mr. Besant's "opinion of women."

There is nothing strikingly original in that opinion; nevertheless, it is something for which the woman of to-day must feel profoundest gratitude that so great an authority should condescend to have any opinion whatever concerning her. Perhaps we need no greater proof that the world moves than a mental comparison of this veritable interview with one which might have occurred a century ago. Imagine Dr. Samuel Johnson, who died one hundred and ten years ago, interviewed as to his "opinion of women" along the lines upon which Mr. Besant has given his. We trust the shade of the great lexicographer and essayist will forgive the comparison, but there is a certain calm assumption of autocracy about Mr. Besant which makes it not wholly inappropriate.

Picture, therefore, Dr. Johnson in his last days at the famous club he had helped make immortal—(Mr. Besant, by the way, was found at the office of the Incorporated Society of Authors)—when a dapper little reporter appears and asks his opinion concerning "the fair sex." (He would have been morally certain to say "the fair sex" one hundred and ten years ago.)

Does Dr. Johnson say as did Mr. Besant: "I do not think that women have shown themselves as capable as men in intellectual work—neither in art, literature, science nor music"? Does he compare any woman of that period with Fielding, as Mr. Besant compares George Eliot, though it be to her disparagement? Does he bring a woman poet up to even the point of vision where she can see over into the promised land of man's superior endowment, as Mr. Besant brings Elizabeth Barrett Browning? Does he allude to the victory over the Senior Wrangler of some woman of the last century, as being "only a youthful competition" requiring the test of time before it can be shown that she will make "a great mathematician," as Mr. Besant alludes to Miss Fawcett?

Perish the thought! Such a chain of comparisons would be as foreign to the understanding of the great doctor as is his lofty Johnsonese to the diction of modern tongues. He would give very fluent and rotund opinions concerning woman as housekeeper, wife and mother, according to the standard of that age. He would doubtless, if in milder vein, indulge in many semi-jocose compliments towards woman in the abstract, or possibly towards some concrete woman who had been fortunate enough to deserve his mild approval; but for woman as a factor in life's problems, a competitor in life's race, a fellow toiler in life's labor, what has he to say? Absolutely nothing; and the reason is not far to seek. One hundred years ago woman was not a factor in the sense she is to-day, not a competitor, not a toiler. It were folly to draw comparisons where none exist.

Dr. Johnson did deliver himself of one oracular utterance concerning woman in a public capacity. "Some one told him," says the immortal Boswell, "of a woman who was preaching, when he replied something like this, 'A woman who preaches is very much like a dog who walks on his hind legs. The wonder is, not that he does it well, but that he does it at all.'" O Tempora!

And yet, even at that day there were eyes anointed to clearer vision, for John Wesley exhorts one of his women preachers to be careful not to preach in a town at the same time with one of her brethren, "lest she draw away the people." Was that a reference to the fact that a preaching woman would be regarded with the same curiosity as a performing dog—or had the popular mind already begun to recognize woman's peculiar fitness for ethical teaching?

"The bearings" of the above "observations" lie wholly "in the application of them." What have Dr. Johnson's opinions of a century ago to do with Mr. Walter Besant's opinions of to-day? More, doubtless by far, than will Mr. Walter Besant's opinion of to-day have to do with the opinions of some equally oracular speaker one hundred years hence.

The whole gist of the woman question lies not in what she has done as compared with man, but in what, under vitally contrasting conditions, with absolutely different standards, without the force of precedent and example, against the stress of widely varying public opinion, across the trend of old ideals, she has done and is doing.

Who claims that she has given to the world its best literary work? Certainly not she. Who claims for her the rank of a Michael Angelo, a Shakespeare, a Darwin or a Beethoven in the respective realms of "art, science, literature and music"? Not she. It would be passing strange, if in less than a century of even partial freedom to develop after her own natural bent, she had attained to the consummate flower of the ages. The higher education of woman, under even the most narrow restrictions, has been a possibility of only the last forty years. Does that fact count for nothing? Are we to be judged to-day by the standard of those in whose hands has been placed the empire of the mental world through the ages; or by the standard of those, who, too slowly awakened to the need, have, nevertheless, made the most splendid dash for freedom, and the most marvelous record within a brief period that the world has known? Clearly, justice claims the latter point of view.

Though, indeed, when compared with men, ours is no inglorious record. If George Eliot cannot measure up to Thackeray—and there are those who would question that statement—neither can Mr. Walter Besant measure up to George Eliot. If Elizabeth Barrett Browning is not the full equal of her great-souled husband (who always counted her the more inspired genius) it would not be difficult to find a score or two of men poets who are not the equal of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. If Miss Fawcett fails of becoming "a great mathematician" in years to come it will be a case not wholly without parallel, for there have been brilliant "Senior Wranglers" of whom the world has never again heard.

We might question also Mr. Besant's statement that women have not the creative mind. Indeed, one might raise the query as to whether the man who counts as the "best women novelists" of to-day, Mrs. Oliphant and Mrs. Lynn-Linton, is capable of recognizing the creative mind; but we must pass to a still more startling affirmation; to a distinction we are sure could be made by a man alone. "Then comes the question of governing by women. Have women made good governors? . . . It seems to me that they (Queens Elizabeth and Catherine) showed themselves to be good administrators but administration is not governing. Administration seems to be the one kind of work which women do better than men. . . . If governing consisted only of finding fit men for posts, being guided by them, women would be successful governors." Again we cry, O Tempora! Imagine Dr. Johnson making these remarkable admissions!

Are we so blinded, or is the administrative faculty, as defined by Mr. Besant himself, the highest of faculties? Does his distinction between a governor and an administrator mark in reality the distinction between a tyrant and a leader?

Who have ruled best among men if it be not those who have possessed the keen vision to see the right man for the right place? Which is the greater, "the general who plans a campaign," or the one "who leads the men in the midst of the fight"? Clearly, Mr. Besant believes the latter, and upon that point our woman's brain, illogical though it may be, must venture to take issue. To "lead the men in the field" is often and usually a matter of mere physical courage; to plan and administer a campaign or a government is a matter of pure intellect and moral force.

To us the administrative faculty is infinitely above what Mr. Besant is pleased to call "the faculty for governing." It is the governing faculty raised to its highest power. It is the governing faculty multiplying its units by tens and by hundreds. If women largely possess this faculty —and since Mr. Besant says so, dare we deny it?—the question of her future power and future scope of work is assured. Modesty on our part would have disclaimed so lofty an assumption, but we may surely wear the laurel when crowned by the foe.

There is one other point brought out in this interview with which we are forced, however, reluctantly to agree, but that must be treated hereafter.

From "Opinions as they are given," we deduce the postulate that the point of view must determine the opinion—and we appeal to the Cæsar of one hundred years hence for judgment upon woman's work, not of that age alone but of to-day.

THE SOLID SALOON.

The religious press is devoting a good deal of space these days to the discussion of methods for minifying the saloon power. Not a church organ in the country, we take it, would claim to be other than anti-saloon in principle. Not all of them, however, stand for the higher idea of anti-traffic, though a rapid evolution is taking place in this direction.

"How to organize against the saloon" is the subject of a recent article in the Western Christian Advocate. The writer says wisely that "united action at the polls of all who are opposed to the domination of the saloon in political affairs" is the first thing necessary. He also says, not so wisely, "what to do with the saloon after we get it out of power can be safely left to the future. The present problem is to get it out of power."

The only possible way to get the saloon out of power is to get it out of existence. That is the present problem; a problem that will cease to be a problem when every Christian citizen does his duty in the matter. We have but to pick up another church organ to find ready to our hand one very practical reason why all effort to wrest from the saloon its political power is doomed to failure.

The Northern Christian Advocate writing on "The Incubus of the Liquor Traffic" calls attention to the numerical strength of the liquor interest in the state of New York, which the Rochester Post Express has been looking up. Statistics show that state to have 28,000 licensed saloons, or one for every 220 persons. Estimating three men to be connected with each saloon—the proprietor and two bar-tenders—it has 84,000 men engaged directly in the business. In addition to these its 630 breweries employ 50,000 men, its 150 distilleries 13,500, which, together with all those employed by manufacturers and dealers in saloon fixtures, bottles, etc., free lunch purveyors and those engaged in the liquor import trade, make at least 200,000 men earning a livelihood by the drink business—which is about one-sixth of the entire voting population of the state. "The liquor business," says the Post Express, "is conducted almost exclusively by men, practically by citizens, and to this fact is attributable in part the large influence which liquor men exercise in politics, for this is preëminently a case where every worker has a vote—if not more than one."

And when to the numerical strength of the liquor interest is added its financial strength. is it not clear that so long as the business exists it will continue to be a power in politics?

As in New York, so in every state or city which legalizes the saloon. Previous to the recent municipal election in Chicago, the newspapers of that city very generally complained because eleven of the thirty-four Democratic candidates for aldermanic honors were "groggery-keepers," and of the thirty-four aldermen who remain in office, seven are in the same business. Why should they protest? Think what power is vested in the concentrated force of seven thousand saloons! Surely the proportion of eighteen to sixty-eight is none too large to represent the rum power in this municipality. And we are safe in saying that the results of the election, though a Republican victory, will still show the dominance of the saloon.

In the opinion of one daily paper, it "passes understanding why any one except the saloon-keeper's besotted customers should vote for him." Now, we think the answer to this perplexing question is "real easy." United action at the polls for men or measures looking to the perpetuation of the saloon is the political creed of every man who is directly or indirectly identified with the liquor business, and he lives up to it. The only way for the government to avoid the dangers which come with a solid saloon is for the opponents of groggery rule to do as groggery-keepers do—concentrate their vote.

Great good must result from the present wide-spread agitation of municipal reform, but before our cities can entirely throw off the saloon yoke, reform along this line must be national. Reform forces must unite under one banner, not divide their strength as now among four different political parties.

It is urged as an argument against party prohibition that the power of the liquor element is the result of a strictly non-partisan policy. True, but we must remember that every other party is a liquor party, hence there is no need for partisanship on the part of the liquor interest. We find friends of the saloon voting with the Republican, the Democratic and the Populist parties—but do they ever vote with the Prohibition party?

Local option? Yes, that is the best method of settling the liquor question, declares the Iowa Republican and the Georgia Democrat. Suppose they try that method of settling the tariff and silver questions. But no, we hear them saying just what party Prohibitionists say of the same policy applied to the liquor traffic, it is "too local and too optional." It "passes understanding" why it is necessary for a national party to handle these problems and unnecessary for a national party to handle the drink problem.

No method of organizing against the liquor power will succeed which leaves "to the future" the consideration of what to do with the saloon. Temporizing is not necessary when annihilation is possible. And it is possible by united action in support of a party—we care not what the name—pledged to an anti-traffic policy. As Neal Dow tersely puts it: "When the Christian people of the land say, Go, and vote, Go, the liquor traffic will go."

Our readers will be interested to know that two women, Miss Clark and Miss Spence, have secured in Australasia that ideal condition with regard to orphan children which the W. C. T. U. is striving, through a department created for the purpose, to approximate in this country. That is the condition in which every child shall have a home. Every waif is cared for in what is called a receiving house until a permanent home is found for it. The Children's Committee of the Destitute Board is kept informed of families all over the country who are willing to take charge of homeless children by local volunteer committees, who canvass their respective neighborhoods and send to the committee the names and circumstances of all such families. The committee selects from these the family which it thinks best for each child, no child being placed in excessively poor families. The foster-parents are paid $1.25 a week for caring for and clothing the child. They are obliged to keep the child in school while it is of school age, and the local committee make it their business to see that it is properly and kindly cared for. At fourteen years of age the child begins to work, his earnings being deposited in the Postal Savings Bank, where they are kept until he is seventeen or eighteen years of age. He can then start out in the world with a small capital.

The superiority of this over our own combination system of herding children together in institutions where they are cared for by the wholesale like so many animals or puppets, and of leaving them to be trained on the street as criminals, is apparent at a glance. From the low plane of dollars and cents it is an immense saving to society. But in this matter, as in that of licensing the liquor traffic, it is hard to turn people from the penny-wise-pound-foolish customs in which they have been reared.

It is a significant fact that in Australasia this reform has been brought about by women and that an organization of women has attempted to reach the same end in this country. It is a hint of what mother-love in the state will accomplish when it is given opportunity to exert its beneficent influence there.

Word has come from the Indians in Athabasca, Canada, that their view of Henry Somers Somerset and his traveling companion, Arthur Pollen, a London barrister, was as follows: "Two chiefs came over wide sea, one the son of a great nobleman and of a mother who was chief of all the Englishmen who don't drink"!

***

The proportion of abstainers amongst the greatest intellects of the earth is much greater than the proportion of abstainers in the community generally. Amongst them instance Sidney Smith, Cardinal Manning, Professors Rolleston, Newman and Green, of Oxford, Archdeacon Farrar, Dr. Lightfoot, late Bishop of Durham, Dr. Temple, Bishop of London, John Bright, Dr. F. R. Lees, Dr. B. W. Richardson, Presidents Lincoln and Garfield, Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Harriet Martineau, M. Chevreul, the great French chemist, who lived to over one hundred years, and of whom it was written, "He drinks no wine and has never drank any." Charles Waterton, the naturalist, who said, "I am now four score and one years, I do not even know the taste of wine, nor of any spirituous liquors, and sixty-seven years have now passed since I drank a glass of beer."

***

Sir William Gull, F. R. S., says: "I think that instead of flying to alcohol, as many people do when they are exhausted, they might very well drink water, or they might very well take food, and would be very much better without the alcohol. If I am fatigued with overwork personally, my food is very simple. I eat the raisins instead of taking the wine. I have had a very large experience in that practice for thirty years. . . . Many people believe that intellectual work cannot be done half so well without wine or alcohol. There I should join issue at once. I should hold the opposite. As to whether a moderately temperate person might be benefited by a slight use of wine or alcohol—I should hold the opposite as regards the intellect; all alcohol, and all things of an alcoholic nature, injure the nerve tissues pro tempore, if not altogether.

***

The Crusade spirit lives and has lived in many hearts whose agony because of the iron heel of the spirit of inebriacy was greater than they could bear. I am told of a crusade "which took place in Greenville, Ill., in the fall of 1864." This was a no-license town but the shamelessness of evil had taken possession in the shape of two open saloons. Into these saloons strayed those who had left breaking hearts at home. The women resolved to take the administration of the law into their own hands, and after due notice to the saloon-keepers that they would be "dealt with" if they continued their defiance, a notice which was scoffed at, twenty-six women, representing leading families, went in a body to one saloon and quietly demolished every receptacle which held the condemned article. Saloon number two had gotten wind of the affair and its goods were not to be found by the gentle army of law enforcers. Of course, the saloon-keeper "went to law," but as nothing had been touched save liquor kept in defiance of law, no justice could be found who would undertake the case, and the little town had peace for years thereafter. Moral,—If you want a thing well done, do it yourself!

***

Many and precious are the letters received at Headquarters telling the old story, which yet never grows old in its thrilling interest, of the arrest of thought on this question of the liquor traffic. Now it is through a mother's prayers; now by a sentence in an address or sermon; through a bit of keen logic or truth-laden narrative; sometimes it comes because of a "still small voice" speaking to reason and conscience. A recent letter has reached On Duty testifying to the great part played in this direction by the free distribution of temperance literature. "A little tract or leaflet," says the writer, "has many times paved the way for me to enter homes in our rum-cursed city where I have found torn and bleeding hearts needing a tender word." In the same letter is enclosed a leaflet at the head of which is written, "This is precious because it has saved men from drink," and the writer tells of one instance in which the reading of this tract by a saloon-keeper so awakened the sleeping sense of right in him that he closed up his business. We do not know what little arrow we speed may pierce the armor of sin. Let us with prayer and patience keep up a steady fusillade.

On Duty.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS SALUTES MAINE.

Maine has something that Massachusetts has not. Massachusetts has a little prohibition, but no Neal Dow. Massachusetts, forty-five years behind, doffs her hat to her northern neighbor and pays homage to the Maine Law and to its author and champion. By Massachusetts, your reporter signifies the temperance sentiment crystallized, and more especially as crystallized in the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, president.

This brave, admirable leader rallied the hosts at King's Chapel, Boston, on the 20th of March. Who has not heard of King's Chapel? What wayfarer wandering down Tremont street has not peered into its gloomy portal and questioned as to this ancient landmark? First, a chapel, 1686, a Queen's Chapel (Anne) in 1689. It was built of wood and rebuilt in 1754 of granite, the first ever quarried at Quincy, to which quarry the first mile of railroad in this country was built. Said Mrs. Livermore in substance, recalling these facts:

"If the organ could talk it could give an epitome of our national history. Handel tried it. Kings furnished the communion service to their loyal subjects. Provincial governors worshipped here; also Peter Faneuil, George Washington, again and again, the Adamses, two, Daniel Webster, Charles Sumner, Governor Andrew, Francis Parkman. The bell in E flat was cast by Paul Revere. The time was when the slaves of Boston occupied gallery seats each side of the organ." Thus Mrs. Livermore evoked bygone experiences and made real the memorable presences, famous occupants of 17th, 18th, 19th century pews.

Amid such surroundings, Neal Dow Day was observed in Boston. The keynote of the devotional service in the afternoon, Mrs. A. J. Gordon, leading, was Praise.

Rev. Louis Banks was the first speaker celebrating the "birthday of a dreamer," who dreamed of a state that should be sober. Think of the changes during his life! Many a parsonage has served as a grog-shop since Neal Dow was born. Bibles and whisky and rum have been often in strange juxtaposition. Prohibition is a winning cause, and the ballot in the hands of woman will enforce it.

Mary H. Hunt recalled that the first brewery was only eleven days later than the landing of the Mayflower. The saloons have grown faster than the sentiment against alcohol. Now, 13,000,000 children are being trained under scientific temperance instruction laws. Boys and girls are coming up with knowledge and ballots, and the traffic is doomed.

The indefatigable state superintendent of work among foreigners, Mrs. M. S. Howes, answered the question, "Can any good thing come out of a saloon?" "Yes; the Maine Liquor Law was born in a saloon."

Hon. John D. Long felt that this meeting held in King's Chapel was significant of the larger spirit that is abroad in the cause of temperance, and therefore in the cause of humanity. He was a native of Maine and lived there when Neal Dow's efforts were bringing him reproach. Neal Dow is vindicated after ninety years of honorable, irreproachable life.

Rev. Alfred Noon said that about everything that Mr. Dow stands for seems near at hand, including the ballot for woman.

In the evening, Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., conducted devotional exercises.

Mrs. Joseph Cook told of Neal Dow's visit to her home, Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga, where he spent his seventieth birthday. He was quite oblivious to any special consideration of himself on account of age. Miss Willard and Mrs. Hunt were also present; and the trio of guests recorded their names upon a tree. Mrs. Cook also told of a recent visit to Neal Dow's Portland home. His life has been spent in two houses within sight of each other. He rises in summer at 4:30 and in winter at 6. He writes and studies and works, a man among men, the father of a great cause.

"Alive he sat among his books;
The peace of God was in his looks."

Mr. Alfred Roe, of Worcester, one of the speakers, is a member of the legislature, and the stanch friend and advocate of municipal suffrage in the House. He refuted the old assertion, oft-repeated, that as much liquor is sold under prohibition as without it. This he had disproved by personal investigation.

An original poem, by Ella Gilbert Ives, was read, and the last stanza sent as a telegram to the Neal Dow meeting in session at Portland:

"Fresh laurels for an honored name,
That shines to-night with world-wide fame!
Wreathe, too, the Ship of State, whose prow
Is lustrous with the name—Neal Dow!"

The crowning address of the evening was by Mary A. Livermore, introduced by Mrs. Fessenden as "the grand woman of perpetual youth," and all the people said Amen! Allusion has been made to her historic reminiscences. The address was one of those inspirations of which Mary Livermore has many as she climbs higher the mount of vision and looks over into the promised land. She dwelt upon the longing for immortality, the earthly as well as the heavenly, in every human heart. A fine house may be one's folly. If nothing is done for others one will not survive. The world cares less for its masters than its servants. Neal Dow has won earthly immortality. We ought to lay our foundations in the sky and build upward.

DEPARTMENT WORK.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is sometimes spoken against because it is "doing so many things." A communication like the following from Mrs. E. M. Allen, Massachusetts' superintendent railroad work, is sufficient refutation of such criticism, indicative as it is of work done in all lines.

"It is due to our Massachusetts W. C. T. U. to inform our sisters in other states, that although we labor here under difficulties not found at the west, in carrying on our railroad department, yet much good work is being done in a quiet way. We are much encouraged by the increased interest of Christians in this work and are blessed in having gained the confidence and esteem of our railroad men. They feel that they are really our 'adopted children,' and the great, tender hearts are drawn toward us. The visits to railway families and our 'silent missionary,' the leaflet, have been signally blessed. Many have signed the pledge and some have become Christians."

The municipal suffrage bill passed the House by a vote of 110 to 94. The prospect is good for confirmation by the Senate. It is well known that the attitude of the governor is favorable.

LOUISE C. PURINGTON,
State Reporter, Dorchester.

IOWA.

IN MOURNING.

The shameful deed is done at last and our beloved state is given up, apparently, to the greed of the liquor vultures. As your readers know our general assembly has passed a mulct and local-option license bill. This passed the house by a majority of two; not seven as stated in a recent editorial. The bill passed the senate by a majority of one. One minister of the gospel (?) was induced to change his vote "to help save the party."

While the bill was being read for the third time in the senate, the senator from Marshalltown was watching for a telegram from his constituents with instructions how to vote. The secretary was privately requested to read very slowly which he did. Then came the message signed by sixty anarchists of Marshalltown, "Vote yea." Thus, Senator Turner's vote turned the scale against "home, sweet home," and in favor of the brewer's blood-tarnished gold.

But unless I greatly mistake the spirit of our Iowa patriots in every party, the political pirates now at the helm of the ship of state will speedily receive the condign punishment their crime merits.

The Democrats and real Prohibitionists voted against the bill, thus indelibly branding upon the Republicans the odium of breaking down a law which has brought unexampled prosperity to our state.

There is one way of salvation yet open for Prohibition. Let all members of the W. C. T. U., every Prohibitionist, man and woman, youth and maiden, without a day's delay, induce as many voters as possible to sign a pledge not to give written consent to the suspension of the prohibitory law under the iniquitous bill just passed by the legislature.

To the work, to the work, brave hearts and true! May fainting spirts be encouraged and hands that hang down be lifted up. Ye wrestle not against flesh and blood alone, but against spiritual wickedness in high places. The battle is not yours, but God's; therefore be of good courage for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not.

A bill has been passed prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors under sixteen.

Full suffrage was denied woman, but the house passed a bill granting her school and municipal suffrage, which will doubtless be defeated in the senate.

To their everlasting shame be it recorded, our legislators, without waiting for the customary third reading, rushed a bill through the house protecting man in his crime of crimes against woman, leaving her absolutely without redress unless a third party could testify as an eye-witness!

A joint resolution providing for resubmission of the prohibitory amendment to a vote of the people passed the house by a vote of seventy-one ayes and twenty-six nays; this, too, will probably be defeated in the senate.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

Our state president has received splendid letters from all parts of the state warmly indorsing our efforts.

Mrs. Shesler, president of the eleventh district, is filled with rejoicing over the uplift of work in her territory.

Our W. C. T. U. has "pushed the battle to the gates" in the interests of social purity work, having sent out letters, circulars and petitions in every direction.

Mr. H. E. Jarvis, of Burlington, and others have organized a state White Cross society, which will be incorporated and will receive our hearty coöperation.

Cresco union has a band of wide-awake women, who, not receiving petition blanks, through some oversight, had a quantity prepared and sent broadcast through the county to be filled. They have lent a hand in many good ways, freely giving time and money.

Through the efforts of Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Battle Creek, Mich., who has been canvassing the district for prohibition, the unions at Kingsley, Pierson, Akron and Battle Creek have been reorganized; also a new union organized at Ashton. At least one hundred and fifty new names have been added to the district roll.

Spencer union, with an empty treasury, launched out with faith in Him who owns the cattle on a thousand hills and engaged Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, state evangelist, for six days' service, in consequence of which there was a great reviving; forty new members were added to the union; enough money came in to meet all expenses, leaving a balance in the treasury.

Mrs. Dunham has organized a union at Leon, county seat of Decatur county, with fifteen active and two honorary members, and at Bedford, county seat of Taylor county; also one at Marcus. She has visited and strengthened Clearfield, Spencer, Rock Valley, Ashton and Sibley unions. The women of Turin got so awakened that they organized without waiting for outside help.

Mrs. L. G. Johnson, formerly of Oregon but now of Chicago, and her two daughters, are making a thorough canvass of counties in the interest of prohibition. All are fine singers and as they speak for collection and entertainment, no union, however weak, need fear to invite them. They meet with signal favor wherever they go, and Mrs. Johnson is very successful in organizing W. C. T. Unions and establishing them on a solid foundation, as she stays two or three days in a place.

Swaledale union is mourning the death of one of its members, the first, that of Mrs. Fannie L. Jenkins. The society followed the mourners in the funeral procession and sat with them in the church. A large bow of white ribbon with W. C. T. U. printed upon it was placed upon the coffin amid the flowers, and each member wore the white ribbon to which a rosette of black was attached. The children celebrated the birthday of Neal Dow under the auspices of the society. The county president, Mrs. Julia A. Quackenboss, edits columns in two papers in Cerro Gordo county.

Fayette has a union of Y's which are my heart's delight, for, as president of their district, I am not rich in Y's, and am cherishing the fervent hope that they are the harbingers of many more. When the Y union only numbered twelve members the faithful mother union gave a reception at the home of their president, inviting a large number of young ladies, dispensing hospitality in a manner so graciously winning that twenty-four young girls then and there signed the constitution and donned the white ribbon, thus increasing the membership to thirty-six. If every union could do as well how mightily would our influence grow.

Oelwein union is bravely pushing the work of suppressing the saloon. The expense of this has to be borne by a few as the county attorney positively refuses to help them. When they were prosecuting the keeper of the most gilt-edged saloon, he sent his lawyer, one of the most noted in the state, to buy them off. But these heroines said: "No, sir! We will make no compromise with sin." He lost his case and removed from the place with the declared purpose of settling in some town where the women did not rule. Oelwein women are desirous to have it known that their success is largely due to the efforts of Col. C. J. Holt, of Decatur, Ill., and heartily commend him to unions everywhere.

To show you how cordially our women support our grand do-everything policy, let me give a synopsis of what one new union in Bromley is doing. Their president, Mrs. Lou A. Bennett, writes me that this was organized in September, 1893. They have fourteen members and have taken up the following named departments of work: Scientific temperance instruction, literature, social purity, medal contest, systematic giving, peace and arbitration, narcotics, franchise and mothers' meetings. They have had one lecture from Mrs. Anna M. Palmer; held two contests, one a suffrage by young ladies, for the other recitations were selected from editorials in THE UNION SIGNAL, and given by members of the W. C. T. U.; another similar one is in preparation. This union also observed Neal Dow's birthday. They are following out the plan of work suggested in W. T. P. A. catalogue called "Seeding down the Field." They take thirteen copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and sixteen copies of The Iowa Signal. No wonder they are intelligent, energetic workers. Such a union cannot die.

It is mail time and a fine report from state superintendent of L. T. L. department, Miss Anna D. Brown, must be left out this time, to my regret.

CLARA P. WHITE,
State Reporter, Volga.

COLORADO.

MOVEMENTS IN THE FREE STATE.

Our women are realizing more and more their great responsibilities since acquiring the privilege of the ballot; as the growing formation of societies for the study of political economy are noted in the daily press. In Highlands the question of annexation was brought before the citizens, and the manner in which the white-ribboners exercised their first right of suffrage decided adversely to merging their identity in the city of Denver by that powerful engine of a freeman's will, the ballot. Under home rule they had grown from an incorporated town of few inhabitants to a prosperous city, ranking fifth in population among the cities of Colorado, and many, seeing the beautiful situation would gladly cast their lot among them. The saloon question should outweigh all other reasons why all good citizens should baffle the annexation scheme. The women were true to their plighted obligations, and proved that the home shall be protected, and that her presence in the political arena is a synonym for purity and right.

In the Central union of Denver, the superintendent of literature reported that only one of the seven German churches does not advocate equal suffrage. She has distributed 1,200 leaflets among the Germans, Italians and Chinese. Visiting a laundry quite early in the morning the inmates were found reading the Bible and seemed to be conducting family worship. The financial agent, Mrs. C. H. McLaughlin, who is serving so faithfully and well in this capacity, has secured subscriptions and donations to the amount of thirty-three dollars. This work is a free-will, loving offering to the cause she loves so well, and deserves more than passing recognition. The day nursery has cared for 997 children, average per day, thirty-six, and liberal gifts have been received of cash and varied supplies, from churches and individuals. The Cottage Home is out of debt, owing to the united efforts of the state workers for its maintenance, and will be continued. The Woman's Exchange has paid to consigners more than twelve hundred dollars during the month. The new union organized on the north side, mentioned in the last letter, has been appropriately named the Cassell W. C. T. U., in honor of the president of Arapahoe county union, and the membership is growing.

The 90th birthday of Gen. Neal Dow was celebrated on the North and West sides and Highlands, and in the center of the city, in St. Paul's M. E. church under the auspices of the state union, Mrs. Eva Higgins presiding. The following telegram was sent, "Colorado W. C. T. U. sends congratulations—read Zechariah 14: 7"—and a neat sum was forwarded to the World's W. C. T. U. as a result of these meetings.

Medal contests have been held in Evans and Canon City. At the former place, the contestants were young men, and all acquitted themselves creditably. The medal was awarded to Mr. Durward Luper, and half the proceeds of the entertainment were sent to the state treasury. At Canon City there were seven competitors, and all received special training, so that it was difficult to decide as to the deserving one. The choice was Miss Mabel Ashton, that was greeted with applause by the large audience. Mrs. Mary E. Jones presided, and the occasion was also a financial success.

Mrs. M. J. Telford lectured here with good results; an increase of membership and attendance at all the meetings of the local union. They are advancing on political lines by adopting the plan of dividing the city into blocks of five, and a woman in charge, whose duty is to canvass her district and urge registration and on election, day fulfill her part of voting on the right side, which should be in the mind of every true W. C. T. U. worker. The Flying Wedge will also visit one thousand homes in that locality.

We are authorized to state that the following towns will, through the efforts of the women, place a no-license ticket in the field: Akron, Boulder, Delta, Fort Morgan, Longmont, Julesburg, Montrose, Evans, Monument, Rocky Ford and Sterling. "And all the people shall say Amen."

At Rocky Ford, four members of the Senior class of the L. T. L. will cast their first ballot for prohibition at the spring election. One hundred and fifty children assembled to hear Mrs. Higgins' telling address on the juvenile work. The state president and recording secretary spent two days in Greeley very profitably. Mrs. Higgins addressed the union in the afternoon and a public meeting in the evening in the Baptist church, the Prohibitionists uniting. Mr. A. B. Copeland presided,—the choir rendering suitable music, two choruses entitled, "Prohibition" and the "Temperance Battle Hymn." Our president urged her hearers not to lose sight of the principles of our organization and listen to no compromise whatsoever, but

"Shout the song of Home Protection,
God and Right must yet prevail."

SARAH LEE TEETOR,
State Reporter, Denver.

CALIFORNIA.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

Our winter lingers, reluctant to be gone, and spring advances but timidly this year, as if to countenance the great fair called Midwinter, but held until midsummer. Strangers are crowding into the city to see its attractions and friendly faces from the East find their way with pleasant greetings to our headquarters. Notwithstanding the continuance of financial depression temperance work goes on, under difficulties, it is true, but it knows no rest or surcease from labor.

Our latest victory is a county ordinance in King's county, closing saloons Sundays and after 10 p. m. At Marysville, the temperance folks are bringing to trial offenders against a local ordinance that prohibits selling at late hours of night.

Lake county is rejoicing in its prohibitory law, though in their last case the prisoner was acquitted by a jury. During the trial a witness criminated himself and the women had him arrested before he got out of the court room, so his case is pending.

The courts of this city are more lax in the enforcement of law than the country tribunals, a police judge has lately discharged a large number of druggists arrested for selling opium illegally, without trial, though this city suffers fearfully from the opium habit.

Other police judges have dismissed without penalty the man arrested for selling liquor to minors. This judge explained to a friend that these saloon-keepers were all his friends. It all suggests that it is about time to elect men whose "friends" are not in the liquor business.

More than sixty places are selling liquor without license in the fair grounds. The authorities will look after them—because of the money.

The county conventions have begun auspiciously, Placer county having just held a fine one. It loses its energetic president, Dr. Mallory, by whose zeal and hard work a magnificent union has been developed; but in her place Mrs. Fanny Theiss will ably carry on her work.

Mrs. Skelton is hard at it in the field organizing new and reviving old unions. Mrs. Eyster is again in the schools with her scientific lectures.

Neal Dow's birthday was appropriately celebrated by many of our unions. The selections given in THE UNION SIGNAL were a great help.

The Demorest contests come thicker, faster and more of them.

Preparations for a temperance congress are being made, to be held late in May, which it is hoped may be helpful to all the Pacific coast.

DORCAS J. SPENCER,
State Reporter, San Francisco.

WISCONSIN.

NEWS IN GENERAL.

Madison, the capital city, is having a temperance revival preparatory to voting upon the license question. Hon. Lou J. Beauchamp is now filling a ten days' engagement, speaking to a full house with a large proportion of men. The pastors of the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist churches have preached on the subject and Mr. Berkey, of Nebraska, has also given two lectures.

Wisconsin, as a whole, seems to be awake to the necessity of doing something to prevent the ravages of the rum power as never before, and during the spring months Honorable Beauchamp will lecture in many places under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. The W. C. T. U. hail all these things with joy and gratitude and feel that the seed we have been sowing for years has taken root and in due time the harvest will be a plentiful one.

It matters not to us to whom the glory is given, for God has and will continue to recompense us.

Madison union observed Neal Dow day with an unusually fine program, rendered in the evening in the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Helen Campbell, of New York, whose name the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will recognize, read a very interesting paper, and all the papers were of a high order of merit.

Marshfield invited Spencer union to unite with them, and the exercises were held in the afternoon, with refreshments at the close. Literature was distributed also.

North La Crosse honored Neal Dow the evening of the 18th. The church was filled with interested listeners, and the collection was "more than we expected." Let us hope their expectations were large.

Fort Atkinson also held a meeting the same evening, speeches by the pastors and president of the local union, with singing, constituting the program.

In referring above to the temperance revival being held in Madison, I omitted one important item, that the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches have opened their doors and the lectures are held therein, three nights in each place alternately. This lessens the expense materially, as they are given free of charge, and is one of the "signs of the times" which shows "our cause is marching on." When all churches "do likewise" victory is ours.

MARIA F. HANCHETT,
State Reporter, Madison.

UTAH.

MARCHING ONWARD.

Just now, when the state question is being agitated, the women of this territory must awaken to the needs of the people, and the first thing to be done is to work for the admission of Utah as a temperance state.

Mrs. Sarah Reed, our territorial evangelist, is now at Nephi and has been holding a series of temperance meetings in the churches, school houses, temple and in the home. She has also assisted in meetings at Spanish Fork, Eureka and Springville. Her report from the work is most encouraging and we feel that she will do all in her power to further the temperance cause in Utah. We have not heard from all over the territory, but know that the local unions at Mante, Logan and Mt. Pleasant are fully awake on this subject.

The Salt Lake union is growing in strength and numbers. At the request of the union most of the ministers of the city observed March 18th as a temperance day, and either preached a temperance sermon or had addresses by local speakers.

This day was kept in honor of that great leader, Neal Dow. Dr. McNeice struck the keynote in his address when he said: "We must have a territorial temperance convention and organize now for the great work before us. We hope that our temperance workers throughout the territory will begin immediately to work for such a convention."

We were pleased at the kindness shown us by our Mormom brothers. They made their afternoon service in the great tabernacle a temperance meeting. This meeting was attended by thousands and altogether we feel that the spirit of temperance pervaded Salt Lake City on Sunday, March 18.

Our local union also held a Neal Dow parlor meeting. Interesting papers telling of his political life and early and later manhood were listened to with great interest.

MRS. E. E. SHEPARD,
Territorial Reporter, Salt Lake City.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

LODI, Mich., had Rev. George H. Vibbert as speaker on Neal Dow day.

AT Petersburgh, Ill., the Neal Dow anniversary exercises, March 20, were eminently successful. Rev. A. H. Harnly delivered an able address.

A DEMOREST silver medal contest was given at Petersburgh, Ill., April 6, by a class of young men and women between the ages of sixteen and nineteen.

FIRST district Illinois W. C. T. U. held a conference of workers on April 10, at Simpson M. E. church, Englewood avenue. Mother Wallace addressed the evening meeting.

THE Willard union in Calais, Maine, is doing grand work. They have rescued some poor little waifs, clothed them and placed them in good homes the past year, besides their other work.

THE Neal Dow celebration at Rochester, N. Y., was a notable occasion in which all the temperance organizations of the city cooperated. Mrs. Barker delivered a stirring and thought inspiring speech.

MUSIC, oratory and enthusiasm were the three concomitants of the splendid Neal Dow celebration at Demorest, Ga. An original poem dedicated to the grand old man of Maine was a feature of the evening.

GANGES, Mich., W. C. T. U. is a small country union, with members widely scattered, yet they accomplish a good deal in the great cause. Crusade day was successfully observed. Their president is an ordained minister.

THE First Congregational church of Mansfield, O., which has experienced the benefits of a revival recently, was the scene, April 1, of a temperance mass-meeting. Mrs. Barker was the speaker, and had for her subject, "Who wants the saloon?" This church is planning for active efforts in the temperance cause.

MRS. EMMA R. ATKINSON, of Moncton, corresponding secretary of the Maritime Provinces, visited the Temple recently en route from New Mexico to her home. Mrs. Atkinson, who is the only lady member of the school board in her town, is deeply interested in juvenile temperance work and is thinking of introducing the anti-cigarette league in the public schools.

UXBRIDGE W. C. T. U., of North Dakota. celebrated Neal Dow day by having a basket social to which a cordial invitation had been previously extended to all. A very pleasant day was spent, resulting in an encouraging increase of membership. On the program rendered was an excellent paper prepared and read by the local president, Mrs. M. Bascome.

FOSTORIA, O., Y's occupy a cozy room adjoining the public library, and are uniting their efforts with those of the library association to keep a free reading room open every evening and two afternoons of each week. This Y, organized Sept., 1893, by Miss Ensign, state secretary, with ten charter members, now numbers eighty and is constantly increasing.

"READING of the beautiful memorial windows I am constrained to write you about ours. The W. C. T. U. of Grundy Center, Iowa, placed at its own expense a beautiful stained glass window in the M. E. church, dedicated April 8, 1892. The upper part has the bow of white ribbon as a symbol, and below, 'Woman's Christian Temperance Union.' I think it is a good way to keep our temperance work before the people," writes Mrs. Sarah Gilbert. president.

A STIRRING poem entitled, "You can't vote, and I can't vote," by Mrs. Evalina M. Smith, North Greenfield, Wis., was published on Our Children's page in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 25. For the fifth, sixth and seventh lines of the first stanza, read:

"Our state is ruled by a whisky ring,
That bloat on a dirty keg is king,
And the voters bow to him, that's the sting."

THE superintendent of the local L. T. L., Mary Learned, writes as follows: "In response to your request for information regarding W. C. T. U. memorial windows in churches, I would like to say we have one in the new Memorial M. E. church at Dearborn, Wayne county, Mich. It is a handsome one of stained glass with the letters, W. C. T. U., large enough to be seen in any part of the room. We also have one with the letters, I. O. G. T., and hope soon to pay for one for our L. T. L."

LADIES ARE YOU SATISFIED??

Doesn't your corset hurt you, lame or weary you, or make you uncomfortable? Did you ever charge up to your ill-fitting, stiff and rigid corset the ill-health, weak spines, dyspeptic pains that are occasioned by them?

You don't need to wear a corset to secure a shapely, pleasing form. The GENUINE develops beauty of form, a graceful carriage, robust health and the free exercise of every bodily function.

JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST

BELIEVE IT! BUY IT! ENJOY IT!

NO ONE CAN TELL THE DIFFERENCE.

You can, for you feel comfortable, and are as faultlessly attired.

You will then enjoy bodily freedom, and yet secure all the style that the dressmaker's art can bestow.

Ask your dealers for it. Take nothing but the

Genuine Jackson Favorite Waist

No other waist has its merits, or is its equal. Made in English Sateens. Drab, White, Gold, Black. Postpaid $1. Sizes above 30, 25c. extra.

CORONET CORSET CO., JACKSON, MICH.

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of

BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON

Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.

E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.

Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

SOCIAL PURITY TRUE . . . MANHOOD

A MANUAL FOR YOUNG MEN.

Mrs. F. M'C Harris (Hope Ledyard), Supt. for Mothers' Meetings for the W. C. T. U., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I like the book very much indeed. It takes just the stand that should be taken on these matters, and will be of great assistance to mothers."

The Independent: "We cannot conceive of a book on such a subject, written in a more reverent and cleanly spirit."

12mo, nearly 400 pages, illustrated. Prepaid, $1.65. Best terms to agents. Circulars free.

A. B. STOCKHAM & CO., 98 Market St., Chicago.

When writing please mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,

80-82 W. 18th St., NEW YORK. 186-188 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK

UNDER STATE SUPERVISION.

Savings Deposits Draw 4 Per Ct. Interest, Payable Quarterly.

SAFETY DEPOSIT VAULTS. | Dearborn & Jackson Sts., CHICAGO.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

Its merits as a Wash Blue have been fully tested and indorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask for it.

D. S. WILTBERGER, Proprietor, 233 North 2d St., Phila, Pa.

Sound Discs are invisible, and comfortable. Relieve more cases of

DEAFNESS

than all devices in the world. H. A. Wales, 674 Ashland Block, Chicago.

An exceptionally dainty afternoon reception was that given recently by the Franklin, Pa., Y. W. C. T. U. at which about two hundred young women were present. The program included besides music and refreshment, interesting papers on Y work and on cider. Twenty-nine new names were placed in the society's pledge album and many other young women became interested in the Y organization and work.

Quincy, Ill., has a woman's council composed of fourteen woman's organizations. At a recent meeting the origin, scope and development of the W. C. T. U. were presented in an interesting paper by its president, Mrs. Rev. T. B. Hilton. This was followed by a speech from Miss Irene Smith, local secretary and state superintendent of work among miners, who told of the W. C. T. U. enterprises and prominent lines of work in a brisk, brief speech.

Pierce county, Wash., held its annual convention at Tacoma this winter, and brought out many interesting facts regarding W. C. T. U. work within its borders and indorsement of its labors. Many stirring topics were discussed, among them tobacco, which was conceded to be a foe to temperance, as well as cleanliness, equal suffrage, many thinking the W. C. T. U. ought to concentrate its efforts along that line, and parliamentary usages presented by Mrs. Schaffer, state president for West Washington. Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden, state organizer, rendered valuable assistance.

A correspondent who writes from benefit and experience, advises the use of an overhead pulley to bring into play the untaxed and weaker muscles of the body. She says: "It should have a rope eight feet long, so that one arm at its greatest stretch could not quite reach the pulley. The movements up and down may be supplemented by many others; by taking the handles and holding them on a level and rocking to and fro on the heels and toes, and turning sideways with the same swaying movement; also by supporting or steadying the body while the limbs are swung back, forth, sideways and around. I visited a gymnasium in Philadelphia and felt that I could with my little pulley do all at home."

Official Communications.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

MISSISSIPPI'S STATE CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual convention of the Mississippi Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in Canton, May 5 to 8, 1894. Every union should send as many delegates as possible, as important matters will be discussed, and plans for new work proposed.

We expect to have with us Mrs. Snell, Miss Belle Kearney, Mrs. Ervine and Mrs. Hoskins, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Missouri, Mrs. Charlton Edholm, of Chicago, and perhaps Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, and Mrs. Kells.

The convention sermon will be preached on Sunday, at eleven o'clock, by the noted evangelist, Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Alabama. We hope also to have prominent prohibition brethren with us.

It is important that every delegate reach Canton on Friday, May 4th, prepared to take part in the proceedings and stay until the close of convention.

As we have a full program for every evening's entertainment, we have thought it best to assemble Friday evening for addresses of welcome and responses.

Saturday afternoon will be given to two minute speeches by the presidents of local unions on the work of their unions.

Friends of prohibition in Mississippi are cordially invited to meet with us.

We ask your prayers that God's spirit may be present in great power.

Lavinia S. Mount,
President Miss. W. C. T. U.
Greenville, Miss.

WISCONSIN W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The twentieth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wisconsin will be held in the Presbyterian church, Portage, June 12, 13, 14, 15. A meeting of the executive board will be held in the church Monday evening, June 12 at 7:30; the convention will open Tuesday at 10 a. m.

Feeling the need of a stronger union of forces, and that earnest action is necessary for an arousal of those who stand for a redeemed manhood and womanhood, we cordially invite and earnestly entreat all who desire to put this iniquity away, so that the cause of truth, love and righteousness may be advanced, to be present at our twentieth annual convention and unite with us in our efforts for the extinction of that traffic which destroys the bodies and the souls of men.

Vie H. Campbell, President.
Maria F. Hanchett, Cor. Sec.
Wis. W. C. T. U.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

We hear with pleasure of the prosperity of the W. C. T. U. of Me. There is peace and harmony all along the line. The state department of "finding homes for homeless children" is active and accomplishing much good. There is general interest manifested in the franchise department and the union is constantly growing in interest and numbers.

It would be a pleasure to all to read the description of W. C. T. U. effort in Idaho, written by the president, Mrs. R. Mitchell, who tells of "the mountainous state, where have drifted many people from all countries, who seek a place where they may sin against humanity with impunity." She had just passed over a dangerous mountain road to Cottonwood, where she found reason for encouragement. A quantity of literature has been sent to her for free distribution, a gift to us from our friends Messrs. Hastings, of Boston, and Demorest, of New York. There is more for others who send postage for its forwarding.

From The Republic, of Laramie, Wyoming, we glean news of the marvelous work of our National evangelist, Mrs. R. J. Trego, whose labor of the winter has been a continual success. At a union meeting of all young people's societies "such an altar service as was never seen there before" was held, at which "nearly a hundred young women pledged in a handshake that they were resolved on higher aims, noble purposes and purity of life and heart. After the prayer they were dismissed to their seats, and scores of young men took a stand for better manhood and the same purity that they should expect of their sisters. A prayer followed and they returned to their places. Then came a call for the older ones, fathers, mothers, teachers, those who had at heart the interests of the young folks whose pledges had just been given. Such an earnest company never before crowded one another for an opportunity to kneel on that hallowed spot. Prayer followed prayer and joy beamed in many a face as an earnest of the blessing received."

Mrs. S. A. Morrison, superintendent of the department of charitable and reformatory work, sends us a charming little brochure reporting her work of the last year.

Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer, president South Dakota W. C. T. U., has addressed forty-three meetings in Missouri for which the best possible arrangements were made by President Hoffman and the corresponding secretary, Miss Ellen Morris. The climax of the trip was an all day Neal Dow meeting at Kansas City.

A true ring comes from Indian Territory. Miss Ann E. Larzelere, corresponding secretary pro tem, writes: "Our state officers are a unit against local option. We cannot compromise with the subtle enemy. We stand as one for the extinction and entire prohibition of the liquor traffic." God give us all such firm foothold upon the right.

From Mrs. Henrietta E. Brown, corresponding secretary of California, North, we learn of a wonderful uprising concerning the tobacco question. "From here and there come orders for literature bearing on this question. The matter is being agitated in the school, teachers are interesting themselves, and pupils are required to prepare papers; pledges are being signed by the pupils. In Alameda a large petition has been obtained asking for an ordinance prohibiting the manufacture or sale of cigarettes, and one of our women from that town told me that there was strong grounds for hoping the petition would be granted."

In the midst of what might quite naturally discourage, Miss Belle H. Mix, corresponding secretary of Iowa, writes: "Though the suffrage bill has been defeated and the prohibitory law seems doomed, we hope to secure the passage of the 'age of consent' bill." Bravo! who can fail to admire such courage?

Mrs. M. C. Woody, president North Carolina, writes with such cheer it seems like hearing her voice. They are hard times workers down there, sure to be good. Though severe duties in connection with Guilford College rest upon the president, she conducts much official correspondence and plans the appointments of the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. V. Tomlinson, who is also organizer, and has been in the field nearly four months, visiting and speaking in towns, villages, school-houses and churches.

An admirable and unique leaflet has been issued by Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, National superintendent of parlor meetings, so full of suggestions that a union could hardly make a failure of such a meeting after reading it.

We extend congratulations to Mrs. Mattie Lee Spencer, president Alabama W. C. T. U., in the success which has attended the Mercy Home at Birmingham, of which she is president of the Board of Managers. The one sentence of her annual report which impressed us, and we are sure will interest the superintendent of the National department of securing homes for homeless children, Mrs. Margaret T. W. Merrill, was, "I have not found a single record where so many children have been placed in Christian homes and legally adopted."

Mary A. Woodbridge.

Treasurer's Corner.

Here I am back again in my accustomed corner, rested and refreshed, ready for the work of looking after the financial interests of our National W. C. T. U. I am glad to find that New York has sent us an installment of her dues and also Illinois. Ohio sends dues each month.

Our faithful superintendents are in need of the appropriation promised them for their work, and it does not seem right that they must wait until the last three months of the year before they can have for the use of their departments the very modest allowance given them by the National. Some of them have had nothing and some of them only a small portion so far, and when we remember that the year is nearly half gone, we must all feel that there is great need of promptness in forwarding dues.

The view given me of the field in my short trip was very cheering. Rochester, N. Y., held a Neal Dow meeting in which all temperance societies united, giving us a splendid audience. An original ode was sung to the tune of "Auld Lang-Syne." Geneva arranged for a large parlor meeting, as also did Attica, and were cheered by the addition of new members. Evening meetings largely attended.

Miss Manning, county president, is the right woman in the right place. She is strong and able and is in favor with all the people. Gainesville is one of her unions. The ladies held a parlor meeting with Mrs. Bell, whose husband is a staunch helper of our cause and of the women as well. New members were also added to this union and a large and enthusiastic evening meeting followed. Mrs. Dr. Dutton is the honored president. Wyoming is full of good women. Mrs. Keith, president, is fearless and courageous. Mr. and Mrs. Moore gave me a pleasant, quiet home during my stay. A union meeting of all the churches packed the church Sunday evening and we had a good time and trust good will result.

Miss Eva Osburn, the president of Port Byron, is ever awake, and she is ably supported by her father and mother as well as her women, and of course a good meeting was the result.

Marion W. C. T. U. is holding on its good way, and Miss Sanford is a faithful adjutant upon whom falls much responsibility in the temporary absence of the president.

At Oberlin I met an old school girl friend, Mrs. Amelia S. Wilkinson, from whom I had been separated for twenty years. I had the pleasure of speaking in the Second Congregational church to an intelligent audience. It was a pleasure to meet the scholarly people of this college town. Mrs. Holton has a good corps of workers.

At Mansfield, O., a most wonderful revival has brought several hundred young people into the different churches, and the ladies are hoping to round up the work by securing Mr. Woolley for a series of gospel temperance meetings, that shall preëmpt these young lives for temperance work. Here I was entertained in the historic home of Miss Susan Sturges. Her father was one of the stalwarts in the abolition reform, and she has inherited some of his courage and faith for the later abolition struggle. A magnificent audience greeted us in the First Congregational church Sunday evening, and the pastor, Dr. Hubbell, spoke earnest words of sympathy with our work I was glad to dine with our own Mrs. Leiter and her good husband, who seconds her in her work.

At Kendallville I found a pleasant home with Mr. and Mrs. Masey. He is the mayor of the city, and a genial, Christian gentleman. His wife has established a mission in a poor part of the city, and conducts the services every Sabbath. Many have been converted through her efforts. She is an active W. C. T. U. woman, and is interested in every good work. Mrs. Shulze, president, had worked up a good meeting, assisted by the county president, Miss McConnell, and others. This is a delightful town, full of good people. The work all along the line is encouraging.

Helen M. Barker.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

A POWERFUL and the ONLY KNOWN Solvent of STONE IN THE BLADDER.

The following plate is from a photograph which forms a part of a communication of Dr. George H. Pierce, of Danbury, Conn., to the New England Medical Monthly for Nov. 1890 (see page 76 of that journal), and represents some of the largest specimens of

Two Ounces and Twenty-seven Grains of Dissolved Stone from a patient under the action of Buffalo Lithia Water. Smaller particles, and a quantity of Brickdust deposit, Dr Pierce states, were not estimated.

Dr. Cyrus Edson,
Commissioner of Health, New York City, and President of the Board of Pharmacy.

"I have frequently made use of

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

in my practice, with excellent results. It is a potent remedy for correcting Rheumatic Diathesis. In a case of uric acid gravel, in which I recently prescribed it, its beneficial effects were apparent after the third dose. I have also prescribed it with great benefit in Bright's Disease of the Kidneys."

This Water has proved not less efficacious in BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS, GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM, NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA, NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, &c.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent to any address.

THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor,
Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

ROBERT STEVENSON & CO.,
WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS,
92 & 94 LAKE ST., - CHICAGO, ILL.
GENERAL AGENTS.

DONGOLA, SOLID LEATHER, PERFECT-FITTING.

This shoe is controlled by us exclusively and cannot be obtained elsewhere. It is worth Three Dollars and far superior to the unreliable Shoes often sold by mail. Sizes, 1 to 8, Common-Sense or Opera Toe, and Opera with Patent Leather Tips; widths C, D, E, EE. We guarantee the shoe and will refund the money to any one who for any reason is dissatisfied. We can point, however, to thousands who stay by us because we do just as we agree. Sent express prepaid for $1.47. Let us send you "Shoe Facts," Free. You will find us and the shoe at 1096 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

MOOAR BROTHERS.

Alaska Stove Lifter,
NICKEL PLATED.

ALWAYS COLD, even if left in Stove Lid.

Sold by all Stove and Hardware Dealers and House Furnishers, or sent by mail, postpaid, for 30 CENTS.

TROY NICKEL WORKS, TROY, N. Y.

STUDY LAW AT HOME. Take a Course in the SPRAGUE Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.) Send 10c. stamps for particulars to J. Cotner, Jr., Sec'y, DETROIT, MICH. No. 22 Telephone Bdg.

Publisher's Notes.

A GREAT MOTHER.

There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to the forthcoming volume—"A Great Mother."

It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession, but not often do we find those who are willing to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose.

Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions.

This book, written by her great daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset, will be handsomely illustrated, and will not only contain a full account of Madam Willard's interesting life, but will present her invaluable ideas upon the bringing up of children; give many of her wise sayings, and record the helpful incidents of a household in which she was ever the central feature.

There could be no more beautiful object lesson on the secret of "growing old gracefully" than that presented by this volume. The marvelous chapter entitled "A Great Sunset," which shows this woman of nearly ninety as she crossed into the beyond, must rob death of its terrors, and irradiate the darkness of the tomb.

OUR PHILANTHROPY FUND.

We have received a donation to our Philanthropy Fund and the paper will be sent to the struggling president of a poor union in a country place who writes as follows: "It is with great pain I write you to stop my paper. It is utterly impossible for me to pay for it. For four years I have taken in washing for the men on a large farm to get the means to pay for it but the owners have sold out and gone, and there is no other way for me to do only to stop it, as I cannot run in debt for it though I do not know how I can really get along without it."

ADDITIONS TO OUR PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Mrs. M. A. Thomas, La Grange, Mo..	$ 75
Mrs. Mary H. Fenner, Lewiston, Me...	1.00
Mrs. Clara Edgar, St. Louis, Mo.....	1.00
Mrs. H. R. Antes, Rocky Ford, Col....	50
W. C. T. U., Deer Lodge, Tenn.....	50
Mrs. F. K. Taylor, Oneonta, N. Y.....	1.00
G. W. Wilson, Atlanta, Ga.....	1.00
Mrs. M. S. McGifferts, Mechanicsville, N. Y.....	1.00
Mrs. W. E. Dwight, Melrose, Mass....	1.00
Abbie R. Keach, Olneyville, R. I.....	1.00
S. A. Titus, Philadelphia, Pa.....	1.00
Mrs. C. D. Grannis, Manistee, Mich...	35
———, Douglass, Kans.....	1.00
H. W. Spaulding, Montreal, Canada...	20
Mrs. N. B. Johnson, Milford, Mass.....	1.00
Rev. R. F. Alger, Readsboro, Vt.....	1.00
Mary M. Slack, Taylor, N. Dak.....	1.00
W. C. T. U., Conway, Mass.....	2.70
Thos. Boardman, E. Boston, Mass....	1.00
C. Allen, Middleport, N. Y.....	55

THE GOOD WORK GOES ON.

One noble worker whom the Philanthropy Fund enables this week to put on the subscription list is the wife of a Methodist minister who has been laid aside by ill health.

Another who will welcome THE SIGNAL this week is a young lady seventeen years old, a cripple who can only walk with crutches, but her life is one of constant self-sacrifice and work for others.

A needy woman, who has three children, and so poor and in such ill health she has to be denied all the luxuries of life, will, this week, have the luxury of THE SIGNAL.

FROM OUR BOYS.

I received the watch safely March 20, and was very much pleased to get it. I am satisfied with my watch and hope the new subscribers will be as much benefited by their papers as I feel that I am by my watch.

Yours for temperance, R. A. S.

OUR WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

What do you think of it? The orders in every mail answer the question. Write to us for terms for one hundred copies and make some money for your unions.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

Missouri—Empire Prairie: W. C. T. U., $5.

Pennsylvania—Philadelphia: Mrs. H. Bently, $8; New Garden: W. C. T. U., $2; Herdersonville: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; A Pennsylvania Friend, $5; Moscow: W. C. T. U., $10; Hartstown: Sarah A. McEntire, $4; Venango county: W. C. T. U., $33.35; Dayton, W. C. T. U., $18; Birmingham, W. C. T. U., $5.80; Connellsville, W. C. T. U., $2.10; Rogersford: W. C. T. U., $100; Sterrett: W. C. T. U., $100; Mehoopany: W. C. T. U., $16.67; Verona: W. C. T. U., $2.40; Philadelphia: Mrs. Dora B. Turner, $2.10.

Rhode Island—Portsmouth: W. C. T. U., $34.93; Providence: Mrs. W. G. Cogswell, $2.50.

Tennessee—East Nashville: W. C. T. U., $18.95.

Texas—Waco: W. C. T. U., $1.40; Ft. Worth, $9.20.

Utah—Salt Lake City: Mrs. G. S. Peyton, $5.

Vermont—Rupert: W. C. T. U., $12.67; Montpelier: Amy B. Fisk, $3.65; Woodstock: W. C. T. U., $1.75; Westminster: Mary L. Garmon, $3.65.

Virginia—Charlotteville: L. T. L., $2.88; W. C. T. U., $2.50; W. C. T. U., of Virginia: per A. S. Miley, $2.

Wisconsin—North Johnstown: W. C. T. U., $20; Sharon: W. C. T. U., $20; Madison: A Friend, $1; Lake Geneva: W. C. T. U., $3.30; Windsor: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Lodi: W. C. T. U., $40.40; Stockbridge: Miss S. B. McHenna, $1; L. A. Millar, $1; Eau Claire: Mrs. I. Cobban, $1; Delavan; W. C. T. U., $1.20; Kenosha: Miss Emily A. Hart, $4; Whitewater: Mary B. Blackman, $5; Iola: Miss Carrie Mead, 25 cents.

Washington—Walla Walla: W. C. T. U., $3.75.

Foreign—British: Unknown, $9.68; Wellington, New Zealand: Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson and Miss Wilkinson, $4.87; Ontario: Niagara Falls South: A friend, $5; South Africa: Y. W. C. T. U., $26.95.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
Financial Secretary.

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Miss Alice Briggs, The Temple, Chicago, for the regular form, and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Briggs. Use separate blanks for men and women.

THE lives of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset have been translated into Dutch by the Rev. Adama Van Scheltema, of Arnheim, Holland, and published in Leyden.

THE vice-president of the Danish W. C. T. U. writes to make a correction as follows: "In the Convention number of THE UNION SIGNAL I find the statement that the largest temperance society of the continent is that of the Croix Bleue, that numbers only ten thousand members. Meantime this is a mistake. I do not know the numbers of other countries, but among the Danish temperance organizations there is one, 'Temperance union of Denmark,' that has thirty-eight thousand members, and I suppose that both Norway and Sweden have still larger organizations."

Our Library Table.

ARE THERE CORRUPTIONS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT? One of H. L. Hastings' crisp little publications that by their dear and reasonable courageousness are doing so much for orthodox Christianity. Published at the Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston.

THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF POLITICS, now well on in its fourth volume, presents each month a series of articles touching upon various political phases of American life. The April issue is particularly instructive. Andrew J. Palm & Co., 114 Nassau street, New York City.

SOME THINGS THAT CHILDREN SHOULD KNOW. Suggestions for Mothers and Teachers. By Blanche L. Delaplaine. A most helpful pamphlet, pure and sweet from cover to cover, and dwelling helpfully on a question that needs a broad light of righteous intelligence. Charles H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 175 Dearborn St., Chicago.

The ANNUAL BUDGET, issued by the National W. C. T. U. department of scientific temperance instruction, superintendent, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 23 Trull street, Boston. This budget consists of "the Co-Worker's Letter for 1894 for the local superintendent, A Brief Report of the work of scientific temperance in the public schools for last year, 1893, a sample of the Monthly Advices, with circular concerning the same, and a personal letter to every local Woman's Christian Temperance Union President." Unions should make a special effort to secure and scatter these leaflets far and wide.

POMPEII, THE CITY OF DOOM. A poem by Benj. F. Leggett. Vigorous and poetically beautiful. Published by the author, Ward, Delaware Co., Pa.

LIVING THOUGH ONCE DEAD. A beautiful Easter sermonette, by Edward W. Gilman, D. D., corresponding secretary of the American Bible Society. Published by Thomas Whittaker, New York City.

HARRISBURG TELEGRAM FLAG BOOK. A handsome little publication containing beautifully engraved flags of all the principal nations of the earth, the designs and colors exact reproductions of the emblems of the various countries they represent. Published by the Harrisburg Telegram, Harrisburg, Pa.

BRIGHT LIGHT, is the suggestive title of a new singing book for Sunday-schools and young people's meetings. It is compiled by Mr. S. W. Straub, whose name is a familiar one in this connection. The book contains bright tunes accompanied by inspiring words, and recommends itself to those looking for "something new."

Published by S. W. Straub & Co., Chicago, Ill.

FAMOUS ADVENTURES AND PRISON ESCAPES OF THE CIVIL WAR. This publication of the Century Company, New York, contains the war diary of a Union woman in the South, edited by Geo. W. Cable, and a series of war stories by various authors, making in all a three hundred page volume of much interest. Among the narrations are the famous "Locomotive Chase in Georgia," and "Colonel Rose's Tunnel at Libby Prison." A book of especial attraction for boys and young men.

INJURIOUS INSECTS AND THE USE OF INSECTICIDES. By Frank W. Lempers, director of the Fordhook Chemical Laboratory. Published by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia. This must prove a prize to farmers and gardeners, as its information is scientifically reliable and practical. The illustrations, of which there are one hundred and eighty-five, are valuable because of their accurate life-likeness. The text of the book is prepared for unprofessional readers and the ravaging army of insects may prepare to give way before the intelligent onslaughts of man. From the same publisher is a dainty little volume entitled ALL ABOUT SWEET PEAS. The title tells the whole story—all about sweet peas, their cultivation and varieties. Beautifully illustrated.

(Continued on page 14.)

Model 36
Columbia
Price, $125.

The New Century Columbia stands easily at the head of all fully equipped roadsters, and will successfully maintain the high reputation its predecessors have established. Full details concerning its new features in the Columbia catalogue, which is a beautiful book and full of interest. Free upon application at any Columbia agency, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston. New York. Chicago. Hartford.

OUR NEW 1894 FLOWER SEED OFFER.

A Magnificent Collection of FLOWER SEEDS 200 Varieties, FREE!

An Unparalleled Offer by an Old and Reliable Publishing House! THE LADIES' WORLD is a large 20-page, 80-column illustrated Magazine for ladies and the family circle. It is devoted to stories, poems, ladies' fancy work, home decoration, housekeeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc. To introduce this charming ladies' paper into 100,000 homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following colossal offer: Upon receipt of only 12 Cents in silver or stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months and to each subscriber we will also send Free and postpaid, a large and magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, 200 varieties, including Pansies, Verbenas, Chrysanthemums, Asters, Phlox Drummondii, Balsam, Cypress Vine, Stocks, Digitalis, Double Zinnia, Pinks, etc., etc. Remember twelve cents pays for the magazine three months and this entire magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, put up by a first-class Seed House and warranted fresh and reliable. No lady can afford to miss this wonderful opportunity. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of both seeds and Magazine if you are not satisfied. Do not confound this offer with the catchpenny schemes of unscrupulous persons. Write to-day. Don't put it off! Six subscriptions and six Seed Collections sent for 60 cents.

SPECIAL OFFER! To any lady sending us 12 cents for above offer, and naming the paper in which she saw this advertisement, we will send free, in addition to all the above, one packet of the celebrated Marguerite Carnation (half-dwarf variety), the only Carnation that will bloom from seed the first season. It produces in great abundance, large, exquisitely fragrant flowers of the most brilliant hues, in the various shades of white, red, pink and variegated, fully 80 per cent. being double. Plants begin to bloom in four months after planting, and continue in great profusion until frost comes. This packet of seeds is alone worth the price charged for the entire combination.

ANOTHER GREAT OFFER! Upon receipt of Thirty-five Cents (our regular subscription price) we will send The Ladies' World for One Year, together with our magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds above described, likewise one packet of the extensively advertised and popular Marguerite Carnation. Address:
S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

World's Fair Highest Awards
Medal and Diploma on our INCUBATOR and BROODER Combined.

"Old Reliable" Leads them all.
If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for our 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address
Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co. Quincy, Ill.
45 yards High Class Fowls.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits.
FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair.
OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

You Dye in 30 minutes Turkey red on cotton that won't freeze, boil or wash out. No other will do it. Package to color 2 lbs., by mail, 10 cts.; 6, any color—for wool or cotton, 40c. Big pay Agents. Write quick. Mention this paper. FRENCH DYE CO. Vassar, Mich

DON'T BE CHEATED!
ALL GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS
Have Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose Supporters

GRANULA
"The Perfect Health Food."

ORIGINATED by the famous Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of America's leading Health Institution, over 30 years ago. It is a scientifically prepared and twice-cooked food containing all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley Winter Wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and thoroughly assimilated by the entire body. IT IS A REMARKABLE REMEDY for certain diseases, and if regularly and persistently used will not fail to remove

DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION AND CONSTIPATION.

Granula should be eaten daily by children, as it builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities. Granula is sold under a registered trade mark and manufactured solely by OUR HOME GRANULA MFG. CO., Box 100, Dansville, N. Y.
Trial Box 25 cts. Book of Recipes and Descriptive Pamphlet FREE.

The Genuine
De Long Patent
Hook and Eye has on the face and back of every card
the words:
See that
hump?
TRADE-MARK REG. APR. 19-92.
Richardson
& De Long Bros.
Philadelphia.

A Special Offer

An advantageous arrangement, just made, enables us to present the most acceptable premium offer ever made. It is this: For one coupon (printed below) and 35 cents in stamps or silver, we will send by mail, postpaid, a copy of THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

The publishers' price of the book is $1.

COUPON

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with 35 cents in stamps or silver, is good for one copy of the

WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK

Free by mail to any address in Postal Union

A Collection of One Thousand Original and Revised Recipes and Suggestions. Edited by Kathryn Armstrong. A handsome, compact volume of 320 pages, including 40 blank pages for additional recipes.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

...THE...

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West.

Cut this advertisement out and send with 25 cents to

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple.
Chicago, Ill.

(Library Table continued from page 13.)

Milk and Meat. Twenty-four sermons by A. C. Dixon, pastor of the Hanson Place Baptist church, Brooklyn, New York.

The sermons are characterized by their simple directness. "Milk" indeed they are, and "meat"—the great truths of spiritual and eternal life being uttered so that babes in Christ may read and learn, while the strong man may gain fresh inspiration from their perusal. They are dedicated "To all who love the Lord Jesus Christ and His Book," and are broad and non-sectarian.

The Baker & Taylor Co., 740 and 742 Broadway, New York City.

Sub-Cœlum. A Sky-Built Human World. By A. P. Russell, author of "A Club of One," "Library Notes," etc.

An attractively written description of an ideal people and the felicitous working out of their ideals. The author has taken as a foil to the better showing of his sky-built world, the follies, frailties and foibles of a people, said to have existed, and who very closely resemble, those of the Year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four. The contrast is sharp and in some directions the reader thinks he, himself, sees in to-day a promise of some such bright realizations as blessed the Sub-Cœlum-ites. Mr. Russell is exhaustive and leaves no phase of life untouched—education, professions, habits of the physical life, politics, religion, morals, woman's status, dress—in fact he revolutionizes man and his environments. Some of his ideas are, to say the least, original and amusing, if not suggestive. He redeems the product of the grape from the anathema pronounced upon it to-day: "Everybody drank wine," he says, "as he did water, or milk, for refreshment and nourishment. . . As great pains were taken to keep it pure, it was found to be healthful. Drunkenness from wine-drinking was unknown. It was from distillation that the mischief came. Fortunately, the strong liquor was little used. Public opinion was against it. Reputation was affected by its free use. Drunkenness was treated as a disease. . . A man drunk was odious. . . Societies were not formed to exterminate the drunkard, nor to make a pet of him. He was held responsible till officially declared otherwise. Drunkenness was attacked as a moral disease, not to be cured by salves nor embrocations," etc. Drunkenness was made a ground for divorce in this beautiful land, and "licenses to marry were not granted without inquiry as to the habits of applicants and their progenitors."

Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

Professor Terry, of the Northwestern University, Chicago, has written an analysis of the Song of Songs, namely, Solomon's, which he aptly calls an "inspired melodrama." It is by a long way the best setting forth of a subdivision of the Good Book which has always been a mystery to most people. The fanciful analogies that have been drawn from it between Christ and the church have often been most misleading and productive of incalculable harm. Dr. Terry thinks that this poem was very probably written by a woman. He says "who more fitting than a gifted female poet like the prophetess who dwelt of old under the palm tree to celebrate the pure unwavering love of a woman's heart? As the book of Job exhibits in poetic form the trials and triumph of a true man, so the Song of Songs extols the virtue and unchanging affection of a pure woman when put to the severest test." Instead of having been written by Solomon, this Song is in the estimation of the present translator the work of one whom that many-wived king had brought away from her betrothed lover and added to his harem. It was left for this age of woman's rehabilitation to put a common sense interpretation on this famous of all songs, for the beautiful loyalty of this woman to her lover compares with the best that we know of womanly character. The cry of her heart is to return to him, and he is represented as seeking her while Solomon, in vain, endeavors to reconcile the captive to him and his palace. Dr. Terry says:—"A diligent study of this beautiful song admonishes us that we should not come to the perusal of the Holy Scriptures with a priori opinions about what they ought or ought not to contain, nor are we at liberty to assume on dogmatic grounds any theory of divine inspiration which interferes with the free investigation of the Biblical writings." Every woman who reads this delightful monograph will thank Professor Terry for the scholarly and large-minded view that he has taken of a difficult piece of writing and one which in former times did not redound to the credit of the mother sex as a modern woman would wish it to have done. It is needless to add that Professor Terry is a devout Christian as well as one of the best Hebrew scholars in the United States.

Published by Hunt & Eaton, New York City.

RUBIFOAM
Removes all uncleanliness from the teeth, prevents decay, is deliciously flavored, free from acid. The friend of men, women, and children.
Sample vial free. E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price 25 cents.
A Perfect Liquid Dentifrice

A Great Mother

The ably written and delightfully interesting Biography of

...MADAM WILLARD...

will soon issue from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

Handsomely Bound. Profusely Illustrated.

PRICE $1.50.

Send orders for "A Great Mother" to

...Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n...
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

Part II Now Ready

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents, and we will send you Part II.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART II

Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

PART II CONTAINS

FRONTISPIECE: Full-length Picture of MATILDA B. CARSE

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS,
MRS. LETITIA YOUMANS,
COL. GEORGE W. BAIN,
DR. KATE C. BUSHNELL,
MISS JESSIE A. ACKERMANN,
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER,
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN,
MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER,
MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS,
MRS. ELIZABETH W. ANDREW,
MISS ALICE R. PALMER.
GENERAL JOHN BIDWELL.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

FREE!

DEAF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

MAIZE, KAS., Jan. 28, '94.

For many years I suffered from catarrh of the head and throat, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not understand conversation at all. Could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing had ever given me the slightest relief. Last summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatment, and had not used it three weeks until my hearing began to improve, and has steadily improved ever since, and now I can hear common conversation across a room without difficulty; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away, with the door closed, and I think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. I urge all who are afflicted as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment.

EDWIN COLEMAN.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment, and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send (by express) Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address,

J. H. MOORE, M. D., Cincinnati, O.

HARTFORDS.

Our CATALOGUE

will explain in detail the design and special points of these Bicycles. Our Agents will be pleased to show them to you.

Everyone who rides can be suited. Examine them before you decide what to buy.

CATALOGUE SENT FREE.

THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO.,

Hartford, Conn.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE, 2819 OLIVE ST., ST. LO., MO.

1894 HIGH GRADE BICYCLES Shipped C. O. D.

Anywhere to anyone | $25 Bicycle for $12.50
All styles and prices. | $75 " $37.50
Save dealer's profits | $125 " $62.50
Send for large illustrated Catalogue Free

ARLINGTON

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., B 49, Chicago, Ill.

DRESS REFORM.

Are YOU interested? If so, send for my free illustrated pamphlet, "DRESS." Address

Mrs. S. W. Pike, Central Music Hall, Chicago

TRIAL FREE.

$2.75 Buys our $9 Natural Finish Baby Carriage complete with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, and one piece steam bent handle. Made of best material, finely finished, reliable, and guaranteed for 5 years. Shipped on 10 days' trial. FREIGHT PAID; no money required in advance. 75,000 in use. We are the oldest and best known concern of our kind, reliable and responsible. Reference furnished at any time. Make and sell nothing but what we guarantee to be as represented, sold at the lowest factory prices. WRITE TO-DAY for our large FREE illustrated catalogue of latest designs and styles published.

OXFORD MFG. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

RAPID Fountain Pen (16 kt. Gold) makes writing a pleasure. Old Fountain Pens taken in Exchange. Agents wanted. Circ. free. RAPID PEN FACTORY, Washington, D.C.

$12 TO $35 a week can be made working for us. Parties preferred who can furnish a horse and travel through the country; a team, though, is not necessary. A few vacancies in towns and cities. Men and women of good character will find this an exceptional opportunity for profitable employment. Spare hours may be used to good advantage. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 11th and Main Sts., Richmond, Va.

CANCER Its cure by scientific local treatment. 20 Years Experience. Book Free. Drs. McLeish and Weber, 123 John Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS.

Short, Spicy, Strong.

Just what you need in your department work, and only fifteen cents per 100. $1.25 per 1,000.

Order at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OUR DAY.

The Free Methodist has the following appreciative notice of Our Day: "As a record and review of current reform Our Day has no peer. It is preëminent in its class. Its editorial notes are masterly and scholarly."

Our Day is now issued as a Bi-Monthly at $1 per year, which places it within the reach of all.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

At the suggestion of a few prominent white-ribboners living far from Chicago, and therefore unable personally to attend to various matters of business importance in this city, we have concluded to open a Shopping and Commission Department, not as a branch of our regular business, but as an accommodation to the many friends who desire to entrust shopping and other outside business to reliable parties. We have secured an experienced and responsible lady who has resided in Chicago many years, and is familiar with our largest houses in every branch of business, a woman of keen insight, good judgment, excellent taste and an economical buyer.

We have endeavored faithfully to execute all commissions entrusted to us in the past, but as it necessarily interferes with our legitimate business, we have concluded this new arrangement, which will, we believe, give eminent satisfaction.

In many cases no commission whatever will be charged; in others requiring expenditure of extra time and money, it will be necessary to charge a proportionate commission.

Inquiries, orders, etc., must be addressed SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPARTMENT, and a stamp inclosed to insure prompt reply. If you have business with the Association kindly address all letters Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. If you wish other business transacted, shopping or commissions of any nature, address

SHOPPING AND COMMISSION DEPT.,
Care of WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"For Our Little Folks."

No. 1. HOW DID YOU KNOW?
2. SPOILED BRAINS.
3. TELEGRAPH LINES.
4. SOME MESSAGES.
5. SOME MORE MESSAGES.
6. NERVE THREADS ASLEEP.
7. AN EXPERIMENT.

PRICE.

Per 1,000, postpaid, - - $1.00
" 100, " - - - .15

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

PICTURE LEAFLETS.

This is notably the age of pictures, and we have yielded to the acknowledged demand, and provided for the young people Picture Leaflets.

Series of Eight.

Per 1,000, postpaid, - - - $1.00
" 100, " - - - .15

Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TWO NEW Y LEAFLETS.

WHAT IS YOUR VALUE? By Mrs. O. W. Scott, and

INASMUCH. By Miss Ida C. Clothier.

Both invaluable.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

JUST ISSUED.

Four New National Leaflets.
Two New Y National Leaflets.

THE STORY OF THE CRUSADE.
THE SPIRIT OF THE CRUSADE.
THE CHILD OF THE CRUSADE.
AFTER TWENTY YEARS.
INASMUCH, and
WHAT IS YOUR VALUE?

Each Invaluable.
Try Them.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Portrait of a Lady who has cleaned house all day without Pearline—and she's had a lively time of it.

There's another day just like it coming to-morrow—and more afterwards. Now, see the difference. With Pearline, all this hard work would be easy; through in half the time; nobody disturbed by it. Pearline cleans, without the least harm, everything that water doesn't hurt. You won't have your paint streaked and rubbed off or your marble discolored or your temper ruffled or—well, Pearline banishes more of the ills attending house-cleaning than anything else known—just as good for washing clothes. 409

The special feature of the April number of the Chicago Magazine of Current Topics is the 35-page article of H. W. Taylor on the race question in the United States, under the very pertinent title, "The Case of the Cracker." This stirring article reveals what has been only half suspected, that the result of the civil war and emancipation of the negro has by no means settled the negro question in the United States. This article should be read by every thinking American citizen, white or black. Single copy. 15 cts.; $1.50 a year.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Current Topics, 1 year $1.75.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OUR PORTFOLIO OF PHOTOGRAPHS....

The contents of Series No. 6 is as follows: The Bourse (or Exchange), Paris; "Old Father Nile," Vatican, Rome; Haddon Hall, England; The Bourse, Brussels; Harbor of Hamburg, Germany; The Tower of London; Sistine Chapel, Vatican, Rome; Geneva, Switzerland; The Forum, Pompeii; Abbotsford, Scotland; The Mahmudiyah Canal, Egypt; Volksgarten and Theseum, Vienna; Constantinople and the Bosphorus, Turkey; The Ponte Vecchio, Florence, Italy; Adobe Houses, New Mexico; Cliff House and Seal Rocks, Golden Gate, California.

Cut out the coupon printed below, and bring or send it to our office with five two-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to pay the cost of mailing, wrapping, etc., and we will send you series No. 6.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.
ART SERIES NO. 6.
COUPON.

Send Coupon, together with five 2-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to our office, and you will receive our Portfolio of Photographs, No. 6.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

If you have missed any of the previous issues you can obtain them by remitting 25c. By our admirable plan they practically cost nothing. READ IT FOR YOURSELF.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D.

Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalog, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 26, Chicago, Ill.

$18.50 Carriage for	$9.25.
$12.00 " "	$5.95.
$5.00 " "	$2.75.

What Advertising Will Do.

We are in receipt of information from Alfred Peats, the wall paper merchant (whose advertisement appears elsewhere in this issue), stating that he sold, direct to consumers, in the year 1893, over 2,500,000 rolls of wall paper. This is an amount, which to the ordinary reader, seems almost incredible. If placed end to end these rolls would make a continuous strip 11,000 miles long, or enough paper to encircle the whole of the United States. It would paper the walls of over 200,000 rooms,—and was shipped to every state and territory in the United States.

This success is the result of two business principles, first, "advertise judiciously," and second, "live up to your advertisements." Upon receipt of 10c. to pay postage this house will send samples of new, artistic, yet inexpensive wall paper to any address, and accompany them with a pamphlet on economy in home decoration and full instructions how to hang paper. Their prices are about what the local dealer has to pay at wholesale, and their patterns are always of the latest style.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

Nothing so beautifies your house as a pretty paper on the wall and ceiling.

Startling Shoe Facts.

Every reader of our paper has to wear shoes, and we are often annoyed because our shoes do not wear as well as we expected, perplexing us when we have to make a new purchase, for we wonder if the new shoe dealer will sell us a good wearing pair of shoes. If any of our readers are perplexed in this way, we urge them to try Messrs. Moar Bros., Boston, Mass., whose advertisement you will see in this issue. They make a specialty of fine, good "Footwear," their prices are reasonable; they guarantee to refund money, if not satisfied; they have five large stores in Boston, having been established since 1870; they give everybody the same chance to buy shoes at the same prices as people living in Boston; you take no risk in ordering. Send for their finely illustrated catalogue, and try their shoes for once.

Commendatory.

Dr. J. H. Moore, of Cincinnati, has be[illegible] using the columns of our paper for several month[illegible] lvertising his wonderful remedy for treatment [illegible] CATARRH, Deafness, Bronchitis and Consump[illegible] in their varied forms.

In order that our readers may not be dupe[illegible] by a "quack," we have to say that, after a personal [illegible] vestigation of Dr. Moore's treatment, we cheerfully recommend the same to all who are suffering from the ailments mentioned above. We are satisfied that he can accomplish much good, if his full directions are followed.

Dr. Moore is a Christian man, and an earnest temperance advocate and worker.

If you are a sufferer, read his advertisement on first column of this page, and write him at once.

A BOON TO EVERY WOMAN.

What "Josiah Allen's Wife" Says About Tokology.

"When I opened the book and saw the strong, sweet face of its writer, I knew I should find nothing but good in its pages. It is written with delicacy, bravery and wisdom. I wish every woman in the land could read it."

TOKOLOGY is a complete ladies' guide to health and disease. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D., practitioner over twenty-five years. Prepaid $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 277 Madison St., Chicago.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS.

A correspondent writes: "I have just finished reading 'Nineteen Beautiful Years,' and it has inspired me to a higher life. I do not see how any one can read of so pure a character without letting it touch his life."

"Nineteen Beautiful Years" is the story of the life of Mary E. Willard, most tenderly and touchingly told by her sister, Miss Frances Willard.

Price, cloth, 75.; paper, 10c.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Signal Notes.

THE Lutheran church of Sweden sent one hundred missionaries to China alone, last year.

MORE beer is drunk in Munich than in any other city in the world, the average being a quart and a half daily per head of the population.

IT is stated that one thousand, five hundred and thirty-nine liquor shops are owned by one hundred and seventy-two members of the House of Lords.

A SCHOOL of design modeled after the very successful one in New York, is to be established in England. It helps to give remunerative employment to women of ability.

CHRISTIANIZING a race is by far the cheapest and most effective way to civilize a race. The once ferocious Fiji islanders sent over twenty thousand dollars last year toward missionary work in other lands.

AN English physician says that in his treatment of two hundred cases of scarlet fever without alcohol there was a mortality of two per cent as against the six per cent in hospitals where alcohol is prescribed.

NEW openings (!) for women are constantly being made. One of the latest reads as follows: "Will any lady near Oxford Square, Hyde Park, take a little dog for daily walks during the owner's absence from town? State terms."

THE amount of money spent by European nations on their armies and navies becomes still more significant when it is known that the money is usually borrowed! Between 1870 and 1887 the national debt of France increased £480,000,000.

ONE peculiar feature of Salvation Army literature is that there are no outside advertisements in any book or paper. An able English journalist has said, "It is easy to sneer at the War-Crys, but as a rough-and-ready school of journalism they have no rival."

A MINISTER of the Free Church of Scotland has withdrawn, and proposes to organize an independent church, and in reply to an inquiry said: "The conditions, so far as I see, will be personal conversion to Christ and total abstinence from strong drink—the curse of strong drink. A teetotal church, because a converted church."

ATTENTION is being given to the condition of feeble-minded children in England, and special provision is being made for them by the London school board, there being about ten thousand in London. The investigations prove that feeble-minded children are not confined to any one class and seem to be more numerous among the rich than the poor.

A MINISTER saw in a saloon window the sign "Rooms to Let. Houses to Let." Recognizing the wisdom of the saloon-keeper whose interest it was to lodge his customers or rent them houses near by, he decided that it was to the interest of the church to do the same. Acting upon the thought he rented two lodging houses where he can send the young men of his congregation and where there will be a home atmosphere. It is a business enterprise based on Christian principles.

PROF. A. STRUMPELL, who gave an address at the Nürnberg congress last September, on "The Alcohol Question from a Medical Point of View," directed his attention principally to the effects of so-called moderate beer drinking. He compared the action of small quantities of the alcohol in beer to the serious poisonous effects of small daily doses of lead. No symptom of the poisoning is manifest until the lapse of months or years, when suddenly some severe effect appears showing that the lead is an accumulative poison. Severe diseases of the liver, kidneys and nervous system, especially hypertrophy of the left ventricle of the heart, occur in persons who drink beer. Prof. Strümpell laid especial emphasis upon the importance of not allowing children take any form of alcoholic drink.

GOOD NEWS FOR ASTHMATICS.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is now in reach of sufferers from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free, by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases free by mail, to sufferers.

A Valuable Addition to the culinary list is Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, an absolutely pure, unsweetened condensed milk so carefully prepared that it keeps indefinitely and is always available for every recipe calling for milk or cream.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 % PURE

USED IN HOSPITALS.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

Silver Plate That Wears.

To be sure of getting the best, see that every article bears one of these trade-marks:

1847 ROGERS BROS. — On Spoons, Knives, Forks, etc.

MERIDEN BRITANNIA COMPANY — On all other articles except Spoons, Knives and Forks.

For sale by dealers everywhere.

Made by Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.

Beauty without neatness is a hook without a bait

FAIR WOMEN

should make their houses look fair with SAPOLIO

Try a cake in your next house-cleaning

COPYRIGHT

A SENSE OF DECENCY

Constrains many people to hide the dirt of their kitchens. They make the kitchen a secret chamber, into which it is forbidden to enter; but half the trouble which they take to hide the dirt and the disgrace which it entails, would keep the kitchen clean, and all its pots and pans bright as a dollar, that is, if they use

SAPOLIO

SECURITY HOSE SUPPORTER

LOOK AT THE CROOK

Not a stitch in the web
The hold of a vice
Not a tear—Not a cut

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

PIANOS

AT WHOLESALE.

—FROM— $150.

Agent's commission and dealer's profits saved. We are the largest manufacturers in the world, selling Organs and Pianos direct from the Factory to the home at strictly wholesale price. We will sell you a magnificent Upright Grand Piano, the regular retail price of which is $350, for $150. Credit given if desired. Every instrument warranted for ten years. Send for our grand illustrated Catalogue, showing the latest styles and giving wholesale prices on Organs and Pianos. Write to-day. We refer you to any bank in the U. S.

CORNISH & CO., [Established Nearly 30 Years.] Washington, New Jersey.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill.

LADY

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,

But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue. H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

CANCER permanently cured. No plaster. No knife. No poison. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

WE WANT YOU to distribute circulars, samples, etc., in your locality for our clients of big advertisers. $3 to $5 per thousand. CASH PAID. No canvassing. Enclose stamp. DISTRIBUTING BUREAU, P.O. Box 1925, New York City.

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc. List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

SELF THREADING Sewing Needles. Weak sighted or blind can thread them. Finest silver spring steel. One style threads on end, other on side. Sample paper of either kind by mail 10c., 2 for 15c., 5 for 25c., 12 for 60c. Money easily made selling them. C. E. MARSHALL, LOCKPORT, N. Y.

WOMEN WHO CAN CROCHET and have a few hours' spare time can get work to do AT HOME to occupy their spare time PROFITABLY. Address. L. WHITE & CO. 209 STATE ST., CHICAGO

$1.98 STEM WIND

CHAIN AND CHARM FREE STEM SET

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address, and we will send you this elegant watch by express for examination. You examine it and if you consider it a bargain pay the express agent our sample price, $1.98, and it is yours. Fine gold plate Chain and Charm FREE with each watch, also our written Guarantee for 5 years. Write to-day, this may not appear again. THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies —OR— Other Chemicals are used in the preparation of W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

ATTENTION BOYS!

FOR SIX NEW SUBSCRIBERS to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send this watch to your address, postpaid

FOR FOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS and Fifty Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS and Seventy-five Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

THIS OFFER IS

FOR BOYS ONLY

Boys who will thank us for this generous offer to own the best pocket time-piece ever made by any Clock Company. Extreme diameter of case 2¼ inches.

As soon as your mind is made up to secure one of these Watches, write to us. Address

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

BRIGHT, NEW AND SPARKLING!

Oak and Ivy Leaf

To be Enlarged and Improved.

New Departments.

Handsome Title Page, drawn by our own artist.

Oak and Ivy Leaf,

while maintaining its reputation as the World's and National Organ

OF THE

Y. W. C. T. Unions,

will furnish interesting and helpful reading for the Young Woman Reader in general. Subscribe now for this good paper.

Special Rates.

To July, 1895, including one year of new volume, one copy..... $ .50
To January, 1895, six months of new volume..... $ .25
For club rates address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 16.] CHICAGO, April 19, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Ursula D Herrick
1029 16th st
Den

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Civil war is reported from Apia, Samoa.

King Humbert of Italy in a recent interview declared himself in favor of peace.

The Brazilian volcano still gives signs of the internal unrest. Serious fighting is reported from Rio Grande do Sul.

Sioux City, Ia., women have joined in a social purity crusade, to close the variety theaters and disreputable houses.

A change of ministry has taken place in Newfoundland, caused by a charge of illegal expenditure on the part of the government.

A bill to give women school suffrage has passed the Ohio senate by a vote of 20 to 6, but awaits ratification by the lower house.

Another so-called "fireproof" building—the Davidson Theater at Milwaukee—was consumed last week, and nine firemen lost their lives.

While the United States Congress is spending months upon a tariff bill, other nations are quietly arranging their commercial relations by reciprocity treaties.

The United States government has been asked to protect the missionaries of the Protestant Episcopal church from the reported hostilities of the French in Liberia.

The dispatches announce a victory for British East African forces over a native chief in Uganda and the establishment of a British protectorate over that region.

The Des Moines, Ia., ministerial association has entered upon a campaign to oppose the return of the saloon under the mulct law, and will publish the names of saloon petitioners.

David Dudley Field, America's noted lawyer and writer on legal topics, died suddenly at his home in New York, April 13, aged eighty-nine. To his ability are due many notable reforms in legal codes.

Another excellent bill has been introduced by United States Senator Kyle. It provides that no one shall perform any labor or engage in any amusement on Sunday to the disturbance of others, and also prohibits the transportation of the mails on that day.

An important action has been taken by a Democratic caucus of the House of Representatives in the proposal of new rules to facilitate business. The first is to enforce the existing rule to fine members for absence without leave and the second authorizes the speaker through tellers, to count and record those present whether voting or not, thus making a quorum.

The Pollard-Breckinridge case, which has been on trial in Washington, D. C., for over five weeks, ended in a just verdict for the plaintiff, Saturday. The case has attracted wide attention on account of the great moral questions involved, and the verdict is an act in favor of an equal standard of purity for both sexes. At a meeting Saturday night prominent women's societies of Washington, including the W. C. T. U., prepared a memorial to Congress for the removal of the impure Congressman.

THE War Cry prophesies that it will yet be part of the duty of the Salvation Army to establish rescue homes for fallen men! We cry, all hail! to this prophet of a better dawning, and to the clear vision of that mighty force in the world's regeneration—the Salvation Army.

MAYOR KENNEDY, of Toronto, promptly declined the invitation to attend the recent anti-prohibition convention of liquor sellers, and informed the delegation who waited upon him that rather than bid such visitors welcome he would resign the mayoralty. Would that among the cities of our own nation a chief executive could be found who would do likewise.

IF one questions, as some often do, the genuineness of professed conversion among women who are technically termed "lost," we would refer to the young woman of Vancouver, Lizzie Hansel, rescued by the Salvation Army two years ago, who has since become a trained nurse in malignant diseases, and has voluntarily given up her life to the care of the Chinese lepers, isolated on an island in the Gulf of Georgia. There are, doubtless, countless women on the streets of our great cities to-day who have like possibilities for heroism, if only they could be reached with the glad tidings of the indwelling Christ.

LETTERS have been steadily pouring in to Neal Dow ever since his birthday. "One day he received sixty-eight from other countries," writes Mrs. Stevens, "and to-day sixty-two have come from far-off lands, among them one from Natal W. C. T. U. and one from the Bahama Islands." Upon his birthday he received one hundred telegrams, one hundred and twenty-two letters, and over three hundred callers. Nothing more surely demonstrates the growth of prohibition sentiment around the world than the numerous public and private testimonials to the life and work of this venerable man who in the truest sense has given his life to the cause.

THE Woman's Congress Auxiliary to the Midwinter Exposition will be held in Golden Gate Hall, April 30 to May 6 inclusive. The program embraces a wide range of subjects, classified under these heads: Education, Industry, Reform, Science, Local History, Philanthropy, Art, Literature and Religion. These subjects will be discussed, not as abstract sciences but from the standpoint of their relation to the women of the Pacific coast, the purpose of the congress being, as stated by its president, "to present the history of woman's development and progress on the coast." Like all similar movements looking toward concentration this gathering of leaders cannot fail to result in the strengthening and deepening of all interests which touch humanity.

A CALL has been issued by the various denominations of St. Louis for an alliance of all enemies of the saloon. A state convention is to be held at Sedalia, April 24, for the purpose of considering the best method of forming such alliance—the union to be brought about on a strictly non-partisan basis. We rejoice that the churches are taking the initiative in this anti-saloon movement, for while the rum power has no need to tremble so long as its opponents remain on a non-partisan basis, the disquieting feature of all such movements lies in the fact that all agitation of the liquor question by its real enemies must inevitably lead them sooner or later to realize that prohibitory law can never be satisfactory until it has a political party behind it.

A SOCIETY for the prevention of crime has been organized in Chicago after the plan of the Parkhurst movement in New York. Its object is to collect evidence and prosecute officials who protect disreputable houses and gambling places, to "assist the weak and helpless in obtaining the protection of the courts and of the laws regulating the sale of intoxicating drinks," and to arrange for the instruction of the public upon these topics. Dr. William G. Clarke, of the Campbell Park Presbyterian church, is president, and the board of directors consists of prominent Christian leaders of the city, among them Mrs. L. A. Hagans, representing the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Barker have accepted honorary membership. Mayor Hopkins and the chief of police have expressed their willingness to coöperate with the society, but are of the opinion that gambling places can never be entirely suppressed in a city as large as Chicago. The motto of the new society will undoubtedly be what that of the city authorities has not been,—"Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

A WONDERFUL Providence is opening the eyes of the church to see things as they are, to realize that its office is no longer to be only a breakwater against floods of unbelief but to unify and codify human law and the law of Christ. This is indicated by the fact that on the evening of April 10, John G. Woolley—the apostle to the church for Christian citizenship and Prohibition—was given enthusiastic welcome in New York City, in Rev. John Hall's church—"the very heart and essence of swelldom and conservatism," according to somebody's definition. Mr. Woolley delivered for an hour, and "not in dribblets," unadulterated "goods," and that great audience bore testimony to the always saving power of the truth by a unanimous invitation to "come again," and appointed a Sunday night later on.

THE refusal of Sir John Thompson to pledge the Canadian government to a consideration of the prohibition question either as a near or a remote possibility does not appear to have had the discouraging effect upon temperance people of the Dominion that our opponents would have us believe. True, the Premier sees fit to disregard the expressed will of the people in this matter, but those who desire a ministerial change—and their numbers are constantly increasing—see in this action, or rather non-action of Sir John's, a potent weapon in securing his political defeat. Four provinces by plebiscite, and one by unanimous vote of its legislature have demanded prohibition, and the government having refused to conform to popular sentiment in this matter, they will now appeal to Parliament, ninety per cent of whose members (barring the French section) represent prohibition constituencies. A resolution will come before the House this session calling for a division which shall place every member on record upon this question and serve as a guide for voters at the next election. Sir John and his anti-prohibition following are basing their hopes upon the principle that liquor men can always be relied upon when it comes to an election, while—pity 'tis, 'tis true—temperance men often "back down" at that point. May the prohibition voters of Canada remember that it is not enough to vote for prohibition measures—they must also vote for prohibition men.

MR. STEAD'S book, "If Christ came to Chicago, is having just the effect upon this side the water that the author intended. It is arousing the ire of the public and especially, as is natural, of the Chicago public. For obvious reasons the work is denounced by the bum and boodle element, and for reasons not so obvious it seems to be generally stigmatized as pernicious by the moral and Christian element. A writer in a prominent religious journal characterizes it as a "dreadful book," dreadful most of all, "because of its facts," and this probably voices the opinion of a majority of its readers. Much as we may deprecate Mr. Stead's policy in certain directions, widely as we may disagree with him in many of his reform methods, we do not question the purity of his motives, nor doubt the sincerity of his intentions in the uplift of humanity. An exposé of dreadful facts which makes an honest reader like the writer referred to "get up and walk the floor in hot indignation to think that so much of the book is awfully true," is perhaps necessary in order to reveal to said honest man his personal duty with regard to the conditions portrayed. The shame of it is, not that such rottenness should be made public but that it should be possible for it to exist. It is certainly not consistent in the secular newspapers to condemn Mr. Stead's "realism" as "indecent" while devoting so much space in their own columns to the disgusting details of the Pollard-Breckinridge case. We wish, however, that the author had seen fit to evolve from that prolific inner consciousness of his a title less suggestive of blasphemy for his sensational book.

THE PALMETTO STATE.

BY JULIA MILLS DUNN.

Since the passage of this dispensary act, our once proud state is reduced to the status of a saloon.—Extract from a private letter.

Oh, land of Marion and his men,
With heroes' life-blood bought,
Dimmed is thy star upon our flag,
Thy scutcheon bears one spot.
Over our heroes' sacred dust
Where'er a patriot fell,
We bow with tears of shame to-day,—
O land, we loved so well!

Brave Carolina! thine the boast
"Ready with gold and men,"—
Now pay the price of freedom's cost,
Ignoble deeds disdain;
Rise to the heights that once were thine;
Be pure, be proud, be great,
So shall thy children honor thee,—
Oh, brave Palmetto state!

On swelling heights and fertile plains
Where Sumter led his host,
Through wild morass and mountain pass,
By valley, hill and coast,—
The names of Archdale, Craven, Rhett,
Defying time and fate,
Are names we proudly honor yet,—
Oh, grand Palmetto state!

Moline, Ill.

AT MR. JACK STOPPER'S.

BY DOYLE.

Has the reader ever been in the backwoods? A great many people are there and it is astonishing how many of these are rare—really worth finding. This is the place of all on earth for the development of individuality. A great many men of genius begin in the backwoods. Some come out to the world and some remain all their lives long in the old neighborhood and grow like the trees upon the elements that nature furnishes. Men of the world hide behind so many forms that it is hard to see the real self. In the backwoods men glory in the very transparency of all their coverings.

I was once traveling alone in Louisiana and one afternoon found myself in one of those valleys, miles wide, which are not uncommon in the lower basin of the Mississippi. These valleys are covered by trees of great size and height and there is only now and then a sign of the woodman's ax. The beds of the bayous that drain these valleys are very small, and in summer time, at best, are quite sluggish, sometimes going dry except in places. When the late winter rains begin to fall and the Mississippi is swollen, these broad valleys are inundated, so that every trace of roads that might have been made in dry weather is obliterated. This makes it very difficult for one who is not entirely familiar with the swamp to find his way through, and he is more than apt, if he gets through at all, to come out at the wrong place.

This is exactly what I did, and as I emerged from the swamp I had painful misgivings as to whether I was going wrong, and if so, how wrong. A dim road was before me, one of those little streaks, obscured by pine needles that looks all the time as if it were about to frazzle out. I was going westward and the horizontal rays of the sun, full in my face, reminded me that night would soon be on me and that it would be hard to discern the little thread of road by which I was guided.

As the day's eye began to open its biggest preparatory to closing, I met a negro woodman in the road. He was a typical backwoods negro. These are not usually like other negroes; they are blacker and smaller, but they have this in common with their race, that they seem perfectly destitute of the faculty for giving direction to a traveler. However, this was my only help, so I asked:

"Old man, where am I? What part of the country is this?"

Looking at me from the corner of his eyes, drawing his features for all the agony of a ha! ha! he said: "Why, boss, hya: hya; you's right hyer in de road; you jes' come out de swamp. I dunno whar you started, but dis country all roun' hyer," sweeping the compass with both hands, "is de 'pocket.' Bayou is all roun' hyer 'ceptin' at de gap. Down in de lower eend of de 'pocket' is whar folks go dat don't prefer de jail. Ef you do' want to git among dem folks you better turn up to'ads old man Jack Stopper's house, up to'ads de gap."

I had heard of this place before, and must confess that, having always had the liberty of the world, the idea of being in this "pocket" was too suggestive to be pleasant, so I asked: "How can I get out of here in the easiest way?"

"You can go back th'ough de swamp ye jes' come out er, or ye can foller de road an' come out at de gap, 'bout five miles f'om hyer."

I was already tired with a long day's drive, and the darkness of the night, the dimness of the road, and the long distance made me ask, "Is there a good place to stop for the night anywhere near?"

"Yes, boss," he replied, "ole man Jack Stopper live up de road about a mile and a-haaf, an' ev'ybody dat gits los' in dese woods mos', in ginally always, stops wid him. He name Stopper, an' folks say he got a mighty propus name, cause e'vybody stop wid 'im."

"Is he a clever sort of man?" I asked.

The negro hesitated, then, looking thoughtfully on the ground said, slowly, with considerable meaning: "Yes, he's clever ef-f-f you don't fool wid him. He never have no—fights, but he skeers people to death sometimes. One day he see a nigger in de woods, and he jes' call, like he call common, and say, 'Whar you gwine dar?' and dat nigger has never been heerd of sense dat day. Some say he run hisself to death, and some say he drown hisself in de bayou, and some say he clumb up in a holler tree an' got fastened an' died. Dat's de reason he have no fights, 'cause ev'ybody skeered of him. He never hu't nobody 'tall but folks just nat'ally skeered of him. He talk so vi-grous, way down his t'roat like, and he look like he not skeered o' nobody, an' when he say anyt'ing he say it like you got to do it, and you jes' go long and do like he say—you does. Sometimes I wonder what he w-o-u-l-d do, ef you didn't do like he say,—he look so-o vi-grous!"

"Do you suppose he will take me in, for the night?" I asked.

"Yes," he said, "ef you 'proach 'im right. Don't hollo at de gate like de whole country was yourn. Call perlite. Eben den when he come to answer you he gwin skeer you, you bet. You t'ink you won't be skeered, but you be skeered spite of yourself, dat you will, boss. He gwine to talk to you like he's gwine to eat you up. I dunno how skeery you is, boss, but some people go dar an he talks so to 'em dat dey faint right at de gate. He talk to 'em like it's dang'ous to go in de house, an dang'ous to foller de road, an dang'ous to take de woods, an dang'ous to stan' still. But ef you has got de backbone to go t'rough wid it, all yous got to do when he talk so dang'ous, is to stan' right still an say, 'Yes, sir, Mr. Stopper, yes, sir, Mr. Stopper;' den he say: 'I spec we can take you in, ef yer can git in fur de dirt, an' live on nothin' whilst you is hyer.'"

"All right," said I, "tell me how to find the way to his house."

He replied, rather impatiently, "You jes' has to foller de road to his house, an' when you git dar you'll know it, 'cause nobody else don't live dar, but him an' his fambly; he settled de place."

Seeing I could never get explicit directions from my dusky adviser, I asked him as to my general course, and bidding him good-bye, I ventured into the shadows, which had now become almost black in the tall, piney woods. Without any accident, in about an hour, I found myself going by a shanty from which a little dog ran out as if he would take me. Still going on I soon came in sight of a dim light, which proved to be in the house of "ole man Jack Stopper." As I came near the gate I saw that thick cedar growth darkened all the front yard. I stopped right in front of the gate, and not three feet from it. Remembering the precautions of the negro, I sat for an instant trying to pitch my call so as to be "perlite." I tried to prepare myself for anything "skeery" that might happen. I felt that the time had come, and fixing my eye on the house I called as blandly as I could, "Hello!"

The negro's prediction was about to be fulfilled. If a cannon had fired off within ten feet of me I would not have been more startled than I was by a voice as coarse as that of a lion's growl, and as penetrating as the cry of a panther, and seeming to be right against my ear, saying, "What's wanted, sir-r-r?"

Old man Jack Stopper was leaning on his front gate, and had remained perfectly motionless till I called. If the negro had been there he would doubtless have said: "I tol' you so, I knowed he skeer you." To say the least of it my nerves were quite well shaken. I recovered as soon as possible, and said as "perlitely" as I could: "Is this where Mr. Jack Stopper lives?"

In his most characteristic way he answered: "Yes, sir-r-r, this is where Mr. Jack Stopper lives, and I am him. Who are you, sir-r-r?"

I told him my name, that I was on a journey from T—— to M——; that I had lost my way, and was belated, and wished, if possible, to stay all night.

"Yes, sir," he said, "you are not the first one who ever lost his way, and happened along here about time to get something to eat or stay all night. My smoke-house must smell mighty loud to be scented five miles away, at the public road. It must ha' got out that I am keepin' hotel. Are you a Christian, sir-r-r?"

When I answered in the affirmative, he replied, with a growl, "My wife used to be a pretty clever woman till she jined the church."

"Did that make her any worse?" I asked.

"No," said he, "she is right clever yet, and the best woman you ever see. Come in, sir, and I'll show her to you, and if you can put up with it, I'll give you the best we've got. I'm raaly glad you've come. I heared a little dog bark down the road and I 'lowed somebody was lost and would want bed and board."

We were soon in the house, which was one of the old sort, four rooms with a passage running through the middle. We entered the left-hand front room, and there, seated around a pine-knot fire were Mrs. Stopper, two daughters, aged respectively eighteen and twenty-two, a granddaughter, with deformed face, aged about twelve, and young Jack, aged twenty. My introduction to each member was elaborate. When Mrs. Stopper's time came, he said: "Mrs. Stopper, here's another man that melt our smoke-house clear across the swamp and come to it. He says he is a Christian, but how a town man can be a Christian is beyunt me, but the Lord is miraculous; we'll let him stay, anyhow. This is my wife, sir, Mrs. Stopper, Jane, I call her—there she is, sir-r-r; God made her pirty and healthy, and she ain't beholden to nobody for the clothes she wears. She wove the stuff she was marr'ed in, and sense that time she has clothed me and herself and six childern, and, to her credit, I say I never spent ten dollars sense we wus marr'ed for store-bought clothes. And it ain't work to her, she loves to do it. This woman has stuck to me through thick and thin, and now in our old age we ain't got much, but what is here is our'n. We have depended a good deal on God, and that old Bible, that is nearly gone for servin' us, has done a good deal to make things go well with us. That is a good old book and a man can do a heap of things worse than follerin' of its teachin's. But a sight of people don't try to go by it, and them that do have to learn in other ways sometimes. Onct I had six childern, and they all wuz likely, and the biggest ones could work, and the little ones wus comin' on, and the corn and the cotton and the 'taters growed so fine, and everything wus as good as I would have had it. On a Sunday little Susan wus eight, and on the next Monday she came to her mammy and laid her head on her arm and said she wus sick. And the nights begin to git long and cool, and the cotton begin to open, but everything wus sad, and work wus hard, and home wus not what it wus. Morning come and little Susan was no better. Night come and she was worse. At last, one day she called and asked me to read out of the old book. I don't know why, but it opened to the place whar the world's Saviour said: 'In my Father's house are many mansions.' When I wus through readin' she said, with her poor, little, trimblin' voice, 'Papa, when I get up there in that fine house, I won't have no more fever, will I?' I couldn't talk to her, I wus too full. She closed her eyes and laid her hand on mine and smiled. And the smile stayed. And she didn't move. And I looked at her face and it looked different. And I listened. Then I bent over her and kissed her. Then I went out and called Jane, and told her that little Susan had gone home. I had read the Bible a hundred times, but this was the first time I understood that this house wasn't home. And I told all the family that little Susan had showed us the way home, and we must not forget it. And for a long time it seemed to me there was a clear way right from this house to heaven. But the grass began to grow on little Susan's grave. In just two more short years our next one, Bob, left us suddintly. God saw that we needed to remember where little Susan had gone. Things wus changin', but for all that we tried to make the best of it. Finally, Sarah, our oldest, married Joe Peevy, as fine a young buck as was to be found in these parts. And do you see that poor thing over there," pointing to the grandchild, "that's all that's left to tell the tale, and a hard tale it is. Sarah was pert and purty, and Joe was smart; but red liquor did it for him and for her. The child was born drunk, and stagers now when she walks. And Sarah died of a broken heart because Joe was killed by the man that sold him the liquor to get drunk on." They say if you let liquor alone it will let you alone. Jes' see! If any mortal man hates the stuff I do, and always have. One drap of it has never pisened the atmosphere of this house, but it come all the way from M——, ten miles off, to murder my daughter and ruin my family, and left this poor child here for us to remember it by. It comes way down here in the 'pocket' to break people's hearts and ruin the'r homes. Oh, I tell you, little Susan and Bob went up yonder and left a streak of light behind 'em, and I have no doubt that Sarah is there, too, but she went through hell to get there. Poor child!"

(To be continued.)

Chicago, Ill.

THE SOCIALIST PROPAGANDA AND THE DRINK DIFFICULTY.

II.

BY JAMES WHYTE,

Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance.

How much, measured in money, does the material loss to the industrial classes in England caused by the drink curse, amount to yearly? Let us endeavor to make some estimate of it which will approximate to trustworthiness. Let us say, then, as was stated in the last article, that the industrials spend on the average six shillings per week per family on intoxicating liquor, which would give them an aggregate expenditure of about £100,000,000. That sum is equal just to one-fifth of their total income, which, at thirty shillings per family, is £500,000,000.

The next item is the extent to which earning is prevented by drinking. This has, on reasonable grounds, been estimated at an amount equal to fifteen per cent of the amount actually earned. Hence, as fifteen per cent on £500,000,000 is £78,000,000, we may set that sum down as the amount of loss under the head in question.

The next item is the amount of loss of money which has been actually earned and received, which results from drink-caused disadvantages, follies, perversities and incapacities. Let this be put down at only two shillings per week per family. It is equal to a self-imposed income tax of one shilling four pence in the pound. The present tax on incomes of £150 a year and upwards is six pence in the pound. No government could nowadays levy an income of one shilling four pence in the pound on even the present income tax-payers, and to try to impose one of that amount on the working classes would cause a revolution. Such a tax, if paid, would realize a total of nearly £34,000,000 a year. Well, £100,000,000, £78,000,000, and £34,000,000 added together, reach the very respectable sum of £212,000,000 or more than $1,000,000,000. And this, or something like it, is the amount that the English working classes waste through drink each year.

To the eye of the natural man £212,000,000 seems a good deal of money, and many things that are urgently needed by the wage-earners of the country could be obtained with it. The labor and produce which it could command would suffice to maintain the whole of the population of Scotland, Ireland and Wales at the rate of £105 or $525 per family per annum. This will seem to many people incredible, but it is a mere matter of arithmetic. It would suffice to maintain at the rate of thirty shillings per family per week for one year—that is the rate of income which the industrial classes themselves obtain—no fewer than 12,500,000 persons.

Now here is a truly marvelous thing. A section of the socialist propagandists—and only a section, I am glad to say, boldly declare and teach that it would be no economic advantage to the working classes at large if this enormous waste were put an end to totally. These miraculous people are preaching in all our streets and market places and are making many proselytes. I hold this teaching to be unspeakably pernicious; and I regard these propagandists as the disseminators of a virulent and deadly social poison. Having said this, let me add that I have no theoretical objection to socialism. "We are all socialists now." Socialism has been with us, in considerable force, for a long time. Indeed, our ancestors before us, through many generations, were socialists in the sense in which we are "all socialists" to-day. The Church of England, in so far as it is national, is a socialistic institution. So is the army and so is the navy, and in both, curiously enough, we have the minimum wage, the living wage, and several other highly interesting et cetera. The royal dockyards, the government foundries and the fire-arm factories are socialistic establishments. The government clothing factories are carried on by the government with public capital for the public benefit at the public cost. The post-office, with its recent adjuncts, the telegraph and parcel-post services, are socialistic. The revenue departments, generally, belong to the same category. Indeed, of what part of the machinery of government can it be said that it is not socialistic? The poor-law, under which about £10,000,000 are expended yearly, is socialistic through and through. The £7,000,000 or so of public money expended on public education is expended socialistically. Socialistic, too, are the government railways in India. Then we have municipal socialism on an extended and rapidly extending scale. Gas works, waterworks, sanitary works, municipal farms, the police, municipal buildings, etc., are now in many towns and cities "run" for the people by the representatives of the people. And this is socialism. For weal or woe, therefore, socialism is already with us in force. We are growing familiar with it, and I wish it to be distinctly understood that it is not as an enemy to socialists or as an opponent of socialism that I denounce the pernicious doctrines of some of its promulgators.

Let us first look at the allegation of these propagandists that poverty is the cause of drinking and that drinking is not the cause of poverty. If this is true it is certainly very remarkable. It implies that, in the case before us, waste does not bring want; and that people are driven to the excessive use of a very expensive luxury, even when and because they are unable to obtain necessaries which are cheap and abundant. Drunkenness is a costly indulgence; hence, it seems, on the face of the case, probable that in its beginning it would usually be the vice of the people who have some money to spare from absolute necessaries. After the diseased appetite has been created it is apt to become an all-dominating and consuming passion. It is true that in the slums of our great cities there are usually to be found the habitations of abject poverty which are also the habitations of drunkenness and its allied vices. But why should it be assumed —against all likelihood—that it is the poverty which causes the drunkenness and not the drunkenness the poverty? H. Russell Smart, who wrote that startling pamphlet, "Socialism and Drink," tells us that women are poorer and also soberer than men. But, if poverty be the cause of drunkenness, ought not women to be more drunken than men? Then, again, he alleges that Whitechapel is the poorest, and at the same time the most temperate of the larger divisions of East London. How would this fact, if fact it were—which it is not—affect the theory that poverty is the cause of intemperance? Clearly, if his theory is sound and his statements true, Whitechapel ought to be the most drunken part of the East End. But we have his assurance that it is the soberest. The simple truth of the matter is that those of us "whose eyes are in our heads" have seen too much of both poverty and prosperity in the making, to be influenced by the insecurely based generalization of the advocates of the theory under discussion. We constantly observe intemperance producing poverty. From day to day, year in and year out, the process goes on under our eyes. Let those who have little knowledge of the effects of abstinence on the condition of the poor make themselves acquainted with the marvelous transformation wrought by Father Mathew in the state of the drunken, squalid, ragged, penury-pinched Ireland of fifty years ago. In saner times than the present the record of this marvelous reform will be deemed one of the most noteworthy portions of the history of that "distressed country."

So much for the seen operations of temperance and intemperance respectively. Has any one ever caught intemperance in the act of producing economic well being?

Then to take experience on a greater scale. What does it teach? The aristocracy of this country were once, as a class, very drunken. A minority of the upper classes of to-day are grossly intemperate. Of the well-to-do middle classes a considerable proportion are even now being ruined by intemperance. What had poverty to do with the drunkenness of the aristocracy of former times? What has it to do with that of the middle classes of the present? In Scotland two or three generations ago, there lived a class of men called "bonnet lairds." Laird is the Scottish equivalent for landed proprietor. The bonnet lairds were small landed proprietors who cultivated their own farms and paid no rent. They were called bonnet lairds because they were more closely allied socially to the ordinary tenant-farmer than to the landed gentleman, and wore the blue bonnet of the peasant cultivator, not the hat of the gentleman proprietor. The class has almost disappeared. Drink was their bane and the cause of their ruin and extinction as a class; and it was not because they were poorer, but because they were richer than their neighbors that they fell under its power, which led to other evils, and the result was that one after another they were ruined and "blotted out." Is anybody ignorant of the social and economic history of the landed gentry of Ireland of from seventy to two hundred years ago? They were a body of probably the most drink-debased human beings who ever helped to ruin a nation. They have passed away and have left, if not a rack, certainly a wreck behind them.

London, Eng.

THE "SID."

BY MARY A. LATHBURY.

About three years ago I began an acquaintance with a woman—"the like of whom I ne'er shall meet again," and I should like to share my little knowledge of her with others. The beginning was made through a letter written by Adelia Gates to her friend, Frances Willard, and as the latter has a habit of sharing not only her crusts but her feasts with others, she sent it to the Arena, where it was published under the title of "A Rare Letter," and prefaced by a note.

Miss Willard had known her in Paris, where she had taken up her residence with her charge—a young lady pursuing studies abroad. The letter revealed a character of great simplicity, truth and strength, and made me wish to know the writer, who, after her charge had finished her studies, proceeded to interview countries and peoples in her own unique and sensible way from the Sahara to the North Cape, painting flowers as she found them at every point.

Not long ago I took up a large, attractive book that bore on the back the title, "The Chronicles of the Sid."* While I was asking myself why "Sid" instead of "Cid" I saw below the sub-title, "The Life and Travels of Adelia Gates." I took the book home with me, glad to renew my acquaintance with Miss Gates—an acquaintance which was wholly on my side. I found that "The Sid" (Arabic for lady, or mistress) was the name by which she was called when in the desert; that the book was written by Adela Orpen, the "Adela" (now Mrs. Orpen) who was given to her care when a child and whose education she conducted through fourteen years, and that the book itself was a charming study of a wholly unique character.

A little later, hearing that Miss Gates was in New York for a few days, I called upon her. She was at the home of a clergyman who had learned his A B C's at her knee. I was prepared to hear in what affectionate regard she was held by these friends, for the woman who has given herself wholly and freely to others through life is "set in families" wherever she may go. I was also prepared to meet a gentle, cheerful little lady who had learned the secret of "plain living and high thinking." She has found the "philosopher's stone," and it is a truth as clear as crystal. She is not eccentric, she is not determined, but she is the child of a King, who has picked her way through the difficult by-paths of her Father's domain alone and wholly without fear, believing that He gives His angels charge concerning her.

As she turned the leaves in her large portfolio and I saw here a flower of the desert, there a lily of Lebanon, a bit from California, another from Iceland, and others from queer corners of Europe, and realized that she had a thousand or more of these studies, all painted after she was fifty years of age, when she learned the art of Madam Vonga, of Geneva, I was amazed at the accomplishment; and when I saw the delight in her eyes as memory recalled the places where she had painted; where she had talked with the common people and lived among them, and had really tasted the traveler's delight in the picturesque, I was grateful that one woman had overcome the world, in her carelessness of its conventions and opinions; the flesh, in her ability to be comfortable and happy anywhere, and the devil, in her childlike faith and freedom from fear.

Miss Gates, with an income of five hundred dollars a year, saw and enjoyed more than most millionaire tourists do, for she avoided the highways of travel, the hotels, the guides, and pursued in her own way what she wanted and found it. Her satchel and her portfolio and her waterproof cloak lined with pockets (which should be patented) were all she required. In this way she took her way in 1887 into the desert with a negro mule-driver and an Arab guard. Only during this journey in the Sahara did she indulge in the luxury of both a guide and a mule-driver. She was sixty-three years old, and for two months slept on the ground, rode on a mule or camel, made friends among the Arabs around their wells and under their palms, and painted the flora that springs up after the rains in the northern Sahara.

After the desert came the ascent of the Nile, and then long journeys in the Holy Land, after which came the North Cape, where she saw the midnight sun, and afterwards Iceland, which she visited in the summer of 1891.

The readers of this journal will enjoy a bit from her experiences in Ghardaïa in the Berber country, where, it seems, we have to look for the origin of "home protection": "The women of Ghardaïa have succeeded in evolving an exalted state of women's rights for themselves. Their position is truly a singular one. Unlike the Arab women they are treated as the equals and not the slaves of the men. Equally with the men they draw up their own marriage contracts and make what conditions they please. The Sid asked the chef de bureau to copy for her one of these Berber marriage contracts and it lies before me now, and I see that if a husband should go away for two years he would be divorced, or if he become 'addicted to the consumption of liquors or the use of tobacco, the same fate would befall him. This is prohibition with a vengeance. A woman of Ghardaïa may not marry 'outside the walls.' They have taken care, therefore, to make that home as comfortable as possible, since they must pass their whole life in it. The Arabs are Orientals; they have come from the East where woman is ever looked upon as the slave of man. The Berbers are African; they own a different origin. Dido, we know, was queen of Carthage, and this may point to the fact that women were held in high estimation in that African civilization, which disappeared when Rome assumed the command of the world." Whoso would travel and be happy, with or without wealth, let him read the "Chronicles of the Sid."*

New York City.

*The Chronicles of the Sid, or the Life and Travels of Adelia Gates. By Adela E. Orpen. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

AMERICA'S SIGNAL TO THE OLD COUNTRY.

BY REV. J. SUERMAN COOKE.

"Full steam right ahead" is the signal which the Neal Dow celebration has flashed on the temperance workers in our own land. This movement is opportune and Lady Henry Somerset deserves the gratitude of the country for initiating it. God will bless it.

In weaving birthday laurels for this uncrowned king we have been brought face to face with the facts and far-reaching results of his work, and how many monarchs or statesmen whose dust we honor in Westminster Abbey, with all their boast of heraldry "and pomp of power" won such a conquest? But what is possible across the Atlantic is possible in the land that gave the Dow family to America. Surely the vivid light which this review has thrown on the great question of prohibitory law against the cursed drink traffic will hearten thousands of temperance men and women and give the lie to the persistent misrepresentations by which advocates of the dramshop, some, alas! eminent statesmen, seek to impose on credulous ignorance.

In a recent visit to America it was my privilege to see Neal Dow in his home in Portland City, Maine. It was an inspiration never to be forgotten to hear the story from his own lips, which this celebration, I trust, has made familiar as a household word throughout England, and to breathe the air and see the prosperity of a state bigger than the whole of England, where not a single public license to sell drink could be found; and still the wonder grew as one thousand five hundred miles west in a beautiful "classic town" by the blue waters of Michigan, I inquired for Rest Cottage and heard from Frances Willard how the potent spell of consecrated woman's work and influence had led, and was silently but surely leading other states to protect themselves and their families and churches from the cruelest of woes and most damning of sins.

The notes of this triumph summon us to hopeful advance. With more meaning than is usually found in the words of the Jubilee Gin Glee we may sing:

"The Quaker and the Methodist
Just gone along
To ring those charming bells."

What the example of the great prohibition friend of New England, and the Methodist white-ribboner of Illinois have done, with their noble fellow-workers for the land of the stars and stripes, can be done for the land of the Union Jack. Let the women of England join hands, as thank God they are beginning to do, with the men who in the legislature and in the organizations of our great cause are working toward prohibition, and a peal of victory will yet be rung out where now the loudest note amid all the loud pæons of our civilization, is the cry of the broken-hearted, the starving, the lost whom drink has cursed, and has been licensed to curse by imperial law.

London, Eng.

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

IV.

Distribution.

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

Is the value of one's land, his horse, or his day's labor worth about so much because that is the price he has set upon it, or is its value fixed by some great natural law beyond his control? Were each one to receive the price he asks for his land, labor or capital, it would be much like making wishes horses for each one to ride. God has created the world on no such haphazard plan as that.

The laws of rent and of wages are as fixed and stable as the law of gravitation. This, at first sight, seems cruel, just as it seems hard that men may drown if shipwrecked or receive injuries if they fall from high places. Were the laws of nature not uniform, everything would be chance or guess work. When these laws are once understood the forces that control them are no longer our masters, but like winds, tides, steam and electricity become man's servants. Then the question of how to abolish undeserved poverty will be as practical and certain as the laying of the ocean cable or engineering Brooklyn bridge.

As in production there are three terms, so in distribution there must be three to correspond. The earnings of capital are called interest; of labor, wages; of land, rent. A man's profits may be made up of only one or of all three of these. The term interest means something more than the price given for the use of money in the open market; for that depends much upon the risk it takes, though the average rate of interest on money is a fair gauge of the average earnings of capital. When such rate is low, capital, generally, is earning but little; unless it takes great risks or controls some monopoly. As wages are the earnings of labor, so interest is the earnings of capital. Their laws are the same since they are but subdivisions of the same thing. Whatever helps or injures one, helps or injures the other.

The term rent is more important. Wishing to distinguish between the annual interest on the value of capital (i. e., things produced by man's labor) and the annual interest on the value of land, (i. e., nature's resources wherever or whenever they begin to have a marketable value) we distinguish them by calling the first interest and the second, rent. Often the value of bare land is spoken of in round numbers as so much economic rent, having no reference whatever to houses, barns, fences, drains or anything labor has produced; all such bring capital.

To whom rent is distributed, will be considered later. Our question still is the relation of all men to the earth, and we seek to learn by what natural law, value is distributed between rent, wages and interest. Is it always divided equally, or does one get the lion's share; and if so when and how? No matter how fertile land is, whether it contains gold, copper, oil, lumber, or diamonds, it will have no marketable value until men begin to compete with each other for its use. Then, its price will not be fixed by what is asked, nor by the amount of wealth it will produce, but by the abundance or scarcity of such land; or, (what means the same thing) by the number of laborers competing for its use.

It is the demand for land together with the supply that fixes its price, and this price of land fixes the price of wages, and of interest thus: The lowest earnings of labor (wages) will be what labor can make off land having no value (i. e., no rent or purchase price). If this land is fertile, or lies near a good market, it will be quite productive, and so the earnings (or wages) of labor will be high. Since no rent or purchase price is paid, all that is produced will go to wages and interest. This fixes the price of wages upon better land that is rent-paying. For labor and capital will work nowhere for less than they can make upon land freely open to them. So long as there is plenty of good, productive land freely open to labor, the competition for the best land will not be strong enough to raise its value very high; nevertheless, the difference between the wealth produced upon the best land and that upon the poorest (by the same amount of labor) will not go to wages nor interest, but will go to rent fixing the price of rent at this difference. Because labor and capital can move about while land cannot, wages and interest, therefore, remain about the same, everywhere, while competition for the easiest wealth producing places gives all to rent above that which labor and capital can make upon the poorest land freely open to them.

This is Recardo's law of rent, about which there is no dispute among economists of repute. It is generally stated in these words: "The rent of land is determined by the excess of the produce it will yield over that which the same application can obtain from the least productive land in use." But people who have never heard of Recardo, understand this law, because they see it in daily practical application about them, in land booming towns, or in the greed to own more land than can be profitably used, because increasing population will soon double or triple its value. This explains why wages and interest are always full as high in new countries, where land is cheap, as in old where rents are high.

The wealth that was produced annually, in this country, fifty years ago, might be illustrated by a small diagram divided into three parts representing rent, wages and interest. As most land then had little or no value, the part going as rent would be small compared with wages and interest.

Let the wealth which is now produced annually be represented by a much larger figure. The value of land has increased enormously during the last fifty years. The part that goes to rent being far more than is here represented. But note, though wages and interest are larger than fifty years ago, they receive far less in proportion to the wealth they produce. This is caused by a natural law and by the greed to own more land than can be profitably used. Should production increase a thousand fold, the average wages and interest would still be fixed at the amount labor and capital could earn on land freely open to them.

Fifty years ago the land that was freely open to labor in this country was so vast and so productive in its varied natural resources that it seemed inexhaustible. At that time the whole country was poorer, far, than to-day, yet we had no tramps, professional burglars nor army of unemployed; likewise, no millionaire class—twenty-five thousand of them to-day owning over half the wealth of this country.

When the blood of the body is congested in one part, unless relief is obtained, a long chronic illness is the result; for if one member suffers all suffer. But if the congestion becomes too severe, if the strain put upon the life forces that hold all together be too great the end is dissolution.

Only twenty-five years ago, when Charles Dickens was in this country, he expressed great surprise that he saw no beggars in Boston; no visible signs of cruel poverty. But we need not go back twenty-five years; the changed condition of the farmers during the last five years is sufficient to satisfy the most skeptical. The great mass of people already feel keenly and cruelly the drift of this downward movement.

It is the duty of every woman who loves humanity to take an earnest and intelligent interest in these problems, which are problems of the heart rather than the head, for they are questions of right and wrong, of man's relation to the earth, his indefeasible right to the property his own labor creates; and, also, the absolute justice of giving all men an equal chance in the means of obtaining a livelihood by his labor.

Wollaston, Mass.

*Copyrighted.

A REVEILLE FROM OUR NATIONAL CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

DEAR CO-LABORERS:—I am deeply moved. I have been reading a symposium in a religious paper on "The Next Step in Anti-Saloon Legislation." The first article is by the Rev. Editor, who proposes restriction, not extinction—continuance, not extermination—compromise with the liquor traffic, not prohibition of the iniquity. By far the larger number of contributors indorse (not altogether the editor's methods) but his propositions. Two men speak without fear or favor, save in the fear of God and in favor of the people, Joseph Cook, of Boston, and John G. Woolley, of Chicago; and I was glad that Mr. Woolley said: "This is a Christian man's fight, and there are abundant forces at his hand, but they will never fall into line until he rings clear—and he will ring very clear when he sees clearly; but he does not see clearly yet, and of this your own article, which in its prefatory part is a very fair expression of the common view, is excellent evidence, for your sincerity is above suspicion."

"A very fair expression of the common view." Alas! eighteen of the twenty-four contributors, three-fourths of the whole number spoke of nothing but compromise; two guardedly approved prohibition; of four I have spoken. Women are said to constitute two-thirds of the church of Christ, and we are grateful that an aroused womanhood led by God to the organization of the National W. C. T. U., adopted as the preamble of their constitution the following: "We, Christian women of this nation, conscious of the great evils of, and appalled by the danger of intemperance, believe it to be our duty, under the providence of God, to unite our efforts for its extinction and for the entire prohibition of the liquor traffic."

Every word of it is accepted and indorsed by each member upon joining the union, and thus pledged to the protection of the home, we are pained to-day to find in many states an attempted legislation of local option versus prohibition, anti-saloon versus anti-traffic. Good temperate people are deceived thereby and join the ranks, though in their heart they know nothing but annihilation of the evil will bring national safety and peace. It is an old dodge; local, optional, here to-day and gone to-morrow, hurting no-body and no-thing; even saloonist and politician undisturbed by the effort. What they want W. C. T. U. women do not want, and duty calls on us to arise immediately, and, like Cromwell's army, stand united, alert, listening for marching orders from the Captain of our Salvation, who never makes mistakes and whom we will instantly obey. This can be done only by the arousal of each individual, in each union, in city and country, throughout the land. No national political party would expect victory by the quickening of its forces in one city or one state; it must be throughout the field.

Iowa is in an agony of discussion, local option, anti-saloon and prohibition legislation before the people, and the intelligent prayer and aid of every W. C. T. U. woman is needed in behalf of righteous action. Ohio will, if possible, enact the Haskell bill, and even churches are minimizing God's law of "Thou shalt not" by an attempt to accomplish it. At this very time the governor of South Carolina proposes to establish dispensaries in twenty counties where prohibition has prevailed, because of the compromise law, which renders it possible, and the demand of the traffic in politics that it shall be done.

"Awake, Deborah—arise and lead thy captivity captive," in the name of God, of your homes, of the republic we love. Shrink not, but do your part to put this iniquity out of the way, that Christianity, civilization and purity may reign. Will some one say, what can we do? we have no money and no leader? There is not a union in the United States that cannot by effort secure twenty-five cents to purchase the documents of Herrick Johnson and others, that will furnish all necessary material for a live meeting. Some man, some woman, or some children (in Demorest medal contest) can be found to present the truth to the people in every locality. If the people of the town are too busy to attend a meeting, let a company of women or children go to a country school-house, where they will be heartily welcomed, and will be heard with delight. Let each district be visited thus, over and over if need be, until the pressure upon the town cannot be resisted. This will furnish something to do that will tell for the cause.

Dear state president, your constituency looks to you for leadership. What are you doing, and what will you do? I pray you, in review of the field, do not say, "this union or that union—this woman or that will do nothing, it is useless to ask it." How do you know but the spirit of God has spoken to some soul who will be as a very fire brand setting all aflame, if you but open the way? Are you not as truly bound to do what you can for the least as for the greatest in your ranks?—to make mellow and ready for seed, the ground of the hardest as of the easier field? The great Commander calls. Your past faithfulness is to Him assurance that you will again answer and are ready to fall into line. Up—"agitate," "organize." Let each remember that she is a W. C. T. U. woman; a daughter of the King, and must be at her Father's business, which requires haste.

Your comrade in the work,

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Chicago, Ill.

THE ORIGIN OF WOMEN'S PROPERTY LAWS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Your issue of February 1st contains an article entitled, "How Elizabeth Cady Stanton Gained Protection for Woman." I have in my possession a letter written by Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage, of Fayetteville, N. Y., dated Nov. 22, 1880, and addressed to my husband, the late George Geddes, of Fairmount, N. Y., in which the writer asks in the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Miss Susan B. Anthony, and herself, for such information as Mr. Geddes might be able to give concerning the passage of the woman's property law of 1848. She writes that they "are engaged in the preparation of the History of Woman Suffrage, the first volume of which is now partially in hands of the printer."

The answer to this letter is as follows:

FAIRMOUNT, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1880.

Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage,

DEAR MADAM:—I was much gratified at the receipt of your letter of 22d inst., making inquiries into the history of the law of 1848 in regard to married women holding property independently of their husbands.

That the truth of history may be made plain, I have looked over the journals of the senate and assembly, and taken full notes, which I request you to publish, if you put any part of this letter in print.

I have very distinct recollections of the whole history of this very radical measure. Judge Fine, of St. Lawrence county, was its originator, and he gave me his reasons for introducing the bill. He said that he married a lady who had some property of her own, which he had all his life tried to keep distinct from his, that she might have the benefit of her own, in the event of any disaster in pecuniary matters happening to him. He had found much difficulty growing out of the old laws, in this effort to protect his wife's interests.

Judge Fine was a stately man and of general conservative tendencies, just the one to hold on to the past; but he was a just man and did not allow his practice as a lawyer, or his experience on the bench to obscure his sense of right. I followed him, glad of such a leader.

I, too, had special reasons for desiring this change in the law. I had a young daughter, who, in the then condition of my health, was quite likely to be left in tender years without a father, and I very much desired to protect her in the little property I might be able to leave. I had an elaborate will drawn by my old law preceptor, Vice-chancellor Lewis H. Sanford, creating a trust with all the care and learning he could bring to my aid. But when the elaborate paper was finished neither he nor I felt satisfied with it. When the law of 1848 was passed, all I had to do was to burn this will.

In this connection, I wish to say that the speaker of the assembly, Mr. Hadley, gave aid in the passage of this law that was essential. Very near the end of the session of the legislature he assured me that if the bill passed the senate he would see that it passed the house. By examining my notes of the assembly's action, you will see that the bill never went to a committee of the whole in that body, but was sent directly to a select committee to report complete. It was the power of the speaker that in this summary manner overrode the usual legislative forms. The only reason Mr. Hadley gave me for his zeal in this matter was that it was a good bill and ought to pass.

I believe that this law originated with Judge Fine, without any outside prompting. On the third day of the session he gave notice of his intention to introduce it; and only one petition was presented in favor of the bill, and that came from Syracuse, and was due to the action of my personal friends. I presented it nearly two months after the bill had been introduced to the senate.

The reception of the bill by the senate showed unlooked for support, as well as opposition. The measure was so radical, so extreme, that even its friends had doubts; but the moment any important amendment was offered, up rose the whole question of woman's proper place in society, in the family, and everywhere. We all felt that the laws regulating married women's, as well as married men's rights, demanded careful revision and adaptation to our times and our civilization. But no such revision could be perfected then, or has been since. We meant to strike a hard blow, and if possible shake the old system of laws to its foundation, and leave to other times and wiser councils the perfecting of a new one.

We had in the senate a man of mature years who had never had a wife. He was a lawyer, well read in the old books, and versed in the adjudications which had determined that husband and wife were but one person, and the husband that person, and he expressed great fears in regard to meddling with this well-settled condition of domestic happiness. This champion of the past made long and very able arguments to show the ruin this law must work, but he voted for it in the final decision.

The bill hung along in committee of the whole until March 21, when its great opponent being absent, I moved its reference to a select committee with power to report it complete, that is, matured, ready for its passage. So the bill was out of the arena of debate, and on my motion was ordered to its third reading.

In reply to your inquiries in regard to debates that preceded the action of 1848, I must say I know of none, and am quite sure that in our long discussions no reference was made to anything of the kind. Great measures often occupy the thoughts of men and women long before they take substantial form and become things of life, and I will not dispute any one who says that this reform had been thought of before 1848. But I do insist the record shows that Judge Fine is the author of the law which opened the way to clothe woman with full rights in regard to holding, using and enjoying in every way her own property, independently of any husband.

I add the following extracts from the journals of the senate and assembly of 1848.

Please reply, and let me know if I have made this matter clear to you. Very respectfully,

GEO. GEDDES.

Hoping that this letter and statement will interest your readers, I am, Yours sincerely,

Fairmount, N. Y. MARY C. GEDDES.

LET US SING IT!

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—That sweet old metrical "Blessing," which we have sung together at our great conventions before partaking of our lunches, is full of pleasant memories. Many of our fathers and mothers, now in heaven, used to sing it at their tables and we might sing it at ours and teach it to our children, thus making them sharers in our "giving of thanks."

It has seemed to me that if we white-ribboners had a noontide "Blessing" that we could sing—with our husbands and children—sending it chorusing round the world and up to the throne, it would be well pleasing to our King. So I send you the words of the dear old "Blessing" to be used morning and evening, and sung to the tune "Old Hundred," and I send the words of a noontide "Blessing" to be sung to the tune "The Solid Rock." Bear it out and on, dear UNION SIGNAL, on your pure, sweet wings of peace and love!

A good many of our voices are not so clear and strong as they once were; they will be tuned anew "some sweet day" ere long. We need to have our thinner notes sustained by the stronger, deeper tones of our companions, the sweet cadences of childhood, and the full round mellow strains of our young sons and daughters, the dear Y branches on whom shall rest, by and by, all the work and all the blessing of our W. C. T. U.

THE DEAR OLD BLESSING.

Tune—Old Hundred.

"Be present at our table, Lord;
Be here, as everywhere adored.
Bless thou our food, and grant that we May feast in Paradise with Thee."

THE NOONTIDE BLESSING.

Tune—The Solid Rock.

Jesus, of every joy the spring,
Accept the thanks to Thee we bring;
The Christian workers bless, we pray,
And may they feed on Thee this day.
Grant them, from self and sin set free
To eat and drink and vote for Thee!

H. A. HOBART.

Red Wing, Minn.

A WORD FROM GERMANY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A recent letter from Miss Balthazar, who is connected with Miss de Broen's Paris mission work, tells us of temperance work that is being done in Berlin, Germany. Colonel von Knobelsdorf, a retired officer in the army, is doing a grand work. Speaking of the testimonies given in one of these meetings, she says: "One man after another rose, mostly railway guards and employés in factories, and told, with smiling faces: 'My wife did it!' 'It's the women who always get us round.' It did one's heart good to hear them. Most of them were reclaimed drunkards, and all of them had by the grace of God been brought to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus."

The same lady writes also of having secured some fifty signatures for the World's Petition, mostly from very poor women in Belleville Mission. Some of them did not know how to write, and have signed by crosses against their names, but all were most enthusiastic when the meaning of the Petition was explained to them.

Paris, France. A COMRADE.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.—Jas. 2:17.

Good news comes from Mrs. Carse that hearts are willing, even in these dull times, to help the good work. One great man has made a conditional promise of $50,000 for the Temple. Now all the currents of spiritual power in those who love the cause should be set to overcome his obstructing material conditions, which are really the lesser opposition, for high thought, true vision, strong desire and unflinching purpose are the miracle workers even in this utilitarian age, and have made the wonderful progress of the American people. They are the known quantities in the equation of which the other member is, "All things are possible to him that believeth."

***

Mrs. Mary B. Monroe, of Akron, O., has headed the $100 list in the new classification on which Mrs. Carse has planned her work. Who will be the next—and the next—next—? Mrs. C. E. Barnard forwards $35 as first payment on a tablet in memory of Mrs. Mary J. Cook, Oskaloosa, Iowa. One hundred dollars have just come from Mrs. Maria Coulson, in memoriam of her husband, Joseph C. Coulson, of Urbana, O., a life-long total abstainer, a man ever in the moving ranks of advance thought, and an unfaltering worker for those "better things" which carry eternal life with them. Mrs. Ella M. Thatcher's friends from Florence, N. J., send $10, making $75 already paid on a tablet in her honor. Mrs. L. D. Carhart has sent $21.60 to apply on the Marian H. Dunham tablet, whose service as their president the Iowa women love so to recognize. The New London, Conn., union forwards $25 with these words: "For Frances Mary Payn, our president from 1877 to 1892, until she was not able to attend meetings, being eighty-two years old. If any name should be in the Temple it is hers, for she worked for this cause before there was a W. C. T. U. She is God's chosen missionary to the poor, and no one will be more missed in New London when she goes home." St. Paris sends $42 through Mrs. Sarah C. Moore, county superintendent, as first installment on $100 pledge. Wrightstown, Pa., W. C. T. U. has sent $15 on its pledge. Bradford, Pa., union sends $28.74 to be credited on its $100 note; $18.74 of this sum was the result of mite-boxes and a full Baby Band.

The W. C. T. U. of Cuba, N. Y., at the hand of Mrs. G. H. Eldridge, forwards $43 as a payment on its pledge. Carthage, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $15 to be credited on its $100 subscription. Fourteen dollars come from union No. 2, Syracuse, N. Y., with a promise to send monthly installments on its pledge till all is paid. That is a good plan. Mrs. H. R. Osborn sends $5 for the North Johnston union, making $90 already paid on its pledge. From Lockwood, O., W. C. T. U. comes a $10 payment on $100; and $20 from Mt. Carmel, Pa., union; also $50 on the pledge of Westerly, R. I., W. C. T. U. Colfax, Wash., with the determination to soon forward more, sends $10, an installment on $100. A check for $60 comes from Churchville, Pa., W. C. T. U. as first payment on its pledge. El Modena, Cal., forwards $25 to be credited on $100. The Y's of Mount Kisio, N. Y., send $27.50 with the hope to complete a tablet payment.

***

Pawcatuck, Ct., union sends $100 for its name in Willard Hall. The president of this union says: "The raising of this amount has not caused 'a cessation of temperance work' in our union. Its sixty women are all in very modest circumstances—most of them bread-winners. Their faith in the Temple inspired them to a bazaar which they conducted while faithfully carrying on ten departments of W. C. T. U. work, and the net result was $165. After deducting our donation to the Temple we sent a free-will offering of $15 to the state treasury, and retain $50 for local work. We did not begin this effort till after your circular letter was abroad. 'There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.'"

***

Mrs. Maria L. Underhill, of Boston, Mass., says of the Columbian souvenir: "It is indeed lovely and I am proud to possess it; shall invest in the spoon also. My husband has already bought Temple bonds for me." Mrs. Betsy Lee, Ann Arbor, Mich., writes: "One of our members thought it would be better to send money without thinking of getting the Columbian souvenir, but I said: 'It may be all right for her to think so as she has no children, but I want my little ones to see mine.'" Mrs. L. A. Morris, Bushnell, Ill., writes in delight of the souvenir and sends for a spoon. The testimony is universal that both are just what they should be, and surpass rather than fall below expectations. Mrs. F. M. Chandler, St. Albans, Me., says: "The Columbian souvenir is a gem which I shall always cherish." Mrs. H. W. Green, Perris, Cal., writes: "The beautiful Temple souvenir is received. I am delighted with it; it is lovelier than I expected."

***

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple. Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

I WONDER.

BY NELLIE GOODE.

Because one little cloud has passed o'erhead
And hid the brightness of the noonday sky,
We must lose heart and say our hopes are dead?
I wonder why!
Do we not guess the sun that shone before
Will shine again,
And life's best happiness may be in store
Behind the pain?

Because one drop of sorrow chanced to fall
Into our cup of happiness, we cry
That it is bitter, and refuse it all?
I wonder why!
He sends the bitter who has sent the sweet,
And it is best;
For often 'tis in sorrow and defeat
That we are blessed.

Because one hasty word is rashly said
A dearest friend becomes an enemy,
The love we've cherished years, perhaps, has fled?
I wonder why!
For all are weak, and all must sometimes fail
To be our best;
Our own hearts are as faulty and as frail
As all the rest.

Faith, patience, love, we need to cultivate,
Our faint hearts are so ready to despair,
So prone to cry the burden is too great
For us to bear.
But He who views our weakness from above
Can help us live,
And we can find in His forgiving love
Grace to forgive!

Dallas, Tex.

MOTHERS' CLUBS.

V.

Parents' Evening.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

Some doubting souls thought it needless to hold the meeting for men and women in the church lecture room, saying that so few men would come that Mrs. Stacy's parlors would be plenty large enough. These doubters were, therefore, greatly surprised to find the lecture room well filled with an audience nearly one-half of which was made up of men. It was evident that the interest of the mothers had been communicated to the fathers, though the fact that Dr. Wayne was to present the paper was an attraction.

As Mrs. Bell, the kindergartner, who presented the paper at the former meeting was not in town, Mrs. Stacy was called to the chair. The opening exercises were as usual, and then the presiding officer introduced the Rev. Dr. Wayne, who announced his topic,

"THE OWNERSHIP OF THE CHILD."

"When a newborn babe is laid in the arms of its parents, they, looking upon it with pride, exclaim: 'This is my child,' and should any one say to them that their claim upon the little one is secondary they would without hesitation resent the imputation. To whom can the child belong primarily if not to those who gave him life? To the great All-Father, perhaps you will say, and you may be inclined to call me heretical if I assert that the child belongs to himself first of all. In one sense he does belong to God first, but God gives him a primary right to himself, and allows him to recognize or deny the ownership of God. God gives life, powers of mind or body, and then permits each individual to decide for himself whether he will be an obedient or a rebellious child. God desires voluntary surrender of self.

"The child is created, not for the especial delight of his parents or friends, but for his own advantage. He is placed here for his own benefit, that he may have the privilege of development through earthly experiences, and this right of growth and development is the primary thing to be considered in the training which is given him. His education should be conducted in ways that conduce to his best physical, mental and moral good. In this light all the details of his daily existence, his food, clothing, habits of sleep and of play are to be arranged according to that which is best for him. He is not to be dressed to please the vanity of his fond mamma merely, nor fed in a haphazard way, nor taught bad habits as to sleep or play, but the great, all-absorbing question of those who have charge of him must be, 'What is for his best interest?'

"After considering his right to himself, we must next consider that God has a claim upon the child before the parent has. He is an immortal soul, and his eternal future will be decided by his earthly life. He should not only be taught, therefore, to be moral, to be honest, but to be religious. That is, his instruction should lead him to recognize his allegiance to God and to govern his life by God's will.

"Now we may consider the parent's right to the child, and this involves the responsibilities of parentage in its various phases. The ownership of the child by the parents demands of them all that has been implied in the ownership of himself and his belonging to God: That is, that they shall teach him in accordance with the facts of this two-fold ownership; that they shall teach him to be obedient and to have self-control. It implies that they shall not decide for him what his future shall be, irrespective of his talents and his inclinations. It demands that they shall be in themselves all that they wish him to be, and that in every respect they shall treat him with justice and not with tyrannous authority.

"During the first years of life the child is in the home, and there is being prepared for the duties of real life, which are implied in the next statement that the child belongs to society. He must be educated to a knowledge of this fact, and early learn that he must consider the interests of others. This education begins in his being taught kindness and courtesy in the home circle, the recognizing of rights of property in toys and books, the giving up of one's own desires in order to promote the happiness of others. The child who is permitted to be selfish at home will not learn that the wishes of one must be made subservient to the good of all.

"The child, next in order, comes into the possession of the state. It is the duty of the state to educate him to be a good citizen. This involves a care for his health in the enacting and executing of sanitary laws in city or school, in the development of his body by the exacting of sufficient exercise, the training of his intellect, the teaching of good morals. All this is involved in the conduct of public schools, and is a topic not to be discussed in an hour. This much may be hinted, that when the state fully recognizes its duty to the child it will institute some other system of education than that which stimulates to study by offering of prizes, or by arousing the envious spirit of emulation."

"Lastly, we may say the child belongs to the race, and his habits of life from babyhood onward are creating the condition of his descendants. He should, therefore, be early taught his own value to the world, and given this incentive to overcome his faults and to strengthen his virtues by the thought that he can help create the world of the future. That by virtue, honor, purity, sobriety in himself, he will be making the moral atmosphere in which his posterity shall be able to grow up into lives of worth and goodness. It will not be needful to enlarge on the reverse side of this picture if we can impress children with this view. They will naturally draw the darker side for themselves if we make a clear and glowing vision for them of the power for good to humanity through their own virtuous lives."

A hearty round of applause testified to the appreciation of the doctor's paper, and then a silence followed. At length a burly old farmer rose and said: "I've been a-waitin' fur somebody who wuz a scholar to speak, but as none on you be a-goin' to say anything I reckon I'll hev to. 'T seems to me that the doctor hez put a putty serious load onto our shoulders; or mebbe I should say he hez made us feel that it is there. Now, whut comes to me is this. I own my young ones, but I own yourn, too, and it's my juty to look after the welfare uv yourn as well as mine. Now, my boys is all growed up, an' they're good men, as you know, an' I might think I could set down and say I had done my juty. But I hain't. As long as there's a saloon in the land, an' a boy to go into it, as long as cigarettes are sold to boys, as long as there are houses where girls are sold to shame and men and boys are led to ruin, I've got something to dew. I hain't thought much about it before, but I'm not only goin' to think now, but I'm a goin' to act, tew, fur ef I'm a part of society, an' a part of the state and the nation, and the human family likewise, seems to me I've got about as big a job on hand as I can attend tew durin' the rest uv my nat'ral life."

As hearty applause as had greeted the doctor himself followed the farmer's words, and the discussion that ensued may be imagined when it is learned that a law and order society was organized, the condition of schools was investigated, the law in regard to sale of cigarettes to minors was enforced, boys were looked after more carefully by parents, a village improvement society was instituted; in short, many reforms grew out of the parents' meeting, and the hearts of those who instituted the Mothers' Club rejoiced.

Toledo, O.

"THE WOMAN'S CAUSE IS MAN'S."

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

There is no other proof so great of the good understanding that subsists between men and women as the voluntary relinquishment by men of powers hitherto unshared. It is the highest tribute that has ever been paid to woman, and yet one of the most unobserved, that not a school has ever been opened to her except by the vote of men, nor has she been admitted to any learned profession, or to an enlarged sphere in the line of honorable occupation except by men; nor has any woman been made a voter, in greater or less degree, either in church or state, save by the free permission of "creation's lords." They have clothed us with all the power that they themselves possess, save in the highest ranges, ecclesiastical and governmental. No magnanimity analogous to this has been witnessed since history began.

But there are two considerations which, on their own testimony, have moved men to this bestowment of power upon the gentle comrade at their side. First, men are conscious of being abundantly able to take care of themselves and their interests; and secondly, they have learned by centuries of observation and experience that, as a class, women (being the mothers of men) are, if possible, more concerned to do them justice than they are to do justice to themselves. Every woman is the daughter of a man, and every man is the son of a woman. In this organic law is grounded the unalterable faith that cheers me on my way while I seek to multiply the topics of interest and thought between men and women, that home-life may be enriched and home happiness rendered more stable.

There are three strands in the stout cable that binds together the members of an ideal home—religion, affection and intellectual sympathy. The first and second have held their own throughout the ages past; the third, this age is forming, and no truer or more enduring tie has ever yet been forged.

Reigate, Eng.

NOTES OF THE NOON MEETING IN WILLARD HALL.

BY JANE E. ZIMMERMAN.

The Neal Dow celebration in Willard Hall being fully set forth in another article, at the proper time, I need not make mention of it here further than to say it was an inspiring occasion, and cannot fail to make an impression on the young men who drop in every day to our noon meeting.

Two young men have been coming in almost every day during the winter, being out of steady employment. They have both professed to be utterly indifferent to religion; one of them being full of flippant questions concerning obscure passages of Scripture. Day after day they disclaimed all serious feeling until a few days ago they began to yield, both were deeply affected, and acknowledged that they were "almost persuaded." We are earnestly praying for them. Requests for prayer for two physicians, one a drinking man, have been received from Vermont.

A well-dressed man, well educated and gentlemanly but drinking heavily, has been with us for two days. He is in despair, but cannot seem to apprehend the way of salvation. Pray with us, for these cases are urgent.

During their self-denial week we gave the Salvation Army the hall for two days. There were rousing meetings, as is their way. Rollo Kirk Bryan, the chalk-talker, also gave us a beautiful, thoughtful address, illustrated in his usual taking way. He made a good impression.

Chicago, Ill.

As you grow better there are some things which are always growing looser in their grasp upon you; there are other things which are always taking tighter hold upon your life. You sweep up out of the grasp of money, praise, ease, distinction. You sweep up into the necessity of truth, courage, virtue, love and God. The gravitation of the earth grows weaker, the gravitation of the stars takes stronger and stronger hold upon you. And on the other hand, as you grow worse, as you go down, the terrible opposite of all this comes to pass. The highest necessities let you go, and the lowest necessities take tighter hold of you. Still, as you go down, you are judged by what you cannot do without. You come down at last where you cannot do without a comfortable dinner and an easy bed, but you can do without an act of charity or a thought of God. The poor sot finds his misery sealed with this double seal, that he cannot miss his glass of liquor, and he can miss without a sigh every good company and virtuous wish. . . . . He who lives in the spirit acquires a certain sort of feeling of the infiniteness of others, so that renown, wealth, dignity, sympathy, comfort, friendship, amusement, life, stand on one side, and honor, truth, bravery, purity, love, eternity, God, stand on the other. These last he must have. Those others he can do without.—Phillips Brooks.

KIND WORDS,

A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
May heal a spirit broken,
And make a friend sincere.

A word, a look, has crushed to earth
Oft many a budding flower,
Which, had a smile but owned its birth,
Would have blest life's latest hour.

Then deem it not an idle thing
A kindly word to speak;
The face you wear, the smile you bring,
May soothe a heart or break.

—Whittier.

FOR LITTLE JOE.

BY EUDORA STONE BUMSTEAD.

(Continued.)

"I'm glad you're goin' to town, Si," said Mrs. Holt to her husband one day not long after the funeral. "I want to send to the store by you."

"Want a new dress, I s'pose," suggested her husband.

"Yes, but not for me this time. I want seven yards of the prettiest gingham they've got, to make a dress for Katy. I'm going to get it all made up to s'prise her. I'd like about ten yards of flannel for her underclothes, too, if you think we can afford it."

"You bet we can!" said Holt, cordially, as he brought out his overcoat. "Katy's a perfect little woman. She's just clear grit. I never see the beat!"

"No more did I," said his wife. "I've been glad every day that you brought her home with you. And little Joe's as smart a young one as I ever come across, an' handsome, too. I'd be glad to adopt 'em."

"Now I declare, mother!" said Holt, laughing, "I'd as soon think of Katy's adopting us. But she's welcome to stay here with us. Only we mustn't count on it. And I wish we had a boy like little Joe. But he belongs to Katy, and nobody else."

"Do look a-here, Si," said Mrs. Holt, beckoning him to the kitchen door. "Don't you s'pose she'll rock that boy to sleep till he's as big as she is? But I call that a picture, anyway."

Just then Katy rose, with her arms very full, and managed to convey her precious burden to the kitchen bedroom, and by the time she had arranged the blankets and pillows Mr. Holt was turning his horse toward town.

"You ought to take a nap yourself, little one," said Mrs. Holt when she came out. "You look half sick these days."

"I can't sleep," said Katy. "Won't you let me wash the dishes?"

"No, you dear child, you shan't wash a dish. You can rest a little if you can't sleep."

"Then I'll knit," said Katy, and she went and brought a chubby little stocking.

"Why, when did you do all that, Katy?" asked Mrs. Holt in surprise. "I only gave you the yarn last evening."

"I knit some in the night," said Katy. "I can knit in the dark. It's kind of company."

"There's something I'd like so much to know," she went on, after a round or two of the clicking needles. "I thought about it all night. I heard you ask Mr. Holt in the evening not to sign Mr. Cooney's petition this year. I almost thought you spoke as if he signed his name to ask to have a saloon at The Corners. But he didn't, did he?"

"Yes, dear," said Mrs. Holt sadly. "He used to know Cooney back east, and he said if he didn't sign somebody else would."

"Would it do any good to sign our names to ask not to have one?" pursued Katy, after a pause.

"Why, it ought to," said Mrs. Holt, "but I'm afraid it wouldn't. You see it's the three county commissioners. If there are more that sign on the temperance side than on the other, then they ought not to give any license. But we had more signers on that side than the whisky men had, when they were first trying to start the saloon. And the commissioners gave the license just the same. They knew we wouldn't go to law. So the temperance people gave it up."

"Oh, I'd never give it up!" cried Katy. "I'd try every single time. I'd ask every single one to sign. Could you write a paper to sign, Mrs. Holt?"

"No, I couldn't. I've clean forgot how it went."

"Well," said Katy finally, folding her work and sticking the needles into the ball, "I believe I can write one myself. I can write a little. I know I could make it so they would understand. Would you give me some paper and a pen and ink and let me try? I want to do it right away, and then maybe Mr. Holt will sign his name for me and little Joe. Oh, Mrs. Holt, that's why I can't sleep—it's about little Joe. Did you know Cooney sold whisky to Jimmy Cramer and Harry Fitch? And Jimmy is twelve and Harry is only eleven. And they were both drunk. Those poor little boys were drunk! And in just a few years little Joe will be as old as that—" Katy could not finish. She rose trembling, and went to the window. It was snowing a little. The clouds were threatening. She stood and watched the flakes till the trembling passed. Then she turned and asked for the writing materials, and went to her little room to compose a petition.

They did not see her again till dinner time. She took her place by little Joe as usual, and waited upon him carefully, but ate hardly a mouthful herself. When they were through she took Mr. Holt's plate and cup, and gravely laid before him the paper she wished him to sign.

"Why, what's this, little woman," said he. But she waited for him to read. And this is what he read:

to the County Commissionaries

we sine our names to ask you to pleas not give any Licence for a Saloon.

Becaus it sells to litle Boys
Becaus it makes Peeple poor
Becaus it makes Peeple bad
Becaus it kills Peeple

so pleas do not give any Licence to mr Cooney or any one and Oblige

Mr. Holt could not laugh with Katy's appealing blue eyes searching his face. "It's a first-class petition," he said. "But I never did sign against the saloon, Katy, and I really hate to get 'em down on me. Tell you what I'll do, though, I won't sign either side this year." And then he turned suddenly to his wife to say, "Mother, have you warmed the shell corn? I'll feed the chickens for you today. It's quite stormy."

Katy was disappointed, but not at all discouraged. She turned to Mrs. Holt when he had gone out, and asked if she might leave little Joe with her. Then she put on her old shawl and hood, and was about to leave the house, when Mr. Holt reappeared.

"Where goin', little one?" he asked.

"To get people to sign my paper," said Katy.

"But it's goin' to storm," said Holt.

"I'm used to storms," said Katy.

"Well, now, I sh'd think you might leave sech a thing as this for older folks, Katy, that are stout and able to 'tend to it."

"But they don't 'tend to it," said Katy. "Maybe they could do it better. But I'll do the best I can—for little Joe."

She started to the door as she spoke, but Holt gently drew her back.

"I'm blamed if I 'low sech foolishness," he groaned. "No, I don't mean I'll hinder ye"—for he saw the tears coming—"but I mean I'm goin' to see you through. Hang it all, where's the pen? There now, there's one name on your paper, little woman. Now you jest set here a minute, an' I'll be 'round with the buggy."

SLEIGH-BELLS.

How many boys and girls know how sleigh bells are made? The little iron ball is too big to be put in through the holes in the bell, and yet it is inside. How did it get there?

This little iron ball is called "the jinglet." When you shake the sleigh bell it jingles. When the horse trots, the bells jingle, jingle, jingle. In making the bell, this jinglet is put inside a little ball of mud, just the shape of the inside of the bell. Then a mould is made just the shape of the outside of the bell. This mud ball with the jinglet inside, is placed in the mould of the outside, and the melted metal is poured in, which fills up the space between the ball and mould.

When the mould is taken off you see a sleigh-bell, but it will not ring, as it is full of dirt. The hot metal dries the dirt that the bell is made of, so it can be shaken out. After the dirt is all shaken out of the holes in the bell, the little iron jinglet will still be in the bell, and will ring.

It took a good many years to think out how to make a sleigh-bell.—Popular Science News.

APRIL SONGS.

Cry-Baby April comes along,
You never can tell whether
She's going to smile
Or cry awhile—
She has such funny weather.

—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Did any of you ever attempt to tell a story and not get it quite straight? I think every hand will go up at that, for very often, try as hard as you may to remember exactly what you have heard, you will find that you cannot express the idea as clearly as you thought you could when you began.

I read the other day a little story which illustrates this. A class in Sunday-school were asked what they knew about King Solomon, when one little girl raised her hand. "King Solomon," said she, "was that wise man who when the two ladies were both claiming the same baby said, 'Bring me my sword and I'll cut him into two twins so you each can have one'!"

No wonder you all laugh so heartily, for that was a very funny way of telling the old story about the baby whose real mother would rather give him up than have him injured and thus proved her right to her child. That was a beautiful story which the little girl spoiled in such a laughable way.

The art of telling a story is a very happy one and can be cultivated by each one who tries. The secret of success is in remembering each important detail and in repeating it correctly. This is an excellent habit to acquire, provided we repeat things worth telling.

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

Mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I sometimes try the Soft-Shelled Nuts. I am a temperance boy. I would like to join your Cozy Corner if you take in Canadians.

BERTIE MCEWAN.
(Age 10.)

Pansy Cottage, Arnprior, Ontario, Can.

Our Cozy Corner is extended, like the ribbon white "around the world." Your request is your admission fee, and "temperance" is the countersign.

I should like to be one of your girls. When auntie gets the paper I get it to find your Cozy Corner. I read about the kittens that belong to Florence Wildrick, and I made a verse about them.

I am a temperance girl, I never tasted wine,
I have two yellow kittens and they are very fine.
They are temperance kittens through and through;
My dollies five are temperance too.

CARRIE SPIKEMAN.

Port Huron, Mich.

We all think the rhyme a good one, Carrie.

I have a white rabbit and it is temperance too. I am nine years old. I wish some of the cousins would write to me. BERTHA STARN.

Beatrice, Neb.

Now they have your address, I am sure they will.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

289.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of sixteen letters, and am the name of a paper loved by temperance children.

My 14, 3, 10, is a bright color.
My 1, 5, 4, 12, is what children like to have.
My 16, 6, 8, lies at the door.
My 2, 11, 15, is color.
My 7, 13, 7, is a receptacle.

CATHERINE MAITLAND.

290.

DROPPED LETTER PUZZLE.

I. G.d b. f.r u. w.o c.n b. a.a.n.t u.?

EDNA GLEASON.

291.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

In tea, not in coffee.
In earnest, not in huffy.
In small, not in large.
In sloop, not in barge.
In eat, not in drink.
In write, not in think.
In and, not in but.
In rend, not in cut.
In care not in woe.
In yes, not in no.

My whole is that for which we are all working.

ETHELYN PIERCE.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MARCH 29.

282. Neal Dow.
283. Neal Dow.

Correct answers: May N. Arrowsmith; Bernice Peart; Genevieve C. Williams; Bertie McEwan; Edith D. Shott Walter Whitman; Mary Lee Fishburn, Willow Hill.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, The Palmetto State. By Julia Mills Dunn 2
At Mr. Jack Stopper's. By Doyle 2
The Socialist Propaganda and the Drink Difficulty. II. By James Whyte 3
The "Sid." By Mary A. Lathbury 3
America's Signal to the Old Country. By Rev. J. Surman Cooke 4
Economic Principles. IV. By Eliza Stowe Twitchell. 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
A Reveille from our National Corresponding Secretary 4
The Origin of Women's Property Laws 5
Let Us Sing It! 5
A Word from Germany 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, I Wonder. By Nellie Goode 6
Mothers' Clubs. V. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D. 6
"The Woman's Cause is Man's." By Frances E. Willard 6
Notes of the Noon Meeting in Willard Hall. By Mrs. Jane E. Zimmerman 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Kind Words 7
For Little Joe. By Eudora Stone Bumstead 7
Sleigh-bells 7
Poem, April Songs 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
False and True Conservatism 8
Capital Punishment 8
Parliamentary Tact 9
SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
CANADIAN FIELD:
Manitoba 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Kansas—Texas—Missouri—New Hampshire 10-12
News in a Nutshell 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Young Women's Branch 12
Announcements 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 12
TREASURER'S CORNER 12
World's Petition 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 13, 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

Trust ye in the Lord forever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.—Isaiah 26:4.

FALSE AND TRUE CONSERVATISM.

Much of the opposition which any forward movement of society excites is due to a common and mistaken fear that if we press forward to that which is beyond we shall lose what we already have. There is, of course, some ground for this fear. It is possible to throw away actual blessings for fanciful ones, and it is the part of wisdom to understand the purport of every proposed change. Nevertheless, there is a side to the question which is quite generally overlooked, and that is that in order to hold fast present good it is absolutely necessary to press on to perfection. There is no such thing as standing still. We must go forward or we shall go backward.

Along some lines this truth is recognized. It is universally conceded that in the physical, mental and moral development of the individual, life means growth, and that he who has ceased to grow has begun to die. But while the same truth may be assented to as a theory, in the case of society and the state practically it is ignored. Multitudes who acknowledge that woman's development thus far has been a blessing to the world strenuously oppose her farther progress, which is the logical, inevitable result of her past development, fearing that it imperils the good already realized. Changes in church polity have always their opponents, who have comparatively little to urge against the changes in themselves, except that they are drifting from ancient landmarks. The old system has worked well in the past; let us not endanger it by trying to improve it, voices their objections. Radical changes in our social structure are opposed, lest we lose the blessings acquired by centuries of struggle.

The fact is that in these and all similar cases our only hope of holding what we have gained lies in pressing on to something better. Truth is eternal progress. One stage is never the ultimate goal, but only a preparation for something beyond. However good the old may have been, it must be adapted to the new needs of the present, and without that adaptation it becomes useless. The Jews vainly thought that they could reject Christ and maintain all that was valuable in Judaism. Their mistake was fatal. Judaism was far above all contemporaneous systems, but it was only a preparation for Christianity. When the fullness of the time was come the law must be swallowed up in the gospel, Judaism must merge into Christianity; in other words, it must obey the law of its growth and become what it was intended to be, as the acorn must become an oak, or die. The world had outlived Judaism, and since Jesus Christ came Judaism has been but an empty shell. Thus it is also with civilizations.

Every civilization has contained the germs of the next stage of human development. According to the natural process, each higher stage should develop by painless growth from the lower one. Man's perversity has superseded the law of life with that of death, and civilizations have had to pass through the agonies of death, that out of their ashes might spring the newer, better life. In the past, Anglo-Saxons have been wont to consider that they had wrought out the perfection of free government, that in our institutions was to be found the ultimate good beyond which human society could never go. Within the last twenty-five years this confidence has been terribly shaken, and the wiser, more far-sighted ones among us clearly see that all the progress which we as a race have made and of which we are justly proud is but preparatory to something beyond, far exceeding anything of which those before us dreamed.

Parliamentary free government, won by the long, brave struggle of our English forefathers, our own national independence, the destruction of slavery, all of these strides have but made ready the way for a brighter era. It is idle to fear that we shall lose present good by seeking something better beyond. It is madness to cling to the old and resist the new. Here as everywhere, we must go forward or we shall go backward. What we already are determines what we are to be. There are but two alternatives, either we must obey the law of our development or die. We can keep the good which we have thus far gained only by farther development. Already our institutions, under the stress of new conditions, are proving inadequate to the work of preserving the liberties secured by hundreds of years of struggle. We have indeed overthrown the tyranny of absolute despotism and hereditary aristocracy and wiped slavery from the civilized earth, but trusts and monopolies are proving themselves more heartless tyrants than absolute despots, sweaters' dens rival the most inhuman practices of slavery, and wealth is the worst aristocracy yet known. The world has outlived our crude, semi-Christian civilization. We must go on to a fuller development, a more complete application of Christian principles in the state or perish.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

The New York legislature has once more taken up the vexed question of capital punishment and has under consideration a bill to abolish it. We say "vexed question" for, although some of our contemporaries have reached that most enviable state of rest and satisfaction which comes from having made up one's mind finally and unchangeably upon any subject and are apparently unable to see that there is more than one side to the matter now in discussion, we are obliged to confess that two sides present themselves to us with disquieting force. Neither side can quote Scripture with conclusive effect for the paradoxical reason that both can.

"Thou shalt not kill," seems explicit and unqualified; but viewed in the light of subsequent history it must be admitted that reasonable ground is afforded for the view that this does not cover the taking of human life as punishment for murder. On the other hand, the words, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," can hardly be interpreted as a command in the light of God's treatment of Cain, but seems rather, as is claimed by many, to be a prophecy, a mere statement of what must necessarily be. Also the fact that capital punishment is permitted to the chosen people, in some cases directly commanded, affords no guidance for conduct under changed conditions. As in many other matters, God could change the customs of the times in this regard only by such a miraculous development of the character of the race as would have destroyed free will.

Capital punishment is one of the many practical questions concerning which God's word does not undertake to give explicit directions for all time and under all possible conditions. It is therefore one to be decided in accordance with the principles of that word in the light of present needs. The question then resolves itself into how is the spirit of the sixth commandment most perfectly obeyed; is or is not the sacredness of human life best preserved by capital punishment?

We have no disposition to minify the arguments in favor of capital punishment. It is urged that the abolition of the death penalty will remove the chief restraint to murder in the minds of hardened criminals. Rather, that it will put a premium upon murder for the burglar who, with the possibility of hanging before his mind, would be exceedingly careful not to kill his victim, may, with this removed, find murder rather to his advantage than otherwise, as it would tend to secure his own escape. Also, it would increase the danger to officers of the law in attempting to arrest a criminal or in guarding life prisoners. The lives of important witnesses in criminal trials would also be greatly imperiled. All of these arguments have great force and should be carefully weighed. On the supposition that there is no other punishment which will act so strongly to deter from murder, they are almost, if not quite, conclusive.

Up to the present, it has been generally assumed that this was the case, but to our minds it is not proven, and additional considerations serve to still further unsettle the question. If we consider what is the condition of things after many years in which capital punishment has been the universally approved method of dealing with murderers, there is reason to doubt its actual efficiency as a specific against murder and lynching. No one can read the daily list of shocking crimes and doubt that both of these crimes have, within the past few years, been steadily on the increase. The cause of this is to be ascribed partly to the rapid ripening in the last quarter of a century of a social system which necessarily makes gold of greater value than human life. A system which makes each man's loss every other man's gain, and vice versa, which offers glittering inducements to one human being to wreck trains filled with thousands of his fellows, will naturally tend to horrid developments in violation of the command, "Thou shalt not kill."

Another cause is to be found in the growing uncertainty of the findings of juries. It has come to such a pass that, however convincing the evidence of guilt, no man can be sure that the jury, in any given case, will not acquit, or at least disagree. Could the death penalty be inflicted with anything approximating uniformity in well-established cases of murder, it would serve as a much greater check than it does at present. But there can be no doubt that the death penalty itself interposes a serious obstacle to securing a verdict of guilty, and hence, often acquits a criminal altogether. When death was the penalty in England for clipping coins and other minor offenses, juries refused to convict even in the face of overwhelming evidence of guilt. In this case, of course, the matter was greatly aggravated by the fact that the punishment was out of all proportion to the offense.

Nevertheless, the principle is the same. To one who has any adequate appreciation of the value of human life, it is a fearful thing to condemn a fellow man to death, and there can be no doubt that in many cases where, were the punishment something less than death, a jury would find the accused guilty, a mere legal quibble suffices to secure a disagreement, or even a verdict of acquittal.

It is a truth not sufficiently emphasized that it is the certainty rather than the severity of punishment that deters from crime. In some cases both elements may be desirable, but where both cannot be attained certainty is to be greatly preferred to severity. The most savage punishment, capriciously inflicted, will not have a tithe of the effect that a much milder punishment will if inflicted with almost inevitable certainty. We fully believe that imprisonment for life at hard labor inflicted twice where death is now inflicted once would prove a far greater preventive of crime than our present uncertain death penalty. We do not attempt to evade the difficulties in the way of this consummation. The legal quibbles which so often defeat the ends of justice must be swept away and this, like everything else, is doubtless "easier said than done." But, as we have already indicated, the adoption of the milder penalty would itself tend to produce this very result. Then, too, the pardoning power must be abolished or greatly restricted.

There is another side to the death penalty, too, an awful feature which those who defend it seem entirely to overlook, and that is its tendency to brutalize the community, to render people insensible to the sacredness of human life and thus to increase the very crime it is designed to prevent. No one denies that familiarity with death renders people insensible to its horrors. This is the more true when death is in the form of deliberate, cold-blooded taking of life. This is the tendency even when the method is the most humane possible, what then must be the effect upon the public mind of the accounts of the bungling hangings given with all their horrid details in the daily papers? But it is contended that all of this is extraneous to the thing itself and can and must be eliminated. Granted that much of it may, it is more than doubtful if with the morbid eagerness for horrors that somehow exists in humanity, it is practically possible to greatly improve the death penalty in its actual operation. We fail to see that death by electricity materially diminishes the terrors.

But, with all unnecessary brutality removed, let any one who has never witnessed an execution, ask himself what it would be to view such a spectacle and, worse yet, what it would be to drop the trap which should swing a fellow mortal into eternity or to send the fatal bolt of electricity, and he will be able to accurately measure the depths to which he must descend before he could be capable of either act and therefore the distance between himself and those who actually participate in the fearful transaction. Yet it is a fact which should not be ignored that capital punishment necessitates just this education in brutality.

At a recent hanging in Chicago we were told that the hangman, who had never before inflicted the death penalty, was pale and trembling and the night before was unable to sleep. That hangman will doubtless be able to perform his duty the next time with less nervous trepidation and, if called upon to perform it enough times, will reach the point finally where he will be able to laugh at his own tremors when he first went into the business. This moral deterioration which the hangman suffers, the entire public shares to a greater or less extent. The infliction of capital punishment directly tends to the making of murderers by familiarizing people with the taking of human life. Whether it more than counteracts this by acting as a deterrent of crime is an open question.

PARLIAMENTARY TACT.

Among the difficulties and perplexities which beset the local union is one which often causes annoyance to the more experienced and orderly worker—and there are usually such in every W. C. T. U., however isolated—and one which requires time and tact and patience to overcome. We refer to the use of parliamentary law.

This difficulty is not so likely to be met with in unions whose members are more or less experienced in organized work, but it is sometimes a perplexing feature in localities where women's clubs and literary associations, perhaps even women's church societies are unknown, and women are unaccustomed to "belonging." To the earnest but untrained worker the formalities of rules of order, if too strictly applied, frequently serve as a check, where such is not intended, and tends to cool the enthusiasm of the new member. On the other hand, to the better trained, the ignoring of parliamentary rules, or the too careless application of them, causes vexation of spirit and temporary discouragement. It is of the greatest importance, therefore, that in order not to retard the accomplishment of the very end for which the organization is striving, leaders should proceed tactfully and judiciously in this matter.

Where it is found that members are awed into awkward restraint and unnatural silence by the—to them—complexities of parliamentary law, it is better, in the early stages of organization, to meet in a social and informal manner to consider the situation and plan for some line of aggressive action. In such a case Roberts' Rules should be used sparingly—administered in homœopathic doses as it were—and it will not be long before the members find themselves taking kindly and naturally to parliamentary practice.

Women, as a class, possess an inherent love of order. Their aptitude in preserving order, "Heaven's first law," be it in household affairs or in National Conventions, is universally conceded. They take to "managing," whether it be a husband or a World's Fair, as a Scotchman takes to his native heath, or a duck takes to water. Hence, it is not surprising that women are quick to adapt themselves to the requirements of organized movement and fall in line without friction when they are led to parliamentary usages instead of having parliamentary usages thrust upon them.

We can point to many a local union which has wrought marvelous things by beginning in the most unparliamentary, but at the same time by no means disorderly way. One of these, starting with some twenty members in a small town on the western prairies, was made up largely of busy homekeepers with small children and no "help." The question was, how to carry on the work so that every woman might feel she was a factor in it, how arrange for interesting meetings and a full attendance.

It was decided to meet in the homes of members, or of others who would give them welcome, and a general invitation was extended to the women of the community to come and bring their babies and their workbaskets. The response was encouraging, and while keeping an eye on the children or darning the family hose, these women talked, or listened to talk, about the work of the saloon on the corner and how to get it out of the way. No objection was made if sometimes in the enthusiasm and interest of the moment all spoke at once, if only they spoke to the point, but before they separated the afternoon's talk was always crystallized into business transacted in a business-like way, and thus sentiment became manifest in action which resulted a few months later in a "dry" community.

We hope no reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will misunderstand us in this matter. We have no desire to minify the importance of parliamentary practice in our local unions. On the contrary, regarding it as essential to the training of white-ribboners for effective work, we would emphasize it and urge upon unions wherever practicable to make a systematic study of the subject. Parliamentary drills are entertaining as well as instructive and should be an occasional feature of both W and Y meetings.

But let no local leader feel discouraged because she cannot all in a minute, induce her comrades, these bright, energetic women, overflowing with the true Crusade spirit, to "mind the rule." For important as are rules of order it must be remembered that the W. C. T. U. is not primarily a training school for parliamentarians; it is a center for the promulgation of the Christian temperance idea. Its great aim is the extinction of the liquor evil and all the machinery of work must be made subservient to that end.

QUERY.—Is the National W. C. T. U. absolutely non-partisan?

ANSWER.—We supposed our position had been made tolerably clear by this time, but will state it once more: The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will "lend its influence" to that party, by whatever name called, which gives in its platform the best exposition of our principles, and it is well known that our cardinal doctrines are prohibition by law, prohibition by politics, prohibition by woman's ballot. The National Prohibition party is the only one that has as yet framed these planks into its platform, and for that reason it is, as a matter of course, the only one to which we have "lent our influence," or can under existing circumstances.

Q.—Please let your readers know in THE UNION SIGNAL what good the Parliament of Religions has done for mankind. Our Lord seems to teach in the gospel that there is but one way of salvation, and He is the way. Paul at Athens, Ephesus, Rome, does not approve of the Ethic Religions. Read his Epistle to the Romans (chap 1, verse 18) to the end of the chapter. MRS. J. MITCHELL.

A.—It would seem as if THE UNION SIGNAL had already expressed itself with sufficient clearness upon the Parliament of Religions. It is one of the many subjects upon which there must always be abundant scope for individual opinion. To us, personally, anything must do good which brings humanity together and proves its oneness. "He hath made of one blood all nations of men" is a great fundamental truth which we are not so willing to admit as was Paul at Athens.

While we believe with all our heart that the one perfect revelation of God to humanity came through Jesus Christ; while we acknowledge Him as "the way, the truth and the life," we also believe that every religion on earth to-day is either a perversion or a memory of the great primal revealing which came ages before Christ, and before Abraham. The light has been refracted through many human prisms, but, traced back to its source, it is one light. To recognize our points of oneness rather than our points of divergence is, we believe, the true function of the missionary work of to-day. We can antagonize the followers of other religions by a wholesale denunciation, or we can, in the spirit of Paul on Mars Hill, recognize all that they hold in common with us, and, from that point of vantage, go on to the fuller revelation.

Moreover, Paul's ground of quarrel in the 1st chapter of Romans was not against heathen religions, per se, but against "all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness."

There are those in Christian countries and in the most orthodox of folds who come under that denunciation. To hold a truth in the head and denounce it in the life is more damnable than to bow down to idols of stone. Indeed, it was because of such a holding of truth that bowing down to idols first became possible. The idols of Christianity are less grotesque, but when compared with our greater light, are they any the less idols?

The good of the Parliament? It has brought men nearer to each other, and thus nearer to God. It has opened our eyes to the great truth that He has never left Himself without a witness. It has shown the incomparable superiority of the true Christianity and Christ-ideal over all other religions. It has brought us in touch with the central truth of all religions, which is God, thus making it possible for us the better to present Christ, as the perfect revealer of God, and therefore, by just so much it has hastened the incoming of His kingdom.

A man had three houses to sell; the middle one was good, the others were illustrative of the Gothic in architecture. "I will buy the middle one," said a customer. "No, you can't have one unless you take all," replied the owner. "If that middle one were gone the other two would fall down, don't you see?" So it is of the other great reforms of our day, in their relation to the temperance movement, since the clear, normal brain must always be a condition precedent to success in every other undertaking.

***

Hast thou named all the birds without a gun?
Loved the wood-rose and left it on its stalk?
At rich men's tables eaten bread and pulse?
Unarmed, faced danger with a heart of trust?
And loved so well a high behavior,
In man or maid, that thou from speech refrained,
Nobility more nobly to repay?
Oh, be my friend, and teach me to be thine!

—Emerson.

***

Said one of God's "saints on earth" recently, "An impulse to pray is God saying to His child through the Holy Spirit, 'Give me a tighter hold on your hand—quick!'" Many a danger besets the path of the Christian unseen or unrecognized, but not hidden from the all-seeing Father who would save His dear ones "unto the uttermost." Their part is to keep in touch with Him and never fail to obey the call of the Spirit. When a longing comes over the soul to shut itself away a minute or an hour in prayer —pray! Pray though the sky falls. Second thoughts are never best in such instances; the impulse is divinely sent. Let the Father thus clasp our hands more closely—He alone knows the need for it in this Satan-beset life.

***

There has been a somewhat flippant paragraph going the rounds of the press of late, entitled, "Drank Too Much Wine," referring to a church in one of the great cities where the pastor thinks his flock partake too freely of the communion wine. Reverent hearts are shocked at the insinuation, and the lightly worded incident induces to silence rather than comment. Yet it must be acknowledged that even this sacred "outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual" communion has become in not a few instances a very "cup of devils" rather than a cup of blessing and joy. The thirst of the body for alcoholics becomes so blended with soul-thirst for sin that even the altar and the sacred communion table is not regarded holily, and unless the church will put away poison from her chalices and substitute therefor the pure, unfermented juice of the grape, our Lord Himself cannot be present at the feast, for how can He bless that which carries cursing? This is no new evil. What says St. Paul? "What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God? . . . What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not. . . . If any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation." That crime was hasty greed. The crime to-day is the temptation of weak flesh by that which Christ never meant to be used in His name.

***

There is a great deal said about the "discipline of sorrow," a great deal that is true and uplifting. Yet it happens ofttimes that these visitors knock at the door of a soul so blinded by the sudden blow that the thought of any need to itself of such heroic treatment brings bitterness and rebellion. To such an one, there is a door of comfort open in this,—that not itself, perhaps, but others may need that it should suffer so. Was not this the truth of Calvary, and the bitter way that led to it, the Via Dolorosa? That One, altogether lovely, needed not the flame of any purifying fires. He was oppressed, afflicted and wounded, that He might thus be able forever to stretch out hands of comfort to His children and say to them, "I know." We need not alone salvation; we need sympathy. He means that every one of His disciples should be a mediator between sorrowing, sinning souls and Himself, even as He was between us and the Father. A heart that knows no sorrow is of little use in the deep things of life. Without pain we would never fly to the great heart of "the God of all comfort: who comforteth us in all our tribulation that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." Thus, even while our heart and our flesh cry out under the lash of exceeding great pain, we may say, "I will not grieve over much. No other way could I have learned the road to suffering hearts; no other path could I have trod and reached thereby such kinship with the Master." ON DUTY.

Canadian Field.

MANITOBA.

TEMPERANCE ENDEAVORS.

Large majorities in favor of the total prohibition of the liquor traffic have become epidemic in our Canadian provinces. The honor of taking the first step towards ascertaining the will of the people by means of a plebiscite vote belongs to Manitoba.

At the general election, July 23, 1892, the electors were given an opportunity to record their opinions upon prohibition. The result of the ballot was a majority for prohibition of 11,522.

The temperance sentiment has made great progress in Canada, especially in Manitoba. We have prohibition in more than half of our Province at the present time. There are eighty-nine incorporated cities, towns, villages and rural municipalities in the Province. Thirty-one of these have licenses. As the cities, towns and villages are within the rural municipalities, a better way to estimate the prohibition territory would be to take the rural municipalities by themselves. There are seventy of these and just thirty-five of them have no-license within their borders.

The W. C. T. U. has probably done its best work during the past year in advancing the interest of equal suffrage. A largely signed petition from the rural portions of the Province was presented to the legislature at the recent session, asking for full suffrage for women. Last year we presented a larger petition, chiefly from the cities and towns, We did not succeed in getting a bill passed, but a thorough canvass of the members revealed the fact that we had gained some votes during the year.

In Winnipeg and several parts of the Province, public discussions have been held on this question. At the recent prohibition convention held in Winnipeg, the following resolution was carried with only a few dissenting voices:

"That this convention sympathize with all efforts to secure such legislation as will give women equal rights at the ballot box as are accorded to men, and that this convention pledges itself to do all in its power to secure the same."

There are four unions in Winnipeg. The Y is doing a fine work under the president, Mrs. Wallace, who is a woman of great energy, and full of resources. They have had an interesting lecture course during the past winter. Some of the subjects under discussion were: "The Laws Relating to Women," "A Woman's Experience as a Journalist," "Woman's Sphere," "What I saw at the World's Fair," etc. The women who have taken part are: Mrs. Dr. Blakely, Provincial president W. C. T. U.; Miss Buchan, editor of Saturday Night, Dr. Amelia Yeomans, Mrs. Colin H. Campbell and others.

This Y has a reading-room for girls with a paid secretary. Evening classes under competent instructors are held during the week. Sewing, singing and ordinary school studies are taken up. They gave a reception to the students of the Provincial Normal school. The Neal Dow celebration was arranged by this same Y, and was held in the Central Congregational church, which was decorated with white ribbon, Union Jacks and stars and stripes.

A pretty idea in the decorations was carried out, that of connecting the national flags of the two great nations with the white ribbon emblem; a pole about six feet high was erected in the gallery over the pulpit, the head-piece being Canada's beaver, and from the pole was draped on one side the Union Jack and on the other the stars and stripes, while great loops of wide white ribbon hung between them.

There were over twenty two-to-five minute addresses on the program besides the oration by the Rev. R. G. McBeth. Of course there was not time for all—for what speaker ever imagines that his two minute speech always takes ten minutes to deliver. Mrs. Dr. Blakely and Dr. Amelia Yeomans spoke for the W. C. T. U. and their speeches compared favorably with those of the brethren. There was an excellent musical program, selections from the Y song book. Miss Gertie Jones recited very well the Modern Mother Hubbard. A telegram was sent to Neal Dow. Five hundred copies of the Neal Dow number of THE UNION SIGNAL were distributed after the meeting and nearly a thousand beautiful programs were distributed in the audience at the beginning of the meeting.

The Central W. C. T. U. recently held a successful spelling match to raise funds for their literature department. The first prize was a fine picture of Miss Willard handsomely framed.

Loyal Temperance Legion work is progressing finely in Manitoba. Last month a strong Legion was organized in Grace Church, Winnipeg, and from different parts of the Province comes the cheering news that the superintendents are ordering supplies for their spring and summer work. The active union at Manitou has had two Demorest medal contests since Christmas. A portion of the amount realized was given to foreign missionary work, and some was used to increase the library of the union which now numbers one hundred and twenty volumes of standard temperance works.

The Neepawa union has been assisting the Y. M. C. A. of that town in providing a reading room for young men. The same energetic union has prevented the licensing of hotels in that town and now they are waging war against the brewery. To this end they have circulated a petition and canvassed every rate-payer and if a non-resident they have written for authority to place his name on the list. Such earnest endeavor is worthy of commendation.

The Souris union, which is one of the younger organizations, is progressing finely. The young men of the town during the winter gave them a benefit carnival in the skating rink.

Mrs. Blakely has just visited Carberry, Douglas and McGregor. They have a large Legion in Carberry, over seventy members. They also have an anti-treating society pledge and a large number of gentlemen have signed the same. She organized an L. T. L. in McGregor with thirty members.

BELLE MCARTHUR,
Provincial Reporter, Winnipeg.

KANSAS.

APRIL GREETINGS.

"Come, gentle Spring! ethereal Mildness! come."

The ever recurring annual return of the months of spring is upon us, as evidenced by the swelling of the buds on leafless branches; the opening of the earliest spring blossoms "to paint the laughing soil"; the busy going to and fro of the farmers as they prepare the ground and sow the seed for the harvest, which they are assured will follow in its appointed time.

The W. C. T. U's have also donned their working clothes and have begun active work, preparing the ground—so to speak—and sowing the seed which they have faith to believe will yield an abundant harvest by and by. The spring conventions are now in order; several have already been held, while others are arranged for the near future.

The third district convened in the M. E. church at Parsons, March 6 and 7. Mrs. J. M. Kemp, of Cherokee, a tireless worker, is president of the district; Miss Ada M. Robinson, of Girard, is secretary. Miss Helen L. Kimber, of Parsons, the district treasurer, is working for the suffrage amendment throughout the state, lecturing and organizing campaign clubs, meeting with signal success wherever she is called.

The National superintendent of railroad work, Mrs. C. M. Woodward, of Nebraska, was present at the convention, also state president Smith. A Cooper medal contest was held the first evening and an address by Mrs. Woodward occupied the second. These items I glean from the program sent me, which if fully carried out gave the third district an instructive as well as enjoyable session.

Cowley county W. C. T. U. met at Arkansas City, in Congregational church, welcomed by the pastor, Rev. De Long and Rev. I. N. Merrifield, responses by delegates and by county president, Mrs. Ruby. Afternoon session was very interesting and many good plans were laid for future work. A Demorest medal contest was by four persons of middle age and one aged gentleman, all of whom did nobly. This county has three unions, fifty-five members, two L. T. L's with a membership of sixty. The query box evolved much discussion of vexed problems. Several departments were reported and a franchise symposium held. Twenty dollars were raised for the county work.

Douglas county met at Baldwin, good reports were given. Mrs. Smith lectured on "The American Boy."

Atchison county convened at Muscotah. Reports received from the five local unions of the county gave evidence of increase in membership and also in interest. The lecture of the convention was given by Dr. Brumbaugh, subject, "Grappling with the Giant."

Clay county met at Pleasant Valley. Evening address by Mrs. Sarah L. Stoner, on the topic, "What has the W. C. T. U. done for humanity?" Facts from constitutions and by-laws created much interest. The president drove sixteen miles to reach convention, another officer eighteen, through roads almost impassable.

Johnson county held its spring convention at Olathe. Sickness in the family of the president prevented her attendance and Mrs. Barnes was elected chairman. Papers were read on temperance in Sunday-schools, railroad work and scientific temperance instruction. The suffrage question was discussed, led by Mrs. Mead and Brother Stout, he taking the negative, not from choice, as he said, but for sake of argument. In the evening Mrs. Clark recited a very appropriate selection and Rev. E. F. St. John made, as she always does, an admirable and eloquent address.

Jewell county: The convention held in this county spent a part of its time very profitably in studying the departments of franchise and press with a view to active and aggressive work during the coming campaign. This is still the banner county in point of unions, having eight unions square on the books, and three good L. T. L. organizations. Mankato union observed Crusade day and as a visible result secured one active member and one pledged helper.

Harper county: Freeport union held its Crusade meeting Sunday evening. THE UNION SIGNAL was taken as the basis of program. "Our twenty years' march" was taken up, each member reading a part. The "Call from our Chieftain" was read by one of the strong temperance young men of the place. A large picture of Miss Willard was given a place of honor on the platform, and was introduced to the audience. The history of the Crusade psalm was given, the president delivered an address. Songs from the White Ribbon Hymnal were sung and four new members and two honoraries were secured. Collection was good for hard times. The entire meeting was an inspiration to all.

Dickinson county: The Abilene union held Crusade services and also one of the others (the name has unfortunately disappeared from my list). Papers were read, also three minute talks upon the subject; this with good music and the history of the Crusades from the early centuries up to the temperance Crusade, out of which was evolved the W. C. T. U., completed the program.

Osage county: The union at Quenemo has been engaged in an anti-cigarette campaign, presenting a petition to each of the dealers in town asking them to agree to carefully observe the law of our state regarding the sale of tobacco to minors, also not to sell cigarettes or cigarette paper after April 1. The agreement was signed by every dealer except one, and he has since declared his purpose to obey the law.

SUFFRAGE NOTES.

The action of the state editorial association on the question of equal suffrage was very gratifying to the suffragists. Like the state teachers' association it declared in favor of the amendment by a decisive majority. There were no party lines drawn in this vote, members of every political party voting in favor of the amendment. The "Boston Remonstrants" have been keeping up their past record, and have forwarded circular letters to all Republican editors warning them of the dangers to their party should the amendment carry; and asking them to publish their letter as editorial matter. Kansas editors of every party are quite like other Kansans, and don't care to be dictated to by others, so judging by extracts received from a large number of our state papers the remonstrance met with "cold comfort," and the contents of the editorial waste baskets received large additions.

Discussions on the pending amendment are being held all over the state, in literary and secret societies. This cannot fail to do much good. The children of our public schools debate the question, and have donned the yellow ribbon for the campaign. The climate of Kansas will be unusually warm this summer, no doubt, and not all of the warmth will be registered by the thermometer. I understand that the state amendment committee is arranging to hold two days meetings in each of our one hundred and five counties during the season.

The state W. C. T. U. executive committee will hold its semi-annual meeting at Burlingame, April 10 and 11. There will be one vacant chair—that one so long occupied by our lamented state treasurer, M. L. Berry, so recently "promoted" from our ranks. Her presence and wise counsels will be greatly missed. Miss O. P. Bray was temporarily appointed to fill the vacancy.

President Smith has been called from her "field work" to the bedside of a sick brother at Burlingame.

Fourth district will hold school of methods in each county this spring in place of the usual semi-annual district convention.

The officers of the Kansas W. C. T. U. joined in the protest against the increase of the federal tax on whisky.

MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY,
State Reporter, Le Roy.

TEXAS.

GOOD WORK.

The itinerary of our state president for the last few weeks has been full of interest and much good has been accomplished. Nothing gave her more pleasure than addressing the L. T. L. in the Orphans' State Home near Corsicana. The Misses Yates are the leaders of the Legion assisted by the teachers of the institution. They build for eternity. Two public meetings and one for the women were held in Corsicana but the severe cold interfered with the attendance.

Mexia was visited and the teachers of Limestone county addressed on the subject of scientific temperance instruction with hearty response from enlightened educators. At Kosse a public meeting was held and much enthusiasm was displayed especially among the "men people."

In Waco the largest crowd that has ever attended a W. C. T. U. meeting in that city greeted Mrs. Stoddard in the beautiful Christian church. Three little children sang "Some Glad Day" and the "amen" at the end brought a burst of applause. A unique reception was given at Mrs. Kirkpatrick's. The refreshments were ginger-bread and water. Flowers and pleasant converse enlivened the hours, and dusk came before the last caller departed.

The Waco Y was organized of consecrated young women and young men not a few. A meeting was afterward held, to study plan of work and for parliamentary drill.

At Temple one public meeting and several ladies' meetings were held. This new union is gathering strength. The railroad men have asked their coöperation in keeping up a reading room for them, which they are enthusiastic in doing. Wills Point union gave a medal contest. Mrs. Stoddard was one of the judges, and delivered the medal to Miss Emma Gatewood, whose subject was "A Black Eye for Lager Beer." A fine program was rendered; the music was very good.

Mrs. Stoddard addressed the L. T. L. Sunday afternoon. Sunday night her subject was W. C. T. U. work and Monday night the character of Deborah and woman's work in general. She also gave a model W. C. T. U. meeting Tuesday afternoon and a parliamentary drill. Twenty-two new members was the result.

Hillsboro was the place of assembly of the Hill county teachers. The state president hastened there through cold and snow to address them on scientific temperance. The wisdom of a special address was again exemplified. Twenty-seven subscribed to the Monthly Advices. Mrs. Goodman accompanied Mrs. Stoddard to Italy and Judge Abney and others arranged for the public meeting. Crowded house greeted them. Italy has never had an open saloon but has two fine colleges.

Ennis is aroused on the subject of local option. Crowds and enthusiasm attest how dear to the heart of the people is the protection of the home against the saloon.

The McGregor Y recently gave a "gypsy social," had a good time for a little trouble and made thirteen dollars and twenty-five cents, and added four new honoraries to their pledge book.

The state superintendent of L. T. L., Miss Margaret Angus, was recently called to Granger to organize an L. T. L. Fifty-six names were given for membership. One of the pastors of the town who had been an inveterate user of tobacco, came forward and asked others to join him in signing the pledge against tobacco. Several came forward throwing away their tobacco. Thirteen new members were added to the Granger union.

Hutte L. T. L. has increased to seventy members. Austin L. T. L's last entertainment was a success in every respect.

San Antonio central union conducts a gospel temperance meeting every Sunday afternoon and feel that they are really doing some good along that line. Dr. and Mrs. Chaffin are faithful in their jail work. Quite a number have been converted and joined the church, the pastor going to the jail to receive them. The San Antonio Y has frequent social entertainments but do not repeat them though they have been requested to do so. West End L. T. L. had a most delightful entertainment in February. All the recitations, with a few exceptions, were taken from back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL. The music was from "Marching Songs." All was well received and a good collection was the result.

West End union celebrated Neal Dow's birthday. There was a large audience. A fine program consisting of readings, good music, solos, duetts, quartettes and congregational singing. The collection amounted to eight dollars.

The Demorest medal contest by the West End L. T. L. was well attended though coming most too close to Easter celebrations. The medal was awarded to George Golden, whose subject was "A Contest for Truth," by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne.

Mrs. Hoffman's lectures were well received everywhere. Her subject in Dallas was, "The Problems that Face Us."

Much interest is felt in the L. T. L. room in the Temperance Hospital. Taylor has given three dollars, the largest amount contributed. Houston follows with one dollar and fifty cents and Austin with one dollar and thirty-five cents.

At the request of the president of the West End union, San Antonio, Rev. A. E. Rector preached a temperance sermon on March 18, in which he affirmed his belief in total abstinence, total prohibition, unfermented wine for the sacrament and woman's suffrage.

CORNELIA KEITH CARTER,
State Reporter, San Antonio.

MISSOURI.

"ALL AT IT, AND ALWAYS AT IT."

"He that goeth forth with weeping,
Bearing precious seed in love,
Never tiring, never sleeping,—"

How many of our unions that seems to describe. Earnest, patient, persistent seed sowing by the workers everywhere we may well believe

"Findeth mercy from above."

The St. Joseph Central union have had a shower of blessing. Rev. Culpepper, a noted evangelist of the South Methodist church, a man who always wears our white ribbon, held revival meetings in St. Joseph, and devoted one afternoon to a temperance prayer-meeting, in which he invited all present to come forward, sign the pledge and join the W. C. T. U. Fifty persons responded. And a little later another meeting was held, especially in the interests of the W. C. T. U., and one hundred more names were given to the union through Brother Culpepper's efforts.

LECTURES.

Mrs. E. A. Cranmer, of South Dakota, visited many unions in her five weeks of work in the state, and was especially a force in helping to make the W. C. T. U. popular, adding many new members to the unions.

Mrs. R. Foster Stone gave a week's course of lectures at King City, and at Bethany a series of ten lectures were given by the same speaker, assisted by Col. John Sobieski and Prof. A. C. Folsom. Great good was the result of these lectures, at the latter place four hundred signing the pledge and forty new members being added to the union.

Mr. D. Ward King has given a prohibition lecture for the Virdella union.

Mr. H. Barney, of New York, has lectured for the unions at Meadville, Butler and Adrian. He is a gospel temperance revivalist of strong Christian power, and has added many members to the unions in his work.

Miss Mattie Bender, of Trenton, state superintendent of physical culture, has visited Springfield, Osceola and Appleton City, in each place organizing a permanent class and giving several days' instruction. Much interest has been awakened in this department wherever she has gone.

SOCIAL MEETINGS

Are a most helpful and popular line of work, many unions having one each month. The St. Joseph Central union each year marks Feb. 22 by giving a Martha Washington tea, the occasion being especially enjoyed this year. Appleton City gives monthly teas, the ladies meeting in the afternoon and sewing upon articles for sale —one of their ways for replenishing the treasury.

Sedalia union recently gave a ten-cent tea at which a hundred people were present, and are planning now a "Living Library" social. Kahoka has recently given two teas, and thereby gained nine members.

The Carondelet union, of St. Louis, each year celebrates the birthday of Mrs. Hoffman, our state president, by a social and free-will offering, an especially successful meeting being held this year.

Pierce City had a "tea" on what proved to be a rainy afternoon, yet thirty-five women met, enjoyed the fine program prepared, and the treasury gained nine dollars and twenty-five cents. At Lamar, a luncheon in connection with a mothers' meeting was attended by fifty women, and a helpful time enjoyed.

Carrolton also reports two good social meetings. The book social recently given by the St. Louis district was a complete success, five hundred books being donated for the library at the city jail. The sale of candy and refreshments at this social netted about thirty-five dollars. A number of women, accompanied by two or three ministers carried these books to the jail, March 10, and formally presented them to the proper officials, very earnest devotional exercises being conducted.

Regular

PUBLIC TEMPERANCE MEETINGS

once a month are an established feature of the work in many unions, a standing committee on program having direction of the matter, and the president or a vice-president presiding. No better line of effort can be found for stirring up public sentiment and advancing the interests of the union.

Pineville recently had her first public meeting which was a great success. The courthouse was packed, more coming out than had attended Mrs. Hoffman's lecture. Rocheport, as the result of such meetings, has trebled her membership. Carrollton has had a week of continuous meetings addressed by home pastors and Catholic priest. Would that every union carried on this work systematically.

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTESTS

go merrily on. Several unions report almost enough silver contests held to have a gold one. In some cases admittance is charged. In others, a collection is taken from the larger audience called out. Temperance music is being made most helpful in contests and various other public temperance meetings, "The White Ribbon Hymnal," and other good temperance song books being used. The unions report temperance sentiment greatly increased by Demorest contests.

Tenth district reporter, Mrs. Georgia Woodhull, writes: "Public sentiment is gradually growing along the lines of temperance in the tenth district. Ellsberg's oldest and most solid newspaper has given a column weekly to the W. C. T. U. Scientific temperance is taught in each department of the Wellsville public school. Middletown has organized an L. T. L. which is doing good work. Our district president, Mrs. Lewis, is doing much work among the young people; has organized a successful Y at Cottleville, and as a result of a lecture she gave at St. Charles College, twenty signed the pledge. She lectured at Central Wesleyan College in Warrensburg, to an appreciative audience where they have decided to organize a college Y. Louisiana has pledged one hundred dollars to the Temple. St. Charles Y has eight active and eighteen honorary members. They are holding socials and a greater interest is constantly growing."

From fifth district report I glean: Two new L. T. L's have been organized, the one at Parnell being specially vigorous. Barnard union is prospering and continues to enroll new members. This is accomplished by the individual efforts of the members. Maryville held a very successful mass-meeting in the east part of the city recently. A delightful reception was given Mrs. Cranmer, over fifty invited guests being present. The various lines of department work are being pushed. Clarksville writes: "We have just put 550 pages in our literature boxes at depots. We keep them filled in both ladies' and gentlemen's rooms. Harrisonville has sent a copy of the state minutes to each pastor in the place and has made a specialty of distributing The Overshadowing Curse. This union keeps up departments of jail work, literature, narcotics and press work. Newark is doing petition work. La Fayette union, St. Louis, is making literature and evangelistic work the specialty. Virdella union is furnishing unfermented wine for sacramental use. Meadville is rejoicing because a whisky restaurant which had crept into town has been driven out. Luray is another place where "them women" have proved too much for a would-be saloon-keeper and he has departed to find more congenial society.

The Rocheport Y which has doubled its membership since its organization in November, gave a very successful entertainment of a musical and literary sort a short time ago, and since then have had a fine Demorest contest.

The Cole Camp Y have lately had a well planned parlor meeting, one feature of the program being a paper edited by one of the honoraries, Professor Allen. They have a parlor meeting each month, and are expecting to start an L. T. L. this spring.

Appleton City union has held regular weekly meetings for ten years, and been cheered with the growing interest and attendance the past year. This union calls many lecturers, the latest being Colonel Bain, March 19. They also had a mass temperance meeting of the Sunday-schools March 18.

There was a very general observance by public memorial meetings of

NEAL DOW'S NINETIETH BIRTHDAY.

In Clinton, the anti-saloon army and the W. C. T. U. united to celebrate, holding the meeting in two churches for the sake of sufficient audience room, with the one program repeated at both places.

The meeting of the state executive committee at Fayette, March 15 and 16, laid out plans for future aggressive work in several lines which will be set forth in a circular letter to all the unions of the state.

"Onward, Christian soldier, Christ, the royal Master, leads against the foe."

EVA JONES,
State Reporter, Clinton.

NEW HAMPSHIRE NEWS.

Among our live and active unions we are very happy to report Wolfboro. They have a room at the Mercy Home in Manchester, for which they have sent a box of clothing and bedding within a few months. They have raised fifty dollars toward a permanent fund of one hundred dollars, the interest of which is to be used to sustain the room. This union has sent two large sugar barrels to the lumber camp in the past year and a large number of comfort bags.

Crusade day was observed, and their thank-offering was sent to Mrs. Woodbridge. The union is small, consisting of only twenty-five members, and, as is often the case, a few bear the heaviest end of the beam.

A law and order league was formed in Concord recently, with Hon. D. H. Goodell, of Antrim, president. The vice-presidents were one from each county in the state. A series of meetings will be held all over the state. A list of speakers will be furnished upon application to the state secretary, and arrangements made for lectures. A temperance library is opened at the law and order league headquarters, to which all are invited to contribute.

Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, of Roslindale, Mass., has made a lecture trip through ten towns with good results. There was a surplus from the collections and Mrs. Gleason gave five dollars to swell the amount for the running expenses of the Mercy Home. Fifty-six dollars was also raised by private solicitation which went toward the land debt.

Mrs. J. R. Nichols, of Indiana, had a series of eight engagements. She attended five county conventions. Mrs. Nichols is a fine speaker and won applause wherever she went.

At a temperance service which was held in Hopkinton an essay was read by the president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. F. H. Bailey, upon the World and National W. C. T. U. Conventions, held in Chicago in October. Rev. C. W. Williams, of Contoocook, a favorite speaker and a zealous temperance advocate, addressed the meeting. There was singing by the choir from the new book "White Ribbon Vibrations." A collection was taken for the benefit of the W. C. T. U. treasury.

The annual meeting of the Rockingham County Temperance association was held in New Market. Rev. A. L. Smith spoke on the "Saloon and the Church," Charles T. Wiggin, "The Saloon Crime and Taxation." There were other speakers and Miss A. E. McIntire's remarks were upon the saloon and how it affects the home. Rev. J. W. Adams lectured in the evening. Other clergymen were present and took part in the exercises. Personal responsibility and how shall we meet it was the subject of the evening.

Newmarket held a Crusade meeting under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The meeting was opened with prayer, singing and Scripture lesson. A paper giving many incidents regarding the Crusade was read, after a beautiful song solo. Miss McIntire spoke briefly of "Twenty Years' Work," closing with these remarks: "The hope of our nation is in the children, the incoming generation, those who are educated to hate the liquor traffic in all its forms. What we need is not so much new laws, as men and women who will enforce the law; this we expect from the rising generation." Four new members were received into the union that day; copies of THE UNION SIGNAL were distributed; Miss Harvey read an appropriate selection. It was a very enjoyable meeting.

Dover W. C. T. U. observed Crusade Day. Praise and prayer-meeting was the opening. Mrs. Gleason's address was a pleasant feature. She gave earnest and encouraging words for the future work.

The Manchester Times publishes a list of seventy towns in New Hampshire that are free from the sale of liquor. Mrs. G. D. Colby, of Henniker W. C. T. U., has an essay in the same paper on the influence of a mother over her children, which was read at one of the regular meetings of the W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. held a meeting at Berch Intervale recently, at which the ladies did good work in entertaining and instructing those present. In the afternoon several gentlemen spoke, strongly and to the point. Rev. Mr. Baker, of Sandwich Center, be-

QUALITY, WORKMANSHIP, And SHAPES UNEQUALED.
1.00 1.25 1.50
Ferris' Good Sense Corset Waist.

MODERN Ideas of HEALTHFUL Dress are PERFECTED in this Waist.
Either Clasps or Buttons.
Worn by over a million Mothers, Misses and Children. Buttons at front instead of clasps. Clamp Buckle at hip for hose supporters. Tape fastened buttons—won't pull off. Cord edge button holes—won't wear out. All sizes: all shapes. Full or slim bust; long or short waist.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago, Western Wholesale Depot.
FOR SALE BY ALL LEADING RETAILERS.
Send for illustrated circular to
FERRIS BROS. Manufacturers and Patentees.
Principal Office—341 Broadway, NEW YORK.
Branch Office—537 Market St., San Francisco.

A GOOD BROTH IS HALF A DINNER

EVERY ONE can afford to use Clam Bouillon for Lunch, Dinner and Tea at 20 cents a quart. Enough for a whole family. Prepared in five minutes from a bottle of
BURNHAM'S CLAM BOUILLON
Quality improved, price reduced, larger bottles. All Grocers sell it.
E. S. BURNHAM CO.,
120 Gansevoort St., N.Y.
Sample bottle, 10 cents; makes a pint.

"The STANDARD"
The only Dripless Strainer in the World
No drip to soil table linen. No wires to clog spout. No falling off. Beautifully nickel-plated.

Agents Wanted
Sent to any address on receipt of price, 25 cents.
Standard Strainer Co., 34 Maiden Lane, New York City

No local dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.
WALL PAPER
Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples
Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.
We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.
ALFRED PEATS,
30-32 W. 18th St., NEW YORK. 186-188 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

FOR MAN AND BEAST.
Manufactured by
THE J. L. Mott Iron Works
84 to 90 Beekman Street, NEW YORK.
311 & 313 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Catalogue on Application.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK
UNDER STATE SUPERVISION.
Savings Deposits Draw 4 Per Ct. Interest, Payable Quarterly.
SAFETY DEPOSIT VAULTS. | Dearborn & Jackson Sts., CHICAGO.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Sound Discs are invisible, and comfortable. Relieve more cases of DEAFNESS
than all devices in the world. H. A. Wales, 674 Ashland Block, Chicago.

lieves in handling the sin of intemperance with ungloved hands. There was a general revival of the interest in the subject, and all felt well repaid for their effort in attending the meeting.

Crusade Day was observed by Franklin W. C. T. U. The weather was bad but the program was good. Mrs. C. C. Paige presided; then the congregation sang, "Throw out the life line": Miss C. E. Rowell, secretary of the state union, read a paper, during which she gave an account of a crusade in the town of Franklin in 1864, when fifty-three women went forth among the liquor dealers and put them to flight with a written promise that they would sell no more liquor, and for many months it was a scarce article. The western Crusade was later—several years; so this was an original method in this small town. Papers were read by Mrs. Paige and Mrs. Sanger, upon the early work of the N. W. C. T. U., and the present outlook. Miss Stevens gave a reading, and a quartette sang, "Home Returning." Cake and coffee were served.

There were very exciting times in the city of Concord the second of March, when a raid was made upon the saloons by the Law and Order League, with Rev. A. J. Wheeler as an active worker. A large quantity of liquors was seized and stored in a vacant building. Large crowds of people thronged the streets and for a time serious fears were entertained of a riot. The result of the movement remains to be seen. There have been several raids made in the northern part of the state.

The monthly public meeting of the Concord branch of the Law and Order League met in the opera house, on Sunday evening, March 4. The house was crowded with the best citizens of Concord, and an exciting, stirring meeting was the result. The speakers were earnest in their calls for support in forcing the prohibitory law from the city officials, who, it is claimed, have been lax in their duty.

A most charming evening was spent in Hopkinton, March 7, listening to an entertainment prepared under the direction of Mr. J. B. Conner, in behalf of the W. C. T. U. The house was crowded and the net proceeds increased the treasury greatly. It is the desire of this small union to raise money enough to assist some man, suffering from the disease of intemperance, to be cured.

Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason spoke in the opera house the first Sunday in March for the local W. C. T. U.

In my next letter I hope to be able to give a report of the Neal Dow celebrations which have been held in many of our local unions.

According to the annual report of the W. C. T. U. for the state of New Hampshire, there are one hundred and eleven unions, seven having been added the past year. The membership is 2,786; 427 having been added the past year.

The W. C. T. U., of Keene, with the assistance of Rev. G. H. De Bevoise, has raised quite a fund to assist men to take the drink cure.

Littleton W. C. T. U. has an active membership of sixty-two with twenty honorary members.

Grafton county has held three conventions during the past year. At the last one Mrs. J. R. Nichols, of Indiana, spoke to them.

Hopkinton union has sent a barrel of good reading, pictures and forty-seven comfort bags to the camp.

I have been requested to give our state law against the sale of tobacco in this letter. It reads thus:

LAW PROHIBITING THE SALE OF TOBACCO IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

No person shall knowingly sell any cigarette or tobacco in any form to any minor under sixteen years of age. If any person shall violate the provision of this act he shall be liable to a fine of twenty dollars for each and every such offence, such penalty or fine to go to the county treasurer for the use of the county wherein the violation of this act occurs.

Passed August 12, 1885.

Any person who shall sell tobacco in the form of cigarettes to minors shall be fined not less than twenty dollars and not more than fifty dollars for each offence.

Approved August 16, 1889.

Miss Addie B. Jones, state superintendent of narcotics, has sent out her annual circular urging the enforcement of this law. She closes with these words:

"Let us stay by every means in our power, this evil which is sapping the vitality of our young men and undermining some of the most sacred and valued institutions in our land."

Copies of the state law can be procured from the state headquarters No. 31 Hanover st., Manchester, at 15c per hundred.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

CARTHAGE, Mo., celebrated in good style on Neal Dow day. A large crowd was in attendance. Two of the prominent ministers delivered very fine addresses. Several others gave testimonials to the life and work of the grand old man.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

ROCKLAND county, N. Y., W. C. T. U. held its convention on Dow anniversary day. Mrs. Washington conducted a workers' conference in the afternoon, after which the convention adjourned to the jail where services were held.

A CORRESPONDENT in Washington county, Iowa, pays high tribute to the work of Mrs. L. G. Johnson and daughters, who have worked for five weeks in that county, winning many to the cause. They also participated in the Dow celebration at Washington.

ALL unions desiring addresses by Mrs. Clara Hoffman, will please write for particulars to Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, 1116 Temple, Chicago, Ill., who has charge of her appointments. Kentucky, Ohio and Tennessee can secure Mrs. Hoffman in May. Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana the remainder of April.

AT our Neal Dow meeting, Belmond, Ia., W. C. T. U. had the history of the Great Petition given, and canvassed for signatures. The union, aided by the Epworth League, Christian Endeavor and King's Daughters had a very interesting Neal Dow evening at the M. E. church, which was appropriately decorated.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET visited Paris with her son, Mr. Henry Somers Somerset, for the Easter holidays. Miss Willard and Miss Anna Gordon went to Berlin on a visit to Mrs. Mary Bannister Willard, founder of the American Home School for young women at the German capital. They returned after a ten days' absence to London to resume their work for the good causes to which their lives are devoted. All their friends will be glad to hear of this well-earned holiday.

THE following from a consecrated and enthusiastic white-ribboner, Mrs. G. H. Read, of Bloomington, will give an inkling of the good work done in Illinois this spring:

"The temperance department Illinois Christian Endeavor union has sent its messages through the state 'in the name of the Lord of hosts.' And better still, it had a living John-the-Baptist-voice, crying in this Illinois wilderness, 'Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way.'

"As I think of John G. Woolley and the Y. P. S. C. E. I am reminded of Paul's words to the Philippians, 'I thank my God upon every remembrance of you.' It was a terrible school of experience from which Mr. Woolley graduated, but no one who hears him doubts the genuineness of his diploma, nor his commission to preach the temperance gospel. His style is so unique, his illustrations so forcible, that laughter and tears chase each other in quick succession. Even bitter doses of truth are swallowed with a relish. He has just completed a week's work in Bloomington under the auspices of some of the Christian Endeavorers.

"Messrs. Spooner and Wainwright, of Chicago, supplemented Mr. Woolley's work by speaking in several of the churches, and Mr. Spooner led the closing consecration service. It is not strange that much of the witness-bearing related to the voting side of Christian citizenship. What could be more natural to expect than that reinforcements for the temperance army should come from Christian Endeavor ranks? Large numbers of its active membership were born in the early days of the woman's temperance Crusade. From their babyhood they have been taught to pray, 'God bless the temperance cause.' That whirlwind of the Lord, of twenty years ago, has not yet spent its force but is still sweeping on. A part of it is embodied in the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. Let us thank God and take new courage."

Official Communications.

YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE W. C. T. U.:—In these days of progress when young people's societies of various kinds are claiming so much attention, surely our Y. W. C. T. Unions, which were among the first in the field, and whose specific purpose has not yet been fulfilled, should not be permitted to take a position in the rear, or their ranks allowed to be depleted by other claims, for while these various societies are doing good work, they are not by their name and efforts standing out as an army directly opposed to and planning for the overthrow of the liquor traffic.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been a pioneer in organization and methods, and has done much to blaze the way for succeeding efforts; still others must be trained to fill the places of those who grow weary and faint by the way, therefore what better plan could be followed than to enlist the young people in institutions of learning throughout our land? For this not only is it necessary to reach the present students, but it is very important to interest the professors and teachers, so that when unions are organized and the original members have graduated and returned to their homes, the work will be kept up and be a perpetual education for successive classes. To reach these instructors the local W. C. T. U. would seem the most natural agent, and we earnestly ask their aid in this difficult and far-reaching work. It is the special wish of our National President that the report of the present year should show decided progress in this direction, and we trust the following words from her pen will prove seed sown in good soil, which shall bring forth an abundant harvest in the near future:

I do most earnestly hope that every possible effort will be made by those interested in the subject of temperance, particularly by officers and lay-sisters of the W. C. T. U., to enlist and organize the young women in Y. W. C. T. Unions; also to strengthen and develop the work of our brave and gentle Y's. Will not those who plan the state and county conventions, those who have influence in schools and colleges, and those who arrange summer assemblies, secure a place on the program for the significant theme: "What young women can do, and are doing, to aid the temperance reform." Thus may we win good people everywhere to the arrest of thought and to conviction.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
Pres. World's and National W. C. T. U.

The immediate necessity for gaining the helpful coöperation of the present generation of young people, the untold good they can accomplish and the reflex blessing that will come into their own lives, are reasons sufficient for putting forth this earnest plea, and we trust the words of our National President will claim your attention, your sympathy and your active efforts in extending young women's temperance work.

FRANCES J. BARNES,
Secretary Young Woman's Branch,
World's and National W. C. T. U.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

CONVENTION CALL.

The seventh annual convention of the Indian Territory W. C. T. U. will be held in Wagoner, Creek Nation, May 16, 17, 18. All friends of Christianity and temperance are most cordially invited. Any help from our more experienced friends in the states will be most highly appreciated.

MRS. L. JANE STAPLER, Pres.
MRS. T. M. FULLER, Cor. Sec.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Mrs. Ella Beecher Gittings, corresponding secretary Col. W. C. T. U., writes the following: "The woman's vote throughout the state at the municipal election of April 3, was numerically all that could be desired. It is estimated that fully 50 per cent of the entire vote was cast by women. In several towns women were elected to the offices of clerk and treasurer. A number of towns carried a no-license ticket by a good majority. It is a notable fact (as far as I can ascertain at this early date) that in all the towns voting no-license, active W. C. T. U's exist."

Miss Gertrude Ferguson, National superintendent of the flower mission department writes: "I am much encouraged in my work and am sacrificing almost everything else in its interest. This one thing I do."

Good news from Minn. A Farmers' Institute from Madelia was found an admirable place for the distribution of "Signal Lights" and "Timely Talks." Cannon Falls union increases in numbers and interest and is particularly helped by the principal of the public schools. An anti-tobacco society has been organized and each signer wears the white ribbon with pride. The wise president of Tower union has increased her membership. Greenbush is doing well and Houston organized Jan. 13, has already held a public meeting of much success. Euclid, numbering but five, has entered scientific temperance instruction in the public schools; sent literature to lumber camps, and accepts every opportunity for service. The Central union of Duluth called a special meeting to consider the question, "How shall we increase our membership?" which was followed by a simple tea at which the additions numbered twenty. "Nothing is so successful as success." A revival at Oneata has added fifteen to the union, and one new union to the county.

At the Neal Dow celebration at Demorest, Ga., an interesting sketch of the life and work of the "Father of Prohibition" was given by Mayor Bangs. (All honor to such a mayor—but that's prohibition!) The

(Continued on page 13, 2d column.)

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

The Natural Body Brace
Cures Female Weakness, restores health and vigor
After wearing your Natural Body Brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished.
MRS. JESSIE FISHER, Spruce Creek, Pa.
I am pleased beyond expression with the Brace. I would not part with it for any money.
MARY F. ADAM, Neosho Falls, Kas.
I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything to help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do any kind of work.
MISS LUCINDA FIELD, Oscar, Texas.

Money Refunded if Brace is not Satisfactory.
Send for Full Information.
Natural Body Brace Co., SALINA, KANSAS.
Howard C. Rash, Man'gr.

Knox's Sparkling Calves' Foot Gelatine
THE PUREST MADE
Received the only Medal and Diploma at the World's Fair, Chicago, on Package Gelatine for table use, for STRENGTH, PURITY and GOOD FLAVOR.
The only Gelatine positively free from odor or taste. Our new package has Rose Gelatine in top of each package to make fancy desserts. Your grocer has it if he keeps the best.
CHARLES B. KNOX, Johnstown, N. Y.
Send a 2-cent stamp for little book, "DAINTY DESSERTS FOR DAINTY PEOPLE."

SKIN DISEASES
Such as Eczema, Scald Head, Tetter and all Ichorous Disorders are permanently cured with HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Ladies commend it for its efficacy in removing Pimples, Freckles and Blackheads. Sold by all Druggists, or sent by mail. 50c. per box.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce Street, PHILADELPHIA.

A Swell Affair.

Did You Ever Look Like This?
DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM
STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY
DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS
Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich.
THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM.

To Clean False Teeth
As they should be cleaned, use the Florence Dental Plate Brush the only brush made for the purpose. Reaches every crevice. Outwears three ordinary brushes. Sold everywhere. Price 35 cts. | Florence Mfg. Co., Florence Mass. Makers of the Prophylactic Tooth Brush.

ALASKA STOVE LIFTER
will not get hot even if left in the lid. Heavily Nickel Plated. Price by mail, postpaid, 30 cents.
TROY NICKEL WORKS, Troy, N. Y.

6 tubs in one. BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.
E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

BAKER'S COCOA
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

TRIAL FREE.
$2.75 Buys our $9 Natural Finish Baby Carriage complete with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, and one piece steam bent handle. Made of best material, finely finished, reliable, and guaranteed for 3 years. Shipped on 10 days' trial. FREIGHT PAID; no money required in advance. 75,000 in use. We are the oldest and best known concern of our kind, reliable and responsible. Reference furnished at any time. Make and sell nothing but what we guarantee to be as represented, sold at the lowest factory prices. WRITE TO-DAY for our large FREE illustrated catalogue of latest designs and styles published.
OXFORD MFG. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No plaster. No knife. No poison. No
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

Publisher's Notes.

PART I

...OF THE...

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO

CONTAINS PICTURES OF

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West.

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO
COUPON
PART I

Any of our readers wishing to obtain Part I of THE WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO can do so by cutting out coupon and sending it with 25 cents to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE CRUSADER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mother Stewart, our Crusade historian, has given us another volume of Crusade reminiscences, this time an account of her wonderful work in Great Britain. The book is interestingly written, containing descriptions of scenes and people which are in themselves of much interest, and is illustrated with engravings of some of the noted English temperance workers.—New England Home, Hartford, Conn.

Price $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES.

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

Price $1.25.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Rev. S. A. Keen, D. D., the noted evangelist, says: "Having feasted my own soul on 'Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer,' by Rev. S. B. Shaw, I desire to commend it as a volume full of inspiration to faith and encouragement to prayer. He who reads it, will believe more largely and pray more prevailingly than hitherto."

This grand, inspiring book sent postpaid for only $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Messrs. Spencer & Lawson have purchased the photograph studio, corner of Wabash Avenue and Jackson street, until recently conducted by Miss Garrity.

We are in receipt of some beautiful photographs of Mrs. Carse from this new and enterprising firm. We wish them the success they deserve.

music in charge of Capt. J. F. Cleghorn, was delightful, and his address showing what one man having faith in God and courage to do right may accomplish, was very fine. The L. T. L. brought their tribute of honor to the man of ninety, and a beautiful poem on "The man we have met to honor," was given by its author, Mr. J. M. Fletcher, while Rev. D. C. Campbell conserved the interest aroused by securing signatures to the pledge.

South Dakota is prospering and the W. C. T. U. intends that prohibition shall be enforced. Thirteen conventions have been held in Day county alone. Huron has been intensely excited by a woman's crusade against saloons, brothels and other evils, while Mrs. Anna Simmons, the state vice-president, has had the courage to enter a complaint against the marshal. President Cranmer's husband is the women's attorney and at even the preliminary meetings the opera house has been filled. A war on unfaithful officials must be made and South Dakota has taken the initiatory step. Mrs. Cranmer has held about ninety meetings and organized and reorganized about a dozen unions since her state convention. She writes: "Mrs. Hoffman spoke at our state meeting and her praise is still sounding."

The Nebraska City News says of Mrs. Anna M. Palmer: "She sees present evils clearly and denounces them fearlessly; portrays the truth clearly and loves it passionately; exposes shams with the hand of a master and covers them with ridicule. She wins at once the sympathy of her audience and her keen thrusts are often greeted with cheers. After listening to her two evenings we do not wonder that she has been commissioned as National evangelist. Mrs. Palmer also gives a Bible reading each afternoon at three o'clock. This service is intended especially for Christian people, though every one is cordially invited to attend."

Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, National organizer, has spent a winter of invalidism, and true to home interests is expending her first gathered strength in her own state. A little later she will come to our north-land and we trust the W. C. T. U. will bring this brilliant young woman to many of our platforms.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Contributions to the ten cent fund still come in occasionally, and while tardy yet they are welcome. Dear Mother Thompson did not forget her promise made some time ago to send a remittance from the Hillsboro union, and has sent three dollars for the fund. Worcester, Mass., also sends same amount, and others send small amounts. The states are beginning to send in installments of dues. Northern California, Colorado, Kentucky, Missouri, Mississippi, Rhode Island, Indiana and New Jersey recently sent dues, which have helped us to send the World's treasurer every dollar due up to date, and also to send to each superintendent a part of their appropriation for the year. From one treasurer I received a letter in which she said, "I believe a one dollar membership fee with fifty cents to state and National, twenty-five cents county and twenty-five cents to local is practical." I had been thinking upon this subject for a year or more, and it occurred to me it would be a good idea to ask for an expression of opinion upon the subject of raising the local dues to one dollar. I would be glad if state and local treasurers would send me their opinion upon the matter in a nutshell, giving reasons for and against. I would be especially glad to hear from treasurers in counties and states where they have tried the dollar fee.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

[It is the desire of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL that this Corner should serve the National Organizers as a sort of Lecture Bureau, and to that end they are invited to send their calendar of appointments long enough ahead to secure engagements in the territory to which they are called.]

The following is the list of National organizers for the present year, and whether W's or Y's they are all accredited public speakers and fully prepared to organize W's, Y's, L. T. L's, or speak to the general public and add to the membership of unions.

For terms and dates address as below:

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. L. H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, 69 Maple street, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. Ellen Dayton Blair, 936 Cottage Place, Los Angeles, Cal.
Mrs. Maude L. Green, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Newberg, Ore.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, 132 McAllister street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Miss Frances Ensign, Madison, O.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.

I have watched with increasing interest the organizers' corner since it was given us, and am more than delighted with it. I have waited before contributing my mite till my plans were more matured for the summer. I have spent most delightfully the past fifteen months on the Pacific coast. My work in Kansas, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon and North California last year were duly reported by the workers in those states. It seemed to me the most successful year of my work and since, by some mistake my report failed to reach National Minutes, I will give its footings. I labored in eight states; traveled six thousand miles; gave sixty-six chalk talks, organized twenty-two L. T. L's and filled many orders for my outline charts, beside assisting by correspondence all requests received for information. I desire to express my gratitude to the state L. T. L. superintendents who so efficiently arranged my work, frequently traveling with me and in every way possible lightening my burdens.

In South California the Lord has opened many new doors and I find much interest in juvenile temperance work among the Sunday-schools and Junior Endeavorers. The Indian school at Chico of our beloved Mrs. General Bidwell, was a delight to me, and I marveled at the aptness of her pupils in answering my questions. She writes they repeated upon the blackboard later on the picture lessons I gave them. At Chico also normal students responded to our appeal, helping to organize and take charge of a large new L. T. L which is still prospering. Last fall I was invited to chalk-talk one evening before an immense audience at the state Sunday-school convention in Pasadena. Since that time numerous calls have come to me to speak in Sunday-schools and Junior Endeavors, Chinese classes at orphans' and newsboys' homes, beside to all the L. T. L's and many of the churches of this city. I have recently spoken in two public schools, over an hour in each, by invitation of the principals, one composed largely of Spanish children, the teachers contributing voluntarily toward the expense. One was at Whittier, where I also addressed the L. T. L. and both state industrial schools of sixty girls and three hundred boys; the latter voted for an L. T. L. to be organized among them which was heartily indorsed by the superintendent and will be done soon as teachers can be found in that beautiful prohibition Quaker town. Five chalk-talks of over an hour each in one and a half days is the fullest record yet during my ten years' work.

The state executive central Los Angeles and Los Angeles county W. C. T. U. conventions have each invited me to present to them the latest national plans, methods and helps for L. T. L. work, expressing a strong desire to adopt them more generally than heretofore.

I am still filling orders for my Outline Charts from many states thereby aiding those who cannot draw to give chalk-talks themselves. Several of our state superintendents and others have by their use developed into independent chalk-talkers. I send one set of six charts with a lesson for each for $1.50 a set. The demand for this attractive and impressive form of teaching temperance is certainly increasing and well it may for it is welcomed by all and can be used as an entering wedge into the homes and churches of our land.

Last summer I was confined for many weeks by the bedside of my sick husband, but the fall and winter have restored him to good health and we return to the east early in May. As the time draws near the work crowds in and April will be a busy month. It is with regret we leave this sunny land and its delightful people, for we have enjoyed both exceedingly.

My plan is to cross the continent during the summer via Denver and Chicago to Brooklyn and Philadelphia giving a few dates in each state. Will those desiring to make engagements please address their state L. T. L. superintendent for terms or write to me here during April. Later address me at Norfolk, Nebraska.

ELLEN DAYTON BLAIR.
936 Cottage Place, Los Angeles, Cal.

GRANŪLA.
"The Perfect Health Food."
Ready for immediate use. Unequaled for children, invalids and persons of sedentary habits. A delicious diet, unsurpassed for Constipation and Dyspepsia. Contains the life-giving principle of wheat, easily digested, readily assimilated. Trial package 25c., by mail post-paid. Send for FREE pamphlet. Manufactured solely by
Our Home Granūla Co.,
(Box 100) DANSVILLE, N. Y.
Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, (founder of the Famous Health Institution of Dansville, N.Y.) 37 years ago.

MILLIONS AT THE
WORLD'S FAIR SAW AND ADMIRED THE MAGNIFICENT LAWNS PRODUCED BY SOWING THE
HENDERSON LAWN GRASS SEED.
You can duplicate these in any size by following the simple directions which we send, without charge, with every order.
The Henderson Lawn Grass Seed can be obtained from druggists, dealers or us direct, for 25 cents per qt., $1.50 per peck, $5.00 per bushel. If by mail, add 5 cents per qt. for postage.
A quart will sow an area 15 x 20 feet=300 square feet; for an acre 5 bushels are required.
Our 1894 Catalogue of "EVERYTHING for the GARDEN" will be sent FREE with every order if you will name paper and date of issue of this advertisement.
Every copy, with postage, costs us 25 cts., and should be in the hands of every one interested in garden matters.—Its 160 pages contain nearly 500 engravings and six colored plates of flowers and vegetables. Postage stamps accepted as cash.
PETER HENDERSON & CO.,
35 & 37 Cortlandt St., New York.

World's Fair Highest Awards
Medal and Diploma on our INCUBATOR and BROODER Combined.
"Old Reliable" Leads them all.
If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for our 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address
Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co. Quincy, Ill.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.
Cancers and Tumors cured without use of the knife, frequently after having been cut out 2 or 3 times. 80 per ct. of cases treated Permanently Cured. Hundreds of Testimonials from doctors, judges, clergymen, etc., many of whom were cured over 20 years ago. 25 years experience. Private Sanitarium. 64-PAGE BOOK, entitled "Cancers and Tumors," FREE. Send names of suffering friends.
L. D. McMICHAEL, M.D., 1021 Masonic Temple, Chicago

$25 to $50 per week, to Agents, Ladies or Gentlemen, using or selling "Old Reliable Plater." Only practical way to replate rusty and worn knives, forks, spoons, etc.; quickly done by dipping in melted metal. No experience, polishing, or machinery. Thick plate at one operation; lasts 5 to 10 years; fine finish when taken from the plater. Every family has plating to do. Plater sells readily. Profits large. W. P. Harrison & Co. Columbus, O.

A SOLID GOLD RING or a dozen heavy Silver plated spoons given away to any woman, girl or boy. All we ask of you is to distribute circulars and talk up our remedies among your friends and acquaintances. Send us your name and address. No money required. HOBB'S MEDICINE CO., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

Indisputable Evidence

Of the Successful Treatment of Consumption and Chest Diseases by the English Method as Discovered and Practiced by George Thomas Congreve.

NOTES FROM HIS CASE BOOK.

By our Special Commissioner.

CASE LXXVIII.

PHTHISIS—CASE OF MR. ROBERT BURNET, AGENT OF THE NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.

THIS case was referred to in the Christian Herald, London, as one "raised from the gates of death."

The patient visited Coombe Lodge on the 15th of May. Consumption in the family, the mother having died of phthisis. Had been five years in China. Had pneumonia first, four years ago; had pleurisy since, followed by signs of consumption, which became developed so far that on examination he was found to have the "Upper lobes of the lungs diseased, and congestion at the base of each."

Through June, July and August, there was gradual improvement. In September he writes that Dr. Alexander had given him a certificate that he might resume his duties. Advised not to leave off the medicine or use of prescribed liniment until thoroughly well, especially as winter was approaching. Wisely he continued up to the commencement of the year, gradually diminishing the dose.

In February, I saw him again in London, and found him perfectly well.

Being about to return to China he wrote the following letter:—

"Dear Sir,—Considering the great change that has taken place since I began to use your 'Elixir,' I cannot leave this country without bearing testimony to its good effects. I feel as one who has been raised up from the gates of death, and have cause to bless God, who led me to you for advice and cure.

"What a difference between my prospects when I landed in London, in May, and my prospects now! Then, compelled to leave my field of labor, with the sentence of death in me; and now in good health returning to my missionary work in China.

"My acquaintances, looking upon me, have learned to know that 'the incurable disease' has been conquered; for seeing me, they can no longer doubt that CONSUMPTION IS CURABLE.

"After using three bottles of 'Elixir' I was conscious of a change. My strength increased, and flesh came again on my bones. Moreover, I have been able to address many public meetings without feeling any strain or suffering from the exertion necessary. Now and again I caught cold from exposure, but a few doses of the medicine soon drove every trace of it away.

"Still more, I am glad to say that after being examined by medical men in Edinburgh, they stated that now there was no disease, and certified my fitness for resuming work in a foreign land.

"Earnestly hoping that the above testimony will lead many sufferers to you for relief,—I am, ever yours gratefully, ROBERT BURNET."

NOTE.—Mr. Burnet is using my medicine with good results in China. I have just sent a large supply to Hankoo by his request.

Owing to numerous orders for Mr. Congreve's remedies, sent to London, England, which it was impossible to execute from there on account of the difficulties and cost of sending small packages through the Custom House, he has lately opened a depot at 4 Wooster St., New York, and now wishes it to be known that henceforth all sufferers in America can promptly obtain, by addressing him there, which even in advanced stages of that terrible disease may be used with certainty of relief.

A CURE FOR CONSUMPTION,

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read his book on Consumption of the Lungs or Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis; together with accounts of nearly 400 perfectly cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cents, or it will be sent free with every first order of $1.00 trial bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir, if ordered direct from

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE,

London, Eng., and 4 Wooster Street, New York.

☞Mention this paper.

Publisher's Notes.

The intense interest manifested in our latest publication, "A Great Mother," justifies the prediction of a large sale.

"A Great Mother," soon to be issued from our press, is not a subscription book, but will be sold for $1.50 per volume. We are having applications from agents, and shall soon be prepared to assign territory.

Do not expect the label on your paper to be changed within three weeks of the date of sending your notice. Our list is so extensive that it is impossible to reach any single name earlier.

We are receiving appreciative letters about our White Ribbon Portfolio, and thanks from many for the opportunity of possessing the pictures of so many beloved leaders at a trifling cost.

The finest picture Mrs. Carse has had taken is reproduced in large size in Part II of our White Ribbon Portfolio. The artists, Spencer & Lawson, of 241 Wabash Ave., deserve special honor for so faithful a likeness.

Our Library Table.

FOR THE SAKE O' THE SELLER is one of Maggie Swan's entertaining tales. Its title covers the main thought of the book. The plot is laid amid Scottish scenes, and the Scotch dialect is employed in the conversational portions.

Hunt & Eaton, New York City; Cranston & Curts, Chicago.

VOICE EDUCATION, by Julia A. Orum, principal of the Philadelphia and Mountain Lake Park Schools of Education, is a very complete aid to teachers of elocution. It begins with the child who is learning to read his first word and grades the instruction to a finish.

Published by the author, Philadelphia.

The April number of the SILVER CROSS is one of the most attractive and valuable issues of this charming periodical. This is the second number of the magazine in its enlarged form and it bids fair to step into a wider sphere of action even than it has hitherto filled. It has added several new and important departments to meet the needs of the wide-awake Daughters of the King whose heads and hands and hearts are so variously employed In His Name.

The Silver Cross Publishing Co., 158 W. 23d St., New York City.

BENEFITS FORGOT is from the pen of Wolcott Balestier, a well-known writer. It is remarkable for its strong character studies, analyzing motives and revealing underlying influences and purposes through the medium of an intensely interesting and powerfully written story. The scene is laid in the Colorado mines and the dramatis personæ are such as search for wealth, thirst for adventure, and the fascinating uncertainty of a miner's life would tend to draw together. Mr. Balestier wields a bright and a pointed pen, withal a just and kindly one in outlining the frailties as well as the strength of the human heart.

Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York City.

NONE SUCH? By Emery J. Haynes, is a somewhat unique setting forth of the question of the proper and improper uses of wealth. It includes an expression on the phases of the question of labor and capital, but its main thought is that of faithful stewardship. The author shows men and women attracted by the glitter of gold as crows attracted by carrion, and his millionaire hero is well nigh driven out of the world by the besetments of those greedy for gain. He has no worthy kith nor kin on whom to place the responsibility of caring for the wealth he must soon leave, and the reader becomes intensely interested in the good, quaint old man's search for some one who will inherit his money and make it the blessed server of others. There is dramatic strength in the narrative and its teaching vigorously wholesome. The closing sentence is somewhat prophetic: "None such? There shall yet be thousands!"

The North Publishing Co., Boston.

Rev. Dr. John Barrows, of Chicago, chairman of the Parliament of Religions, has written what is perhaps the best popular biography of that great character, Henry Ward Beecher. To say this is saying much, there having been so many histories, but Dr. Barrows has manifested a fine quality of sympathy and comprehension, which is the choicest—and, alas, the rarest—mark of a first rate biography. Added to this he has a sense of symmetry and proportion which has enabled him to round the circle of that great life within a compass remarkably small and yet to omit nothing of importance. It goes without saying that the spirit of the book is lofty and tender as becometh such an author and such a theme. Altogether, this is a book that carries its own inspiration, and will impart it to any docile-minded reader. For this reason it is especially to be commended to the young Americans who will celebrate their majority with the coming of the new century.

OUR NEW LEAFLETS.

If you have not read the Publisher's Notes with care, you have overlooked the fact that our editor of books and leaflets is furnishing you and your children with many fresh topics for reading and for thought.

Teach the children temperance principles in an attractive form, and order for family and Sunday-school use, the entire series.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The first edition of our White Ribbon Portfolio is rapidly becoming exhausted. This mail brings us orders for more than one hundred copies. Order at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

GRACEFUL, light and strong, this product of the oldest bicycle establishment in America still retains its place at the head. Always well up to the times or a little in advance, its well deserved and ever increasing popularity is a source of pride and gratification to its makers. To ride a bicycle and not to ride a Columbia is to fall short of the fullest enjoyment of a noble sport.

A beautiful illustrated catalogue free at any Columbia agency or mailed for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford.

RAPID Fountain Pen (16 kt. Gold) makes writing a pleasure. Old Fountain Pens taken in Exchange. Agents wanted. Circ. free. RAPID PEN FACTORY, Washington, D.C.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,
But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.
H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

AGENTS wanted to canvass merchants and business men for a new planned Account-Book. $3 to $15 made daily by energetic parties. For sample sheet and terms, address H. W. PAMPHILON, Pub., 17 Clinton Pl., New York.

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

SEND A SLIP OF PAPER the size of your finger and 10 cents in Silver and I will mail you one of these Solid Rolled-Gold Rings and my Catalogue of Rings, Emblems, Watches and Novelties for agents to sell. $1.00 an hour easily made. Address C. E. MARSHALL, Lockport, N.Y.

AGENTS CAN MAKE FROM $25.00 TO $100.00 a week by canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Address, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASSN., Kansas City Mo.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH
SAMPLE VIAL FREE.
E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

What folly! To be without BEECHAM'S PILLS.

WONDERFUL TESTIMONY.

The Fountain, edited by Rev. J. Parker, D.D., The Temple, London, says:

"We take this opportunity of stating that Mr. Congreve, by help of God, has been the means of great service to the cause of humanity, as well as to the cause of Christ. He has probably been more successful in treating cases of Consumption than any man ever known. He has given the subject long and devoted study. His pamphlet has had an enormous circulation. The arguments he employs commend themselves to the judgment of any impartial reader. While fallacies of treatment are laid bare, the author dispels the prevalent notion of the hopelessly fatal character of the 'scourge of England,' and proves beyond all doubt that this fell disease is 'curable proper means.'"

We gladly publish the above testimony regarding Mr. Congreve's remarkable consumption cure, and hope our readers will take pains to read his advertisement in this issue, on page 14, and page 14 of our issue of April 5. Write them for particulars, and learn all about this great cure.

A Dangerous Blockade.

There is always danger ahead when the breathing tubes that conduct from the throat to the lungs are blockaded. Bronchitis is an obstinate chronic malady which begets a viscid secretion in the throat and air passages, constantly increasing, unless got rid of by proper treatment, and liable to produce suffocation. So nearly is the complaint akin to consumption in its manifestations, that physicians have sometimes been led into confounding it with that malady. For it, as as well as for every other affection of the throat and lungs, Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, pleasant to the taste and not liable to rancidity, is a sovereign remedy. Harmoniously combined with it are the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, renovants of health and flesh of the first order, the phosphorus which they contain ably seconding that in the Emulsion as a food constituent. Wasting diseases of children and adults, rheumatism, scrofula, are among the maladies which, according to the attestation of the medical fraternity, are completely eradicable by it, if the remedy be resorted to in due season and used systematically.

OUR WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

What do you think of it? The orders in every mail answer the question. Write to us for terms for one hundred copies and make some money for your unions.

CHEAP LEAFLETS.

We are constantly having a demand for cheap leaflets. Order our Busy Day leaflets, 15c. a hundred; $1 per thousand. Good paper, clear type, and so to the point you can afford to give a moment to them on a busy day. Here are the titles. There are nine of them:

No. 1. A $200,000 glass of beer.
" 2. Liquid Bread.
" 3. Freedom or Slavery.
" 4. New Method of Training.
" 5. Home vs. the Saloon.
" 6. Intemperance and the Catholic Church.
" 7. Catholics and Prohibition.
" 8. The Yellow Flag.
" 9. An Accommodating Business.

Price 15c. per hundred; $1 per thousand.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

BLACK BEAUTY,

By Anna Sewall.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the horse.

Paper	$ .15
Board cover	.25
Cloth	.50

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CHICKENS HATCHED BY STEAM.

A few years ago the suggestion that chickens would ever be hatched by steam would have brought down no end of ridicule on the head of the prophet, and yet today steam is recognized by experts to be the most efficient means of incubation. A clear illustration of this is found in the well-known Excelsior Incubator, manufactured by George H. Stahl, of Quincy, Ill., to whom is conceded the credit of having perfected the steam method of incubation. The introduction of the Excelsior Incubator and its improvement from time to time, marks a new era in the poultry raising industry. Built upon the best lines, fitted with improved automatic device, that never fail to accurately regulate the temperature and the moisture as demanded by the laws of nature, it can always be relied upon to hatch a much larger percentage of fertile eggs than the ordinary hatcher, at about two-thirds the cost and trouble. No better proof of the success of steam in hatching chickens could be advanced than the satisfactory reports that are received from thousands who are constantly using the Improved Excelsior Incubator. Another advantage that strongly recommends this incubator is the low price at which it is sold, and the high guarantee of perfection and durability that accompanies each apparatus. Those who are now engaged in poultry raising, and those who are studying its possibilities as a source of profit, will do well to send 6 cents to Mr. Stahl for his catalogue. It contains much valuable information about incubators, brooders, and poultry raising in general.

Part II Now Ready

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents, and we will send you Part II.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART II

Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

PART II CONTAINS

FRONTISPIECE: Full-length Picture of MATILDA B. CARSE

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS,
MRS. LETITIA YOUMANS,
COL. GEORGE W. BAIN,
DR. KATE C. BUSHNELL,
MISS JESSIE A. ACKERMANN,
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER,
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN,
MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER,
MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS,
MRS. ELIZABETH W. ANDREW,
MISS ALICE R. PALMER.
GENERAL JOHN BIDWELL.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

OUR DAY FOR 1894.

This leading American Journal of Reform will be issued in 1894 as a BI-MONTHLY, and mailed to all subscribers, including clergymen and students, at the uniform price of

..ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM..

Remit by money order, express order, draft or postal note to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
...The Temple, Chicago...

A Great Mother . .

The Ably-Written and Delightfully Interesting Biography of....

MADAM WILLARD

will soon issue from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and will prove a rare acquisition to our literature.

It is more than a biography ; it is a setting forth of her sublime

Philosophy of Life,

and a record of her wise, pithy sayings, as well as of the incidents in which she put her philosophy to the test of practical experience.

It should be in the hands of each

. . . Mother . . .

while, at the same time, so vivid is its portrayal and so interesting the facts recorded, each child will find it full of interest.

It will be ready very soon, and orders will be received at once.

Handsomely Bound....Profusely Illustrated....Price $1.50....

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

AROUND THE WORLD TOURISTS

OUR MAGNIFICENT PORTFOLIO OF PHOTOGRAPHS will prove a much better cicerone than any you can find. Sensations of delight and intense satisfaction are the sentiments created by an inspection of this superb collection of photographs.

SEE WHAT SERIES NUMBER SEVEN CONTAINS:

Arch of Triumph, Paris; Kenilworth Castle, England; Melrose Abbey, Scotland; Coblentz on the Rhine, Germany; Gallery of Battles, Versailles; Comedy Theater, Schiller Platz, Berlin; The Marina, Capri; Lisbon, Portugal; Gate of Lucknow, India; Nazareth, Palestine; Lake Maggiore, Isola Bella, Italy; Ruins, Thebes, Egypt; Montreal and Mount Royal, Canada; Pass of Uspallata, Andes Mountains, South America; Yosemite Valley from Artists' Point, California; National Congress, Santiago, Chili.

Cut out the coupon printed below, and bring or send it to our office with five two-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to pay the cost of mailing, wrapping, etc., and we will send you series No. 6.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.
ART SERIES NO. 6.
COUPON.

Send Coupon, together with five 2-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to our office, and you will receive our Portfolio of Photographs, No. 6.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

If you have missed any of the previous issues you can obtain them by remitting 25c.

Signal Notes.

PRATT Institute, Brooklyn, teaches twenty-five different branches to women.

THE first normal school for women was opened in July, 1839, at Lexington, Mass.

THE Chinese have no governmental postal system like ours, but letters are transported by an express system, called "letter-shops."

ARKANSAS has come to the front in that it has given power to the state board of health to revoke the license of any physician who is guilty of habitual drunkenness.

THE first employés in New England factories were energetic women who had done their spinning and weaving at home. They were replaced by Irish immigrants and they again by French Canadians.

VEGETARIANS find an argument in their favor in the deplorable result of excessive meat eating in the ill temper produced, which they say is chronic in England. In less meat-eating France urbanity is the rule, while in fish and rice-eating Japan harsh words are never heard.

IT has been said that there are not enough churches to accommodate the people if all wanted to go to church. The Occident asserts that there is a church-seating capacity in this country for forty-three millions. Every one could go to church morning or evening, without a single person being forced to stand.

THE mission to deep sea fishermen along the coast of Labrador did good service last summer. The ship that was sent out carried three doctors who treated over two thousand patients. Anything that relieves the lives of these men is worthy of help, for they literally take their lives in their hands in their efforts to earn a living.

NEW YORK state has three thousand six hundred and seventy-five inmates of its juvenile reformatories, Kansas only two hundred and eight; New York has eight thousand one hundred and ninety convicts in its penitentiaries, Kansas only nine hundred and eighteen. New York has twenty times as many paupers in its poorhouses as Kansas.

THE Congressional Temperance Society of Washington, D. C., celebrated its sixtieth anniversary on Neal Dow day by a large and noteworthy gathering. The report of the secretary, Rev. Fred D. Power, was an able résumé of the temperance progress of the year in the United States in sentiment, legislation, and education. He criticized the action of the President in pardoning so notorious a rumseller and law-breaker as John Shea. Other noted congressmen, Dingley, Morse, Johnson and Pickler, and ex-Gov. Elliott spoke on the life of General Dow and for the great cause.

AN organization which is doing good service along the line of a much needed reform is the American Railway Literary Union. Its object is to suppress the sale and circulation of pernicious literature on railroad trains and stands, at all news stands, in the home, everywhere. Its work is "national, undenominational, non-political," its organ, Light for the Line, issued when needed. The coöperation of all is earnestly desired the call should meet with hearty response from Christian leaders everywhere. The address of the president is Mr. William J. Onahan, 37 Macalister Place, Chicago.

A WRITER in the German Army Journal calls attention to the seriously unsatisfactory physical condition of the army reserve, attributing it to excessive drinking. Another writer believes that the whole future of the German nation depends upon the solution of the drink question. (Germany is not the only nation so dependent.) One-fifteenth of all the cultivated land in Germany is devoted to the production of materials for the making of alcoholic liquor. It is estimated that the loss to the country in money through this diversion of land, capital and labor is equal to a sum large enough to keep a laborer's family of eight persons for eight weeks.

A NEW CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

Good Cooking

is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Take no substitute for the Eagle Brand.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 % PURE

USED IN HOSPITALS.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

"Dirt defies the king."—

If the old proverb be true, SAPOLIO is greater than royalty itself: Try it in your next house-cleaning: Grocers keep it.

DO YOU LIVE IN GREASE?

As a true patriot and citizen you should naturalize yourself by using the best inventions of the day for removing such a charge. To live in Grease is utterly unnecessary when SAPOLIO is sold in all the stores, and abolishes grease and dirt.

THE STAY THAT STAYS

Can't break, can't wear out, everlasting elasticity.

DR. WARNER'S CORALINE DRESS STAY

Put up in yard lengths, the same as whalebone, also in short lengths, muslin covered. Sample set for one dress by mail, 25 cents. Sold everywhere. Warner Bros., makers, N. Y. & Chicago.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to

Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE, 2819 OLIVE ST., ST. LO., MO.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair. OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.

Take a Course in the SPRAGUE Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.) Send 10c. stamps for particulars to J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH. No. 22 TELEPHONE BDG.

CHAIN AND CHARM FREE WITH EVERY WATCH.

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price, $3.50, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you One Free. Write at once, as we shall send out samples for 60 days only. Address THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

"WHAT AMERICA OWES TO WOMEN."

Mrs. Lydia Hoyt Farmer, author of "A Knight of Faith," "A Short History of the French Revolution," "The Life of Lafayette," etc., and editor of "What America Owes to Women," has been the recipient of a note of thanks by order of her Majesty, Queen Victoria, to whom Mrs. Farmer recently presented a copy of the beautiful white and gold exposition edition of the well-known work, "The National Exposition Souvenir, What America Owes to Women": "Sir Henry Ponsonby is commanded by the Queen to thank Mrs. Lydia Farmer for her letter, and for the volume which she has sent for her Majesty's acceptance. February 22, 1894, Privy Purse Office, Buckingham Palace, S. W."

Price $2.50.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OUR WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

"The portfolios are duly and gratefully received; worth much more than the money paid for them," writes an enthusiastic white-ribboner. The beautiful face of Miss Willard in Part I, and the fine, full-length, new picture of Mrs. Carse in Part II, are worth many times the cost of each part.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE.

Will our patrons kindly address all business letters to Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Letters intended personally for C. F. Grow, Business Manager, should be marked personal. Do not forget that business letters sent to editors are often delayed in reaching the business office.

JUST ISSUED.

Four New National Leaflets.
Two New Y National Leaflets.

THE STORY OF THE CRUSADE.
THE SPIRIT OF THE CRUSADE.
THE CHILD OF THE CRUSADE.
AFTER TWENTY YEARS.
INASMUCH, and
WHAT IS YOUR VALUE?

Each Invaluable.
Try Them.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS.

Short, Spicy, Strong.

Just what you need in your department work, and only fifteen cents per 100. $1.25 per 1,000.

Order at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

PICTURE LEAFLETS.

This is notably the age of pictures, and we have yielded to the acknowledged demand, and provided for the young people Picture Leaflets.

Series of Eight.

Per 1,000, postpaid, - - - $1.00
" 100, " - - - .15

Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"For Our Little Folks."

No. 1. HOW DID YOU KNOW?
2. SPOILED BRAINS.
3. TELEGRAPH LINES.
4. SOME MESSAGES.
5. SOME MORE MESSAGES.
6. NERVE THREADS ASLEEP.
7. AN EXPERIMENT.

PRICE.

Per 1,000, postpaid, - - $1.00
" 100, " - - - .15

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SING! SING!

Convention days are near at hand, and you will need the inspiration of spirited music. The White Ribbon Hymnal contains the favorite songs of white-ribboners everywhere. Price 35c.

A GREAT MOTHER.

We are receiving advance orders for "A Great Mother," which will be issued early in May.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 17.] CHICAGO, April 26, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Cassie D. Herrick 1894 1029 16th St. N.W.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Disastrous earthquakes have caused loss of life in Greece.

The Nicaraguan government has revoked the exequatur of its American minister.

The betrothal of the Grand Duke Nicholas, Czarowitz of Russia, to Princess Alix of Hesse is announced.

The anti-Jesuit law, which forbade the return of Jesuits to that country, has been repealed by the German Reichstag.

The quorum-counting rule has been passed by the United States House of Representatives greatly to the facilitation of business.

A bill has been introduced by United States Senator Palmer to make illegal all currency issues except those of the government and of national banks.

The Indiana Anti-Liquor League in its meeting at Indianapolis determined to renew its energies and to take advantage of the saloon-nuisance decision.

The power of the interstate commission to force witnesses to testify has been decided adversely by the United States Supreme Court before whom a test case was taken.

The evicted tenants bill, providing for arbitration between landlords and tenants in Ireland by a salaried board, has passed its first reading in the British House of Commons.

Queen Victoria's granddaughter, Princess Victoria Melita, of Saxe-Coburg, was married to her cousin, the Grand Duke Ernest Louis, of Hesse, with regal ceremonies at Coburg, Thursday.

Industrial armies are forming at points in the west and aiming to join Coxey's "Commonweal" at Washington. At Omaha demonstrations of local laboring men have caused exciting scenes.

Patriots' Day, April 19, is a new holiday established in Massachusetts in commemoration of the battle of Lexington. The one hundred and nineteenth anniversary was celebrated last Thursday.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Chancellor of Great Britain's Exchequer, has been highly commended for his subordination of party interests to the welfare of the country in his framing of the national budget.

Garfield Park race track, a gambling resort, which has proved a great nuisance to respectable citizens of the West Side, Chicago, has been closed by order of the mayor, through the influence of the Society for the Prevention of Crime.

Among the resolutions passed by the German Evangelical Association of Iowa at Waverly, last week, was one condemning the recent action of the Iowa legislature regarding the prohibitory law, and another advocating a more strict observance of the Sabbath.

WE take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the correspondence between our National corresponding secretary and Judge Jeremiah Wilson on page 13. Judge Wilson has earned for himself a name that will be honored by true men the world over, and by every woman, be she "pure" or "fallen."

THE saloon men of Minneapolis have joined the ranks of the most radical supporters of Sabbath observance. Because they are compelled to close their own places of business on Sunday, they declare that theaters and other places of amusement shall do likewise. They would even stop the street-cars if that were possible. On the principle of "set a thief to catch a thief," it is possible they may have better success than the reformers they are trying to retaliate upon. Let the good work go on.

TEMPERANCE workers all along the line will appreciate the advantage of an early distribution of the quarterly temperance Sunday-school lesson. This lesson leaflet will be ready May 1, and can be procured as a supplement with The Young Crusader after May 21. We would urge upon white-ribboners the importance of a wide circulation among Sunday-schools of this valuable aid in the teaching of God's word on the temperance question.

WOMAN'S cause, which is also man's, is marching on in "Old Kentucky," as in every other state. The Governor has signed the Husband and Wife Bill, giving a married woman owning property apart from her husband, power to transact all business connected therewith, as if she were a single woman. The new law also makes curtesy and dower equal for husband and wife—in fact, it gives the women of that state all that for six years they have been asking of the legislature. With such encouragement from their chivalrous lawmakers the women of Kentucky will, we hope, ask, Oliver Twist-like, for "more."

UNLIKE the Chicago divine recently quoted in these columns, and unlike many other good people who oppose the use of strong drink as a beverage, the Chicago Herald does not regard liquor as a "good medicine." It takes a certain homeopathic physician to task for recommending whisky in the treatment of grip. "Recent investigations have demonstrated that alcoholic stimulants are not absolutely necessary in any disease. . . Alcohol is fraught with danger to the patient. . . It is a menace instead of a benefactor, a false friend in time of need." The Herald utters here the dictum of science, and no thoughtful person to-day disputes the harmony between true science and the religion of Christ. The Bible and science are both the word of God, both are messages from the Most High and bear His signature. We are to read one in the light of the other.

THAT gigantic evil, the Louisiana lottery, which is supposed to have been banished from United States soil, has, it seems, only changed its local habitation and its name. It has come to light that while nominally carrying on the business at Honduras, its real headquarters are at Port Tampa, Florida. As an effectual method for making prohibition prohibit the Treasury Department proposes to make the duty assessment of the imported lottery tickets at their face value. In Kansas City also lottery schemes are very much in evidence, nine different companies, it is said, paying license to the city, while prominent citizens and even officials are interested in the unlawful business. We are glad to say that the Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City is directing public attention to this matter, and asks that all ecclesiastical bodies in the state take some action. Truly, "eternal vigilance" must be the war-cry of those who would conquer this subtle foe.

THE newspaper accounts of election returns this spring have furnished pleasant reading for Prohibitionists, and especially for white-ribboners. Never before has the saloon question been so prominent in local politics, never has anti-license achieved so many victories, never have so many prohibition men been elected to office. It appears that in Illinois, where license was very generally the issue and where the result has been almost universally favorable to prohibition, there is no law authorizing municipal authorities to submit the question to the people. Hence the vote is not binding and city and town officials may proceed in accordance with their own views on the subject. Nevertheless the popular voice has been heard and if the will of the people is ignored by the politician, sacrificed to his party idols, it will only tend to hasten the time when this same people will rise to their privileges and be sovereign not only in name but in fact.

UPON the ground that it creates a monopoly for the state, the supreme court of South Carolina has declared the dispensary law unconstitutional. To party politics and to the fact that two of the three judges who sit upon the supreme bench are not "Tillmanites" is doubtless due in large measure this decision, which means for the state either rigid prohibition or free whisky. It looks as if Governor Tillman might have an opportunity sooner than we hoped to demonstrate his patriotism by enforcing a law with which he is not in sympathy. It is said that it will be necessary to call an extra session of the legislature to dispose of the stock of liquors the state has on hand. The dispensary law is proving a costly experiment to the people of South Carolina, and the end is not yet. "The most vicious feature of the law," says the court, "is the profit accruing to the state," and this decision seems to open up the whole question of government control, not only of the liquor traffic, but of railways, telegraphs, waterworks, gas works, etc. If "monopoly" means, as the whisky trust was recently given to understand, an absorption by one class of persons of the property and rights of another, it followsthat the constitutionality of state control hinges upon the question, What constitutes the state? Is it one particular class or all classes?

AN Association for the Promotion of Profit Sharing represents one of the latest and one of the most laudable methods for the practical solution of the capital and labor problem. This organization, of which Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor, is president, has issued an open letter to employers and employés, inviting their attention to "the importance of introducing some form of profit-sharing as a feature of their industrial relationships," and pointing out some of the benefits to be derived therefrom. We earnestly hope this matter will receive the consideration it merits, and that employers generally will signify their readiness to coöperate in a scheme that promises, as the circular sets forth, "the surest pledge of industrial peace and the firmest support in times of commercial distress." The prevalence of strikes throughout the entire country at the present time and the probable reopening of many mills and factories in the near future, will surely make it clear to both capitalist and wage-worker that some different system from that which has obtained in the past is absolutely necessary for the interests of both factors in the great industrial power which holds in its hand the very life of the nation.

WE are truly surprised to find that in the opinion of the Congregationalist "the granting of municipal suffrage to women at this time would seriously retard the municipal reform movement, and set back what seems to be the most important reform of this century." Not because women would not vote right, but because they would not vote at all. Our friend thinks that, like a large class of good male citizens, they would be indifferent to the problems of government and careless in their discharge of civic duties, and that the work which friends of municipal reform have done in overcoming the apathy of male voters would have to be done all over again among female voters. In other words, that until women could be educated up to the responsibilities of citizenship, government would be in the hands of the vicious element which always votes. Can the Congregationalist furnish any facts from the experience of states where women already exercise the right of suffrage which will substantiate its claim and show that it has grounds for its fears? If the advocates of municipal reform will apply to this question the inductive instead of the deductive method of reasoning they must arrive at the conclusion that municipal suffrage for women at this critical juncture would not only not set back the most important reform of the century, but would give it an impetus that nothing else could.

MY SERVANTS.

BY ADELINE HOHF BEERY.

Blank darkness paints the woodland sky;
I cannot see the way;
Lo! from the rosy-lidded east
Winks the round eye of day!

I'm weary of this pebbly stretch,
The hard-blue heat and calm;
Ha! comes the fresh'ning west wind up
And laves my face with balm.

The grass and I, in dusty coat,
Look upward, limp with thirst;
At once a clear rill dimples by,
And showers from full skies burst!

Here's a hard seed; I want a flower;
I hide it in the mold,
Till sun and dews—strange alchemy!—
A wondrous bloom unfold.

I want to visit with my friend
Across the continent;
My steed of steam halts at his door,
With fire and strength unspent.

I reach one day a precious goal;
I'll let the home-folks know;
The lightning cries, "Hurrah, send me!"
So back the glad words go.

I want a draught of pure, deep joy;
I call the central 'phone;
God's voice rings sweetly back, "I come!
I bring it from my throne!"

Huntingdon, Pa.

AT MR. JACK STOPPER'S.

BY DOYLE.

(Concluded.)

"How long have you lived here, Mr. Stopper?" I asked after the recital of his daughter's death.

"About twenty-five year," he replied. "I first lived twenty year on the road, but a bad neighbor drove me out, and moved me into the 'pocket,' where there's no danger of bein' troubled by anybody. I own all the good land, and nobody comes here, unless it is to hide, and it is generally understood that I am in the bargain, and while they are hiding from the law, they must hide from me, too. The sight of me skeers 'em as bad as if the sheriff had his hands on 'em."

I replied, "You seem to have the reputation of 'skeering' people. I was warned before I got here that you would 'skeer' me; and I must acknowledge that I was a little startled when I hailed and you answered so near me at the gate. But since you are so kind, I am sure I do not feel that you are a very dangerous man."

"No," he answered with a chuckle, "I am not dangerous. I am not afeared of anybody, because I have done no harm to anybody, but somehow people generally respect me, and rascals are afeared of me. And then somehow, I have got it in me to love to see people afeared of nothin'. No, sir, I'm no bully, I'm the peaceablest man in the parish. I never saw the inside of a courthouse and never will. Let me tell you how I come to move offen the road. As I said, I had a bad neighbor over thar. He began to werry me as soon as he moved thar, tryin' to buy me out. I wouldn't sell; then he began to werry me to make me sell. The last year I lived thar, I had the purtyest ten-acre field of cotton in the parish. It would have made a bale and a half to the acre, and the whole country admired it. Jest as it was in bloom and the prospect was the brightest, one mornin' I took a neighbor over to look at it. As we turned the hill whar we could get a good view of it, and I was feelin' proud of the sight I was goin' to see, my neighbor called out, 'Good gracious, Uncle Jack, look!' What do you reckon I saw? The fence was down in a dozen places, and thar was not less than two hundred head of cattle in the field, and the signs showed they had been in a day or two. Thar wasn't a leaf on the stalks. I was speechless, but my neighbor said: 'Uncle Jack, I declar' I'd go to law with him.' I said: 'Good gracious man, haven't I had calamities enough without gettin' into the hands of the lawyers?' Do you know what I did? I rode right on to the house of the bad neighbor and asked him without any jowerin', what he would give me for my place. He made me an offer and I took him up. I said, 'I'll take it.' And by the next spring I was here right whar you see me, ready to pitch a crop, and I've been here ever since. I wasn't afeared of this fellow, but I reasoned jest this way; I had but one life, and it was poor business for me to waste it foolin' with this fellow, when I could be jest as happy and do jest as well somewhars else. And then it was not pleasant anyhow livin' by such a man."

I interrupted him here to commend his wisdom.

He proceeded: "You see I am not a man for a fuss, but I do like for people to respect me, and I do have a weakness for seein' low-down trash skeered and I have had my fun at it. I don't mean anything by it, but it is jest in me, and it's about the best amusement I ever had.

"Just last week a peddler lost his way and called at the gate and asked to stay all night. I said I had no objection, only a peddler or two had been killed in my house. At this he turned pale and shook all over, and asked, 'Mr. Stopper, is thar no other place where I could stop?' I told him thar was a man down the road apiece that would take him in, but that he had about twenty indictments now against him for killing as many peddlers. At this he took an ague, and his teeth chattered, and he said: 'Mr. Stopper, please tell me what I had better do.' I told him to get in the house quick, before anybody saw him, as quick as lightnin', and maybe he might stand a chance to get through the night with his life.' At this he flew like a skeered rabbit, and burst open the door and liked to have paralyzed the folks, asking, 'Whar must I go? Whar can I hide?' He could hardly eat supper for watchin' the door and jerkin' his head every time a noise was made. By bedtime he was so skeered he was as limber as a rag. I couldn't get his mind off the subject no way. When he went to bed he could hardly walk, and as I was about to tell him good-night and wish him pleasant dreams he asked, 'Mr. Stopper, could you let me have a gun in the room to-night?' 'Of course,' said I, 'and have her cocked and primed, and bolt your door and bar your window, and sleep with one eye open; no tellin' what's goin' to happen before mornin'.' This was the last of him till mornin'. When he come to breakfast his eyes looked like they had been gouged and filled with sand, and his hair looked like a bird's nest. I tried to talk cheerful to him, but he wouldn't talk, and seemed like somethin' was on his mind. Presently I stopped, and after waitin' a little he asked me, 'Mr. Stopper, were you jokin' about them peddlers bein' killed here?' 'Why, yes,' I said, 'of course I was jokin'; that is half my livin'.' He took a long breath, and said: 'I wish you had told me it was a joke; I didn't sleep a wink last night.'"

I remarked that this was rather a rough joke.

"Yes," said Mr. Stopper, "but he soon got over it, and it has lasted me till now, and I never think of that fellow's looks next mornin' that I don't enjoy it."

Here I will make an explanation. I have told this story just in the order, and after the manner of its happening. When I entered the house with Mr. Stopper he began to talk, and the conversation on his part was one uninterrupted volume. There was no stopping for anything. Excepting the few questions I asked there was only a word now and then from the different members of the family. Mr. Stopper did all the talking. He began before I was seated, and talked incessantly while we were at supper and on the way there and back. He shifted his position in his chair, sometimes he stood up, sometimes he threw a fresh pine knot in the fire, but no matter what else he did he never ceased talking. He was hungry for somebody to talk to, and he found me an interested listener, and satisfied his hunger. It was a desire to present things just as they were that made me neglect so long to say anything about the house and the supper. It was a complete home-made home. The house was of logs, and was made, out and out, by hand. The bedclothing, furniture and wearing apparel were also home-made. The floors were not carpeted, but were as clean as the inside of a bandbox. The clothing was not cut after any Parisian pattern, but it was clean. There was in the house that sweetness which perfect neatness always makes, and there was that smell which comes from a perfect lack of odor. If manners here were uncultivated, they were natural and easy. I should say of the people that they were modestly frank. They were polite and kind but not truculent.

At the proper time the smell of cleanliness gave place to the savory odor of well cooked country food. The aroma of ham, sausage, corn-bread, biscuit and coffee, mingling together, came invisibly to tempt the palate of the hungry traveler. Finally a door opened and we went in to supper. The table cloth was home-made cotton as white as the driven snow. The menu was, as to meats, ham, sausage, ribs and side-meat. The whole hog was represented if not eaten. Then there was genuine Louisiana coffee, old-fashioned Southern corn-bread, and as good beaten biscuit as were ever eaten. Have I forgotten to mention the butter, as yellow as gold and sweet enough to be eaten alone? It was there. And there were salt and pepper sauce, and that was all. Was there no sugar for the coffee? No, and nothing else that was sweet.

My host apologized by saying, "I wish we had some kind of sweetenin' for you; I have been threatenin' to get some molasses or sugar for the last six months, but I haven't been to town but once and then I forgot it."

I was anxious to know if this destitution was one of the signs of poverty. By a kind of wordy legerdemain I found that this old man had on hand three whole crops of cotton that had not been marketed.

And now there is one more thing to speak of. Bedtime came. Oh, that sweet, clean bed! A good place to lie and think it was, enjoying the prospect of undisturbed repose. And I did think. What a man! What a family! Not a typical man or family. One of their own kind were they; blissfully ignorant, ignorantly blissful. They had but little, but wanted no more and were happy. I slept well and dreamed of a life away from the din of the nineteenth century.

The next morning we ate by "candle-light." When daylight came my horse was ready at the gate. After bidding the family good-by I walked to the gate with Mr. Jack Stopper. I asked for my bill.

He replied: "You owe me to come again the next time you get lost."

I was about to untie my horse when the old man asked me to walk with him a "little piece," he leading the way; we turned a corner about fifty yards from the gate and going a little farther came to a small enclosure made of riven boards and shaded by one dense cedar tree. In this enclosure, on the right side, by side, were two full length graves; on the left two shorter ones. Pointing to the first the old man said with emotion: "These two graves are the price paid for whisky by a man who never bought a pint in his life."

The merit of this story is its plain, unvarnished truth.

Chicago, Ill.

A LESSON FOR YOUNG MEN.

BY MINERVA BRACE NORTON.

One of the most interesting of recent books is the "Life and Times" of the Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., LL.D. Dr. Hamlin, now eighty-three years of age, has had a varied and distinguished career. Beginning life on a farm in western Maine, fitting for college in a country academy, he was graduated at Bowdoin College (where Prof. Henry W. Longfellow was one of his teachers) and at Bangor Theological Seminary. In the year 1838 he entered upon the great educational work of his life by receiving the appointment of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions to the work of education at Constantinople. Later he became the persevering and indefatigable founder of Robert College on the Bosphorus near Constantinople, an institution which, by the blessing of Providence on the training there afforded to many of the most promising young men of the Turkish Empire, has doubtless already indirectly changed the map of Europe, and may affect the course of all future history.

To Cyrus Hamlin, when, a farmer's boy of sixteen, he came to Portland to be apprenticed to a silversmith, there were only visions of an artisan's career. But God had other work for him to do. When he had been a year or two in that city, the church, whose services he attended, had discovered the promise of the youth, and through a committee urged him to prepare for the Christian ministry, promising him generous aid in procuring an education to that end. He was fitted out by friends with the necessary books. "My Greek Testament," he says, "I am confident was from Neal Dow, then one of the promising young men of Portland, a tanner by trade, but also a scholar and a gentleman. That Greek Testament, printed in Boston, in 1814, has recently come back to me from the West with names of students through whose hands it passed. The son of the last owner, seeing my name and the date 1829, as I am the only living one of the students who have successively owned it, sent it to me as a memento of the past."

That good deed of Neal Dow, nearly sixty-five years ago, goes "marching on." Perhaps it paved the way for influences which were to be tributary to the great temperance work which the ninetieth anniversary of the good man's life sees also "marching on" to ultimate victory.

At least the boy, Hamlin, did not wait until his education was completed, and his life-work begun on a foreign shore, before he grappled with the rum power. In his native town, Waterford, while still an academy student, together with his only brother, Hannibal Hamlin, he pondered the situation. With these boys, action was the logical sequence of meditation. They knew every man in town, at least by reputation. From a population of fifteen hundred they wrote down the names of one hundred and fifty townsmen, of whom seventy were "hard drinkers" and eighty were "confirmed drunkards." One Sunday evening they talked over this list with their brother-in-law, Mr. William Stone, and decided that "something must be done." Mr. Stone said: "If you will write a petition to our minister to begin at once a course of weekly or fortnightly lectures on total abstinence, I will go around to-morrow and see how many men will sign it."

Cyrus, now a youth of nineteen, wrote the petition and Mr. Stone obtained seventeen signatures, some of which were those of intemperate men who would like to hear what the minister had to say upon this new topic.

"Then William Warren," says Mr. Hamlin, "physically and mentally the most powerful young man in town, took the paper and obtained forty additional names. The minister, Mr. Douglass, was astonished and the meetings were appointed without delay. They were well attended and ably conducted. In the spring of that year, 1830, the first total abstinence society of the town was formed. It produced great and excellent results. It rescued many from the very jaws of destruction and saved a majority of the boys from the deadly habit. It needed, however," continued Mr. Hamlin, "the Maine Law to finish the work." But the star of Prohibition had not yet dawned.

Neal Dow had not lost sight of the boy whom he had helped to start for college. In the junior class young Hamlin heard lectures upon the steam-engine; but hardly one of his class-mates had any clear understanding of the machine. "Few," he says, "had ever seen one; there was no such thing in the state of Maine." The youth proposed to his professor to make a steam engine with which to illustrate the lectures and was warmly encouraged in the rash undertaking. It was at the beginning of a two months' vacation and the young man went to Portland for the construction of his model. To it he devoted the whole vacation and two weeks more, granted by the indulgent professor. It cost him seventy-two dollars, a great extra expenditure for an impecunious collegian, but he bravely gave lyceum lectures and obtained the money to meet his bills. "Neal Dow took the greatest interest in it from the beginning," he says, "and helped me in boring out the refractory cylinder." Mr. Dow was then president of the Portland Lyceum, and secured for the enthusiastic student two lectures before that body at ten dollars each. These were Mr. Hamlin's first lectures, and after that Saco, Hallowell, Augusta, Gardiner and Brunswick were open to him.

Bowdoin College gave one hundred and seventy-five dollars for that model of a steam engine, the first ever made in the state of Maine, and it is now in one of the cabinets of that college. Mr. Dow had assisted at a feat which, though remarkable for its time, was only a preparation for others still more wonderful, in later years, on the banks of the Bosphorus.

While a student in the Theological Seminary at Bangor, Mr. Hamlin for a time devoted himself to the relief of families plunged into want and misery by intemperance. Nothing so prepares one for "legal suasion," as distinct from moral, as the hand-to-hand and face-to-face knowledge of the evils of intemperance gained through association with the women and children who are the chief sufferers therefrom.

In the second year at Bangor Mr. Hamlin and a classmate were especially active in temperance matters. "We were appointed," says Mr. Hamlin, "by the Penobscot Temperance Society, to correspond with physicians and obtain an expression of their views in regard to cider. It had especial reference to the farming community. We were surprised and delighted with the general unanimity of their testimony to its injurious effects. It led to the including of cider in the pledge."

This was in the seminary year 1835-36. The same year young Mr. Hamlin was appointed to give the annual address before the Penobscot Temperance Society, at which, as he tells us, he felt called upon to do his best. This was his opportunity to make what has been called the first prohibitory law address ever made in the state of Maine. It was one for which previous thought and action on Mr. Hamlin's part had been preparing the way since, as a boy, he had begun the temperance work in his native town.

Of this address he says: "I fell upon a fortunate train of remark as an exordium that all true reforms have certain underlying principles that may be easily stated and usually condensed into mottoes. I ventured to suggest a motto for the temperance reform:

LIGHT, LOVE AND LAW,"

which he interpreted as, First, moral suasion; second, benevolent action; third, the restraint of law.

Mr. Hamlin says further: "It was the first prohibition argument I had known . . . I have never changed my mind since. . . . but Neal Dow had not then come forward into the work, and my argument fell dead!"

Not dead, but a living germ planted in soil whence beneficent harvests were yet to spring. Does not this suggest a lesson to young men who are preparing for the stage of life? Dr. Hamlin's long career has had many wonderful episodes, but who shall say that the wise and well-directed efforts of his student life to combat the evils of intemperance were not as fruitful of good as those of his maturer years when he was the honored guest and co-worker of the Earl of Shaftesbury and Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, and when in the prosecution of his life-work he was called to stand before kings?

Beloit, Wis.

ANSWER THIS QUESTION!

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

"Woe unto him who giveth his neighbor strong drink," says Habakkuk in the name of Jehovah-God.

"Not so," protests the collector of Internal Revenue in the name of the United States Government, if he exhibit a "Special Tax Receipt" for the sum of $25 in full of all demands.

According to the report of Internal Revenue Commissioner Miller for the year 1892, the patrons of saloons in the United States paid $609,000,000 for whisky and $617,258,460 for beer, a total of $1,226,258,460; the interest of which for one minute at 6 per cent per annum is $8,515.68.

If it be true, as the Supreme Court of the United States declares, that the question of prohibition or restriction of the liquor traffic is "a matter of legislative will only," it must be, also, a matter of legislators. And, if it be a matter of legislators, it must be a matter of votes. For, votes make legislators—and—at last votes make laws.

It is said that the position of Ohio legislators is very embarrassing. "Good people" demand the passage of the Haskell County Option Bill. The Liquor League demands its suppression. In consequence, it is announced that there will be no legislation hostile to the interests of those noble citizens who pay $275 per annum for the purpose of selling intoxicating drinks at retail.

The Ohio Liquor League announces its willingness to pay a just tax for the protection of its interests. Is this the form of "protection" which triumphed so gloriously on November 7, 1893?

William McKinley, Jr., once said: "Every man who votes for license makes himself, of necessity, a partner to the liquor traffic and all its consequences"—but, this expression of sentiment will not prevent his election to the presidency as a "protectionist," if he does not advocate the prohibition of that traffic, which he splendidly denounced as "the most degrading and ruinous of all human pursuits."

Collectors of Internal Revenue discriminate between "special tax" and "license." They say that the United States government does not license the liquor traffic; it only taxes it. But, if the collector reads "tax" on the face of the so-called "special receipt," the saloon-keeper reads "license" on the back of it—and demands special protection in return for his special tax.

In South Carolina a dispenser of intoxicating drinks is granted the privilege of vending whisky, not as a right, but as a confidence, which may be forfeited on failure to fulfill all stipulated conditions.

Is it right to accept a situation of defiant lawlessness, and collect a tax from law-breakers in the name of good government?

Cincinnati, O.

SLUMS AND SOCIALISM.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

The main canon in the rubric of a worker with altruistic tendencies should be to believe with all the heart and soul and mind and strength that there is more good than evil under the awful crust of dirt and depravity, of ignorance and indolence, of sodden selfishness and sacrilege, which make the despair of the thoughtful as well as the chains of the victims themselves. Whatever life there is in a human being is the life of God, which He breathed into him when He made man a living soul. Faith will find this gift of God,—and "He who most believes in man,

Makes him what he believes."

This must be so under the action of inexorable law. Like begets like in the spiritual world just as in the physical. Law is the only solid foundation on which to build character as well as pyramids. Philanthropy must discover the basic principles on which God has built up the human soul, if its work in the social order be other than sporadic and ephemeral.

It is probable that most philanthropic, mission and slum work is classified as church work, gospel work. This is correct, but it is no less true that it belongs equally to the social order, and when we meet it practically we cannot tell where church work and civic work, the man as a Christian and the man as a citizen begin, end or overlap each other. The more we look the more we find them identical. A corrupt municipality means a corrupt church, and nothing is truer than that deadness of spirit in the church is the *un*heavenly twin of civic immorality.

The greatest thought in the heart of the present day is Christian citizenship. Mission workers find that the saloon in politics is the arch enemy of righteousness; that unsavory municipal conditions are the wall of adamant blockading heavenly gales which would purify. Gospel workers write the precepts of the church and Christ athwart their banners, but do not consider it equally their bounden duty to force these principles into the politics of the city and state—not only for the destruction of the liquor traffic, but for justice, simple justice for all men and all women; not for classes, but for the masses who are at once the bulwarks and the menace of this civilization. We want a justice that does not arm the boy in the public school and drill a formidable state militia to protect plutocracy against democracy, capital against honest labor—which only asks a living wage, but to whom justice should mete out a reasonable day of labor that would secure a comfortable living and freedom from anxiety for old age. Militarism is a recession in our civilization; it has only selfish ends; is the organization of brute force against the spirit of progress.

The social questions of the day should make no stronger appeal than to the workers in city slums. The missions in these districts of Chicago—and other centers—have this winter fed and lodged on the chairs of their audience rooms thousands of homeless, starving, freezing men and women, while wheat is at so low a price that the farmer is burning it for fuel and the elevators on the lakes are bursting with stored grain. While the factories have shut down and turned an army of their operatives into the streets because, they say, production is greater than consumption, the missions have begged second-hand clothes to put on this tatterdemalion troop of naked, despairing unemployed—for the most part, honest laborers whose only cry is, "Give us work!"

Does it not behoove those who thread the grimy, reeking ways of the slums, pitifully seeking those terrible images of Christ which this civilization has cast in grim, threatening bas-relief in every doorway, to inquire into the causes of such anomalies; to understand what these conditions have to do with tax and tariff, labor and capital, strikes and monopolies, production and consumption,—and first and last and always with suffrage?

Half of the church has no citizenship—that half is supposed to "seek a city not made with hands, a citizenship in heaven,"—they'll practice it, however, awhile on earth first! God hasten this day of tardy justice, for when women vote every party will be a prohibition party, and then the work shall be not to help the slums but to abolish them, to bring up the "noblest structure of God, humanity," all together.

There has never before been a time in American history when indigence and idleness were not synonyms; when the contrasts of want and luxury were as vivid; when the struggles between capital and wages were so desperate; when anarchy and order contested so violently. Nor, as yet, has there been a time when apathy has been so roused out of its deadness; when cause and effect have had such heart-searching; when human nature has exhibited such forbearance and noble resistance to evil suggestion; when justice for each has become the sign of mercy for all; when there has been such a hunger for something better and such a divine purpose to find it; such a desire to see things as they are and such an honest effort to make other men see them.

Cataclysms do not always mean catastrophe but re-formation. These universal paroxysms are throes of birth not of death, the advance pains in the social organism which shall bring about a life,—and that life Christ formed in men, not only the hope of glory,—but of cleanliness and order, of justice and kindness, of purity and peace, of beauty of body and spirit, of common honesty for man and society, of human evolution out of self, unto one another,—and unto God.

Chicago, Ill.

MEMORIES OF THE WHITE CITY.

VII.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

A great deal of fun was poked at the Columbian guards. It is certain that their uniforms and swords did not always assort with their carriage, which was rarely military, and they had to learn their business like the rest of us. At my first visit to the Agricultural Building I had a brief glimpse of the Japanese exhibit, and for the second visit I made an appointment with a friend to meet there. But I entered the building the second time at the north, and becoming bewildered, asked a guard to direct me.

"Thur ain't no such exhibit here," said he with solemn slowness. "No, ma'am. Nowhurs."

But the Columbian guards if not well set up from a military standpoint, nor yet Solomons of wisdom, were endlessly patient and obliging, nay, more, they were often exceeding kind. I came upon my little friend Fritz one day sitting on one of the benches near the north entrance of Festival Hall. Near him was a guard, evidently trying to cheer him up, for spite of himself Fritz would occasionally smile. He sprang up at sight of me.

"I'm lost," he announced. "Mamma was to meet me here. I am sure it was here, but she has not come. This guard has gone and put down my name among the lost children;" here Fritz winked back a tear. "I don't mind waitin' with him, he's so interestin', Aunt Betty, but if"— here Fritz's mamma suddenly appeared, and the sobs he had thus far controlled got the better of him. "Oh, guard," he cried after a second, "I don't want to be a lost child any more."

"I'll go and take your name off this minute," said the kindly fellow, and Fritz was comforted.

. . . . . .

We found the Woman's Building besieged by a flood of women when we mounted the steps the noon of May 1. I had but one ticket, and I wondered what would become of Timotheus. It was a little odd to be taking Timotheus, instead of being taken by him, but one gets used to new things these days.

"Why can't we go in here?" clamored a chorus of soprani voices about us. "We came to-day on purpose to get in here. This is the very place we want to see."

I put up my pasteboard with inward tremors. "This gentleman belongs to me," I explained. A door opened, and when I entered I felt as proud as a grand lama. But here were other guards and—still but one ticket. Fortune directed me to a chubby German, to whom I stated the case.

"You take de bess you gits in dere;" he waved his hand to some benches near the stage. An instant later another guard demanded our tickets, when my German guardian cried, "Das all right, Sammy; I haff dere tickets," and he slapped the breast of his snug jacket, bestowing upon me at the same moment a most atrocious wink.

. . . . . .

Crocheting seems to mark a certain stage of female development. Curiously enough the Spanish, Mexican and South American exhibits of women's work abounded in crocheting and artificial flowers. In the Brazilian booth there were curtains all of crochet, and the attendant was always "hooking," as Timotheus said.

. . . . . .

I never knew anything about cats until Jeremiah adopted me. Jeremiah was evidently of good family, but circumstances had been too much for her, and she certainly was as wretched as a cat can be until she took me for better or worse. I called her Jeremiah because, not content with yowling upon all other occasions, she would stop lapping up milk to run to me and cry, possibly from gratitude, possibly from a desire for sympathy. Recollections of dear Jeremiah made me go again and again to see Henrietta Ronner's cats. Civilization has had little effect upon pussy. To paint her the artist must have exceptional keenness and sensitiveness of observation, endless patience, and a swift and sure touch. Rosa Bonheur has rarely attempted her, but no creature has more delicate and graceful lines, and no gem rivals pussy's eyes. Inscrutable pussy looked out at you from Mme. Ronner's canvases, her fur a-quiver with changeful lights, her eyes seemingly closing and unclosing to the light, till after a minute it seemed as if you had but to cry "scat!" and she would vanish. And Mme. Ronner was born in Amsterdam! Vivant les chats! Vive la Mme. Ronner!

And there were other pictures in that Holland exhibit I close my eyes to see again—pictures of roses, ethereal and dewy, such as grow beneath the sunny skies of our own south; a picture of a homely noontide meal within a cottage, to which somehow the artist has given that unspeakable touch which transmutes the commonplace into the sacred, and you know he meant to suggest the sanctity of home, the blessedness of daily bread with love; and still another canvas shines before me full of the indescribable tints of spring, a glory of sunshine filtering through tender leaves upon crystal water.

"Let's get out of here," I overheard one serious looking man say to another in the French art exhibit. "I'm tired of seeing naked women capering around without any sense." There certainly were a good many naked women pictured as "capering around" in that region, in the woods, and fields and upon the sands. I believe the painters of nudes go in for naturalism. As I looked I could not help wondering if the artists ever thought how soon real flesh, especially cherubic flesh such as they painted, would suffer for soda and vaseline exposed to the sun and the sting of insects. Of course there is neither sun-burn nor mosquito in Arcadia, but is it consistent for the naturalist to paint his figures from life and his landscapes from his imagination? No other substance takes the light just as flesh does. One looking for objectionable pictures at the Fair, if he were sharp-sighted, found them not among the nudes; the evil in a picture being in its suggestion.

South Evanston, Ill.

A CERTAIN minister called upon a member who had been neglecting the week-night services, and went straight up to the fireplace in the sitting-room, and with the tongs removed a live coal from off the fire and placed it on the hearth, then watched it while it turned from the red glow of heat to a black mass. The member in question carefully observed the proceeding, and then said: "You need not say a single word, sir; I'll be there on Wednesday night."

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

V.

Distribution.

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

The law of rent is so important; the more it is studied, the more light is thrown upon existing conditions. A diagram may help to a clearer understanding:

Let the above diagram represent land possessing different degrees of productiveness. All land lying in column A may be said to yield 10 per cent wealth by a given amount of labor. Land in B yields 9, in C 8, in D 7, in E 6, in F 5.

In settling upon this land, people naturally settle first upon (A)—the best. When this is all taken, the overflowing population must settle upon B. But the same amount of labor on B will yield only 9 per cent wealth, while those owning land in A have 10. The A's have now an advantage of 1 over B's. Here is a beginning of unequal opportunities. For the B's surely were not to blame for being born ten years later, or from families that had not the good fortune to obtain the best land when it was freely open for settlement. The fact that the A's have an advantage of 1 over the B's, fixes the rent line at 1. All above goes to rent; all below to wages and interest. For, since those living in B can make but 9, they will be as well off if they live in A and pay 1 for rent; they will then have nine left. This competition for land in A fixes the average wages of all in A and B alike.

Soon B is full and people are crowded to C. Here the same amount of labor will produce only 8 per cent wealth. C's may as well live in A and make 8, paying 2 for rent; or, live in B and make 8 paying 1 for rent. This competition fixes the rent line at two. All above goes to rent, all below to wages and interest.

People owning land in A can now begin to live without labor on their rents, while the average price of wages and interest is pressed down to 8. Everything in the end comes out of labor; the more rent receives the less will wages and interest receive. Many begin to see how things are going and so take up land in C or purchase what they can afford in B and A. The effect of this is to press population out to D, which will give only 7 per cent wealth with the same labor, and presses the rent line down to 3.

Again, an increasing population and more land held out of use, and the rent line drops down to 4 and so on down to 5. All above this line now goes to rent; while below, labor and capital are fighting each other in a life and death struggle, combining against each other, not seeing the real cause of their trouble.

The land that is now freely open to labor and capital is poor and unproductive. What labor can make off this land fixes the average price of wages in A, B, C, D and E; for all above line 5 goes to rent. Capital being hard pressed, cuts down wages. Laborers being poor cannot buy what they need; this gives a dull market. At last one or two heavy failures occur and there is a panic. Then both labor and capital stand idle, until on every street you see signs "To Let, To Let." By this you know that rents have fallen i. e., the rent line 5 is pushed up a little so that labor and capital can now begin again on easier terms and there is another eight or ten years' rush of good business. But with every recurring panic they grow more and more severe.

Now suppose in E there should suddenly be discovered a coal mine or oil well, or a thriving city should spring up. In each of these cases the land would be exceedingly productive and its value rise in proportion, which is here represented by the dotted lines. Labor and capital would rush here and for a time receive higher wages and profits; but all above line 5 would soon go to rent, and laborers would work as they now do in the coal mines of Pennsylvania for sixty-five cents a day.

Political economy is called the dismal science because it is one of the saddest things to realize that this rent line pressing down as it does upon all alike till it reaches the poorest men with land freely open to them, is controlled by a law of nature which cannot be changed. At first sight it seems a cruel one. It is God's plummet line of justice let down, forcing all to suffer in proportion as human rights are trampled upon. For the rights of the lowest ones in the community are as sacred in God's sight as the rights of the highest.

But this picture, dark as it is, does not tell the whole story, for not only does this excessive weight of rent rest upon labor and capital but they are also burdened with many and grievous taxations, pressing down so heavily that the wheels of industry almost stop; and in the midst of plenty there is starvation. The last census discloses the fact that the land of this country is owned by ten per cent of the population, leaving ninety per cent landless, or what amounts to the same, mortgaged to the full value of their land.

Look at the chart once more and note how unequally this rent is now distributed. Those owning land in A receiving five, in B 4, and so on, while all those living in A, B, C, D and E, who own no land, are as bad off as those pressed out to F. That wealth which labor produces should go to labor in the form of wages, and that which capital produces should go to capital in interest, and that which land values produce, should it not also go to them who produce it and not to landlords? Landlords do not produce this value. It is produced socially, as we have seen, by the growth of the community. This is a fact, and, moreover, one upon which all economists are agreed. The only point where we disagree from the old school is, to whom does this rent belong—to all who produce it or to only ten per cent of them?

Supposing there could be discovered a method by which all of this rent, above line 5, could be fairly collected, and then equally distributed to all. The effect would be like loosening iron bands of pressure about the body which threatened convulsions, bringing almost instant relief. The first effect would be to make it unprofitable to hold land out of use, and at the same time more profitable for all users of land. The result would be that those squares in the diagram now marked with crosses, representing land held out of use, would be again open to labor and capital; population would flow to this land, and the rent line would rise to 3. The emigrant wagons would be seen coming home, for no one would care to live beyond civilization when better land was freely open to them, and even in the midst of great cities there would be plenty of land for each family a home. The building industry would receive an impetus, and with this all other allied industries would soon feel the rush; wages and interest would both rise, and there would be no end to the increasing production of wealth until there was an end to human wants. Rent which now acts as a barrier, checking production and increasing the gulf between classes, would then be the strongest of forces, both in the production of wealth and in promoting more equal conditions in life.

Wollaston, Mass.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Ten Days in Germany.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—To be able once more to send a lead pencil letter "en route" to "our folks," is a token of improved physical condition that brings me into happy harmony with the tender fields of green and skies of blue that are about me and above. Anna Gordon and I have had a ten days' wonder of an Easter outing, all of which, except the two twenty-seven-hour journeys from "The Cottage, Reigate," to the German capital and back, we have invested with Mrs. Mary B. Willard and her children. Lady Henry went to Paris with her son, and, having remained quiet all winter, I thought to try my wings preparatory to the home-flight in June, and am delighted to find that, though ill by reason of a cold in the early days of my sojourn, I was able to go about somewhat the last two, revisiting the scenes I had known in 1868, when in Berlin as a student.

But, while I met many distinguished men and women (of whom more anon), the most delightful episode was an evening in the large drawing-room of my sister's "American Home School," with herself, my nieces Katharine and Mary, my nephew, Frank, and the pupils from many states, including California and Colorado. We agreed to give each other of our best, and talked of the life of God in the soul of man, and that life of man in the soul of his brother, which, together, make up all true work and worship. We sang dear hymns of home and sanctuary, enshrining memories the most tender and hopes that "lay hold on immortality." Among them were the Church of England's beautiful "Hymn for those at Sea" (as there are almost always those in the group whose loved ones have "gone down to the sea in ships"). We spoke of Matthew Arnold's definition of "culture" as a "knowledge of the best that has been said and done in the world" (a free rendering this, from memory); whereupon we incited each other to quote from the poets, and the choice morsels were like honey in the honeycomb. "From grave to gay, from lively to severe," we ranged, like bees in a posy garden, and if I could write here one-tenth of the good things garnered from years of reading by that score of aspiring Americans, that inspired French teacher, and the accomplished young Japanese (a student in the university who quoted from his native poets), it would make one whole appetizing number of the white-ribbon woman's own pet paper.

But I shall not attempt it, for the spirit of that halcyon hour can no more be adequately reproduced than the song of a shell or the tint of a rose-leaf. Of the practical outcome, however, I wish to say a word: We then and there resolved, unanimously, that it was every one's duty and privilege to quote at least one couplet—so far as possible the best—from each leading poet of all times, and especially from each leading poet of England and America. We then declared that as the big quotation books are costly, unwieldy and impracticable for people generally, we would proceed to compile a little pocket hand-book, which, were one familiar with its contents, would make him (or her) master of one priceless thought from each of the electest minds, especially those whose language-drapery was after fashions English or American. We then appointed a committee in good, orthodox fashion (Mrs. Mary B. Willard, chairman; Mlle. Pichmont, vice-chairman; Miss Katharine Willard, secretary; Miss Mary Noble, of Colorado, and Miss Lillie Burbank, of Baltimore, and several other accomplished young ladies, members), and any who are interested may look out for our booklet in time for the next holidays. "Can you quote from Spenser? From Dryden? Schiller? Hugo?" will be questions then answered in the affirmative by many who must now be silent,—at least that is our notion.

When the happy, helpful evening was over, we all made a "ring, round rosy," holding hands (as I told the girls was our custom at the close of W. C. T. U. conventions), and repeated together, after singing "Auld Lang Syne," our white-ribbon farewell: "The Lord bless thee and keep thee."

So good-by, gentle readers, and "God bless us, every one."

Frances E. Willard.

On the cars in Holland, en route to London.

THE WOMAN'S VOTE.

Colorado's Push for Prohibition.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Partial results of woman's enfranchisement have been realized through the state this spring, each municipality except Denver holding election on April 3. Knowing the previous situation, one may read election returns between the lines. The general result exhilarates like our mountain ozone.

Very generally the women voted. They were the most intelligent women, not the element conservatives feared. Persons sent out to register the new citizens reported that ninety per cent of the women "on the hill" willingly registered, while only thirty-five per cent of occupants in the bottoms so prepared themselves for the ballot. In scores of places women were put upon the ticket for responsible positions, each party vying with the other as to the qualifications for office such candidates should possess. Many were elected upon city boards: Montrose, Canon City, Golden, Salida, Highlands and Greeley so honoring themselves. One woman utterly declined to vote the ticket which carried her husband's name, because there were two bad men on it.

All over the state women were judges and clerks of election, in no case failing to command and receive respect. A white-ribboner who was chairman of judges at a Pueblo precinct says she had to instruct three times as many men as women in the preparation of their Australian ballot. At classic Colorado Springs, one-third more ballots were deposited by women than by men.

When it reaches our special cause, the study becomes absorbing. We have a fair local option law—as such laws go—and never before have so many towns "gone dry." Only one of these is without a stirring W. C. T. U.—little Julesburg up in the northeast corner, which must have become disgusted with her proximity to high license Nebraska. Heroic efforts were made by Akron, where our president, Mrs. Higgins, has lately planted a union, and though they failed to elect their ticket, their cause is elected and the future will show it. Republicans and Democrats laid down the deadly weapons they wield against each other for the offices out at Sterling, and joined forces to down the cranks. Rocky Ford began late but worked valiantly and almost won. Highlands, where our own National Laura A. Berry lives, fought off annexation to Denver to keep out saloons. At Colorado City, the first territorial capital, "the woman's ticket" not a distinctively temperance one but opposed to the leading liquor firm, was elected and a woman is to be an appointee of the new board. Littleton, ten miles south of Denver, has a prohibition mayor. Breckinridge took its very first prohibition ticket into the field and also elected the issue if not the candidates. Evans, Berthoud and Loveland carried the anti ticket. At Longmont, where rests the casket which used to hold the spirit of our state founder, our indomitable Kitty Thompson, the war was to the very teeth, and the home carried the day by a majority of one hundred and eighty-seven, a glorious victory. Its value cannot be appreciated except in taking into account the fact that the high license party had promised to levy no taxes for the year if they won. But fifteen hundred apiece from the boy-murder-mills did not count.

Probably the most interesting situation in the state is at Monument. The little town boasts an annual potato-bake day, and sometimes one of the two saloon men boasts that he has made his five hundred dollar license fee from the crowds that come by rail on that one day.

Last August the Lord sent a little W. C. T. U. into the town. Its nine members became twenty-five. At the first gospel meeting twenty-nine, mostly mature men, took the pledge. As spring came the union women called an anti-saloon convention and nominated a ticket. Then the liquor element took account of stock and decided their chances were in a dangerous plight. So the registry books were not sent for, no election was called and as the state day for registration came no board sat at Monument. It was given out that the old board could hold over indefinitely. They will be wiser in a few months. The law will take its course, impelled by this wise, determined band of women, despite the persecutions of the enemy, leveled at the president of the union and at the head of the temperance ticket, and Colorado law-breakers will have their object lesson.

Meantime the Prohibition party, as such, is already in the field. Hope is written all over their banners. The lower element fears—the God-fearing prays—the invincible believes. Put in your prayers and your words and your dollars, blessed white ribbon host, the world through, for now is our salvation nearer than we believe!

MARY JEWETT TELFORD.

En Route in Colorado.

A NOVEL TEMPERANCE ENTERTAINMENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Geneva branch of the Blue Cross Society has just had an entertainment of a novel character, an account of which may interest your readers.

Pastor L. L. Rochat, the founder of the Blue Cross Society, began the work here about seventeen years ago, and although it has extended all over Switzerland and other countries, Geneva remains his headquarters. He and the friends that have rallied round him have been the chief movers thus far in getting up meetings, lectures, entertainments, etc.

The idea had struck a certain number of reclaimed drunkards of Geneva that they might, in their turn, get up an entertainment to testify their gratitude to Pastor Rochat and his co-workers. This was accomplished on the 14th of March in the great hall called the Salle de la Réformation. The 320 reclaimed drunkards of Geneva invited Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Rochat and the members of the various committees, together with their friends and acquaintances, to what may be considered for Geneva, a monster tea-meeting. The hall was beautifully decorated with flags and evergreens, and about 900 people sat down to tea in the body of the hall, while about 500 more filled the galleries.

The program, which was punctually observed, comprised thirty-seven items, limited each to a minute, "like a railway table" as was sarcastically observed by one of the local papers, and consisted in speeches, testimonies by reclaimed drunkards, poetical and other recitals, together with numerous musical productions by the Blue Cross brass band, by the choir, by the juvenile members of the Société de l'Espoir (Band of Hope) etc.

The chair was taken by Mr. Rochat, a reclaimed drunkard of many years standing (no relation to Pastor L. L. Rochat), a blacksmith by trade. He said that his namesake, Pastor L. L. Rochat, little thought when he founded the Blue Cross seventeen years ago, that a great temperance meeting would one day be presided over in this city by an old nihilist, an enemy of society. On behalf of his colleagues and friends, the 320 reclaimed drunkards of Geneva, he expressed his deep felt thanks to Pastor L. L. Rochat, and to all the Christian friends who have shown sympathy to the fallen and spent much of their time and means in starting this good work of temperance; had they not come to the rescue where would he and his colleagues be now? Some in penitentiaries and prisons, others in lunatic asylums and most of them in that terrible abyss—a drunkard's grave. Other speakers followed.

Rev. Frank Thomas alluded to the saying of a cynic, "Marriage is like a fortress, those who re in are anxious to get out, and those who are out are striving to get in"; now temperance is just the reverse, formerly he had felt very little inclination to enter, but now he was in he would never go out, so help him God; hehad learned better things in temperance than in the theological school, for he had practically experienced that the Gospel is a power unto salvation.

A piece of poetry was then heard, the subject, "The Three Crosses," viz., the white cross of the Swiss national flag, the red cross of ambulance work and the blue cross of temperance. Great applause was elicited as each flag in succession was brought forward on the rostrum by a boy from the L' Espoir society. At the end of the recital the whole audience sang the national anthem. Tea was then served, while bouquets were offered to Mrs. Rochat and Miss Constantin, her aunt. A large photograph in a gold frame was presented to the venerable pastor, Choisy, chairman of the cantonal committee. In returning thanks Mr. Choisy said that there was a name in the hearts and on the lips of every one in the assembly, and named Pastor L. L. Rochat amid thunders of applause. The speaker said he had long been indisposed against temperance, but in his case the parson had been converted by his parishioner!

The closing speaker expressed his deepest thanks to all the dear friends who had got up this meeting, and now that they had felt, as the disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration, "it is good for us to be here," they must return to the foot of the Mount and resume, with Jesus, the great battle against that demon, drink, "that goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

The object in sending the above particulars to THE UNION SIGNAL is to ask for the interest and sympathy of friends in America for the temperance movement on the continent of Europe. Many of your readers will be touring in Europe this summer; would it be asking too much to solicit their interest, and to recommend their inquiring of the local pastors what branches of La Croix Bleue may exist in the towns and villages of their passage or residence; a little trouble taken in calling on the local office bearers, or in attending at the weekly or fortnightly meetings, will be amply repaid by the encouragement and sympathy they will bring to their continental brethren; and I venture to say that in most instances they will receive a hearty welcome.

National branches of the Blue Cross Society exist in France, Switzerland, Germany and Belgium (Charleroi); the last census gives a total of over eleven thousand members; the international committee meets every Friday morning at No. 7 Evêché, Geneva.

EDWARD MILSOM,
Hony. Sec. C. C. F.

Geneva, Switzerland.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works.—Ps. 73:28.

A letter has just come from Mrs. Carse stating that she has a pledge in writing from a noble man and his wife, for the $50,000 referred to in our last issue, payable in two years, the estate to be liable for the amount in case of death. There is an obstacle in the way, but one that can be overcome by looking to the source of all power, as the Temple workers have ever done.

There was a little meeting of prayer and praise at Headquarters when this news came, for it is understood that the second $50,000 is considered pledged on the condition that the first is secured. So everybody recited a verse of thanksgiving and trust. Mrs. Carse said in her letter: "The true and faithful praying band at the Temple is sending an unseen host to my assistance. I feel strengthened and encouraged." And this in the face of the fact that her foot has been hurt by being thrown from a horse. This plucky woman wrote of the accident: "You see old Satan is after me still, but he can't kill me till my work is done, the Temple paid for."

***

The Willard Hall collection on Neal Dow day, for a memorial window in his honor, amounted to somewhat less than $25. Will not others send in the amounts collected for that purpose so that the window may be begun at once? The "grand old man" of prohibition ought to see that window with his own "eye of sense."

***

Romulus, N. Y., sends $10 to be applied on the Seneca county union pledge. From the Fayette street union Baltimore, Md., comes $10 to be credited on a $100 pledge, with the promise to make the last payment in May. That is business-like. McMinnville, Tenn., W. C. T. U. sends $15, its first installment on $100. This is a small union in a little town at the beginning of the long mountain ascent to the Cumberland plateau—a country of such beauty that in sight of it just to live is a joy, and the pure air an inspiration to all best things. There's no such thing as fail in the women of that region. Vermontville, Mich., sends $8 to complete its $100 pledge. There is a "mounting" spirit in those women, too, for they express themselves as "stimulated to further effort for the Temple." Fredonia, N. Y., forwards $20, making $30 paid on its pledge. Mrs. E. Mc Neill, treasurer, in sending this sum says: "We thought we had helped all we could, but gladly rally to the Temple call." Mrs. H. M. Jacobs, Medina, N. Y., sends $50 in completion of $100, the gift of a generous brother to the W. C. T. U. of that city, but who will not permit his name to be used. These kindly brethren incline our faith toward the final redemption of all humanity, to a hope that an essential immortality will finally inhere in the race. Miss Louise E. Tilton, Temple Supt. for Vineyard Haven union, sends a check for $16, first payment on $100. She says: "We have twenty-eight mite-boxes, and hope by next January to have our full amount raised." Des Moines county, Iowa, W. C. T. U. forwards $10, first installment on its second $100. Mr. H. H. Higby, of Danville, was at the county convention when the first hundred dollars was decided on. He was so aroused by the Temple talk that, unsolicited, he gave the first $5, and Miss Ida Mix followed with the second. Iowa shows notable ingenuity; Mrs. Dunham, president, printed white ribbon bows with the state flower, and by their sale secured $15 for the Temple. "Mother wit," is good capital in this cause. Carthage, Ill., has sent $55 to be applied on a $100 pledge. Barton, Fla., contributes $10 on $100, making $25 already paid. From the Urbana, Ohio, union comes $25 on a $100 pledge for Champaign county. Winthrop, Ia., W. C. T. U. gives $1 with its prayers for the Temple. Mrs. Thos. W. McCool Martin, New Providence, Iowa, sends $50 with promise of a like sum in a near future, in memoriam of her former husband, Thomas W. McCool, "a true temperance man, whose light should shine for distant generations."

***

Miss Fannie Dean, Jamestown, Ohio, writes: "Inclosed please find $10, a part of a sum I have been saving for a long time for a much desired object, but the call is so strong I divided it between the Temple and the missionary society." This self-denying and generous woman is filling a mite-box also. Mrs. F. A. Babcock, treasurer, sends $31.35 from the Milton, Wis., W. C. T. U. Some nameless friend from Greenville, Miss., has forwarded $5 "for the Temple fund." We are just as grateful as if her name were known; however, it is written on the "white stone." Macedon, N. Y., union sends $10 with such a generously expressed wish that it were more, we are sure it will be made more, after a little. An offering of $10 comes from Balaton, Minn., for its W. C. T. U.

***

Mrs. Fannie C. Wilcox, Plattsburgh, N. Y., has sent the contents of her mite-box, $3.65, for the souvenir spoon and wishes to state that of $52.16 credited on March 17 to her, nearly $30 was from the mite-boxes of about twenty persons, and only $11 was wholly hers, fancy work supplied by friends helping also to swell the figures. A $10 order comes from Cortland County union for souvenir spoons for Mesdames Decker, Watson, Sanders, Stoppard, Burroughs, Reese, Sager, all to be credited on $100 pledge. Seven members of a veteran band at Union City, Mich.—Mesdames Antisdale, Zimmerman, Johnson, A. C. and H. E. McCrary, Collins, Buell—send $7, with the request that a Columbian souvenir be sent to the last named, she being an invalid eighty years of age. Our hearts grow tender and our heads involuntarily bend for the blessing of these blessed aged saints who live in the glory of sunset.

THE OLD MAID'S FLOWER.

BY TARPLEY STARR.

No more I wear the fresh, bright flowers
That bloom in May.
They only grow for sweet, young things,
As fair as they.
But, ah, spring cannot claim the whole;
Some peerless flowers grace, too, the fall,—
Of faces fair and grand perfume,
Where no young claimant will presume.
I'll wait till later days shall come,
And then I'll pluck—most mete of all—
The old maid's flower, the flower they call
The elder bloom.

Berryville, Va.

THE PITY AND THE USELESSNESS OF IT.

BY EMILY M. ALLEN.

Among the striking pictures in the Art Gallery at the Columbian Exposition was one in the British gallery entitled, "The Curse of the Family." To the left of the foreground in a low, dark room, almost destitute of comforts, a woman bends wearily over a wash-tub, her face seamed and hard with grief and hopeless poverty. In the background sits a young woman, evidently the eldest daughter in from service, her arm passed around a little sister clinging closely to her. The mother's heavy eyes, the daughter's stolid, hopeless gaze, and the child's pathetically helpless look, are fastened upon a huddled man on the right before the grate—the husband and father; a man made in the image of God, crowned with glory and honor, called to be a king in the realm of manhood, a priest in the sacred domain of home, alas! stripped of his honor, glory exchanged for disgrace, duty forsaken, love drowned —king, priest, husband, father—drunk!

The artist had shown consummate art in his coloring; not a touch of brightness anywhere, all dull grays and browns. It was a fearful picture! If there had been visible one glimpse of blessed blue sky; if, across that weary woman's face, those hard girl-eyes, those hungry child-eyes, that miserable heap of a man, there could have streamed in one warm ray of sunshine to suggest the Redeemer from the bondage of sin, it would have been more bearable.

Was that picture a sketch of fancy? How far would an English artist have to go to find a model for a picture of such "death in life"?

There is a story that haunts me, a story that begins with "the red old hills of Georgia" and ends under the glorious sky of California; a story without a plot, in which the only characters are a boy and a mother thousands of miles apart.

In the late fifties amid the mountains of North Georgia, in the comfortable home of a well-to-do farmer, was a young man just past his majority. He was a splendid physical specimen, warm-natured as the glow of a southern sun, tender, as a brave man ever is. His general lovableness won countless friends. Little children found in him a comrade and a hero. Personal friendship with Christ seemed to be the one thing lacking to round a character so naturally attuned to the highest.

He studied law in the neighboring town, was admitted to the bar. The mother waited and hoped. But the atmosphere of "good-fellowship" around him, his own warmth of nature, the prevailing intemperance of the times,—alas! there were no "crusaders" then to raise a voice of protest "heard round the world,"—all these were cultivating tastes and habits that made the mother anxious.

The California gold fever had reached even his quiet community, and that Mecca of youth and pluck and enterprise drew him with the irresistible force that to us, of a later generation, fills all that time and the western Eldorado with romance. So, one day, the mother's wayward, yet loving boy, said good-by to his friends, with hope high in his heart and ringing in his voice; took a farewell look at the fields where he had plowed and sowed and reaped with a farmer boy's hardy strength; wrung the brother's hands, kissed the sisters a tender good-by, and heard the last word of counsel from the great-hearted father. On the mother's pale cheeks and trembling lips, as he kissed them, his hot tears fell like rain. He saw the unspeakable sorrow in those eyes, felt it in her clinging arms. But "wilful lad will have his way, and the wind no man can hold." Would he not come back in a few years rich, and they should all "live happy ever after"?

. . . . . .

The California side of the story is wrapped in uncertainty and shadow. The conditions of life in the mining regions of California are matters of history now, stranger, wickeder, more pathetic than even Bret Harte can paint it in his "Luck of Roaring Camp." That mother's boy—of a nature that above all others needed home care, home living, home love—found his brightest, most lovable traits were snares for his destruction.

The four years of the Civil War made a great silence between him and his home. The war over, the letters frequent at first, in a clear, bold hand, gladdening the mother's misty eyes, became few and unsatisfactory. A fortune of thousands and thousands was made several times with the quickness and readiness of their peculiar conditions—made easily, lost easily—recklessness became the order of life. Glimpses of the old tender, lovable nature were given. Preachers returning from missionary tours out there told of his successes, his losses, his popularity, his carelessness of life. The mother wept and loved and prayed and waited.

Fifteen years passed; twenty, twenty-five. The father died; the sisters married; the brothers scattered; the old home was broken up. To the younger members of the family the absent brother became almost unreal,

"Faint as a figure seen in early dawn
Down at the far end of an avenue—
Going we know not where."

The letters now had almost ceased, poor fellow! The last one the aged mother carried in her old-fashioned leather pocket-book. It was an irregular scrawl, barely legible; lines so wavering that they crossed one another. She could never find a word of blame—it was all love and hope and prayer with her. Sometimes when her grandchildren gathered about her she would tell them of their uncle's frolicsome childhood and boyhood, his bright sallies of wit, his daring escapades, his tender, chivalric love to everything weak and defenseless. When they asked, "Do you think he will ever come back to see us, grandma?" the sigh that gave an answer made them feel that they must not talk any more, but must run away and leave her by herself—poor grandmother! How that son would have wept to see her old, sad face! How tenderly he would have kissed the dear, wrinkled hands that were never idle.

There came a silence of three or four years. Then one summer day, to a young nephew bearing the same name, came a letter postmarked Sacramento. Enclosed was a letter the child had written over a year ago to the distant, never-seen uncle, and a long clipping from a Sacramento newspaper stating that at the hospital in that city on a certain date, that mother's boy, now himself a middle-aged man, nearing fifty, had, in an attack of delirium tremens, cut his throat! The child's letter, carried for many months in the poor wanderer's pocket, the last feeble link between him and home and hope, was the only clue to the address of his family. The paper bore testimony to his success at fortune-making only to lose again, his noble possibilities, and the traits that won him admiration and esteem. Can any one ever know a mother's thoughts as she pillows her head at night, not to sleep—but that her heart may break in the silence of darkness where none but God can know! There was no complaining—she knew in whom she had believed. The day after she heard it found the blessed old saint in her place in God's house while the minister talked of the power of prayer. I believe she somehow felt that her prayers for nearly fifty years could not remain unheard. God knows.

But the tired body with the weight and wear of eighty-three years which she had tried to make last until she could see her boy again in the flesh, and could read in his face and life "the victory that overcometh the world," the weary body failed rapidly, and soon the lifelong heart-break was ended. But oh, the pity of it, and the uselessness of it, this pitiless slaughter of its sons by permit of a nation that pretends to guarantee "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness" to every creature under its flag.

Forsyth, Ga.

MOTHERS' CLUBS.

VI.

Another Parents' Evening.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

As Dr. Wayne could not preside at the women's meeting his wife officiated in his stead. As usual, the exercises were begun promptly at three. The paper was given by Mrs. Benson, a woman whose white hairs betokened age of body, but whose placid face indicated youth of soul. She announced her subject as:

"THROUGH GRANDMOTHER'S SPECTACLES."

"The strong and rapid current of time has swept my little bark into an eddying bay, where apart from the turbid tide of active life I sit and watch the world move on. I see many things, some glad, some sorrowful, and even in my old age I am still learning. When I hear of the kindergarten for children, and am instructed in its methods, my heart rejoices for the little ones so fortunate as to live in this day of the world; but when I see those same children suffering under the barbarous empiricism of faulty home-training my heart goes out to them with a great pity.

"The injustice done to children by those who love them best is a strong plea for Mutter-Gartens as well as kindergartens. I shall not attempt to set forth any system or philosophy of child-culture, I purpose only to give a recital of some incidents, witnessed by me in homes of intelligence and Christianity, illustrative of the unintentional education in injustice and other evils given to children most dearly beloved and most earnestly prayed for.

"I once saw a child given the pan from which his mother had just poured the dough of a rich cake. With spoon and pan the child was having a luscious feast. His enjoyment was as great as that of his mother would have been had she been set down to a dish of ice-cream or of delicious fruit. In the midst of his pleasure the mother came in, hurried with her work, and wanting the particular place at the table which was then occupied by the enraptured boy. 'Get away,' was her greeting, 'I want this place. Give me that pan, you've had it long enough.' The child protested. He was not yet sated with the delight of scraping the pan. It was an enjoyment the mother had herself provided. She had not given it with any conditions or provisions. He had a right to expect it to continue as long as he wished. He would have been willing to move to another place, but the mother could not see in the scraping of the dish any especial pleasure, so she rudely snatched it from him, and drove him away.

"Rebelling in spirit the boy set up a howl, and slapped at the mother. In a moment he was engulfed in a whirlwind of passion. 'Slap me, will you? I'll teach you to slap me, you wicked, naughty boy,' and slap, slap, went the mother's hand over the delicate ears.

"Sobbing more with the feeling of injustice than with physical pain, the child crept away to one whom he felt would give him sympathy. In truth she, too, was hurt at the injustice done him, but she did not dare to express sympathy, for that would be to encourage him in rebellion against his mother and that would never do, so she took the tearful little figure on her lap and diverted him with stories until he had forgotten his grief. Later in the day, when the mother was rested and not busy, she hugged and kissed the child, calling him her dearest, darling treasure and a long list of other pet names, but that did not atone for the injustice done him in the morning. She is an intelligent woman and a loving mother, but the possibility of being unjust to her child has never occurred to her.

"The truth is we expect of our children far greater perfection than we have ourselves reached. We set them bad examples and then punish them for learning the lesson too well. We omit to say 'please' or 'thank you' when we address them, but are horrified if they neglect these polite phrases in speaking to us. We interrupt them when they are talking, but are withering in our rebukes of them if they, with their impetuous natures untrained by experience, find it hard to keep still when running over with such delightful things they wish to share with us. This is not a plea for permitting children to monopolize conversation, but simply a plea for allowing them an occasional opportunity to 'let off steam' as a measure of safety, and also as an act of simple justice.

"It is proper that they should be taught respect for their elders and not to interrupt conversation; but on the other hand, when we have allowed them to begin to speak, we should never be guilty of the rudeness of interrupting them, unless we are willing they should follow our example and interrupt us."

"Do you think it an injustice," asked Mrs. Barnes, "to have articles of food on the table which are not permitted to the children?"

"By no means. Some articles may be allowable for adults which are not permissible for children, and the children should be accustomed to see before them things which they must not have. It is a lesson in self-control which is needed in real life. They will always be seeing things which they must not touch, and if in childhood they obtain the idea that they are to have everything they see they are poorly fitted to meet the circumstances of actual life."

"Is it injustice to punish a child without allowing him to make an explanation in his own defense?"

"It seems to me that question answers itself. Still, I know some parents think that it teaches a child to make excuses, and perhaps to prevaricate, if allowed to explain a matter which the parent supposes he understands. I have known cases, however, where a child has been most unjustly punished because circumstantial evidence was against him and he was not allowed to defend himself by an explanation.

"It is also an injustice to punish a child when he does not understand what fault he has committed. This often occurs where parents make continual threats which they do not fulfill until their passion has been aroused; then they fly at the child and whip, when he, perhaps, has no idea for what he is being punished. He has been forbidden to do a certain thing, to be sure, but he has disobeyed the injunction so often without being punished that he cannot see why he should be whipped this time, and feels that he has been unjustly treated. And in truth he has. Justice demands that each and every disobedience of a command should be followed by an appropriate punishment. When this plan is followed the child will recognize the justice, and will also receive a lesson in the keeping of promises which will be of great advantage to him."

I would be glad if space would allow a longer report of this very practical paper and the discussion that followed. Its effect can be judged by the fact that a number of women went to Mrs. Benson at the close of the afternoon and acknowledged their indebtedness to her for opening their eyes to views of child-training unseen by them before.

The president now requested that each member of the club should bring to the next meeting a slip of paper bearing the full names of their children and the day of their birth, saying that the reason for this request would be given at the next session.

Toledo, O.

SPRING FASHIONS.

Now, old Dame Nature was worn and anxious,
For winter was slipping fast away,
While scarcely a stitch had yet been taken
On gowns that were needed the first of May.
And while she busily cut and fashioned,
Her children clamored in wild distress;
Each one giving a hundred directions
As to the color and style of her dress.

"Red," cried the tall and queenly Tulip,
"Blue," begged the Violet, shy and sweet;
"White," said the Jonquil, "white, remember;"
"Purple," the Pansy exclaimed in a heat.
While through the clamor and din of voices
For yellow and lavender, buff and white,
Old Dame Nature worked busily onward,
Striving to please them as best she might.

But, lo! when the children went a-Maying,
Their tiny gowns were a sorry sight;
In each were mingled, in strange confusion,
Breadths of yellow and blue and white.
Instead of red the queenly Tulip
Came out in colors of every hue;
While the mortified Pansy was wearing
A gown of purple and pink and blue.

The Crocus, too, was most unhappy,
And marched off home in a terrible huff,
Because her beautiful dress was ruined
By mixing its lavender breadths with buff.
But was it strange, ye thoughtful people,
With all the worry and care of mind,
With all the endless stitching, stitching,
That the weary mother grew color blind?

—Lucy E. Tilley.

FOR LITTLE JOE.

BY EUDORA STONE BUMSTEAD.

(Concluded.)

Katy was deftly plaiting her long, flaxen hair into smooth braids. On the chair beside her lay a new gingham dress which Mrs. Holt had made while this wonderful little woman had been out on her mission. Katy had not had a new dress since she could remember. All her clothes she had made over, as best she might, from the faded and worn apparel of the dear, dead mother. This crisp, fresh gown of warm plaid was almost a miracle to Katy. But after all it was not this that made her eyes sparkle and her thin cheeks flush. It was to think of going to the "Commissionary meeting."

"It seems like a great many names that I have to my paper," she said as she tied her first braid. "I could never have got so many if Mr. Holt had not helped me so. I will remember it as long as I live." And then more softly, "I will remember it when I am young and when I am old, and when I am gone to heaven."

"Now, just hear that, mother," said Holt, smiling with moist eyes. "And you know I hain't done nothin'. Jest drove 'round a little to show off our Katy because I'm so proud of her."

"And I'm jest as proud of you, Si," declared his wife, emphatically.

"And he will explain about my paper," said Katy. "And he says he'll make 'em tend to it, too. And then, after this month, there won't be any saloon at The Corners."

"You dear child," cried Mrs. Holt. "I never saw you look so happy. It has done you good."

"Yes," said Katy, "I can eat and sleep now, because the saloon is going to be stopped, and that makes me strong. And as long as there is a saloon anywhere, to kill mothers and fathers and make little boys drunk I will try to think of some way to stop it." Then Katy tied the second braid with a very firm knot, and went to array herself in the new dress.

Little Joe had been feasting his blue eyes upon it, and making admiring comments in the only language he knew, but when Katy came back with it on he was quite overwhelmed, and could only put his thumb in his mouth and stare. Katy hugged him close, and then ran back to the kitchen bedroom and took from under her pillow a daguerreotype of her father, taken long ago, when her mother first knew him. "It will keep me from being afraid," she thought.

It was a lovely day, like a bit of spring in midwinter. They drove fifteen miles to the county seat, and found the trip delightful. At last they stopped in front of a great brick building, climbed a long flight of stairs, chose the right door and entered the commissioners' office.

One of the gentlemen they found there recognized Mr. Holt and spoke to him, being addressed in return as Mr. Bugbee. Katy was then introduced with the remark: "She wants to see you about that matter of givin' a license to Cooney at The Corners."

"Ah, does she? Well, what is it, Miss Katy? We have just been looking at the petition. It seems all right."

"Here is my paper," said Katy. "These names are signed to ask you not to give him any license."

"They're all free-holders," said Holt.

"Well, I must say, Holt," said Bugbee, "this surprises me. I never took you for a temperance fanatic. In fact, I thought you stood firm for personal liberty."

"I did," said Holt. "I do yet. This little woman's father lost his personal liberty on account o' that saloon. And what's worse he lost his life. And now she's got a little brother growin' up that she sets great store by. This business is for little Joe. Her petition may not be quite reg'lar, but the meanin's plain, and I hope you'll give us a free ballot and a fair count, that's all."

By this time the other commissioners were listening with marked interest.

"I'll do what I can for you," said one of them earnestly. And turning to the man who had not yet spoken, he asked, "Can't we count on you in this matter, Reinhardt? What if this were your little Greta? She looks like her, too. I'll venture she is of your own country."

Katy had been studying these new faces most anxiously, and her eyes lighted with joy as she recognized the unknown friend who had smiled on her and little Joe that memorable day at the grocery. He did not reply directly to the appeal of his colleague, but turned to Katy and asked kindly in the German speech, "How was it about your father, dear child?"

Quite reassured by the tender tone and the beloved mother-tongue, she told the whole bitter story. How her father had thought no harm of a glass now and then, and had become a slave to habit before he knew it. How bravely he had done in their new home till the saloon had come to curse and ruin him. How he had struggled against it, and how, in spite of all, it had brought him to his death. "But now," she said with friendly confidence, "that saloon will never kill any more fathers, nor make little boys drunk, because you will stop it for me. I am so glad you are one of the commissionaries. You will stop it very soon, won't you?"

Katy's story, as she told it, had always a strange power. She seemed to be living it over again. And now there was something more. Her listener was under a spell. She did look like his own daughter, of whom he had often said, "Greta is the living picture of her Uncle Fritz. Oh. my little brother! if I could only find him!"

"You will stop it very soon, won't you?" she repeated softly touching the hand that supported his bowed head.

He answered hastily, "Yes, I will stop it. I will stop every saloon that I can. Dear child, what was your father's name?"

"Frederick Reinhardt," she said.

"And do you look like him?" he continued.

"I have heard people say so," replied Katy, wondering a little. "You can see if I do. Here is his picture."

Her new friend scanned it closely, and his blue eyes so like Katy's, filled slowly with tears. "Poor boy!" he sighed. "Oh, if I had known! My poor little brother! Why did he lose himself in this new fatherland? Why did he not come to me? Why did I not know you when I saw you before? Katy, mein kind, I am your Uncle Joe!"

Ontario, Cal.

WHAT UNCLE WISE SAID.

"I have been to the Zoölogical Gardens," said Uncle Wise. "A learned doctor was with me, and he said to me, 'If you take one hundred different animals you will find that they prefer, perhaps, a hundred different kinds of food, but they all desire the same kind of drink. All beasts drink milk in their infancy, and for the rest of their lives water. Instinct,' nephew Ned, abhors the taste of alcohol, and that this instinct is safe to follow is shown by the fact that in all climates, and among all nations, the power of the human body to resist disease is lessened by the use of stimulants. The keeper of the Zoological Gardens told us that in former times the beasts were given strong drink sometimes to excite them to be noisy or to perform antics. In Paris they used to give to the elephants spirituous drinks to provoke them to great feats of lifting or jumping about. But it was found that the ardent spirits made the animals very ill-tempered and also injured their digestion, left them dull and sullen, and brought on fevers and other diseases. So the governors of the Zoölogical Gardens have forbidden any drink but water."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Did you ever think how fortunate you are? Those of you who attend school are the ones whom I have in mind. And I am thinking especially of the great opportunities which you have of knowing about some serious dangers and of preventing them.

When your mother was a little girl and went to school, when your father was in short trousers and carried a school bag, there were no text-books on the evils of alcohol and tobacco among the books which they studied at school. People were not awakened to these questions, and so the boys and girls of twenty years ago were not so well grounded in these important facts as now.

As you study in school and realize in your daily life the harm of alcoholic drinks, does not the question come home to you: "What can I do about it?" And does not a strong desire come to you to do everything you can to protect others from these dangerous things?

The only possible way is to put them away, and we will be fortunate, indeed, who live to see the day—and it is coming with your help—when the saloon has gone forever! Your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

My brother got a little Shetland pony for a Christmas present. We are all learning to ride. We belong to the Loyal Temperance Legion, and I like to go.

Dixon, Ill. BELLE FLOTO.

Do you have a Band of Mercy, too, at your home, Belle?

Hearing our leader, Mrs. Osgood, speak of the boys and girls who belong to the Cozy Corner, thought that I would like to belong to it, too. I have signed the pledge, and mean to keep it. I am doing all I can to help the temperance cause along. GRACE W. HINCKLEY.

Those last two sentences speak volumes, little niece.

I am a prohibition boy, and go to school. I am planning to have some ducks, and sometime, perhaps, I will write and tell you how I succeed with them.

Wiscasset, Me. ROY C. JACKSON.

We'll be glad to hear about those ducks. Are they prohibition, too?

There are no saloons here. I would like to step into your Corner. I guess it is a nice place. I would like to belong to an L. T. L. There is none here. I wish some of the cousins would write to me. The cousin that said her birthday was in leap year will be fourteen two years from now. ETHEL WILLIAMS.

Foristell, Mo.

Welcome, Ethel.

I am eight years old. I have two little sisters, their names are Frances Willard and Lucile. Papa and mamma went to see the Temple and brought me a picture of it. We are all temperance folks and read the children's letters every week in THE UNION SIGNAL. I hope you will print mine. HARTWELL SHIPPEY.

Richards, Mo.

I am seven years old. I like to go to Sabbath-school. I have a dear little brother Charley Jennings Demorest. This morning I took him to see my rabbits. He is as dear as he can be. I belong to the L. T. L. Charley is a little light bearer. EDNA M. DALE.

Warrior's Mark, Pa.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

292.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of 14 letters, and am something which every temperance family should have.
My 9, 10, 5 is in all men's hearts.
My 11, 6, 8 is a bad drink.
My 13, 4, 12, 1 is a relative.
My 2, 7, 14, 3 is an opening.

WM. H. COYE.

293.

PI.

Hout stah niveg a rennab ot hemt tath reaf heet; hatt ti yam eb sidpylaed ceaseub fo het hurtt.

J. A. S.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 6.

284. Neal (Kneel) Dow.
285. Prohibition is beneficial.
286. 1, France-s. 2, h-ale. 3, Cars-e.

Correct answers: J. Fletcher McFadden; Mary Montgomery; Marion Irwin; Manora Walker; Abby M. Collester; Mary Lee Fishburn; Grace Taber.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, My Servants. By Adeline Hohf Beery 2
At Mr. Jack Stopper's. By Doyle 2
A Lesson for Young Men. By Minerva Brace Norton 2
Answer this Question! By George Milton Hammell 3
Slums and Socialism. By Harriet B. Kells .....
Memories of the White City. VII. By Elizabeth Cumings 3
Economic Principles. V. By Eliza Stowe Twitchell 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Editorial Correspondence 4
The Woman's Vote 5
A Novel Temperance Entertainment 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, The Old Maid's Flower. By Tarpley Starr 6
The Pity and the Uselessness of It. By Emily M. Allen 6
Mothers' Clubs. VI. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Spring Fashions 7
For Little Joe. By Eudora Stone Bumstead 7
What Uncle Wise Said 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
A Test of Patriotism 8
Some Lessons from the Pollard-Breckinridge Trial 8
Our Importunity 9
Confusing Arguments 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Japan—Jamaica 10
World's Wave Crests 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Southern California—Minnesota—Connecticut 10, 11
News in a Nutshell 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Department of Narcotics—Band of Mercy—Work Among Foreigners—Parlor Meetings 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 13
TREASURER'S CORNER 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 14
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 13, 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.—Rom. 8:28.

A TEST OF PATRIOTISM.

Upon the passage of the South Carolina dispensary law over a year ago, we gave some reasons why, in our opinion, the measure should receive the support of Prohibitionists. We still think that the cause of prohibition has nothing to lose but a great deal to gain by a fair trial of this law, and that all foes of the liquor traffic would do well to lend their influence to its enforcement.

In the first place it is the law, and Prohibitionists are par excellence law-abiding people. Though we cannot indorse the measure as an embodiment of righteous principle we may, without disloyalty to that principle, aid in securing for it the respect and observance due to all civil law.

We cannot too strongly reiterate our unqualified disapproval of any policy which looks toward compromise with the evil of evils, and in commending Governor Tillman's persistency in upholding the majesty of law and the dignity of his office by his prompt and authoritative dealing with the insurrectionists, we abate not one iota of prohibition principle, swerve not one inch from the path which leads to total annihilation of the drink traffic.

Every effort made to solve this problem, every experiment along restrictive lines, serves to educate the people through whom victory must ultimately come. For many reasons regulation by means of state control is far in advance of any license or tax system. Under the latter forms the state is, from a legal standpoint, an irresponsible party to the liquor business; under the former system, with the assumption of entire control the state becomes solely responsible for results. Under license the saloon-keeper is the direct producer of paupers and criminals, while the state—at a cost far exceeding the amount of revenue derived from their manufacture—takes care of them; under the dispensary law or the Gothenburg system the state itself becomes the source of the pauper and criminal population, which is such an enormous drain upon its resources.

Again, when taxpayers, as integral parts of the state, are directly engaged in the liquor business the line of reasoning from cause to effect is more readily traced, and the citizen will the sooner be brought to see the relation between the drink evil and surrounding conditions.

But the most conclusive proof of the superiority of government control to any other method of regulation is the fact that the liquor men fight it so vigorously. High license or mulct tax they enthusiastically support, but when it comes to giving over the business into the hands of the state, in other words, of the people, a mighty howl goes up from the camp of the liquorites. They regard it as the beginning of the end. For the next step will naturally be one which is even now suggested by leading advocates of state control, namely the elimination of the revenue feature. The root of the liquor evil, as of all evils, is the money that is in it, and with that prop removed the decline and fall of the rum power would be inevitable and rapid.

The best and quickest way to disclose the weak points of a law is to put it in active operation. If it prove obnoxious to the people the surest way to secure repeal is to rigidly enforce it. If the dispensary law be thoroughly tested in the state where it originated, other states may profit by South Carolina's experience, and will know how to avoid falling into the same errors.

The anti-prohibition press is striving to create the impression that public sentiment in the Palmetto state is unfavorable to this law, and that the better class of people oppose its enforcement. As a matter of fact the moral element generally regard it as a stepping-stone to prohibition, for which a majority of the voters declared at the primaries held previous to the passage of the law, and it is thought that the difficulties which beset its enforcement will conduce to the success of the "conservative" Prohibition ticket at the next state election—which means, of course, a Democratic Prohibition ticket.

We would like to see the present governor elected on such a ticket. It would be interesting to note results of a state prohibitory law with Governor Tillman as chief executive. It is said that, personally, he is opposed to prohibition, but according to the principle laid down by himself during the late disturbance, to enforce a law of which one personally disapproves is a grand opportunity for the exercise of a self-sacrificing patriotism. We commend this principle to certain patriotic (?) cities of the state of Iowa.

The Republican mayor of Sioux City—one of the cities which the mulct tax is designed to "relieve"—plainly says that the authorities will make no attempt to carry out the provisions of the new law in that municipality. After all the Herculean labors of the party in conforming to anti-prohibition sentiment to have the boasted "relief" thus repudiated! What black ingratitude! Will Governor Jackson be equal to the occasion? Now that the Martin bill has become a law of Iowa, we hope for the honor of the Republican party—if that honor has not been exhausted in fulfilling the party pledge—that it will be upheld even though extreme measures should be necessary to enforce it.

When the authorities set law at defiance, what can be expected of the masses? What wonder that a spirit of lawlessness is fostered, and that anarchy and riot stalk through the land! The professed inability on the part of men to enforce certain laws is hastening the day when law respecting citizens will say to the other half of humanity, "Come over and help us." As Miss Anthony happily remarked in one of the congresses last summer, "Man's extremity is woman's opportunity," and we believe that all things work together for good even in politics.

SOME LESSONS FROM THE POLLARD-BRECKINRIDGE TRIAL.

It is with a sigh of infinite relief that we write finis over against the record of crime, hypocrisy and pollution which has been dragging its fulsome slime through our courts and through our press for the past six weeks.

Nor is that feeling of relief due to the fact that Colonel Breckinridge has been found guilty. He did not need the verdict of twelve men to declare him guilty. His sentence had been pronounced by a deeper, a more unmistakable voice. Out of his own mouth the mind and conscience of the American people had judged him, and though the jury had unanimously acquitted, that judgment could not have been reversed.

It is without doubt a cause for profound thankfulness that the jurors spoke so clear and swift a sentence; that the guilty man receives condemnation at the court of justice as well as at the tribunal of public opinion, but our chief cause for rejoicing to-day lies in the fact that any verdict has been pronounced; that the trial is ended; that this mass of moral corruption can no longer flaunt its insistent existence in the sight of high heaven; that being of the earth, earthy; of death, deathly; of putrefaction, putrid, it may at last be consigned to its only true environment, the charnel house of oblivion.

We shall not undertake to review the disgusting details of the case. We speak to a constituency which does not come under Judge Bradley's sweeping indictment against human "buzzards." THE UNION SIGNAL would have its readers "of too pure eyes to behold iniquity," save as the Son of Man beheld it, that through beholding, He might redeem from it. If there were in this case no lessons of value to us in our work "for God and Home and Humanity," we surely should not touch upon it. Because we believe there are such lessons we dare the "descent into Hades," and strange to say, the lessons we find are chiefly of encouragement and cheer. First, we learn that there is a sure growth in the public mind regarding the one moral standard for men and women. Whatever may be one's individual opinion as to the conduct of the associated press in sending the details of this case broadcast over the land, there can be but one opinion as to the manner in which those details have been received.

The American people almost to a unit have condemned Colonel Breckinridge's defense as unworthy of manhood. It is not the women of our nation alone who have denounced Colonel Thompson's detestable assumption that the defendant was on trial for a universal sin. The men, not primarily of the churches, but men of the world, men of the secular press, men of the Union League Club, men high and low, everywhere, have cried out against it as a personal insult.

Not the women of our nation alone, but the men as well, have risen to thank and bless Judge Wilson for his clear, unfaltering statement that there is but one code of moral purity for men and women alike. To those who have watched this trial with the memory of an instance not a decade ago, when charges of a somewhat similar nature were brought against an aspirant for public honors, the growth of sentiment upon this line is nothing less than phenomenal. Surely it presages the dawning of a brighter day.

The second lesson is of like nature, but is one which fills us with a still gladder surprise, and it consists in the fact that we seem to be approaching a day in the world's history when the man more than the woman is to receive public condemnation, if it be clearly proven that he, more than she, is responsible for guilt. Madeline Pollard has not posed as a saint. We have no desire to lessen her manifest sinfulness. A disgraced woman, guilty in the sight of God and man, pitiful to a degree which God only can know, but which those who see God most clearly because "pure in heart" can dimly apprehend—she stands to-day. God himself cannot give back to her that which she has lost. Eternity cannot restore what she has so wantonly thrown away. This we all know; this is the orthodox standpoint from which the "fallen woman" has been viewed since the world began. We would not have her viewed otherwise. Not a mistaken condoning, but a true valuation of woman's sin can alone bring to her salvation from sin.

But in this trial, side by side with the "fallen woman" there has appeared a new factor—the "fallen man"—and behold, we find that he is regarded as an object of greater abhorrence than is she. The public mind actually discriminates between the proportionate guilt of the man of fifty; the husband of a loving wife, the father of children, the Christian philanthropist, the silver-tongued advocate of high moral ideals, the man who had been elected by the franchise of his native state to a position of honor and responsibility in our national life—it discriminates, we say, between this man and a woman of twenty, who, at best, could have known but little of life, who came to him for counsel as the friend of her dead father. And lo! the discrimination is in favor of the woman as against the man.

Society at large—not "religious" society alone—dares boldly to say, "He is more guilty than she. He! His very manhood made him the rightful friend of every unprotected woman. His own fatherhood made him the father of a universal girlhood. The vows of Christ upon him made him the champion of the weak against the strong. If she were an erring, easily tempted girl it was his duty to save her from herself. If, as he claims, she tempted him, what right had he—a Christian man—to yield to such temptation? What right had he, having yielded, to cover up, by fraud, by lying, by false promises, by persistent hypocrisy, for nine long years, during which he posed as a model man, his own pollution? The cries of his own children whom he tore from the arms of her who, however sinful, was still their mother, and consigned, without a single parental instinct to the hands of strangers, condemn him as being both without heart and without moral sense. The personification of cruelty and hypocrisy he must remain through the ages. Compared with him, the woman—the partner in his guilt—walks in white, blameless."

Yes, it has really come to pass that for once in the world's history it is the man who stands in the midst of the indignant throng while humanity writes his condemnation.

Let not that condemnation be from woman's lips as absolutely merciless as the one he has been pronouncing upon her since the world began. It is hard to pity a whited sepulcher, but after all a whited sepulcher demands pity from the very fact that it is what it is—an attempt to cover up corruption. Let us be careful that it be not because the man is condemned that we rejoice, but because we recognize in the very fact that the man can be thus condemned a better hope for both man and woman.

After all, in the truest sense, men have been greater sufferers than women through the false social code which has condoned in the one what it has condemned in the other. Men, more than women, have been wronged by the damnable theory of wild oats sowing. By just so much as sin has been made easy for them have they lost their chance of attaining righteousness. By just so much as sin has been made hard for woman her birthright of purity has been made more secure. Therefore, when the sinful man is cast without the camp even more pronouncedly than is the sinful woman, it means the bringing in of a better hope for the world. It means that when it is once understood that men and women sink to the same level of degradation it will be demanded that they rise to the same height of purity.

That white-haired man, going out of the court-room, friendless and alone—as so many women have gone out of like places—marked the beginning of a new era in the world's redemption. Now is the salvation of humanity nearer than we had believed.

Our last lesson has been not only the "exceeding sinfulness" but the exceeding misery of sin to the sinner. Is any woman likely to follow Madeline Pollard's example through envy of her happiness? Is any man likely to find in Col. Breckinridge's life his ideal of what makes life worth living? If there be nothing else written all over this lurid record of two sinful lives it is the old and yet, in the depth of its divine philosophy, the ever new message—"The wages of sin is death." Death to happiness, death to hope, death to love, death to all highest possibilities of life here and hereafter. Was there ever an example of higher powers more wantonly squandered? And what have been the results? Not happiness, but such misery, such shame, such reproach, such confusion, such beggarly equivocations and dastardly hypocrisies as the very devil who inspired could almost pity.

Verily, "the way of the transgressor is hard" and it grows harder as men know more clearly the "way of the Lord" for body, mind and soul; in the individual and in society as a whole. The Christianity of the days to come will make it an easy thing for a truly repentant sinner to come back to God and truth; but for those who flaunt their brazen immorality and putrescent hypocrisy in the face of the world there shall be found "no place for repentance."

There are other minor lessons to be gathered from this trial. To us, these three are the pivotal ones, and we rejoice that they are brought out in such unmistakable colors. Surely, however deep the depths of depravity revealed by this trial, there is hope for the race. We have long known that "A curse from the heart of womanhood is very bitter and salt and good," but when that curse shall be increased in volume and intensity by one equally "bitter and salt and good," welling up from the heart of manhood and directed against all false and debasing moral standards, against all impurity and unrighteousness everywhere—then the end of the curse shall be forever attained; and in the light of the new city "descending out of Heaven from God," "every curse shall be no more."

OUR IMPORTUNITY.

White-ribboners with the experience of twenty years behind them know full well that prayer for the overthrow of the liquor traffic is not in any sense an "effort to overcome God's reluctance," but that it is a "taking hold of His willingness." They know that they ask "according to His will," for their petition is in harmony with the purpose for which the only Begotten came into the world—the salvation of men. Christ came to "destroy the works of the devil," of which in this day it may be truly said the liquor traffic is the chief.

The same spirit which inspired the Crusaders is manifest to-day in the persistency with which the W. C. T. U. wages war against the rum power. It is God working in the Christian motherhood of our land and of other lands "to will and to do of His own good pleasure." We are impelled forward by a power not of ourselves, yet a power that operates in every heart touched by the needs of humanity. Before Christ can reign as King, before God's purpose in man and for man can be fulfilled, this monster iniquity must be driven from the face of the earth, the world must be freed from the subtle bondage of a legalized evil.

Seeing then that the drink traffic is foreordained to destruction, why is it necessary to keep on praying about it? Seeing we appeal not to an unjust but to a just Judge to avenge us of our adversary, why need we be so importunate? This question is asked by one who is heart and soul with us, but who thinks we "pray too much." Our prayer, our demand, spoken in the name of Christ, to whom is given "all power in heaven and on earth," is the medium through which we take hold of and apply that power. It is the lever which sets in motion those forces which bring the fulfilment of our heart's desire.

Because we do not understand the laws of spiritual dynamics, that is no reason why we should hesitate to apply them. The child does not understand the laws of electricity, yet by the simple pressing of a button he is able to flood the room with light or set in motion ponderous machinery.

And so we speak advisedly of the "power of prayer." In the spiritual life—which is the real and the controlling life—it is an actual force. Through prayer (which in its deepest sense does not always mean asking) we come in touch with God and with the power that makes for righteousness.

And what is it that delays the victory? Let Christian voters answer! Prayer without work is dead, and work without votes is dead also. Nothing but votes will ever destroy (in this country where the people rule) Satan's most powerful emissary. Alas! that Christians themselves should hinder the coming of the kingdom. "Prepare ye the way of the Lord!"

To-day "the dramshop stands in the King's highway," and until this obstruction is removed it avails little to pray, "Thy kingdom come." But because of our importunity, because of the firm hold which praying mothers have upon God's willingness, the Spirit is moving daily with more force upon the heart and conscience of the Christian citizen, and ere long earthly powers and human law will yield to its divine influence.

CONFUSING ARGUMENTS.

The debate in the Massachusetts legislature over the woman's suffrage bill, like all such debates, contained a great deal of interesting material. We think these debates should be preserved in humanity's archives for the instruction of coming generations. They will not redound to the glory of the present age, but they will be of value to the future as showing the things that "passed for arguments" with nineteenth century men. Of course there were the usual wearisome platitudes concerning the loveliness of woman as she is and the adoration with which men regard the refined, retiring, domestic woman, and then the opposite picture, showing that this angel of the home is ready to fall at the first temptation, and so surely as she gets a chance will become a fallen angel. In other words, the lovely wife and mother of the present is true to home, husband and children only because she has no opportunity to be untrue. Once open the doors of her cage and she will fly away to wallow in the filthy pool of politics.

One speaker went so far as to say that if women were given the ballot they would become the tools of the saloon!!! How strange that the keen-sighted liquor men have not discovered this fact. In their blindness they are fighting woman's suffrage as the deadly foe of their business. If this Massachusetts statesman (?) can but convince them of their error, we shall see them arrayed on the side of woman's ballot. Another opponent of the cause grounded his objections on the conceded fact that woman suffrage meant prohibition of the liquor traffic! Who shall decide when doctors disagree? His argument was peculiarly fresh and charming, because he declared that woman suffrage in the abstract he believed in. But just now woman suffrage meant prohibition; Massachusetts had had prohibition two years, during which time more liquor was sold and drank than during any other period in her history, and so he should oppose woman suffrage solely because of the way women would vote on that question.

To oppose giving the suffrage to any class because said class will vote contrary to the judgment of its masters, is not a new idea, but it is not often so frankly stated. As we understand it, that is the sole objection in the mind of the Czar of Russia to giving his subjects the franchise. If he could be sure they would always vote as he wished them to he would bestow the ballot upon them to-morrow. So has it been with every other ruler or set of rulers since time began. Massachusetts statesman No. 2 has struck the bed-rock of political principle this time. It is of course a little perplexing to the illogical, feminine mind to find one set of men opposing woman suffrage because the women will vote in prohibition, and another set because the women will become the tools of the liquor power; but in some inexplicable way it is doubtless all right and straight and serves the purpose beautifully, for opponents of woman suffrage can take whichever horn of the dilemma they prefer as their ground of opposition.

A lady correspondent of the London Sun prophesies a "tremendous outburst of cycling energy this summer, and women are sure to be swept into the torrent." May this prophecy not be supplemented by one to the effect that in consequence of this coming "cycling energy" there will be an outburst of physical energy testified to by glowing cheeks, brightening eyes, expanding chests—and appetites? Also that a wave of common sense will flood the territory of fad and fashion, ushered in by the growing favor for cycling suits? If all this may be, hurrah for the bicycle and its fair patron!

***

A startling statement was recently made from a Chicago pulpit, as follows: "Many of you have been earnestly praying to-day that the spirit of God would be poured out upon our city this morning. You meant it, no doubt. But supposing God had heard that prayer and throughout the length and breadth of this great metropolis there was a desire to come up to the house of God and worship. Here are ready to receive this God-touched multitude some six hundred churches. Supposing five thousand stayed at home, too young, too feeble or too full of care to go to church. Supposing all the churches were packed to their utmost capacity. There would be an audience of seven hundred thousand people who could not find room to worship inside the churches where the Word is preached. You are not ready to have your prayers answered!"

***

In a recent issue of The Independent a very bright letter from the pen of Kate Foote contains sketches of leading senators and representatives. Among them she mentions the senior senator from Georgia, Mr. Alfred Holt Colquitt, recently deceased. Of him she says: "He was the only Southern man I knew among the senators who was an open and avowed advocate of temperance. He made an address on that subject to a young men's association in Brooklyn a few years ago, and it was especially well received as coming from a man in his position."

***

"My brother's keeper." Not my brother's guardian-at-large, not simply his watcher, his criticizer, his exemplar, his interested friend; not his alms-donor nor his patron; not his sympathizer nor his confidante; his keeper!—one who keeps him before the remembrance of the Father by prayer; keeps him by patient firmness and tender sympathy in hours of temptation; keeps him facing toward righteousness by constant watchfulness, example, even rebuke; keeps him by every known means from the snare of the evil one; keeps him in the way of purity by making clean the pathway for his feet; keeps him by that love which suffereth long and is kind, seeketh not its own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, and never faileth. Thus and thus alone can the disciples of Christ be their "brother's keeper."

***

Desire is at once the blessing and curse of the world. All the efforts of reformers are, in fact, to direct to the noblest ends the desires of man. The knot of white ribbon indicates for its wearer an uncompromising desire to turn the desire of the drunkard away from his cups—that among other things. A desire is an appetite, a thirst, a craving. A whisky-soaked body desires alcohol. A frame fed on the fruits of the earth desires above all other that beautiful food. The body, however, is but the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual man, and this spirit has its desires. So blended are the spiritual and the physical that it is often a matter of question as to which is the seat of disease. It may be a diseased body that prompts the mind to evil activities. A mind fed on impure food is very likely to lash its body into some excess. In many Christian homes, from which the poison alcohol is banished, there may yet be found a supply of—not food—but husks and poisons for the tender minds of its sons and daughters. These miserable counterfeits of bread and fruit and meat for hungry minds are books whose pages are red with blood—histories of strife and carnage, stories of the war of abnormal desires, vivid descriptions of man's "inhumanity to man," tales of the struggles between beasts goaded on to rend and tear each other, and relations concerning those worse than beasts in human shape, whose highest use for this fleshly House Beautiful is to bruise and break and mar it in hand-to-hand conflicts.

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

MOTTO: "For God and Home and Every Land."

OBJECT: To unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over.
BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.
HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.
METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.
DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.
THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed by representatives of over forty countries. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

JAPAN.

TOKIO W. C. T. U.

Our temperance work is growing nicely and we are just preparing the second annual meeting of our National W. C. T. U. on the third of April.

The Mikado and Empress of Japan had their silver wedding on March 9. It was the first time in Japan and the people personally and collectively made the most memorial and beautiful presents made of silver. It was the great memorable day in Japan.

On such an occasion the government gives money for wine, from twenty-five cents to one dollar, each officer according to his degree. And also the Mikado gave fifty cents to the people who were over eighty years old; one dollar to those who were over ninety years old and one dollar and fifty cents to those who were over one hundred years old. Thus the habits of congratulation are to drink wine. In order to stop such poor habit our W. C. T. U. made special tracts and distributed many thousands of copies very widely to all kinds of people. By this special work we did not see drunkards so many as we thought of. Our W. C. T. U. presented to the Mikado and Empress the beautiful handkerchiefs; on them plum trees and nightingales with sweet essence were artificially embroidered with rich silver threads. They are very pretty, indeed.

We thank you for your kind care to our messenger, Mrs. Sakurai, who is now in Chicago and we hope her mission will be greatly blessed. We wish you to give her some advice just what you see the best.

KAJI YAJIMA, Pres. Nat. W. C. T. U.
TOKU NEMOTO, Cor. Sec.
33 Kaminaban, Cho. Tokio, Japan.

TOKIO TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The fourth annual meeting of the Tokio temperance society was held on the 10th of March, at Koseikan, the large lecture hall in Tokio.

The chair was taken by Rev. Y. Taketa. The reports were read and accepted. Words of encouragement from the branch societies were read to the meeting, and the delegates were benefited by each other. The reports made by the delegates from Kioto and Yokosuka were especially interesting.

The rules and by-laws of the society were amended and adopted. Mr. Taro Ando, as the president of the society, and Mr. Sho Nemoto, as the vice-president, were unanimously reëlected and accepted.

In the afternoon Rev. K. Miyama made the opening address of welcome to Mr. Sho Nemoto who had just returned from Mexico. President Taro Ando also spoke very kind words of welcome to Mr. Nemoto who replied with many thanks. This was followed by an interesting program and entertainment. All the members who attended the meeting are very active and enthusiastic in the work. Last year we had wonderful progress in temperance work. The members of the society were doubled from one thousand to two thousand during the eight months. This special effort was caused by President Ando and Rev. K. Miyama who are so faithfully working as the work shows best. May the Lord bless us all!

Since Mr. Sho Nemoto came back from Mexico he has given temperance lectures concerning Mexico. He was with great interest listened to and welcomed wherever he went.

The Tokio temperance society is growing very wonderfully. In this cause we are much indebted to Mrs. Toyoyi Sasaki who was one of the first organizers of the Tokio temperance society in 1890. Mrs. Sasaki with her three children went to Hogashi Monbetson, Hakkaido, the most northern island, last summer and was the first woman to become a colonist. Wherever she goes her good influences will make the air purer and heaven sweeter to all who are in need.

JAMAICA.

KINGSTON WORKERS.

The few workers in our union have decided to take up some special line of work. So after considering several fixed on a crêche or day nursery for poor babies. As it was a work in which neither of us had had any experience, I was deputed to see and consult with Mrs. Denniston, an earnest Christian lady, who for the last six years has been keeping a kindergarten for one hundred or more little children of the street, I believe entirely at her own expense. She entered heartily into the scheme, telling me that it was one that she had long made a subject of special prayer. I had a little money set aside exclusively for it. Others have promised aid when we get fairly started, but others shake their heads and predict failure.

We trust we have been divinely guided, and that "The Lord will provide." Pray for us.

CONSTANTIA MADDIX.
17 Laws St., Kingston.

OUR World's Petition furnishes an excellent opportunity for young temperance workers. Lake Benton, Minn., has a Y. P. S. C. E. whose temperance committee have undertaken the circulation of the Polyglot Petition as part of its temperance stint.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

FOUR hundred and forty-seven new names have been added to the World's Petition from the Netherlands.

A MOST unique list of names for the great Petition comprising thirty-four converted Zulus from Mrs. Bridgman's mission station at Umzumbe, Natal, South Africa, has been received at world's headquarters.

A MISSIONARY correspondent in Tottori, Japan, writes encouragingly: "I have a regard, almost amounting to reverence, for the heroic women of the W. C. T. U. who, although they have compelled recognition and respect for their disinterested devotion to home and country and for the betterment of the world, have not outlived the opposition of all the powers that work for wickedness. The battle is still on, but you have the sweet satisfaction of knowing that when that 'golden year' shall come, 'when all men's good will be each man's rule, and universal peace lay like a shaft of light' on land and sea, the W. C. T. U. has been one of the most potent factors for hastening its coming."

THE birthday of the grand old hero of prohibition was celebrated at Honolulu, H. I., at the regular monthly meeting of the W. C. T. U. The treasurer read the poem, "After Many Days," from THE UNION SIGNAL; the husband of the recording secretary who had served during the war under Gen. Neal Dow, gave personal reminiscences. Among the characteristics which most impressed him was the fatherly interest that Mr. Dow took in all the men under his command, seeming to consider it his duty to look after their welfare in every respect. The temperance regulations were very rigid in his command, no liquor being allowed within the lines. Items of Mr. Dow's life and work were taken from THE UNION SIGNAL and read by another member, and altogether a most pleasant and profitable hour and a half was spent.

"BOTH silver and golden wedding anniversaries have been celebrated this year for the first time by Japanese. On the 9th of March occurred the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of the Emperor and the Empress of Japan; this was celebrated with great pomp and ceremony throughout the Empire, and will have souvenirs in the shape of 'Jubilee Stamps.' The first golden wedding anniversary was celebrated on March 25, by the parents of one who is well known to the temperance workers of America. Note the following item from the Japan Mail, of Yokohama: 'The parents of Mr. Sho Nemoto, an employé in the Foreign Office, who recently returned from a tour of investigation in Mexico, will celebrate their golden wedding on the 25th inst., at their native place, Godaimura, Naka District, Hitachi Province. They are the first venerable couple who have observed such a festival in this country.' It is to be hoped that the observance of these anniversaries will serve to make the marriage bond more sacred in Japan," writes a UNION SIGNAL correspondent.

AT Lunenberg, Nova Scotia, a mass temperance meeting was held on Neal Dow day, the president of the W. C. T. U. in the chair. Besides being a celebration of Neal Dow's birthday, the meeting partook of the nature of a jubilee as the results of the Prohibition Plebiscite showed that all the counties of Nova Scotia but one had given large majorities in its favor. The chief address of the evening was given by Rev. Mr. Archibald, who had had personal acquaintance with the General in his youth. Then followed a recitation and reading, both taken from the Neal Dow number of THE UNION SIGNAL. The superintendent of suffrage, Mrs. Mary Chesley, then read an original payer on "The Enfranchisement of Women." This was a logical and convincing argument for the rightful position of woman in home, church and state. Addresses on the results of the Plebiscite and our future course as temperance workers in connection therewith were given by Messrs. Batty and McMillan. Music, both vocal and instrumental, was beautifully rendered and combined to make this meeting the most interesting of the series held during the Prohibition campaign.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

Unlike most states, our annual gatherings occur in the spring and early summer, when the greater part of the year's work is completed, and before the usual preparations for a summer rest are begun. Thus it is that with the first songs of the migrating robin comes the equally pleasant music of the calls to our annual fellowship assemblies.

It was supposed that during these hard times the state union could be thankful if they received one invitation for the convention, and we were accordingly grateful when Riverside county union desired to entertain us, but soon from far-distant Santa Barbara came an urgent plea to come thither, and not only enjoy their hospitality and sea breezes, but help them on the temperance way with our enthusiasm. To such need, Riverside yielded her right, and, therefore, some time during May or June, the white-ribbon host will convene at Santa Barbara.

If a few newspapers did refuse to publish articles regarding Gen. Neal Dow, saying he was already well known (his principles, no doubt, were too well known to such editors), a knowledge of his life and work has been largely disseminated since March 20. Though but few reports are in, it is known that most of the older unions, at least, observed the day with rejoicings.

Santa Monica union and the Good Templars united in doing honor to America's "Grand Old Man." "Such men the world delights to honor. God give us more such," writes a sister of that city.

San Pedro rejoiced in the honor of having "one of the blood" to assist them in their celebration—a niece of the General's being a resident of that seaport.

Los Angeles union of unions gave the public a program at Temperance Temple on Neal Dow day that was composed of the real cream of temperance friends. As it may create a ripple of thought I give the items at length. Fifteen societies were represented on the platform by the following speakers: The ministers by Rev. T. Hendry, of the Park Congregational church; Prohibition club by Mr. F. M. Porter; Salvation Army by Staff-Captain McIntyre; Woman's Suffrage Society by Mrs. Alice Moore McComas; Christian Endeavor, Dr. J. T. Price, district president; L. T. L. by Miss Bonnie Lynn; Y. W. C. A. by Miss C. Y. Morse, and Y. M. C. A. by Mr. W. D. Ball, the general secretaries of their respective societies; Epworth League by Mr. J. W. Kemp; G. A. R. and W. R. C. by Mr. F. B. Colver, and for them our own Mrs. McClees; Woman's Parliament, Mrs. E. S. Stephens, president; Good Templars, Mr. Theo. D. Kanouse, grand chief Templar, and for the W. C. T. U. our state president, Mrs. M. E. Garbutt, and "Incidents of Neal Dow's Life," from Mrs. E. Cash, our state organizer. Excellent music was furnished by a boys' violin quartette, a mixed chorus from the Philharmonic Society of the State Normal School and Rev. M. J. Hall. The latter sang the Prohibition Rallying Song, composed by Mrs. McClees, having the audience join in the chorus. Speeches were limited to five minutes, a bell being used for the purpose, and the program closed with the temperance doxology.

Nor did the interest in the day stop there, but on successive days meetings were held under the same auspices with the unions in their respective districts of the city, only two of the nine failing to hold such services. At the West End union six ministers and their congregations united in the services. The special number of THE UNION SIGNAL and other Neal Dow literature were sold at each meeting, and new members to the unions secured.

Both Ramona and Merrill lodges of Good Templars held special services in honor of our ideal citizen, with very interesting programs.

It is with much regret that I report the intended departure of Mrs. Ellen D. Blair, National organizer, to the east, in the interest of her department. She has been so thoroughly adopted into our sisterhood that she will be greatly missed. Her instructive chalk-talks and lectures have awakened new enthusiasm in the senior grade work and increased the desire to study for the L. T. L. diplomas.

The editing of the April number of America's Defenders is but part of the recent work of Mrs. S. A. McClees, National superintendent of soldiers' and sailors' department. Interestingly she has presented the work of her department to a number of local unions, and made it the subject of evening addresses at the churches. Nor has she voiced that theme alone, but has addressed different audiences upon woman suffrage, the work of the National and World's W. C. T. U., the care and training of children, and during the series of meetings under the auspices of the Los Angeles union of unions, took an active part in the Neal Dow meetings. Mrs. McClees deeply appreciates the cordiality extended, which has created a home-feeling among her white ribbon sisters in this, what so recently was to her a far-away land.

Orange county: An effort was recently made by the Santa Ana union to create a deeper interest in the regular meetings and to that end they began the study of scientific temperance instruction and social purity varied by selections from temperance papers. A committee from the union called upon the ministers and invited them to become honorary members. Six joined and others were yet to be waited upon. The ministers' association upon invitation consented to appoint one of their number to represent them on the program at each regular meeting of the union. A sister writes: "If they (absent members) could only realize how much we miss them and how much they miss by not being with us, I am sure they would make an extra effort to attend."

Anaheim, as many another place, is calling for a woman to lead the band of temperance workers.

San Bernardino county: A new union was formed or rather an old one was revived at Cucamonga by Mrs. Lucy D. More, who a few months ago resigned as president of our temple board of trustees, because of her removal to a country residence. Mrs. More was well-chosen as president of the new union.

Redlands recently held their annual election and continued in office their president, Miss Sue Smiley. They have also contributed to our Ransom Home.

Ontario is reviving the L. T. L. work, which, by no fault of theirs, was greatly disturbed for a time.

The Sunday-closing ordinance at San Bernardino aroused both friends and enemies to diligent efforts, and of the city trustees all but one voted in favor of the measure, and, as might be guessed, he is a friend of the saloon. The battle will soon be revived, as one of the trustees has resigned, and a strong effort will be made to fill the vacancy with a man who will oppose the Sunday ordinance.

At Colton, the home of Miss Alice Sudduth, our state superintendent of flower mission, a school teacher has interested twenty of her scholars in the work of raising flowers from seeds furnished by Miss Sudduth, and for the greatest number of flowers thus raised she has also offered a prize.

Other counties will be reported in my next letter.

VISITORS.

Miss I. C. De Velling, National organizer, came to us from San Diego county, where her work was highly satisfactory as well as her labors abundant, she having given twenty-seven lectures in seventeen days. Her detention here for a week gave us an opportunity of hearing her—a pleasure not soon forgotten. She gave an address at the Park Congregational church one Sunday evening, speaking at the Christian Endeavor meeting first. Her address was highly complimented notwithstanding physical indisposition hindered its delivery. She also addressed the Willard union both afternoon and evening, and the Garbutt union held a public meeting at which Miss De Velling and Mrs. McClees spoke. Her return to us ere long is a pleasant anticipation.

Mrs. Clara Holbrook Smith gave a series of her instructive lectures under the auspices of the Los Angeles union at the First Congregational church, during the latter part of March.

Mr. Tatum's work throughout Southern California is highly commended, he having made many friends by his earnest, sincere words and ways.

An open door and hearty welcome everywhere in our counties awaited the managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, Miss Margaret Sudduth, now visiting her parents at Colton.

Another highly prized arrival is Mrs. E. Griffith, territorial president of Utah W. C. T. U. She has returned to her former residence—Pasadena—not to lay down her temperance armor, but to lend a hand, and encourage others by her cheerful faith.

GABRELLA T. STICKNEY,
State Reporter, Los Angeles.

MINNESOTA.

A FULL BUDGET.

It is with unusual pleasure that this reporter sits down this fair spring morning to send the regular letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, for my envelope is full of reports of good things from all over the state.

Red Wing union has not been heard from before for a long time, but they are very busy, nevertheless. They have fifty-six members, twenty-one of whom take THE UNION SIGNAL, and the union sends the state paper, the White-Ribboner, to sixty-one persons, so they are an intelligent union, and well informed of the needs and progress of the temperance cause. Believing in the mother's power for good or evil, this union has eight superintendents of mothers' meetings, two for each ward of the city, and a meeting for mothers is held in each ward every week, led by one of the superintendents. Leaflets are given to each one present, and, after it has been read, there is free discussion. Many Scandinavian women attend these meetings.

As a part of its spring work, this union is circulating a petition to the city council, signed by voters only, asking the enforcement of the state laws and city ordinances against gambling, the selling of tobacco and strong drink to minors and habitual drunkards, and the closing of the saloons on the Sabbath. Some pitifully sad incidents occur in getting the signatures. One man, an official member of a church, when asked to sign, read the petition and handed it back without his signature, saying: "That is right! The laws ought to be enforced, and I'd like to sign it, but—these are hard times! I have to support my family, and I don't want to offend the saloon-keepers. I need their patronage in my business."

Villard, away up north, is a no-license town. Some of the business men were particularly grieved over the poor condition of the sidewalks and mourned that they could not be repaired. "But then, you know, the treasury of the town is nearly empty because there is no saloon to bring in the needed revenue, so what can we do." The eleven women who compose the W. C. T. U. of that place determined to show what could be done and keep the saloon out at the same time, so they went to work to raise the money to buy the lumber for new sidewalks and get them laid. They held socials for that express purpose and bought the lumber. They pledged as many of the men as were so minded to do a certain amount of work upon the walks or furnish an equivalent in money or nails, held more socials, and now are only waiting for settled weather to get the walks built. Meantime their annual election has taken place, and whereas last year the vote for and against the license was a tie, this year the saloon was voted out by a large majority. And besides this they have stopped the mouths of some outside the union who were saying, "We cannot see that that W. C. T. U. is doing anything. When they show us that they can accomplish any good thing we will join too."

Royalton has recently voted no-license, and as usual in such cases, the women put their shoulders (if they could not their votes) to the wheel and gave it a good push. A week before election a call was given out in all the churches for all ladies interested in the no-license movement to meet on a certain day. Only about eighteen or twenty responded, but they decided to give the No-License Club, numbering about eighty men, a grand supper the evening before election. Invitations were sent out, and each member of the club was asked to invite one other no-license man, who would vote that way, but was not a member of the club, and all were to bring their families. As a result, there was a grand turn-out, and who will doubt that some of the voters were strengthened in their determination to vote for the homes the next day? For no-license was carried, and great was the rejoicing thereat among all good citizens, while the saloon sympathizers put their heads together to try to "break" the election. They engaged a lawyer from St. Cloud, and are now trying to make a point out of the fact that two sets of tickets were printed, one bearing the words "against license," the other, "for license and against license," and the contestants claim the latter should have been on both sets of tickets to make the result a legal election. What will be the outcome remains to be seen. The No-License Club is making plans to keep up that organization, having hired a hall for a year, and invited the Ladies' Auxiliary to meet with them occasionally.

Monticello rejoices in a no-license victory at their recent election, and here, too, the women helped with a gospel temperance meeting, a W. C. T. U. tea, a Sabbath evening public meeting and a Demorest medal contest, one right after another, and closing with the contest the very night before election. A "blind pig" has cursed the village for a year past and defied men and law. But on the Thursday after election a set of thieves made a raid and cleaned the institution completely of liquors, cigars and everything worth taking; and while the people do not approve of the method employed, they do rejoice in the freedom from the evil.

Edgerton union is heartily at work. Our new state organizer, Mrs. Ferro, lectured for them recently, and soon after they had a gold medal contest, the medal being awarded to Miss Lulu Marshall.

Huntley union has become much interested in systematic giving and desires to take it up as part of their regular work. Their president has been in ill health much of the time during the winter, but the union has been carrying on the work bravely. They would not listen to the president's resignation, assuring her they would "do anything" if only she remain in her office to plan and advise with them, and their love prevailed. Those who attended our last state convention will remember this president, Mrs. Florence Lake, and her beautiful Bible reading one morning, and will not wonder at the devotion of her women.

Two years ago Windom union commenced to erect a building for temperance work, a temperance temple, the first one in the state. They have worked bravely, and hoped to have it so far completed by next fall that they could ask the state convention to assemble in it. But the hard times have delayed them, and while they have made a little advance, it has been but a little. And now, with the approval of the state officers they appeal for help. They would not wish in any way to interfere with the work and plans of any local union, but they ask any who are willing to assist to do so, and suggest that some private individuals who have the means might be glad to aid, if asked to do so, in so worthy a cause. Any money sent to Mrs. H. S. Kellam, Windom, will be thankfully received and reported at state convention. A personal word from Mrs. Hobart accompanies their request, endorsing the work and commending the workers.

NEAL DOW CELEBRATIONS.

The birthday of Maine's hero was generally observed throughout this state. Three meetings were held in Minneapolis, the first one on the Sabbath preceding the 20th, under the auspices of the Y's. The weather was cold and rainy, yet a good audience assembled, and was addressed by a number of the pastors of the city and Rev. Mr. Conoly, from St. Paul. Rev. Dr. Wells said that Neal Dow had won a greater victory than Lord Nelson or any of the conquerors of Europe. It was a victory that saved a state from degradation. Rev. Thomas McClary, in speaking of the traffic in this city, said that the two hundred and seventy saloons made, on the lowest average, five thousand dollars a year, or a million and a quarter of dollars! If this enormous sum were spent in legitimate directions there would be no hard times, and no need of free soup.

On the evening of the 20th two meetings had been planned, one on the East side and one on the West. Owing to the rain, the West side meeting was postponed. At that on the East side the audience was addressed by Rev. H. H. French, who turned his powers of eloquence in full tide against the saloon-keepers and the city mayor; Rev. Mr. Sample thought church members who upheld the mayor were just as much to blame for the non-enforcement of the law. The laws can be enforced, and ought to be. The postponed West side meeting was held Sunday afternoon, and addressed by Rev. Mr. Reese and Rev. Peter Clare, who said this was his maiden speech as a Prohibitionist.

Red Wing union held the celebration with a fair audience, although the storm visited them also. The pastors of the M. E. and Presbyterian churches gave addresses upon Neal Dow in early life and Neal Dow as a soldier and citizen, and Mrs. Hobart spoke of him as a Prohibitionist. Five children sang "Brave Neal Dow." C. B. Sheldon contributed a fine bass solo, and Mrs. H. J. Harrington gave a beautiful recitation.

Edgerton union's celebration of the day was rather unique in that the two addresses were given by F. W. Burdett, aged seventy, and George Gates, aged seventy-seven.

The report of one other celebration reached me and I let the writer tell her own story, for she has done it so admirably: "I think some day for the benefit of some despairing temperance worker, I will write up how we celebrated the birthday of Gen. Dow. There is a big ache in my heart when I think of it; yet, if it were not so pathetic it would upset my gravity merely to think of it. It was not a success financially, and the rain and the storm know why it failed socially. Yet the young boys and girls were very much interested, and I think went away with a pretty good opinion of the Prohibition chief as well as of our white ribbon queen, Frances Willard, whose portrait hung next to Gen. Dow's, draped in white and between them the banner with the well known motto, 'We wage our peaceful war for God, Home and Humanity.'"

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

CONNECTICUT.

TEMPERANCE MOVEMENTS.

A group meeting was held in the vestry of the Baptist church in Plainville. The unions of Southington, Milldale, Plantsville and Plainville united. A goodly number were in attendance. Some very interesting and instructive papers were read, one worthy of special mention by Mrs. Newel, of Plantsville. Her topic was the "Opportunities of the hour," which she said were "along any plain path of duty."

Mrs. E. T. Lewis, of Plantsville, read an excellent paper on scientific temperance instruction. Mrs. Walcott, president of Plantsville union, was present and made some very terse and appropriate remarks. Mrs. Bowles, of Hartford, advised getting the best instruction books of temperance for our schools.

Mrs. Moody spoke of the labors of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell as she heard the story from their own lips at Chicago. Mrs. Pierce said it should be the prayer of each one of us, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Mrs. Margaret E. Babcock, of Plainville, contributed a poem, beginning:

Take courage, press forward
And hope to the end,
For the steadfast in purpose
The Lord will defend.
Then march to the front,
And stand firm and true,
For the Lord is our strength,
He will carry us through.

SHORT ITEMS.

Buell union, of Bridgeport, holds cottage prayer-meetings with sick and aged women.

Sherman union finds this plan successful in increasing the interest of meetings: Written questions relating to the work are distributed at one meeting; at the next, written answers are required.

Danbury union holds semi-monthly meetings at the jail; several persons have taken the pledge at these services.

Bridgeport union holds gospel temperance meetings Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

Stepney has circulated class pledges and literature in five Sunday schools.

An attractive entertainment consisting of good singing and excellent speaking was held in the town hall, East Haddam, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, the famous Nebraska vocalists, furnishing the music, and Editor Allen B. Lincoln, of the New England Home, speaking on the subject, "The Present Crisis, and What to do."

The Moodus union is waking up a little to the needs of the work and seems to be gaining in interest and energy.

Portland still moves onward in the good way, several new members have lately been added, and at the last monthly meeting held with Mrs. E. E. Ellsworth, the ladies were invited to the dining-room, at the close of the meeting, where a bountiful collation was awaiting them. All did justice to the good things, and a rising vote of thanks was given the hostess.

The Cornelia B. Forbes Y has been for some time without a president, but has lately elected Miss Mary E. Cramer to that office; Miss Elizabeth Clark was reëlected secretary and Miss N. Clark, treasurer.

The Crusade meeting was held with Mrs. H. M. Wright, and quite a goodly sum was realized which was donated to the National treasury. Cake and coffee were served at the close of the meeting; verdict of all was "a good time."

The Rockfall W. C. T. U. held a free-will offering and the service was very pleasant. Generous donations were received from those solicited. The L. T. L. is doing well despite much inclement weather.

M. B. SMITH,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

COMFORT VERSUS Discomfort

Which will you choose

As the warm weather approaches a delightful sense of relief is experienced by laying aside the heavy winter garments for light and airy summer ones.

Few, however, think of the added comfort to be obtained by exchanging the heavy winter corset for a light summer waist, yet will no other preparation for the hot weather give such decided relief and enjoyment as this one.

THE GENUINE
JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST
IS THE MOST Perfect Corset Substitute.

Its patented features prevent close imitation, and its artistically designed model gives to the form the same beauty of outline and figure imparted by the finest corsets.

In selecting, select right. Get the GENUINE. There is only ONE.

REMEMBER THE NAME
Genuine Jackson Favorite Waist

Made in Soft English Sateens and Cool Summer Nets. Strong, durable, comfortable. Colors: Drab, White, Gold, Black. Postpaid, $1.

Ask your dealers for them, or write us, mentioning THE UNION SIGNAL.

CORONET CORSET CO., JACKSON, MICH.
Exclusive Manufacturers.

Alaska Stove Lifter,
NICKEL PLATED.
ALWAYS COLD,
even if left in Stove Lid.

Sold by all Stove and Hardware Dealers and House Furnishers, or sent by mail, postpaid, for 30 CENTS.
TROY NICKEL WORKS, TROY, N. Y.

SOCIAL PURITY TRUE . . . MANHOOD
A MANUAL FOR YOUNG MEN.

Mrs. F. M'C Harris (Hope Ledyard), Supt. for Mothers' Meetings for the W. C. T. U., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I like the book very much indeed. It takes just the stand that should be taken on these matters, and will be of great assistance to mothers."

The Independent: "We cannot conceive of a book on such a subject, written in a more reverent and cleanly spirit."

12mo, nearly 400 pages, illustrated. Prepaid, $1.65. Best terms to agents. Circulars free.

A. B. STOCKHAM & CO., 98 Market St., Chicago.
When writing please mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

No local dealer can compete with us
WALL PAPER
in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,
80-82 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 186-188 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

GLOBE SAVINGS BANK
UNDER STATE SUPERVISION.
Savings Deposits Draw 4 Per Ct. Interest, Payable Quarterly.
SAFETY DEPOSIT VAULTS. | Dearborn & Jackson Sts., CHICAGO.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

Its merits as a Wash Blue have been fully tested and indorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask for it.

D. S. WILTBERGER, Proprietor,
233 North 2d St., Phila, Pa.

You Dye in 30 minutes
Turkey red on cotton that won't freeze, boil or wash out. No other will do it. Package to color 2lbs., by mail, 10 cts.; 6, any color—for wool or cotton, 40c. Big pay Agents. Write quick. Mention this paper. FRENCH DYE CO. Vassar, Mich

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

DRESS REFORM.
Are YOU interested? If so, send for m free illustrated pamphlet, "DRESS." Address
Mrs. S. W. Pike, Central Music Hall, Chicago

Sound Discs are invisible, and comfortable. Relieve more cases of DEAFNESS
than all devices in the world. H. A. Wales, 674 Ashland Block, Chicago.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE address of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt is changed to care Kidder Peabody & Co., Boston, Mass.

THE Y's of Washington, D. C., had a mass-meeting recently, addressed by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes.

A FULL day's school of methods is being prepared for the Chautauquan Association of Southern Oregon.

FIFTY signers to the pledge were secured at the Neal Dow anniversary by the active union at Sturgis, S. D.

BANGOR Crusade W. C. T. U., Bangor, Me., celebrated its twentieth anniversary recently, at which its secretary, Mrs. S. J. Pickard, read an encouraging report.

A TRUE white-ribboner and friend of THE UNION SIGNAL passed away in Thomasville, Ga., March 17,—Mrs. O. M. Develle, who was sixty-three years of age and had been a life-long Christian worker.

THE Oregon W. C. T. U. state executive has concluded to curtail expenses by doing away with the full state minutes, and making better use of their organ at convention time, the Oregon White Ribbon.

UNDER the auspices of the District W. C. T. U., Luther Benson, of Indiana, delivered an eloquent address at Washington recently. Neal Dow's ninetieth birthday was appropriately celebrated by this union.

MRS. LYDIA A. IRONS, Box I, Marshall Junction, Wash., is associated as lecturer and organizer with the National W. C. T. U. department of mercy, of which Mrs. Mary Lovell, Bryn Mawr, Pa., is superintendent.

ADAMS, Ill., W. C. T. U., fifty strong, went over to Burton, where they have no union, and distributed literature on Neal Dow Day. The L. T. L's helped in the celebration by recitations and a pastor, Rev. Stecher, gave an address.

THREE college men from Maine were in the audience at Clifton Springs, N. Y., April 9, when Rev. Dr. Halsey, of Oswego, gave an address on Neal Dow. They were ready to indorse his statements concerning the success of prohibition.

A CHAUTAUQUA W. C. T. U. was organized one year ago at the South Florida Chautauqua, held at Mount Dora. During the session just closed the W. C. T. U. held three enthusiastic meetings, state evangelist, Mrs. E. S. Oliver, being present.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., W. C. T. U. on the hill, of which Miss Greenwood is president, adds its quota to the numerous Neal Dow celebrations, having addresses by two of his old friends, Rev. Dr. Cuyler and Mr. George Shirley. An original poem was also read.

AT Hickory, North Carolina, the Neal Dow anniversary exercises were largely attended, the opera house being filled to its utmost capacity. Neal Dow souvenir cards were distributed to the children, and a number of Neal Dow UNION SIGNALS were given to the leading citizens.

ROLLO KIRK BRYAN is a chalk-talker much in favor among W. C. T. Unions who have had the benefit of his services. Unions in and near Chicago will be glad to hear that he will be available for May and June. Address him care of P. J. Bryan, 309 First National Bank building, Chicago, Ill.

IN accordance with the wish of our beloved National President, Miss Frances Willard, the Palmer union celebrated the ninetieth birthday of Gen. Neal Dow with appropriate exercises, at the close of which all were invited to remain for a social time. About one hundred availed themselves of this opportunity.

BURR OAK, Kan., celebrated the Neal Dow anniversary with much enthusiasm. The afternoon was given to a "woman's meeting," and the evening to the proper celebration of Neal Dow's birthday. The children marched and sang. The exercises in THE UNION SIGNAL were used, and altogether proved a very delightful program.

MRS. FRANCES J. BARNES, the genial general secretary of the Young Woman's Branch, spoke before the Current Events Club in the woman's century building at Wilmington, Del., last month and attended a Y reception at their headquarters. From Wilmington she went to Baltimore, Md., and participated in the annual state Y conference there.

THE prohibition church at Newburgh, N. Y., for which Rev. Edward A. Tuck has so zealously labored, was dedicated April 1. A week of meetings followed, including missionary, temperance, endeavor, and church days, that of temperance being a triumphant one. The popular Silver Lake quartette furnished music and the crowded auditorium proved the interest of the gathering.

DR. CLARA SHAW, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in the Chicago Central W. C. T. U. and vice-president of the South Side Chicago Christian Endeavor Society, has just begun a series of scientific temperance instruction lectures in the Christian Endeavor Associations of Illinois. It is of special value to the cause that Dr. Shaw will speak from the physician's standpoint.

THE proceeds of the recent Dow entertainment by the Rushford, Minn., W. C. T. U. were invested in flour to be made into bread for the suffering poor of Chicago, not flowers, to be distributed, as previously stated. Welcome as flowers always are the bread was more acceptable in times like these. Mrs. Thomas Kierland is doing good service as president of this union whose battle against license was bravely fought this spring.

THE sixth district W. C. T. U. convention met at Mankato, Kansas, March 22 and 23. The attendance was good. A lively interest was manifested in all departments of work, especially that of suffrage. Mrs. A. P. H. Weatherhead filled the chair of the departed president, Mrs. Martia L. Berry. Mrs. Strong, of Phillipsburg, was elected to succeed her. Resolutions were passed, protesting against an increased tax on whisky.

A TEMPERANCE mass-meeting of great interest and profit was held at Maplewood, Ill., not long ago and was attended by an attentive audience. Music and addresses by earnest speakers were heard. One of the speakers, a member of the Moody Institute, Chicago, made a most solemn appeal to the young women present to enter into no betrothal with a young man who indulged in alcoholic liquors, emphasizing his appeal by a thrilling incident from his own experience.

THOUGH the Dracut, Mass., union was formed only last October there was a large and enthusiastic gathering to celebrate the ninetieth birthday of Gen. Neal Dow. Members and others joined in the reading of poems and selections on the life and labors of the temperance hero, letters, etc., clipped from THE UNION SIGNAL, and singing Mrs. Stevenson's "Song of the New Revolution." The frontispiece of the Neal Dow UNION SIGNAL, resting on an easel graced the president's table.

MRS. BATEHAM, National superintendent of Sabbath observance, has been among the "shut-ins" this winter and is still far from well. She writes regarding the Sabbath observance day, which occurred April 1, that "there has been a very wide-spread observance of the day by sermons in the morning, and distribution of leaflets at the close of services, nearly one-third of a million pages having been ordered of me for this purpose. Many unions have also held public meetings with their own speakers Sabbath afternoon or evening."

DODGE CENTER, Minn., begins its fourth year as a "no-license" town. The question which has been brought up and voted upon three years in succession seems now to be finally settled. Rev. E. O. Taylor, of Chicago, in his recent lectures there proved a talker whose remarks were so plainly and simply stated that the children crowded to hear him. His definition of temperance was, "Temperance is the moderate use of those things that are good in their essential nature, but total abstinence from all things that are bad in their essential composition."

Official Communications.

DEPARTMENT OF NARCOTICS.

CIGARETTE SMOKING BY BOYS

is alarming boards of education and teachers from New York to California. Letters are coming from all quarters; now is the time to strike. Never before have parents and teachers been so wide awake to this gigantic evil.

I have a plan to propose which will help the boys of the present generation over the "growing period." After that time, we hope to make smoking so disreputable that no self-respecting young man will be seen using the foul weed.

Charles Bulkely Hubbell, of the New York board of education, has formed in the public schools of that city an "Anti-Cigarette Smoking League," pledging the boys not to use cigarettes until they are twenty-one years old. The league is officered by the boys, and they have a constitution and by-laws and wear a badge in the buttonhole. Mr. Hubbell is meeting with great success.

Now, I ask every superintendent of narcotics and every local president to lose no time, but at once organize these leagues in all boys' schools, and report to me. I hope our lecturers will give voice to this scheme, so we may pledge every boy in the United States before vacation.

I do not approve of the twenty-one year clause, and in a league of thirty-seven members that I organized in Central College, Fayette, Mo., that part was omitted. The president, Professor Walker, writes that the league is increasing and that the boys are in earnest.

Why do we not have more lectures on this subject? Many of our best lecturers are prepared to speak, but they are not called upon. Why is this? At Fayette, Mrs. Clara Hoffman was invited to speak on narcotics, on very short notice, and her lecture was considered very fine by the best people of the town. I do hope our unions will engage these women, and let the people know the evils of tobacco and opium.

Workers are calling for a digest of narcotic laws. Please send me laws, state and municipal, relating to tobacco, cigarettes, cigarette paper and opium in its many forms.

The latest bulletin on narcotics will be sent on application, enclosing three cents.

MRS. E. B. INGALLS.
4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

BAND OF MERCY.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO OUR OLDER BOYS AND GIRLS.

Through the kindness of Miss Kendall, a lady in New York, a gold medal will be given by the National Department of Mercy for the best Essay on "The Attitude of the Bible Toward Man's Treatment of Dumb Animals."

Essays are limited to not less than two thousand and not more than three thousand words.

The age of those who compete is to be from fourteen to eighteen years inclusive.

Essays must not be signed, but name and address and age of writer, written on a separate sheet, must be sent with the essay in a sealed envelope. Enclose stamp if you wish your essay returned.

All essays must be sent by August 15, 1894, to Mrs. Emanuel Friend, 574 Jackson St., Milwaukee, Wis., to be examined by a committee appointed for the purpose. No essays will be accepted after August 15.

It is hoped that our young people, especially those who are L. T. L. graduates, will gladly avail themselves of this opportunity, and that there will be a brisk competition for the handsome prize. And, dear young people, those of you who take this trouble without winning, remember that endeavor in such a cause will be admirable, and that your searching of Scripture to discover man's obligation to show mercy will be of lasting value to you, and through you, may also be to many others. The reasons for all the good we should do can be found in our Bibles, and even if it is not set down in so many words, yet we can always find enough to show us what the right course must be.

I will send specimens of the literature used in this department to any young person sending name and address.

MARY F. LOVELL,
Superintendent Department of Mercy.
Box 163, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

What are parlor meetings?

They are to interest the people who know comparatively little or nothing of our work, by inviting them to our homes in a social manner, where instruction can be given through a pleasing program.

Each local union should appoint a superintendent who can select her own committee to assist her, and endeavor to hold at least four meetings a year. Secure a parlor in the home of one of your women rather than in the room of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union or a church. This will impart sociability and prove an attraction to the guests. The hostess can receive with the committee and give a cordial greeting. Send out invitations (printed or written) after this manner:

"You are cordially invited to attend a parlor meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the home of Mrs. J. C. Evans, 21 Broadway, Thursday, January —, 1894, at three p. m., to be addressed by Mrs. M. S. Wood. An offering will be acceptable. COMMITTEE."

This can be optional with your union or committee, but in one union large donations have been realized. If more convenient to hold the meeting in the evening, would suggest that gentlemen receive an invitation, thus affording an excellent opportunity to secure honorary members. In Pennsylvania a state parlor meeting is held where the needs of the state are discussed and a collection taken for state work. I would recommend that at the annual convention or school of methods, in both state and county, such a meeting be instituted. This would illustrate this department, and other departments could be discussed, as scientific temperance instruction, Loyal Temperance

(Continued on page 13, 2d column.)

Model 37
Columbia,
Price, $150.

This beautiful machine marks the extreme limit to which regular bicycle construction has thus far gone, in lightness combined with strength and durability. It is a semi-racer, built for track work, and for road racing under reasonable conditions, but it will afford the highest satisfaction as a regular mount for light and careful riders who are willing to do without brake and coasters. Weight with wood rims, 21½ pounds.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford.
Call on any of our agents and get a Columbia catalogue free, or send us two two-cent stamps and we will mail it.

"1847" Rogers Silverware

If you wish the old original quality of Rogers Spoons, Forks, Knives, etc., accept only those which are stamped 1847 ROGERS BROS.

Manufactured only by the Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.
For sale by dealers everywhere.

REFRESHING and INVIGORATING.
THE CROWN LAVENDER SALTS
Sold everywhere, in Crown stoppered bottles only.

STUDY LAW AT HOME. Take a Course in the SPRAGUE Correspondence School of Law. (Incorporated.) Send 10c. stamps for particulars to J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH. No. 22 TELEPHONE BDG.

World's Fair Highest Awards
Medal and Diploma on our INCUBATOR and BROODER Combined.
"Old Reliable" Leads them all.
If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for our 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address
Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co. Quincy, Ill.

45 yards High Class Fowls.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,
But save you money on everything you eat, wear or use. Send 8 cts. for full catalogue.
H. R. EAGLE & Co., 68 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.
Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address
ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE, 2819 OLIVE ST., ST. LO., MO.

Publisher's Notes.

BOOKS.

"LADY GAY AND HER SISTER," by Mrs. George Archibald, is a sequel to "Lady Gay," published as a serial in Our Little Men and Women. The two little maids, quaint, wise and bubbling over with fun, will remind more than one mother of the children in her home. They are live children, with whom any other little man or woman will be glad to be acquainted.

Price 75 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND. By Mary H. Hull. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n. 267 pp. $1.

With all the great amount of literature upon the subject which is now preëminently before the world, there is a scarcity of books written especially for children, a want Mrs. Hull has undertaken to partially fill in the present volume. As a tale of simple heroism, if nothing else, she rightly judges that the story of Columbus should be made familiar to every boy and girl, and considers that as Washington is studied as personifying truth and patriotism, so Columbus should be made to stand for courage, perseverance, patience and faith. The story is simply and pleasantly told, without affectation of "writing down" for young readers. The text has side heads for the separate topics, and is printed in clear and handsome type. The volume has a full-page frontispiece of the young Columbus, and, as a whole, is one of the most attractive of the Columbian birthday books. —Journal of Education.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

"THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL" contains the favorite hymns of white-ribboners everywhere, besides many new ones of great merit. It contains sections for services, gospel temperance work, memorial services, mass-meetings, Prohibition rallies, special days, closing hymns and responsive Scripture readings. The poetry and music are well written, the typography is excellent and the binding is neat and attractive. This book is of great value to temperance workers, and ought to have a wide circulation.

Price 35 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT MOTHER.

The biography of Madam Willard, as written by her great daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset, is a book that will be heartily welcomed by all who have had at times glimpses of her beautiful life and death. It is handsomely illustrated and full of her wise sayings and the helpful incidents occurring in her household. All W. C. T. U. women will be delighted to secure this book, which will be out with the spring trade and can be procured of the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, Ill.—The Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger.

PUT INTO THE HANDS

of your children the game,

"Book of Books,"

and the result will be a better acquaintance with the names, writers and classification of the books of the Bible than many older people have.

Intensely interesting as well as instructive, and just the thing for Sunday evenings.

Price, in neat box, 30 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

LET US SING!

With the coming of the glad spring-time let every white-ribboner sing from our "White Ribbon Hymnal," sing in the union, sing in the home, sing in the churches, in the convention, sing everywhere one of the sweet songs contained in this unsurpassed collection, which you can buy for 35 cents.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

(Continued from page 12.)

Legion, franchise, etc., in two minute speeches. Our women would become better acquainted and exchange their views more freely than in the convention. Great good might be accomplished by occasionally holding a meeting in the home of a German woman (or of any nationality) thus awakening an interest among their friends. If unacquainted with our language, some capable woman might serve as an interpreter. Prepare a good program. Let your opening exercises be short. Reading of Scriptures. Prayer. Have both vocal and instrumental music; latter not necessary. One or two readings applicable to temperance. A paper on Temperance Temple prepared by one of your members; another on Temperance Hospital or one on the dangerous results from using brandy, wine or cider as a beverage, as a medicine, or in our food. Read a good article on franchise, which can be gleaned from THE UNION SIGNAL or purchased from the W. T. P. A. This is suggestive where a union depends upon local talent. If you wish a speaker give her at least half an hour. A basket passed with papers and pencil before the opening exercises with the announcement that questions would be answered at the close of the address, would be productive of interest.

Do not forget to invite your pastors, and call upon them to speak after the main talk of the evening. In large unions it is impossible to invite every member, so would suggest asking the general officers, vice-presidents and superintendents. Our purpose is to reach non-members, but once or twice a year hold a special session for your own members in a parlor, giving them the privilege of bringing a friend with them.

By all means have refreshments. Having made this department a study for years, I am confident that it is in the social hour spent over coffee, tea or chocolate and wafers that members are gained and temperance impressions strengthened through conversation.

Have your white ribbon ready to tie upon the dress of the new member, and ask her to wear it constantly. Send her notices of your meetings. I sincerely hope every state president will see that a superintendent is appointed, and that every state superintendent will push the work in her state and not rest satisfied until every county has appointed one; that she in her turn may arouse each local union, for from this agency the great rallying of the clans must come, which shall grow into greater proportions, as we keep our forces at work, steadily overcoming our opponents by our gentle persuasiveness, faithful pleadings and earnestness in the cause we profess to champion. A superintendent cannot work well without money, and each state should furnish means to scatter broadcast leaflets to instruct its membership. The reward will be manifest next autumn if each state, county and local superintendent does her duty. While the work seems gigantic and the laborers few in comparison with those uninterested, our ardor is not abated nor our faith weakened, for the Lord of hosts is with us. I have prepared a circular, which can be forwarded to any one wishing information in pamphlet form and to send liberally throughout the country.

MRS. MARY D. TOMLINSON,
National Superintendent.

Plainfield, N. J.

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

RECEIPTS FOR ELLIS ISLAND FUND.

The following contributions have been made to the missionary work at Ellis Island since last November:

Mrs. Emma Longan, Kansas City, Mo.	$ 7.30
Mr. B. Frank Leeds, Buffalo, N. Y.	15.00
Phil. German Union, through Miss Anna Willson	12.50
Kirkwood, Mo., union, for Mrs. Grubb's lecture	10.00
Collection at Benton, Mo.	16.00
Collection at Lindenwood, Mo.	1.73
Y. P. S. C. E., Lindenwood, Mo.	1.70
Mrs. Hannah Bailey, Maine	5.00
Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb, Missouri	5.00
Mrs. Anna T. Lee, Denver	5.00
Mrs. Julia Spaulding, Minneapolis, Kan.	5.00
Mrs. D. G. Allen, Wenona, Ill.	1.00
Mrs. Florence Day, Lecompton, Kan.	1.00
Mrs. Mary Hodge, Chicago	1.00
Friends in Pennsylvania through Miss Dornblaser	25.00
Miss Emily Howland, Sherwood, N. Y.	25.00
Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. through state treasurer	2.84
Total	$140.07

I feel very grateful to the friends who have thus enabled me to pay Miss Lindahl's salary up to this time.

SOPHIA F. GRUBB, Nat'l Supt.

Kirkwood, Mo.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The following correspondence will be of interest to our readers:

Judge Jeremiah Wilson, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR:—The women of the National W. C. T. U. desire to express to you their heartfelt gratitude for your noble endorsement (in the Pollard-Breckinridge case) of one code of morals for man and woman in society and in law. Also for the delicacy and refinement which has attended your conduct of the case mentioned, in happy contrast to that exhibited by the attorneys for the defense.

Respectfully,
(Signed) MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Sec. National W. C. T. U.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1894.

Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Corresponding Secretary W. C. T. U., The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MADAM:—I received your communication of the 14th instant, this morning, and beg that you will express to the women of the National W. C. T. U. my most sincere thanks for their very kind words of commendation. If I have succeeded in doing anything, however little, that will advance the cause for which the W. C. T. U. is struggling, it is a source, and always will be a source of great gratification to me.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) J. M. WILSON.

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president Texas W. C. T. U., writes of great activity among the women of her state—the kind of activity that comes of the conviction that all our work is necessary, and all departments must be carried on, or, as Miss Willard puts it, "No force is adequate except the allied forces." Five unions have lately been organized, the Y in Add-Raw University, young gentlemen and ladies from every portion of the state, numbering about seventy-five charter members, being the most significant. Thus, the white ribbon gospel is being built into the character of future leaders.

A letter has been received from Miss Mary P. McTeer, Mayville, East Tenn., containing money and request for literature giving facts suited to the preparation of an article on "Temperance in Mission Lands," with desire that it be forwarded immediately. Both literature and a letter were mailed without delay, but the latter has been returned bearing post-mark, "No such office in state named." The package has not been received by us, but if Miss McTeer should see this notice, we shall be glad to hear from her.

Mrs. Higgins, president Colorado W. C. T. U., writes: "I can give you but a faint idea of the growth of prohibition sentiment and the seeming determination among the people to outlaw the saloon. Our membership is rapidly increasing and new organizations multiplying. One union organized two months ago with eighteen members now has thirty-seven, and has put a no-license ticket in the field. She speaks with commendation of the stand taken by the governor in maintenance of the law against gambling, and for which he had suffered continually from the press, ignorant of conditions, but says he cannot be frightened or bought. She adds, "the matter is simmered down to this, shall the mob, or law and order prevail?"

The inquiry is often made, Do you charge for Polyglot Petition blanks? Blanks will be sent upon request without price, but under our money stringency we should greatly appreciate the gift of postage.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, has accomplished the almost Herculean task of sending a sample of the annual budget, consisting of the "Co-worker's Letter" for 1894 for the local superintendent, "A brief report" of the work of scientific temperance in the public schools for the year 1893, a sample of the "Monthly Advices" with circular concerning the same, and a personal letter to every local Woman's Christian Temperance Union president.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

ELI BROWN.

FREE.

The following remarkable statement, to which we direct special attention, is from a Tennessee farmer.

My age is 63. I suffered intensely from catarrh 10 years; dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness intense headache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse Everything I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh.

ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment, and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send (by express) Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address,

J. H. MOORE, M. D., Cincinnati, O.

OUR IMPROVED BREATHING TUBE

is unequalled for developing Throat and Lungs, preventing and Curing Consumption, Asthma and Throat Diseases. Send stamp for Circulars to HYGIENIC SUPPLY CO., Box 1951, N. Boston, Mass.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buys our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Singer sewing machine finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years; with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glimpses of the World's Fair. OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

BABY CARRIAGES C. O. D. Shipped

Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalog free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 26, Chicago, Ill.

$18.50 Carriage for $9.25.
$12.00 " " $5.95.
$5.00 " " $2.75.

RELIABLE Exclusive territory given. AGENTS WANTED Terms, extremely liberal.

To sell the wonderful ACTINA, a pocket battery that makes the Blind See, the Deaf Hear, and positively Cures Catarrh; also Prof. Wilson's Curative Appliances. Address immediately, N. Y and London Elec. Ass'n, 34 E. 14th St., New York City N. Y., or 1021 MAIN ST., KANSAS CITY, MO

FREE. TRIAL.

$2.75 Buys our $9 Natural Finish Baby Carriage complete with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, and one piece steam bent handle. Made of best material, finely finished, reliable, and guaranteed for 3 years. Shipped on 10 days' trial. FREIGHT PAID; no money required in advance. 75,000 in use. We are the oldest and best known concern of our kind, reliable and responsible. Reference furnished at any time. Make and sell nothing but what we guarantee to be as represented, sold at the lowest factory prices. WRITE TO-DAY for our large FREE illustrated catalogue of latest designs and styles published.

OXFORD MFG. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository Remedy mailed free. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N. Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc. List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

when you can learn it AT HOME within 100 hours' study, without the aid of a teacher, from

GOODWIN'S

Improved Book-keeping and Business Manual

Up to April 12, 1894, 40,933 copies have been sold and 4,045 testimonials received. Price, $3.

☞ Tear this out and keep it! ☞ Sixteenth Edition now ready!

☞ "'Tis worth $500!"—N. TOMNEY, Vermillion Bay, Ontario, Can.

☞ "I learned from it in 3 weeks!"—F. A. DEAN, Lima, O., Feb. 5, 1892.

☞ "It made me the firm's chief accountant!"
WM. O. SHIREY, Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 23, 1891.

☞ "It raised my salary from $780 to $1,650 a year!"—L. R. PARKER, Brenham, Texas, July 15, 1893.

Do YOU wish SIMILAR SUCCESS? ☞ Send for a descriptive pamphlet.—then for the book!

Address exactly as follows: J. H. GOODWIN, Room 676, 1215 Broadway, New York.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH is absolutely perfect. It is delicious in use. It gives strength to the gums, stops decay, and destroys that extreme sensitiveness that causes suffering. Rubifoam is your friend. It's a perfect liquid dentifrice.

25 cents. All Druggists.

Sample vial free. Address

E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Subscription Rates for 1894.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .50
Young Crusader, monthly, one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
The Temple, Chicago.

SUNSHINE AND SORROW.

"DEAR SISTER:—Since the 28th of last August my dear husband and little girl have been confined to their beds, and my husband will be compelled to use crutches the remainder of his life. While it seems to me our home would lose its sunshine if THE UNION SIGNAL was to be taken from us, I fear I must submit to it. Though the clouds have so deeply shadowed our home, I have been enabled to look beyond, not knowing where to turn, but with the faith that He knows all things, and directs wisely."

A little addition to the Philanthropy Fund which you will not miss, dear reader, will give THE UNION SIGNAL to this suffering, hungering one.

WORDS OF CHEER.

I owe very much of my inspiration and enthusiasm to THE UNION SIGNAL. This was the means that brought me into the work actively. Our own little union was nearly dead, but when I came across this paper, with all its aims, methods and plans, it was just like manna to the hungering and thirsting soul, and I was glad to pass the paper on to others, and we owe much of our own brightness and success to THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE CRUSADER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mother Stewart, our Crusade historian, has given us another volume of Crusade reminiscences, this time an account of her wonderful work in Great Britain. The book is interestingly written, containing descriptions of scenes and people which are in themselves of much interest, and is illustrated with engravings of some of the noted English temperance workers.—New England Home, Hartford, Conn.

Price $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES.

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

Price $1.25.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

GUIDED STEP BY STEP. The history of a Cripple's Home at Wilhelmsro, Sweden, giving practical proof of Divine guidance in earthly affairs when heart and hand are fully given up to the Divine Will.

S. W. Partridge, 9 Paternoster Row, London.

SONGS OF THE PENTECOST. Edited by Chas. H. Gabriel and Rev. Isaac Naylor. A choice collection of nearly two hundred and fifty hymns suitable for all devotional gatherings.

Published by George Hughes & Co., 60-64 Bible House, New York City.

ASCHENBRODEL. A child-sketch by Mrs. George A. Paull. Just a short, touching story, beautified by the power of an eloquent pen, of a child's life of pain and poverty, brightened in its dying hours by the tender ministrations of a mother-heart which had "lost awhile" its own beloved one.

Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York City.

THE ORTHOEPIST is a valuable little budget of information carefully and exhaustively prepared by Alfred Ayres. For those who want a reliable pronouncing manual aside from the bulky dictionary, this book will amply fill that need. It contains over four thousand words often mispronounced, giving the diacritical markings of the various authorities with full notes and comments.

D. Appleton and Co., New York City.

OUTLINES OF ECONOMICS. College Edition. By Richard T. Ely, Ph. D., LL. D., University of Wisconsin. A finished treatise on this subject, which is commanding more or less attention from intelligent American citizens. It is arranged especially for use by college students, with summaries and questions at the close of each chapter, but it is also a book that ought to find its way into the hands of any and all who desire a better understanding of the great economic machinery of the country.

Hunt & Eaton, New York City; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES. Dr. J. M. Rice. Published by The Century Co., New York City. The book in question is the result of a series of investigations made by the author under the auspices of The Forum, his tour covering a period of over five months. He visited leading institutions in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, District of Columbia, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri and Minnesota, studying not only the theories in each case and underlying methods, but the actual practice as seen in classes. Many of the criticisms are valuable, and the light thrown upon the elections of boards and teachers ought to be a beneficial one.

OUR BOYS is a book full of such reading as the lads love. "What They Can Do and How To Do It" is the sub-title. Its contents embrace vivid descriptions of such pursuits as especially appeal to boys' hearts—life at sea, balloon ascents, boating; very clear and complete descriptions for making such things as an electric battery, a camera, banjo; how to start and fit up an aquarium; the games of base ball, football, cricket, Lacrosse are fully explained; easy experiments described; and in addition are a few stories of boy exploits, all healthful and bracing in tone. Truly, a boys' "own book."

Hunt & Eaton, New York City; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati.

UNION: A Story of the Great Rebellion. Vol. XII. The Columbian Historical Novels. By John R. Musick. Funk & Wagnalls, New York and Toronto.

This volume completes the series of twelve admirable books, entitled the "Columbian Historical Novels." It is full of historical and romantic interest, and is markedly the best book of the set, excellent as all of them are. The book opens in novel fashion, exciting one's interest at the very outset. Adroitly it changes the scene to the sunny South, and, before one is aware, the events leading up to the Rebellion are passing in review. The illustrations include portraits of Presidents Lincoln, Johnson, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Harrison and Cleveland; also of John Brown, Jefferson Davis, Generals Grant, Meade, Sherman, Hancock and Butler; also of Gen. Robert E. Lee, Horace Greeley, Samuel J. Tilden, James G. Blaine and William McKinley. The usual historical index closes the volume. Thus is completed this most remarkable series of historical novels, a fascinating history of our country, so written and interwoven with romance as to delight the young, interest the old and instruct all.

GRANŪLA

"The Perfect Health Food."

"Granūla" is one of the most concentrated forms of food, and contains in proper proportions all the elements of nutrition needed by the human body. It is made from the best White Winter Wheat grown in the famous Genesee Valley wheat-growing region.

It contains every needed constituent of the grain, and, as wheat is considered the best single article of food, "Granūla" supplies in a palatable form the best and most highly nutritive alimentary principle.

SEND FOR FREE BOOK OF RECIPES. It is ready for immediate table use by simply soaking it in milk or hot or cold water, as it is twice cooked in its manufacture. It may be made the constituent of many palatable dishes. It will keep for years unchanged as to value if stored in a dry place.

Trial package 25c. by mail postpaid. Address, OUR HOME GRANŪLA CO., Box 100, Dansville, N.Y.

A GREAT MOTHER

THE ABLY-WRITTEN AND DELIGHTFULLY INTERESTING BIOGRAPHY OF

Madam Willard

will soon issue from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n and will prove a rare acquisition to our literature. It is more than a biography; it is a setting forth of her sublime

Philosophy of Life,

and a record of her wise, pithy sayings, as well as of the incidents in which she put her philosophy to the test of practical experience.

It should be in the hands of each Mother

while, at the same time, so vivid is its portrayal and so interesting the facts recorded, each child will find it full of interest.

It will be ready very soon, and orders will be received at once.

HANDSOMELY BOUND. PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED. PRICE $1.50.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association,

THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

AROUND THE WORLD TOURISTS.

Cut out the coupon printed below, and bring or send it to our office with five two-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to pay the cost of mailing, wrapping, etc., and we will send you series No. 7.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.
ART SERIES NO. 7.
COUPON.

Send Coupon, together with five 2-cent postage stamps, or 10 cents in silver, to our office, and you will receive our Portfolio of Photographs, No. 7.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

If you have missed any of the previous issues you can obtain them by remitting 25c.

Positively you have the genuine De Long PATENT HOOK AND EYE if you see on the face and back of every card the words:

See that hump?

TRADE-MARK REG. APR. 19-92.

Richardson & De Long Bros., Philadelphia.

Lovely Complexion.

Pure, Soft, White Skin.

Have you freckles, moth, black-heads, blotches, ugly or muddy skin, eczema, tetter, or any other cutaneous blemish? Do you want a quick, permanent and absolutely infallible cure, FREE OF COST to introduce it. Something new, pure, mild and so harmless a child can use or drink it with perfect safety. If so, send your full Post-office address to

MISS MAGGIE E. MILETTE,
134 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

PICTURE LEAFLETS.

This is notably the age of pictures, and we have yielded to the acknowledged demand, and provided for the young people Picture Leaflets.

Series of Eight.

Per 1,000, postpaid, - - - $1.00
" 100, " - - - .15

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The intense interest manifested in our latest publication, "A Great Mother," justifies the prediction of a large sale.

BOOKKEEPING AND BUSINESS.

In these times there is great need that men and women should understand the methods and rules for keeping accounts. The best manual we know of is Goodwin's Improved Bookkeeping and Business Manual. The work is the outcome of business experience and careful study, with an effort to secure the best methods. The author, Mr. J. H. Goodwin, has for some time had a standing offer of the sum of $3 in cash for any valuable point not having been published or used by any one else; and in this way he has widened his opportunities for acquiring information and perfecting his book. It is surprising how much there is of useful information, hints, etc., contained in it. We think the most experienced bookkeeper or business man will find it useful. The fifteenth edition of this book is now offered, and our readers will find an advertisement on the 13th page of this number of THE UNION SIGNAL. A pamphlet descriptive of the work will be sent to any of our readers who will mention THE UNION SIGNAL, addressing J. H. GOODWIN, Room 676, 1215 Broadway, New York, and it would be well worth while to send for it.

Publisher's Notes.

W. T. P. A. LEAFLETS.

The Tribune is in receipt of sample leaflets from the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Chicago, which treat of the tobacco and liquor questions and are valuable for circulation. Price 15c. per hundred. "A Modern Devil's Mission" is the name of a valuable tract on the rum traffic with Africa, by B. V. Cushman, M. D. The magnitude and horror of the liquor traffic on the dark continent is but dimly comprehended. "For every one influenced for good by Christianity one thousand are driven into deeper degradation by the gin trade." It is estimated that two million people a year are killed by rum. Other leaflets that should be placed in the hands of every parent and teacher are: "Tobacco and the Naval Academy," "Does it Pay to use Tobacco?" and "Expert Evidence Concerning Tobacco." Here are extracts from the latter: "It is contrary to the custom of the college for any professor or any student to use tobacco in any form. Nothing would induce us to give up this delightful freedom. We pity the people who cannot escape from the reeking spittoons and stale odors and stifling smoke of tobacco." "On several occasions during the past two years, youths who have successfully passed the physical tests have developed eye trouble, soon after commencing to study. In three cases the expert oculist in New York reported that the weakness of vision was caused by tobacco poisoning, resulting from the continuous use of the 'deadly cigarette' before coming to the academy. The regulations of the Military academy prohibit the use of tobacco, and prompt and severe punishment follows if cadets are detected smoking." — Charlotte Tribune, Charlotte, Mich.

PART I

...OF THE...

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO

CONTAINS PICTURES OF

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West.

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO
COUPON
PART I

Any of our readers wishing to obtain Part I of THE WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO can do so by cutting out coupon and sending it with 25 cents to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

For washing Dishes, there's nothing like Pearline.

Why don't you begin the use of it in that way, if you're one of the timid sisters who still think that Pearline "eats the clothes?" Then you can soak things in it for a year or two, and test it in every way, until you become convinced that Pearline can't do any harm. But it won't eat your dishes, that's sure. It won't clog up the sink pipes, either, as soap does. And that cloudy effect that you've probably noticed on cut glass and china when it's washed with soap—that won't be there if you wash it with Pearline.

Beware of imitations. 412 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

A Special Offer

COUPON

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with 35 cents in stamps or silver, is good for one copy of the

WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK

Free by mail to any address in Postal Union

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to

Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
618 F STREET, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON, D. C.
P. O. BOX 463. JOHN WEDDERBURN, Managing Attorney.

Cut this out and send it with your inquiry.

Part II Now Ready

Cut out the Coupon printed below, and send to our office with 25 cents and we will send you Part II.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...
PART II

Send this Coupon, together with 25c., to this office, and you will receive our White Ribbon Art Portfolio.

PART II CONTAINS

FRONTISPIECE: Full-length Picture of MATILDA B. CARSE

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS,
MRS. LETITIA YOUMANS,
COL. GEORGE W. BAIN,
DR. KATE C. BUSHNELL,
MISS JESSIE A. ACKERMANN,
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER,
MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN,
MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER,
MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS,
MRS. ELIZABETH W. ANDREW,
MISS ALICE R. PALMER.
GENERAL JOHN BIDWELL.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
...The Temple, Chicago...

Signal Notes.

"NINE-TENTHS of the wealth of the United States is in the hands of professing Christians. It therefore should mean in the hands of God, but it doesn't."

ANOTHER practical work started by the Salvation Army in London is a steam laundry, where some thirty women are taught a business and given a chance in life.

THE Salvation Army is carrying on a noble work in far distant Ceylon. The Women's Rescue Home and Prison Gate Brigade have issued an annual report of their work in which the results achieved by the European and Singhalese officers are very gratifying.

DR. PAUL GARNIER, chief medical officer of the Paris prefecture of police, is authority for the statement that in Paris during the past sixteen years, lunacy has increased thirty per cent. The alarming feature of this alcoholic insanity according to another eminent authority is the marked homicidal tendency.

WALDENSIANS to the number of three hundred have immigrated to North Carolina, where twenty thousand acres have been bought for their use and for others who are to follow. If they bring with them their loyalty to their Christian faith, they will surely be a grand addition to the population of the United States.

THE Rev. Mr. Merrick, chaplain of Millbank, the great English prison, has issued a little book called "Work Among the Fallen," in which he gives particulars of the lives of over fourteen thousand fallen women. Drink played the most important part in the lives of these unfortunates. Their numbers included domestics, needle-women, barmaids, a few governesses and trade-girls. Eleven thousand were imprisoned directly or indirectly for excessive drinking. It is rare to find a woman who has taken to prostitution because of drink, but not one in ten carries on the wretched calling without it.

AMONG the late and welcome additions to the army of the right is The Southern Temperance Magazine, edited and published by J. A. Scarboro, Atlanta, Ga. In the two numbers which have been issued, the magazine presents a very pleasing appearance from a mechanical standpoint, but better than that a close examination of its pages shows it to be wide awake and full of the spirit of uncompromising attack on all defences of the liquor evil. This new journal establishes itself upon a broad base by extending a cordial invitation to all temperance organizations throughout the South to use its columns for the promotion of their interests.

A CALL has been issued by a committee of arrangements, Joseph A. Bogardus, 167 Chamber street, New York City, secretary, for an international temperance congress to be held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 3, 4 and 5. The main object of such gathering is "to review fully and faithfully the entire field of battle; to compare in frank and friendly discussion the conflicting views held by the different divisions of the temperance host; to come as nearly as possible to an agreement." All local, state and national temperance societies (regardless of sex, color or politics) and all churches and other religious or secular organizations which oppose the saloon are asked to send representatives, each organization to be entitled to one voting delegate to each twenty members. This call is also signed by many presidents of State W. C. T. Unions and the National general officers. Mr. Bogardus requests that delegates be appointed early and the names immediately forwarded to him. Board and room can be secured at the Park at $1 per day, and it is hoped that special railroad rates can be secured for delegates and friends. The circular closes with these words: "General Dow wishes to greet once more the representative temperance forces of the United States and Canada. This should be an historical gathering, and the date of a new era in the temperance agitation."

AN ASTHMA CURE AT LAST.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

Feeding the Sick.

In many instances invalids are restricted by physician to easily digestible food, usually boiled or sterilized milk is prescribed. In such cases the value of Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, or unsweetened condensed milk is apparent. Prepared by N. Y. Condensed Milk Co.

IVORY SOAP
99 44/100 % PURE
USED IN HOSPITALS.
THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

You need A BICYCLE to last.
Good Work, Light Weight, Good Material, Low Prices,
Make the HARTFORDS What you want.
SEND FOR OUR CATALOGUE AND THEN INSPECT THEM.
THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO., Hartford, Conn.

FREE! SAVE MONEY.
Send for Our New 28 pp. Catalogue, handsomely illustrated in colors, and containing a full description of all our celebrated PIANOS and ORGANS.
Remember.—We are the only firm of actual manufacturers that sell exclusively to the public direct from our factories, at Guaranteed WHOLESALE COST.
FOR CASH, OR ON THE EASY PAYMENT PLAN.
No Agents. No Dealers. Factory to Home direct.
Free test trial in your own home. No money in advance. Special terms to farmers and others, who cannot pay all cash down.
Pianos —FROM— $150.
Organs —FROM— $27.50
References—Our Bank. Your Bank. Any Bank in the U.S.
Write to-day to CORNISH & CO. Washington, New Jersey. Established nearly 30 years.

—"A bright home makes a merry heart"—
JOY TRAVELS ALONG with SAPOLIO.
COPYRIGHT
It is a solid cake of scouring soap. Try it in your next house-cleaning.
All work should be so done as to give joy to the worker. Perhaps you have never felt joyful when cleaning house? You never will till you use SAPOLIO to assist you. House-cleaning has been revolutionized since housewives first learned its value. Why shouldn't you find joy in your work? All Grocers sell SAPOLIO.

SECURITY HOSE SUPPORTER
LOOK AT THE CROOK
Can't slip—Can't cut
Metal work covered up
Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

CANCER Its cure by scientific local treatment. 20 Years Experience. Book Free. Drs. McLeish and Weber, 123 John Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

RAPID Fountain Pen (16 kt. Gold) makes writing a pleasure. Old Fountain Pens taken in Exchange. Agents wanted. Circ. free. RAPID PEN FACTORY, Washington, D.C

6 tubs in one. BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars. E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

...MRS. NICHOLS...
R. K. Bryan, Mrs. Burgess, Rev. Henrietta Moore, and others.
Third successful year in promoting meetings.
HEATH PLATFORM ALLIANCE
Prohibition Park, W. New Brighton, S. I., N. Y.

WE WANT YOU to distribute circulars, samples, etc., in your locality for one of the dicate of big advertisers. $3 to $5 per thousand. CASH PAID. No canvassing. Enclose stamp. DISTRIBUTING BUREAU, P.O. Box 1925, New York City.

SELF THREADING Sewing Needles. Weak sighted or blind can thread them. Finest silver spring steel. One style threads on end, other on side. Sample paper of either kind by mail 10c., 2 for 15c., 5 for 25c., 12 for 60c. Money easily made selling them. C. E. MARSHALL, LOCKPORT, N.Y

Gents' or Ladies' Size. FREE
Send us your full name and address and we will send you a box of our finest 10c cigars, retail value $5.00, for $2.98. In order to introduce this brand we will send you FREE this elegant watch, stem wind and stem set, gold finished, beautifully engraved and equal in appearance and as good a time keeper as the average $25.00 gold filled watch. We send the 50 cigars and watch together C. O. D., cost only $2.98. You examine them at the express office and if satisfactory pay the agent the amount and they are yours. Write to-day. Mention whether you want ladies' or gents' size watch. Address,
THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Unlike the Dutch Process
No Alkalies —OR— Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa
which is absolutely pure and soluble.
It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.
Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Publisher's Notes.

In greatly broadening the scope of that invariably interesting monthly, the Chicago Magazine of Current Topics, its publishers have decided upon a change of name, which will comport more fully with its contemplated field. Current Topics will be dropped and, with the May number, "The Chicago Magazine" will be assumed as the title. Under its new name, the greatest latitude will be given for the introduction of those features most desirable in the popular magazines of the period. Price, as heretofore, 15c. per copy, $1.50 per year.

Union Signal and Chicago Magazine, $1.75 Per Annum.

Our Day and Chicago Magazine, $1.75 Per Annum.

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

BLACK BEAUTY,
By Anna Sewall.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the horse.

Paper	$ .15
Board cover	.25
Cloth	.50

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Weak stomach strengthened by BEECHAM'S PILLS

A Chemical Triumph.

Among the salutary achievements of modern chemical science a most important one is the preparation in such a way of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda as to prevent any unpleasant fishy flavor, while preserving and concentrating its fine healing strengthening and pulmonic principles. This has been attempted in earlier preparations, but with very indifferent success. By the ordinary preparations the stomach of the invalid was too frequently nauseated and the end in view defeated, since the oleogenous principle unscientifically prepared and unmodified by Hypophosphites, remained indigested in the stomach and consequently inert. For Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Scrofula Anaemia, Marasmus or wasting away, it is incomparably fine. Medical and private testimony both go to show that the co-operative action of the phosphorus in the Hypophosphites with the Oil renders it a beneficent flesh producer.

APPRECIATED WHEREVER KNOWN.

"Our Home on the Hillside," at Dansville N. Y., as it was originally known, has left its imprint upon mankind as no other health institution in America has done. Dr. James C. Jackson, its founder, will leave behind a more enduring monument than one of bronze, as in the memory of thousands of patients who have within its walls learned the laws of health, it will ever be the fountain head of knowledge and source of strength in this connection. In the now famous "Granula"—the incomparable food, Dr. Jackson has given humanity a priceless blessing, as to many it is both the way to health and the means of retaining it when once regained. It contains all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley Winter Wheat in such form and proportions as to be quickly digested and thoroughly assimilated by the entire body and is A REMARKABLE REMEDY for certain diseases. If regularly and persistently used it will not fail to remove Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Constipation. It builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities. Manufactured solely by the GRANULA FOOD CO., Dansville, N. Y. Trial box 25c. Book of recipes free. Many of America's most prominent people use it daily and indorse it publicly.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 AND EVERY LAND.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XX.—No. 18.] CHICAGO, May 3, 1894. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Ursula D. Herrick 1029 15th St. Apr. 1894

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Henri, the French anarchist, has been condemned to die.

The New Jersey legislature has passed a bill forbidding gambling on horse races.

The numerous strikes throughout the United States show the tension of the industrial condition.

A movement has been inaugurated to make General Grant's birthday, April 27, a national holiday.

Ohio women will have school suffrage privileges in future, the bill to that effect having become a law.

Fifteen thousand persons were in attendance at the Confederate Veterans' Reunion in Birmingham, Ala., last week.

The Bundesrath has rejected the bill passed by the Reichstag, permitting the return of the Jesuits to Germany.

There is a prospect that Great Britain will extend a protectorate over Samoa, the United States and Germany concurring.

The Illinois attorney-general has commenced proceedings against seven Chicago gas corporations for alleged violation of the anti-trust law.

The second annual conference of the German Y. P. S. C. E. of the United States adjourned Thursday after a two days' session at Tiffin, O.

Changes to suit opposing Democratic Senators have been made in the tariff bill which it is hoped will be disposed of by the Senate ere long.

The twenty-third annual session of the Presbyterian Woman's Board of Missions met in Denver last week, with representatives from thirteen states.

The latest returns from the ruins of the earthquakes in Greece, report the number of deaths at two hundred and fifty; injured, one hundred and fifty.

The Federated Women's Clubs of Chicago, held their first successful meeting, with twenty-two representatives in attendance, at Central Music Hall last week.

A bill has been introduced in the United States Congress to open six hundred thousand acres of the land of the Southern Utes reservation, removing the Indians now occupying it.

It is announced by Ballington Booth that the English government has offered the Salvation Army a large tract of West Australia for colonization purposes, and that Commander J. A. Carlton, of London, has been chosen as governor.

Members of the French diplomatic and consular service have been forbidden, under pain of dismissal, to marry without the consent of the foreign minister. The reason is generally understood to be that the foreign wife of the diplomate may become possessed of dangerous secrets.

Recruits in various parts of the country made strenuous efforts to join the Coxey commonweal army which appeared on the outskirts of Washington, Sunday, in pursuit of its intention to petition Congress on May 1. About three hundred footsore and hungry men constituted the much-advertised army.

IN a recent issue THE UNION SIGNAL stated that Miss Willard would sail for home June 1. It seems we should have said about that time. The exact date, Miss Gordon writes, is June 13, passage having been engaged on the steamship "Teutonic" for that date. Miss Willard will go directly home from New York, and remain until the meeting of the National Prohibition Convention in Montreal, Canada, early in July, where she has promised to speak. Her plan is to spend the rest of the summer in the Catskills, and not to undertake any public work until the fall.

So many of our workers are inquiring the date of the National W. C. T. U. convention that they will be glad to know that a cablegram just received from Miss Willard annouces November 16 as the day for the opening of the twenty-first annual Convention at Cleveland, Ohio.

WHITE-RIBBONERS throughout the country will extend warm sympathy to Miss Ruby Gilbert in the recent loss of her father, who was for more than forty years a Baptist minister and widely known among churches of central and northern Illinois. Mr. Gilbert was a loyal temperance advocate, and a stanch friend of our organization. His daughter is known to W. C. T. U. workers as the faithful cashier for eight years of our publishing association.

GOOD news from New Jersey! A telegram from Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, brings the cheering news that the governor has just signed a "good, strong temperance law" for that state. The W. C. T U. of New Jersey has concentrated its efforts the past few months upon this department of work and with the assistance of Mrs. Hunt has planned and carried on the campaign which has resulted in taking the public school for temperance. This leaves only five states without some enactment providing for the teaching of scientific temperance in schools.

ON behalf of the British Women's Temperance Association, Lady Henry Somerset extends a cordial invitation to our National W. C. T. U. to send fraternal delegates to the eighteenth annual meeting of that society to be held in Memorial Hall, London, May 7, 8 and 9, closing with a public meeting in Queen's Hall, May 10. We have abundant reason to know that, as Lady Henry suggests, the interests of temperance generally are greatly promoted by an "interchange of greetings and good-will among the different countries in which our organization has been formed," and this important meeting is certain to furnish additional momentum to woman's work for humanity.

THE Haskell bill, extending local option privileges to every ward and voting precinct, has been defeated by the Ohio legislature. Ohio has already tried five different local option bills only to have each pronounced a failure as far as satisfactory dealing with the drink evil is concerned. All measures looking toward compromise must from their very nature, result in disappointment to the enemies of the liquor traffic, their only value being as object-lessons. We prophesy that the experiences of the past will induce temperance people of Ohio ere long to concentrate their forces upon securing for the state prohibition pure and simple.

WORD comes to us that some of our "dear five thousand friends" have started the report that Miss Willard is coming home to inaugurate a local option movement. In the light of her consistent record from the beginning it seems like an aspersion for us to say that the intimation is wholly untrue. As a matter of course she has taken a deep interest in the pending local option bill in Parliament, and the more because women under it will vote on the question of saloons or no saloons in all the localities of England. The record already made by women voters in New Zealand under their local option law proves that we have not erred in our oft-repeated declaration that the women's ballot will be "the enacting clause of prohibition," but the conditions in our own country are different. Our leader is one who has from the first "marched with the regiment," and never drawn aside from any movement because it was unpopular. We should like to have any of those who have given credence to this report to quote to us any declaration of hers that is not consistent with the stanchest loyalty to what she has often termed "Prohibition by law and prohibition by politics."

THE most important question to come before the New York constitutional convention which assembles May 8, is that of striking the word "male" from the constitution. Petitions to that effect are being industriously circulated, and the interest and enthusiasm with which the question is being agitated in that old and conservative state is a significant sign of the times. Prominent politicians, irrespective of party, declare themselves in favor of the measure, and ministers who once were hostile now actively support it. "Not only have all sorts and conditions of women put their names to these petitions," says a New York paper, "but men of all creeds and degrees have willingly avowed themselves in favor of the demand." It is the general opinion of political leaders of the state that the convention will provide for woman suffrage. With the women of the state of New York enfranchised the women of other states may feel sure that their turn will soon come.

THE reports of the recent election in New Zealand, in which women voted for the first time, show that the new voters appreciate the privilege and responsibility of the ballot. A letter to THE UNION SIGNAL from that far-off progressive land says that, in the district of the writer, out of thirteen thousand six hundred and forty-three names on the electoral roll six thousand seven hundred and sixty were men and six thousand eight hundred and seventy-four women, and this is a fair sample of results generally. A newspaper of our own country, commenting on the election, says that, "as might have been expected, they arrayed themselves on the side of candidates who professed Christianity and favored temperance." This tribute to the moral effect of woman's vote is all the more significant coming from a journal holding pessimistic views of "female" suffrage. Like a good many others, while admitting its purifying influence, it fears that, "as in our own country, where the experiment has been tried on a modified scale, as soon as the novelty wears off women will not go to the polls." Perhaps heretofore in this country the scale has been too "modified." We think investigation will show that the less modified the more successful the experiment.

A MOST valuable periodical that is steadily pushing its way to the front is The American Medical Temperance Quarterly, organ of the American Medical Temperance Association. Non-professional temperance advocates have always felt that amid the ranks of the medical profession were some of their most dreaded opponents, for a doctor's prescription is well-nigh sacred law, and the factor of alcohol in that prescription could not be cried down by logic, advice or persuasion. The American Medical Temperance Association announces its platform thus: "The object of the Association is to study and investigate the action of alcohol as both a beverage and a medicine. The only qualifications for membership required are, to be a regular medical practitioner and a total abstainer from alcohol as a beverage. It will be apparent that the last qualification is more or less a scientific necessity for good work in this field. . . . The alcoholic problem has reached such proportions, and has become a subject of such intense interest in all political, social and religious circles, as to demand scientific study." The Medical Temperance Quarterly is the medium of conveying to the world the results of the investigations of this body, and has for its editorial committee, the well-known physicians, N. S. Davis, T. D. Crothers and J. H. Kellogg. May its twenty-four pages, although "having nothing to do with the temperance sentiment," be yet so freighted with scientific truths as to create such sentiment against the insidious drug as shall banish it forever from the shelves of those whose profession it is to promote the physical welfare of the race.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

An Acrostic.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

Sister of mercy in its widest sense,
Unsatisfied with woman's fett'ring laws,
Serene of face with fire-enkindled heart,
A hater of wrong,—a champion of the right;
Needing no stimulus but the daily needs
Before her kindly, keen, all-searching eyes.
A sweet, good woman,—brave and strong and true,
Not willing that her sex should sit enthralled;
Thinking no sacrifice too great to bring
Honor to womankind; steadfast and sure
One constant aim her gentle life has borne.
No statesman holds a higher, nobler place,—
Young-hearted, brave—the helper of her race.

Santa Paula, Cal.

HER WEDDING JOURNEY.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

I happened to be on the steamer the morning she left. She was so forlorn, so pitiful, with great tears in her dark eyes, and I somehow felt attracted towards her.

Every one was on deck in the sunshine and warmth. The fields lay all ripply and gold in the August sunshine, like yellow lakes margined with green forests, and the sound of the reaper came down to us as we touched at the different landings. But she sat apart, not noticing nor entering into the merry conversations around her, half crouching into a corner, and leaning over the rail as if searching the water.

She was not attractive; she was lame and deformed, and her features were irregular, but her face was spirituelle in its delicacy and refinement, and her eyes were luminous with the reflection of a soul struggling to the light. Somehow her hungry, longing look appealed to me, and I said:

"You are sorry to leave Chautauqua so early. It is not bad news that calls you away, I hope?" She gave me a startled, appealing look, as if I had done her an unexpected kindness.

"Oh, no," she said, with a sob that went to my heart, "I couldn't stay. I couldn't bear it. I was so lonesome."

"Lonesome!" I exclaimed.

"Yes," she said, "'tis the worst kind of lonesomeness to be in a great crowd alone."

"You were by yourself in this great, busy throng, then," I replied, with a startled sense of what she might have endured. By bits I drew out from her the whole story of one of "Christ's little ones," who had found the full bitterness of realizing that every other "little one" in the hurry and joy and pressure of the "Father's business" had left her out of the family circle of God.

"I had been thinking and planning about it for years. You see I had read the C. L. S. C. course. I can't begin to tell you how I sacrificed and worked to get the books and the magazine year after year. Sometimes I picked potatoes and berries or sowed corn or tended a sick child for a summer boarder once in our neighborhood. I sold a little butter. I did some crochet work.

"We were never idle in the old-fashioned farm-house, but in the long winter evenings we read, my mother and I. My father said it was all foolishness. He never quite got over his disappointment that I was not just as other girls. I had a severe illness when a baby that left me with spinal curvature. But my dear, gentle, invalid mother loved me all the more, I think, because I was not strong and beautiful. Once in a while as we sat together in the evenings we talked of Chautauqua. It seemed a veritable fairyland to us, only noble men and women there, ready and helpful. It seemed as if the blessing of God must be on those people, that they must be near the dear Lord Himself, so much of His spirit was in what we read.

"One terrible day my mother died. I can't tell you about it. It crushed me to the very earth. It seemed as if the sun had dropped out of the sky, as if God had forgotten the world. She had one request to make of my silent, stern father, that he should send me to Chautauqua this summer. My aunt came to stay with him, and he would fulfill that promise, foolish as he thought it. The neighbors, busy, meddlesome people, out of whose atmosphere my mother and I had dwelt apart, said it was too much to ask, but he said I should go.

"I cannot tell you how we worked and pinched and scraped and saved to let me come. We don't need to do this exactly, at all, but my father had to do it in his early days and now he grasps the little he has with close hands. His life is the little he makes and saves, and he screws the lives of all around him to the same tension. Sometimes, God forgive me, I wonder why it could not have been my mother spared to me.

"I somehow felt a ray of light thrill through my sorrow. I hoped and dreamed and planned, as girls do for a wedding journey, I think, because it is always the unknown, the ideal that gladdens them most, I believe, and—I came at last. A lady hearing of my eagerness to come who had a cottage here, said I might have a room in it and the use of her stove. She would not open her cottage this summer. I expected only consecrated people here, for I had heard dear Bishop Vincent preach once. I never thought of being alone. Well, I can't tell you all the rest. To me it is the bitterest thing, and it will seem so small to you, such a silly story.

"I sat in my little room, and on my veranda in the silent, unoccupied house. No one came to me. I went to the prayer-meetings; people looked pityingly at me, unaccustomed to my misfortune. I went to the lectures and the concerts, and I sat by the lake, always alone. Once or twice a kind lady spoke to me, but I never saw these again in the crowds. I tried to play with the children, but they shrank from me; some boys said rude things that cut my very soul; the girls looked at me with great, curious eyes, as at some strange thing apart. I came and went, and went and came. How I longed to talk to the dear, white-haired minister who sometimes spoke in the chapel. I did speak one morning and he said: 'Yes, child, but I am in a hurry this morning,' and he forgot, I suppose, after.

"I longed to go out in the row boats. I wanted some kind hand to clasp mine. I wanted some of the love I had lost. It seemed to me the heart-beat of the multitude of Christ's people should be one of sympathy and friendliness, but it was not. I tried to think it was all my fault. At last I found some one as lonely as myself. For a few days we clung to each other, and went everywhere together, but she had to go home. I staid a few days after that, and then I couldn't bear it any longer. It was all entertainments; and with no one to share them it was so lonely. It made my heart ache, and all the time I thought: I am glad mother is not disappointed, too; so glad she is not here. If Bishop Vincent had been there it would have been different, I think. I am sure it would; but you know he is away, and this year people are not so sociable.

"I used to wonder when the beautiful, happy ladies passed me if they knew how hungry my heart was, and once I prayed in a little meeting for the brotherhood of man, for the binding together of the nations in Christ's love, and the minister said to me patronizingly, 'A good prayer, my child,' and went his way.

"I am going home. My wedding journey is over. Christ has not yet come to His kingdom.

"Yes, it is as lonely there, but not like the great crowds. I have my books, and people are used to me, and I have my mother's grave."

"If you will go back," I said, "I will make you have a lovely time. We shall go together. You shall learn to know people. It is all because they are so busy, so occupied they haven't time."

"No," she said, quietly, "the dream is over. I want the kindness for kindness' sake, not because of your influence.

"I suppose wherever we go in life we do not realize what we hope for . . . . Yes, you may tell these consecrated people, and it may brighten some other life. I see nothing ahead in my own. I am so sorry I went. I might have had it to think of, and now everything seems over."

The boat touched the pier. I carried her packages reverently. She was one of His children, and she had been thoughtlessly refused a cup of water by the people of God.

I repeat her story here because the summer is near with its hundreds of gatherings by sea and lake, in the glory of sky-tending mountains—and there are so many lonely, aspiring souls perishing for the human touch which would transfigure their hungry lives into inspiring purpose and usefulness.

Pittsburg, Kan.

"OUR NATIONAL DILEMMA."

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

No question now before the world, demanding attention or seeking solution, has ever equalled the liquor traffic in its magnitude. Through long and careless indulgence and thoughtless toleration of the sale of alcoholic beverages, this traffic has acquired such gigantic proportions and such influence in the country that its heinous crimes and devastating injuries cover the land with misery, prostrate its industries, and threaten to engulf the whole country in moral degradation and financial ruin.

Benumbed by base appetite, slavish prejudice, mercenary greed, and blinded by neglect and indifference, the nation has been tempted into a moral morass of treasonable complicity with this pernicious, fascinating poison, until conscience is warped, virtue and integrity are contaminated with crime—the capitol of the nation invaded and desecrated with the villainous traffic, and to a large extent, religious professions have become a hypocritical mockery.

A CULMINATION OF CRIME.

In deference to this wicked traffic, and in violation of all constitutional guarantees of protection, the government has become a vicious license of toleration and encouragement to the sale of these poisonous beverages through which it has done more than anything else to bring on this carnival of crime and lawlessness. This has also served to increase the depravity of these monsters of evil—the liquor-dealers—who have reached out and drawn into their clutches, many of the brightest and best in society only to degrade them to the lowest depths of humanity, including a large portion of laboring men and women in all our great cities, gorging courts and crowding prisons with the victims of this poison.

POLITICAL JEOPARDY.

More recently these liquor dealers, their allies and abetters, have increased their activity and intrenched their influence, until they have obtained control of courts and legislatures, and by means of insidious appeals, threats, fraud and political chicanery, defy and seek to nullify all judicial and moral restraint, so that our country is now honey-combed with their enticing traps for the unwary, and our politics a cesspool of corruption.

A FORMIDABLE COMBINATION.

Led on by the enormously increased consumption of alcoholic beverages, mercenary politicians and unscrupulous parties in the interest of this traffic, together with many moral cowards in our churches, deride and oppose all appeals for suppression. Combined with these are reputable citizens, who through misleading, insidious arguments and subtle methods have either joined this cabal, or stand silently by, witnessing the awful devastation, hearing the shrieks and groans arising from the misery produced, and yet with only a flimsy protest, basely allow these liquor dealers, with their satellites, to control our politics in the interest and for the perpetuation of their piratical business, altogether revealing an amount of treachery, moral cowardice and duplicity, that is truly appalling.

THE VICIOUS STATE OF SOCIETY.

And this infamous traffic has extended and ramified its influence until the whole community in its moral sentiments, business interests and social relations, has become a seething, boiling cauldron of vicious tendencies, overrun with anarchial sophistries, traitorous cliques, tramps and vagabonds, who manifest their degradation by threats and deeds of violence, and all this criminal viciousness in the community is brought about by the action of the government in league with this cruel traffic. But worse than all, this infamous business is entrenched in law by the actual consent and connivance of our own citizens, many of them to cover their own personal complicity, even blaspheming the Almighty, by charging Him with being responsible for this degrading, crime-producing poison.

ITS RESULTS.

So completely is the community deluded and controlled by the fascination of this traffic and its surroundings, and so oblivious are the people to their constitutional rights of protection against it, nor even conscious of their treasonable responsibility for its awful ravages, that the whole nation is suffering from paralyzed ambition, enforced idleness, deranged finances and business depression. And under the stupefying influence of this demoralizing traffic the people are so benumbed into moral insensibility that they allow themselves to be coerced and fettered with the heavy chains of their old party associations, upon which the traffic depends for its existence.

CAUSE OF BUSINESS DEPRESSION.

Thus gradually and insidiously has this moral cancer of alcoholic poisoning imbedded itself into the nation's life, and its degrading, desolating grasp on society has become such a domineering influence in our political and social economy that it has blighted our moral sense, destroyed our material prosperity, depressed our commercial vitality and brought all the business relations of the country into such a distressed condition that a terrible paralysis now covers the whole nation.

JEOPARDY INCREASED.

And all this degradation and injury can be traced directly to the results of this atrociously destructive and insidious liquor traffic, which robs the laborer by exhausting the resources of the country to the enormous extent of one thousand million annually, with another thousand million required to take care of its awful consequences, making altogether a drain on the resources of labor of two thousand millions annually—a tax of more than eight times the income from the tariff, and amounting to five times the cost of running the whole government, being a yearly tax on each family of over one hundred and sixty dollars, or three dollars per week on every family in the United States, the annual consumption of beer alone hav-ng increased from two million barrels to thirty-five million barrels within a few years, while the population has only doubled.

NO OTHER RESULT POSSIBLE.

The depressing and paralyzing effects of this traffic, the stupendous loss of capital and the drain of injury on our industries, must of necessity paralyze business and cause depreciation in the value of labor, greatly reduce production and manufacture and depreciate the price of commodities, by demoralizing and exhausting financial resources of the people.

FINAL RESULTS.

This loss of commercial integrity and financial strength has at last plunged the marts of trade into a condition of chaotic uncertainty with closed mines, silent factories, idle workshops, riotous strikes, reckless tramps, and all the business interests of the country injured and tossed about like a ship without a rudder on a boisterous sea;—resulting in a large portion of the people being driven to enforced idleness, men and families wandering houseless and homeless, with gaunt misery, crime, suffering, pauperism and starvation everywhere. Everybody asking in trembling anxiety: "What is to be the final outcome?" And none can answer.

A REVOLUTION INDISPENSABLE.

To turn this tide of peril to our industries, and infamy to our morals, there must be no jugglery or treacherous concealment of facts—these awful realities are now facing our civilization and must be met, and to awaken business activity, or have any revival of trade—to secure any general prosperity or relief from this flagrant wrong, terrible incubus, we must rise to the dignity of American citizenship, and find our only hope in a moral and political revolution.

We must have a new birth of freedom and awakened conscience, with an outburst of indignation against this piratical business. There must come a general uprising of the people, demanding their constitutional rights, claiming from judicial authorities protection from this terrible enemy and accepting nothing less than its entire prohibition and suppression as their security.

Especially and imperatively must the people awaken to the necessity for political agitation. Prohibitory legislation must be acknowledged as the only feasible method that will bring permanent relief to depressed trade, injured homes and demoralized society. Restored confidence must come through a restored virtue. A brand of shame and disgrace must be put on this infamous traffic at the ballot-box.

New York City.

TEMPERANCE AND THE BIBLE.

Two Kinds of Wine.

BY REV. HENRY BURTON, M. A.

It is one of the bright signs of our times, and one which shows a marvelous ripening of public opinion, that the churches of England have agreed to set apart one Sabbath of the year for the cause of temperance. Hitherto the work has been left mainly to a small section of the church, what has been termed its extreme party. Others have stood back, or kept aloof. Theoretically they are on the side of temperance; they approve of total abstinence—at least for others—but such is the influence of their early training, and perhaps of acquired habit, that they are not yet convinced that they are called to make any personal sacrifice. Nay, they believe, and honestly believe too, that the Bible is on the side of moderation, rather than on the side of total abstinence; and just as people who are troubled with insomnia will resort to a pillow of hops to induce sleep, so our moderate friends pick up their isolated texts of Scripture, and from them decoct a grateful anodyne that will soothe and quiet a too wakeful conscience.

But what is the teaching of the Bible with respect to temperance? To this Cæsar we make our appeal, and we are quite content to abide by its verdict.

First, then, let us observe that the Bible distinguishes between things that differ. The word "wine" in Scripture is most general and elastic; almost as elastic as the "wine" of modern commerce is, which includes many substances that were never grown in a vineyard. In our version it is made to stand in the place of no less than eleven Hebrew words. It may be a word which speaks of the natural produce of the vine, such as clusters of grapes, but our version calls it "wine." It may be a word denoting the newly expressed juice of the grape, unfermented, but our version calls it "wine." It may be a mixture of other drinks besides the juice of the grape, but our version calls it "wine." It may be a word denoting some kind of cake, perhaps of pressed grapes or raisins, but our version calls it "wine." (II. Sam. 6:19; Hos. 3:1.)* It is evident then the "wines" of Scripture are not all to be classed in the same category. There are wines and wines; and between these varying kinds Scripture draws its broad lines of division and distinction. It will be enough for our purpose to mention the two kinds of wine specified in the Bible. One was the fermented juice of the grape, containing alcohol and so intoxicating; the other was the unfermented juice of the grape, in which there was no trace of alcohol, and which was no t only quite harmless but most nutritious.

If we turn to Deuteronomy 32:14, we find an enumeration of the good things of the Promised Land, and with the mention of "butter of kine," "milk of sheep" and "fat of lambs" it is said of Israel, "And thou didst drink the pure blood of the grape." That this was a kind of wine commonly used in ancient times is seen from the dream the chief butler told to Joseph. He said: "Pharaoh's cup was in my hand and I took the grapes and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand." It is evident from this that the newly expressed juice, unfermented, was the royal beverage in the time of the Pharaohs and the time of Israel's bondage in Egypt. "It would seem," says Bishop Lowth, in his commentary on Isaiah, "that the Egyptians drank only the fresh juice pressed from the grapes." Bishop Lowth, however, presses his point a little too far; for it is not historically accurate to say that the Egyptians drank only the fresh juice expressed from the grapes; for the bas reliefs on the walls of the tombs of Thebes show that in those early ages there was a wine that could unman a man, a wine like that which sparkled in Circe's fatal cup, and which could turn men into swine and send them wallowing in the mire of foul and slimy ways.

It is sufficient for our purpose to show that there was in ancient days an unfermented and harmless wine, and that this was a common beverage both amongst Egyptians and Hebrews and among the surrounding nations, as the statements of their historians abundantly prove. Has it never occurred to us with what different tones and language the Bible speaks of wine? Has it not seemed a double voice, with a testmony which was conflicting, discordant, and in fact contradictory? Now it says that wine "maketh glad the heart" of men; and again, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging." Now it speaks of it as one of God's choice gifts. "She did not know," says God of Israel, "that I gave her the corn and the wine and the oil." (Hos. 2:8); while again we hear the Bible denouncing wine, condemning its traffic and uttering a bitter woe upon him who puts it to his neighbor's lips. How can we explain this double mode of speech, this want of harmony between the different statements of Scripture? It is our translation which is obscure and somewhat misleading. It is because our word "wine" is made to represent things totally different, both in their nature and in their effects; and so the broad line of division the Hebrew Scriptures draw is in our translation obscured and effaced. The Hebrew Scriptures recognize the difference, the broad difference too, between the wines with which they were familiar, and to these two different things they attach two different names; the one invariably used in a good sense, the other almost invariably used in a bad sense. It finds a wine that is harmless, refreshing, nutritious, and it calls it by its distinctive name, tirosh; it finds a wine that is harmful, fascinating, dangerous, and it calls it by its distinctive name, yayin; and all through the Old Testament this distinction is observed. One is a good, the other an evil; the one is a blessing, the other a bane; the one is a gift of God, the other a perversion of man; the one is the minister of life, the other is the minister of death; the one is healthful and benign, recruiting a wasted strength, giving the power to act and think; the other saps the strength, enfeebles the vital organs, throws reason into confusion and stupor, and turns man—made erect in the image of God—into a maudlin incapable or a raving maniac. When then we hear the Scriptures singing the praise of wine, or telling how good men made use of it, we must find out what kind of wine it was. We must not confound what Scripture distinguishes; but we must always remember that it is the unfermented wine that Scripture sanctions and applauds; while for the wine that intoxicates, the Bible has no word but of censure and of condemnation.

Let us notice further how the Bible teaches that stimulants are not a necessary of life; that life will be just as long, and work as easily done, without them as with them. It is surprising to what an extent men are influenced by their predilections and prejudices. It may be only a fancy, a superstition, that has taken possession of the popular mind; but it dies hard.

But what says the Bible upon this question? Why, that stimulants are not necessary; that labor can be as arduous and prolonged, life as intense and virile without them as with them, and it teaches this by giving examples of total abstaining lives. Let us borrow the wand of the witch of Endor and call up Samuel. Can we find a nobler specimen of a man, or one who lived more intensely than he? He is the historian, writing down these sacred records when literature was young; he is the statesman, who could either crown kings or chide them; he was the saint, who kept near to God as "His right arm"; he was the prophet, through whose lips of fire Jehovah himself spake. But Samuel kept his garments all unspotted from the sin of Noah and of Lot. He tasted neither wine nor strong drink; he touched not the fruit of the vine even in its harmless, unfermented shape. Or let us call up Samson. The muscles of his brawny arms are like cords of steel. How he plays with the Philistines, carrying off their city gates upon his shoulder, and pulling down the temple of their god! Even the jawbone of an ass, with his right hand clasping it, becomes as a scythe of steel, leaving its bloody swarth behind it. But Samson was a total abstainer; no particle of his giant strength was drawn from the fruit of the vine. Or let us call up Elijah, the stern eremite of the old dispensation, that champion of a forsaken faith. In one short day he builds his altar upon Carmel, challenging the priests of Baal to an ordeal of fire; and then at evening, when the strength of others is spent, he girds up his loins and runs before the royal chariot to Jezreel. And Elijah was an abstainer. So too was Daniel, who suffered no harm from refusing the royal wine. His face was fairer, ruddier, and purer than the faces of the Babylonian youths who had not, as he, the courage to say No. Or let us make way for the rough Baptist as he comes from the desert. With what tremendous energy he wrought and spoke! What thunders were in his tones, when the mere echoes of his voice shook the royal palace and made Herod tremble in his purple! But John was an abstainer; from his birth to his sharp death he did not know the taste of wine.

And so it seems that when God summoned a man to the highest kind of service, one of the conditions of that service was abstinence from wine. Even the priests who were engaged in the temple service were required to abstain from wine. They were not even allowed the unfermented wine, when engaged in the service of the temple; and one reason why Jesus did not himself take the unfermented paschal cup, saying, as He passed it to the rest, "I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine"—was that now as the world's high priest, He was about to offer the atoning sacrifice, passing himself up those "dark altar stairs" of Calvary.

But we are asked, How about the first miracle at Cana? By turning the water into wine, did not Jesus sanction its use, giving to the wine cup His benediction? Well, the questions are easily answered, when we remember that the unfermented wine was a common beverage of those times. And this being so, can we suppose for a moment, that Jesus would create that which deadens the sensibilities, weakens the will and makes such havoc of both body and soul? Is it at all likely that Jesus with one hand should create life, should bless life, should brighten life and lengthen life, and with the other deliberately open the gate for death? He is a bold man, and something more than bold, who could aver that or even suggest it.

But what about St. Paul's recommendation to Timothy? The apostle writes to his beloved, but invalid son, "Be no longer a drinker of water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine other infirmities" (I Tim. 5:23). And what does this prove? Why, it proves only this: That Timothy was a total abstainer, living a Nazarite life, and abstaining both from fermented and unfermented wine, and that Paul recommended the moderate, medicinal use of wine. If any one will prove to us that the apostle recommended the use of fermented wine (which he cannot), even then Paul's prescription would only put wine in its proper place—and where we are perfectly content to leave it—among the medicines. But what is a medicine must not be a beverage.

And so the whole drift of the Bible is on the side of total abstinence, and he who does not find this taught in its pages, reads it in the ruby glasses of his prejudices. What, then, is our attitude and responsibility with regard to the question?

London, Eng.

*The Revised Version has corrected some of these defects of translation.

AN ENGLISH LAW COURT.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

It is one of London's gray dull mornings, with a clammy atmosphere. We have been summoned from Reigate by telephone and telegraph with the statement: "Miss Philips' lawsuit comes on in Her Majesty's Court, Queen's Bench Division No. 8 at eleven o'clock this morning." Now, Miss Philips is a "British woman," or as we should say, "a white-ribbon comrade." She is one of Lady Henry's coadjutors on the National Executive Committee, "a Quaker woman of position and independent means" (to quote the statement of her counsel), and has devoted her life to deeds of philanthropy.

About a year ago she saw a drunken man stagger into a public-house in Tottenham (the part of London where she was born and bred), and calling a policeman, she pointed out the "saloon victim" and requested that the proprietor of the house be summoned for violation of the law against the sale of intoxicants to those who are already under the influence of liquor, but the police declined to do this, whereupon Miss Philips herself issued a summons, which was thrown out by the court, and she soon found herself charged with malicious prosecution, the damages being laid at twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

Figure to yourselves, dear white-ribboners, a great hall, stately and magnificent, with lofty and emblazoned arches, from which doors on either side conduct to courts, in which the leading lawsuits of London are heard. We enter a room, the dimensions of which are about 25x35 feet; it is well filled, but not crowded. Perched on his high seat sits Mr. Justice Wills in his robes of red and white and his portentous horse-hair wig of gray; the judge has a fine, keen face, and before we have finished he proves himself the ablest intellect inside those walls. In front of and below him sits a big, heavy-faced man, also in a black gown and wearing a big wig; he is the clerk, or as they say here, the "clark," and on a much abused little copy of the Sacred Book he swears each witness in a droning and well-nigh unintelligible voice. Near him sits a harmless old gentleman in black, who moves quietly about and keeps order; they call him the usher in these parts. Next comes a row of benches occupied by solicitors or office lawyers, and next is a row set apart for the biggest wigged men in the room, who are called "Q. C.'s," or "Queen's Counsel," having attained a grade as pleaders at the bar which is the highest they can reach unless they become judges. Behind these impressive gentlemen is a row of desks and seats for their assistants, the junior members of the bar, also in black gown and wig of gray. Seated together on our left were the clans and cohorts of the liquor traffic, whose general appearance was the same with which we are so familiar in our own country, a group of men with a general tendency to a reddish copper color, with faces on which intellectual and philanthropic work have set no seal, but whose vacuity is only emphasized by the scowling forehead and fierce or downcast eye.

Thirteen witnesses were examined, all of whom testified that Miss Philips is what the distinguished Q. C. whom they had retained for their counsel declared her to be, viz: "a fanatical teetotaler," "one who lives for the suppression of the liquor traffic," and "a busybody in other people's matters." As the liquor men's Q. C. proceeded in his suave tones to set forth the case through minute questions to the saloon men which brought out an account of Miss Philips' work and faith, the judge turned uneasily toward the prosecutor and said: "Is it then to be a subject of reproach if a person takes an interest in preventing licenses? Surely we are not here to limit legitimate private or public action; if you do this it cuts both ways, and if you have not something better than this for your case it is poor enough, indeed."

The liquor men now brought forward a more distressful looking person than any hitherto elevated into the witness box, and he declared that it was in his mind to pay a certain large sum for the public house in which Miss Philips saw the drunken man enter, but on learning about her action he had determined to pay less, and in fact had done so by about £3,500; this may or may not have been true, but these intuitional processes of his own mind did not make a deep impression on the judge, and he declared that he would not allow the case to proceed on the basis of a slander by Miss Philips, for it had been already proved that the same publican against whom she appeared had sold drink to a married woman who was an inebriate, after he had received warning from her husband, and that when he had brought a dozen witnesses, and among them some policemen, to prove that she was not intoxicated, the court had disregarded their testimony, having an ampler amount on the other side, and had fined the publican fifty dollars.

The liquor men having really no case at all now brought in fresh witnesses to prove that Miss Philips was a devoted temperance woman and opposed to the existence of public houses; also what they claimed as parallel cases in the past, whereupon the judge said to their counsel: "I think you are putting the cart before the horse, and the plea and the cases you cite are about as relevant to the present discussion as if you should urge in my hearing a chapter of genealogies from the Old Testament." This produced a strong effect, and no more witnesses were called. The liquor men tried to make out that the man was not drunk but had had a broken leg and therefore a rolling gait.

The speeches of the two Q. C.'s, who stand in the very front rank of the London bar, were of especial interest. Butter would not have melted in the mouth of the liquor men's advocate. Few voices would be able to compass so many mild circumflexes and agreeable rising inflections; he was apparently much grieved that such a calamity had fallen on his client. Miss Philips' counsel was short, thick-set, of sledge-hammer oratory, ponderous, clear and conclusive; he firmly hammered his ideas into the jury and concluded by calling Miss Philips into the box. She gently affirmed, declining to kiss the Book, that she would tell the truth and nothing but the truth. In answer to questions she said that she was born and had lived all her life in Tottenham; was an officer in the Society of Friends and in the B. W. T. A. In her reply to a question as to whether she was in the habit of taking proceedings against publicans, she answered in her mild voice: "I never took out a summons before," and further when asked whether she did not think she was influenced by malice in prosecuting this publican, she replied, "I neither knew him by name nor sight." When asked what she had said to the policeman she answered: "I said to him: 'It seems to me a very grave responsibility you take to see a clear violation of law and do nothing about it.' Later the policeman told me that I could summon if I chose; I said I did not know that." It was evident that the policemen were willing to transfer their sworn responsibility to a private citizen and to a disenfranchised one at that.

The charge of the judge to the jury was one of the best temperance speeches I have heard for many a day; it equaled that of Miss Philips' own distinguished counsel. In his dry tones the judge remarked: "It is very difficult to get a case like this fairly tried in these days when the temperance question is mixed up with law and politics, but nobody who has sat as a judge as many years as I have, can fail to feel that the drunkenness of this country is at the bottom of a large share of the cases that come before him. I do not agree with Miss Philips in all her ideas as a temperance woman. I think the slow lift of civilization is doing more for us than any specific effort can. The progress of England toward sobriety in fifty years has been immeasurable; drunkenness is now disgraceful and in the better classes it is becoming practically unknown, nevertheless the curse is on us heavily and will be for a long time yet. I must say that when the man accused by Miss Philips came into court I certainly thought him under the influence of liquor; it may be that he has by nature a thick and stuttering utterance and a remarkably rolling gait. but she says that she believed him to be drunk and that she does so still. I therefore take it that Miss Philips acted in the best of faith and her conduct was as far from malice as one can possibly conceive. Her words to the policeman were undoubtedly privileged; the question for the jury is, did she desire to see the law vindicated and to bring the offender to justice for the welfare of society? She is a lady who, as has been universally admitted, has spent her life in good works, and by her origin and training she included active participation in the temperance reform as a part of her duty. It is not much wonder that she had little hope of the police and felt that she must herself issue the summons when they gave her to understand that they should not testify to the man's drunkenness.

It is almost needless to say that the jury found Miss Philips innocent and that all the costs of the case are to be paid by the liquor men who had undoubtedly hoped to make this a test case, which if it resulted in their favor would furnish such a precedent as to intimidate temperance people from prosecuting hereafter. It will be seen that the tactics of the enemy are the same in England as with us in America.

Reigate, Eng.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Life in Southern California.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A six weeks' outing in this favored corner of our country has not oblivionized all sense of obligation to the paper which white-ribboners on the coast as well as inland are pleased to call "ours." And no one is more happy to hear that possessive pronoun than ye traveling editor, who never entirely cuts the strings that bind her to the busy sanctum in Chicago.

Someway it does not seem as hard to find our women here as it does in the East (all the other side of the Rockies is "East" in California parlance). Either the women are more faithful wearers of our modest insignia or else they are more cordial in their advances to each other. Then perhaps the warm sunshine thaws out the natural reserve. At any rate a white ribbon woman is a distinctive type in Southern California and seems to form the bulwark of the churches and all advanced work, even more than in other places where my lot has been cast.

This is the season of county conventions and I have been invited to at least three which I am unable to attend on account of my speedy return. I am impressed with the methodical and intelligent manner in which these conventions are arranged for and the paramount importance which they assume in the eyes of all the membership. Indeed, I was about to write, for steadfastness, loyalty, self-sacrifice and intelligence, the California branch of our great society is especially distinguished; then I reflected where have I ever seen those qualities lacking in W. C. T. U. women, and so I forbear to say more than that our auxiliaries on this sunset coast are keeping pace with the great army, and there is not one laggard in the camp.

In many respects the country has a different aspect from that of my former visits. There is an unusual drouth even for this rain-slighted land, and that combined with the cold weather of the previous winter has produced such a late spring that the roses are only just beginning to bloom and the orange blossoms are fully a month late. The freezing in some isolated sections was exceedingly calamitous. I have heard of one orange grower who invested twenty thousand dollars on eighty acres of land in smudge pots, oil tanks and pipes, and other devices to drive the frost king away, and was so successful that he not only recovered the amount of his expenditures, but made a snug fortune out of his golden fruit. The new orchards are being planted on the foot-hills, as it has been demonstrated that a young grove not only needs protection from the winds, but that a higher altitude is not as frequently visited by Jack Frost. If Eastern people would keep friendly with Californians, they should cultivate the orange appetite far more extensively than they have in the past, for the thousands of new orchards that are now coming into bearing are capable of producing twice the amount of fruit that is at present shipped from here.

Another new aspect is the presence of the absurdly named "Industrial Army." California has apparently been the rendezvous for this new development of tramp life. Many of the "armies" which are now forming on this coast came from the East and are now headed towards Washington. The papers have been full of accounts of "industrial" bands coming from Texas, Missouri and Chicago on the same plan that the California recruits are forcing their way eastward. At first the large-hearted Californians were disposed to give them quarters and share their earthly goods in generous Western fashion, but as the "armies" multiplied and the lazy recruits increased, the feeding of the almost unnumbered multitude became an absolute impossibility. As my father has remarked to them many times a day, "I have but one cook, and she could not bake bread enough for you, if she did nothing else. Help yourself to all the oranges you can eat." But they are not disposed to live on nature's food and have threatened and in some cases committed violence to obtain what they want.

I am writing in my pleasant cottage home, surrounded with orange trees, roses, geraniums and all manner of blossoming plants and shrubs. The little home circle of three—father, mother and sister—have fully adopted this sunny land, after a residence of seven years, and think no less favored clime habitable. At present we are fortunate in having for our guest, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, whose indefatigable labors in erecting a building that shall return a handsome revenue for National and state W. C. T. Unions are now meeting with deserved success. During the three weeks she has spent in this state she has secured in pledges fifty thousand dollars for the Temperance Temple, and is not through with her canvass yet; this in the face of the hardest times this coast has ever known is well-nigh marvelous. THE UNION SIGNAL of the 19th inst., which has just come to hand, speaks of this pledge as "conditional," and Mrs. Carse requests me to say that the pledge is positive, though the payment may be delayed two years.

I leave next Monday for San Francisco, and if there are features of special interest to our readers in the Midwinter Fair they shall have them next week, at which time I hope to be wielding the editorial rather than a correspondence pen. MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.

Colton, Cal.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In regard to the coming of Coxey's army, it is a matter of surprise that a number of men heading in the direction of Washington could be so mistaken as to suppose there is any prospect of securing employment, or obtaining financial legislation from Congress in their own behalf. The leaders of this movement should know that their presence at the doors of the capitol will amount to nothing, that Congress can make no appropriation for their aid, and that they run the risk of being turned over to the authorities under the vagrant law. These men are misguided, no doubt, and their judgment unbalanced by their needs; but the facts remain and they should not be encouraged in this mistaken crusade.

There is no place in the country where opportunities of obtaining work for the unemployed are scarcer than here. During the past winter the leading papers and citizens have raised money and supplies to the extent of fifty thousand dollars for the support of those who have been unemployed, and who are bona fide residents of the District. The city is powerless to do more, and has petitioned to Congress to anticipate a few thousand dollars to prosecute certain public improvements, thereby furnishing the idle with employment and livelihood.

It is astonishing how the paternal idea of our government has gained ground in all parts of the country. This has not come to pass as yet. If the theories of Bellamy could be realized it might be the case. Our fatherland is simply an idol for whom we are expected to live—and to die if need be.

How much poverty and real suffering could be saved if the mistaken people who come here in hopes of getting a place under government could be persuaded to remain at home. Instances are so sadly common of the arrival of men and women without any definite encouragement—except their hopes and the chances they run of getting a place in government—that the whole place seems full of the depression. These broad streets, with their attractive buildings, the lovely parks, and even the great dome of our beautiful capitol, "humped up against the sky," become menacing and threatening to the unfortunate man or woman who is foolish enough to take any risk in seeking office or government place.

If there were time and space in this letter I could recount numberless instances to illustrate the futility of this sort of thing. My advice to people who feel tempted to change their environments, lured by false hopes of the better pay and shorter hours of government employ is simply, Don't do it.

The American Society of Religious Education held its fifth anniversary at the First Congregational church in this city, beginning its first executive session on Saturday last, continuing with two sessions on Monday and Tuesday. The object of the society as defined in the constitution is, "To awaken increased interest in the subject of religious education; to engage scholars in the study of man's spiritual nature; to devise improved methods of Bible study and teaching for the home, the Sunday-school, the public school and the college; to collect and preserve at the national capital information of all systems of religious instruction." The convention was largely attended and much interest was evinced.

The young temperance workers of the District have drafted the following resolution which will be sent to Congress:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

We, the children of the District of Columbia, representing the various juvenile organizations, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States, to pass a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in this District, and to affix a penalty to the law prohibiting the sale of tobacco and cigarettes to boys and girls under sixteen years of age.

Since the publication of the Breckinridge-Pollard trial with its prurient details, the women of Washington have been aroused to the necessity of creating public opinion in favor of the punishment of man as well as woman with social ostracism for crimes of this nature. Recognizing that to the women of every age has been left the legacy of the world's morality, therefore the prominent women's clubs have met for the purpose of framing a set of resolutions which will give expression to a just indignation concerning the course of Colonel Breckinridge, and also to the belief that if men are made to suffer a like social penalty with women, are made to feel that they are equally responsible to society for sins of impurity, a higher standard of social morality will be reached, and that pure girls will escape the risk of marriage with impure men. The resolutions also ask that Colonel Breckinridge's constituents refuse to return him to Congress, in order that a high tone of morality shall be the order among legislators.

At the Chapin auxiliary society of the W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. M. E. Cohen is president, the following resolution was drawn up by Mrs. S. D. La Fetra:

WHEREAS, the Christian sentiment of this community has recently again been insulted and shocked by the not only irreverent but blasphemous manner in which Robert G. Ingersoll, on Sunday has spoken in an open theatre, and for gain, an admission of from one dollar to one dollar and fifty cents being charged. Therefore,

Resolved, that we appeal to the Sabbath loving and God fearing citizens of this community to bring to bear all proper means to secure the passage of Senator Kyle's bill for the protection of Sunday in this District.

Resolved, That we appeal officially to the Senate committee, of this District of Columbia, asking a full and favorable report of the bill to the Senate that its passage may be secured this session.

LUCY PAGE STELLE.

Washington, D. C.

HOW IOWA MANAGES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Some of the work of the Iowa legislature deserves to be chronicled. It has set the unique example of giving legal permission in one law to violate another—provided a sufficient consideration is paid—for this is the gist of our new liquor law. Consequently, the liquor dealers, having long violated the prohibitory law with impunity, are languidly discussing whether it is worth while to pay any attention to this; still, the revenue part will doubtless be a success.

As the penalty—outside the revenue or mulct tax—for disobeying its provisions is merely to make them liable under the old law, it is probable that the screen will still remain at the windows, pictures adorn the walls, music continue to attract and chairs furnish resting places for the weary loungers. Governor Jackson was anxious to rekindle the fires in the distilleries but his converts were few.

The liquor traffic is now out of politics and rests on a strictly non-partisan basis, for Republicans are eagerly besought for their names on the petitions which give the saloons the legal right of way. The Democrats, as usual, are in the opposition and the Prohibitionists as sometimes at the polls, cut no figure in this.

A very stringent act to protect bottled and canned goods was passed, but the girls above thirteen are still at the mercy of the base and the lustful. No strong arm of the law protects them. Petitions bearing thousands of the best names in the state, both of women and voters, went in asking that the "age of consent" might be raised to eighteen years. By the untiring efforts of Senator Rowen—who literally wrested victory from defeat, and who deserves the lifelong gratitude of every girl, woman and right thinking man in the state—after being modified to fifteen years, the bill passed the Senate 44 to 0, as he exultingly telegraphed me, April 4. But it was in the last days of the session. On the sifting committee in the house were some men bitterly opposed to it, and they refused to report it, so it was lost. But there is a day after to-day and two years for the campaign. The next legislature will pass the bill. This not being enough to protect men against their natural enemies, women, an act was passed, of which however, I have not seen the text, requiring that in cases of an assault upon a woman, there must be a third person to corroborate her testimony; it is usual in such cases for the perpetrator to provide this witness!

To offset all this we have the ballot, and henceforth any injustice we endure will be due to our own inaction; for in the future we are to vote. For officials of any kind or grade? Oh, no; that might destroy the foundations of society, especially the foundations on which the lust and and greed of men securely rest; but if at any time an increase of tax rate or bonded indebtedness is to be considered then we may vote. It is evident that the women of Iowa will not vote "early and often."

But let me give that small body of citizens due credit. They adjourned. Nothing in its official life became our legislature like the leaving it. May it be long before we again see the like of its majority.

MARION H. DUNHAM.

Burlington, Iowa.

A WORD FOR EVERYBODY.

DEAR CO-LABORERS:—Sitting at my desk with almost numberless letters pouring in upon me, I have become alarmed at a condition which somewhat obtains in the National W. C. T. U., and which I trust you will permit me to bring before you.

There is great financial depression in the land, seriously felt by all philanthropic institutions, and although many states are doing magnificent work, from localities and occasionally from state officers come to us the words, "We would be glad to do this or that (whatever may be needed) but we cannot raise the money." "Our unions find it absolutely impossible." "We would be delighted to take hold of the work could it be done, but money cannot be raised," etc., etc., and under such conclusion scarcely an effort is made and the Lord's work languishes. We appreciate all difficulties that beset our work, but cannot think they are wholly of a financial nature. Missionary societies, Christian Endeavor, Epworth Leagues, educational clubs, and other societies feel the depression as do we, but they do not sit down beneath the conditions and fold their arms, and count impossibilities. Financiers tell us there never was more money in the banks, and it is noticeable that entertainments are very largely attended. The grand opera has had unprecedented success in Chicago this year, an average audience of five thousand greeting the singers daily.

There is money, and a proper share should find its way into the till of the W. C. T. U., but machinery must be set at work that will send it through the hopper. The outlook from headquarters is very encouraging, and could the pessimistic views taken in some localities be changed to an optimism which would lead to a determination, God helping, to overcome difficulties and to do and to dare in the name of the Lord, the whole nation would have reason to rejoice in that pressure beneath which every energy had been aroused, and the reward of persevering activity had been secured. Believing a little article written for THE UNION SIGNAL of Dec. 14, may help to this end, I copy:

"When a speaker or organizer is desired, ascertain exactly her charge. A church or hall will, no doubt, be donated, but the expense of janitor, fire and light is often met by the union, unless a noble generosity leads the trustees to contribute all. Calculate the necessary outgo for advertising; then finding the aggregate of these items, sell tickets enough at ten cents each to raise the full amount before date of the meeting. Five desirable things will thus be secured: 1. Through sale of the tickets there will be a large advertisement of the meeting. 2. An audience is assured. 3. The money required is raised. 4. Women will be relieved from anxiety, and able to enter heartily into the work. 5. Every penny taken at the door will be a bonus to the local treasury.

"We believe this to be a practical way of meeting the desired end, and a few energetic women will accomplish great things by the effort. Will not unions try this plan? We will gladly give all information possible concerning speakers, organizers, etc."

Yours with hope,

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

The hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the slothful shall be under tribute.—Prov. 12:24.

The redemption of the world lies in the materialization of the expression, "She hath done what she could." Note the pronoun. It is not he. The good Lord knew better than to expect so much of him, environed as he is in the criss-cross of expedients, interests and the necessity to provide for the women and the children of the race. Think of the little shoes and Easter bonnets! But all along through woman has had just sense enough to cling to a pure ideal. Once possessed of it, flotillas of argument cannot bombard it out of her and she rides the wave of unpopular prejudice like a mermaid. If she thinks she ought, "that's an end on't." Jesus—when not many but foolish women and "common people heard Him gladly"—dropped that little phrase about another woman into the unsounded abysses of the ages, and ever since woman has kissed the footprints of His feet in the dust and said: "Lord, I will," and gropingly, obstinately, stupidly, sometimes, but loyally, "hath done what she could." Scientists say that necessity creates the species; as the ants burrow deeper to get out of the way of the devourer, the ant-eater's nose grows longer to reach them; as the soul realizes the instability of the material it develops appetite and energy for that which does not perish with the using. So it is a mistake to regard Mrs. Carse as "a sport," as the florists say. She is the resultant in regular metamorphosis from the woman in the family recesses ever begging for market money to the woman whom woman's necessity has created begging for a million dollars for a world's purpose. She is the first of the species, without doubt; a two-million dollar woman will be the next metamorphosis. In the meantime every woman in process of development is expected to do what she can now to help Mrs. Carse, and toward the perfecting of the type originated in our Temple builder, whose speech shall be:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,

. . . . . .

Leave thy low-vaulted past;
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

***

Many touching tributes to the golden bond of love in the W. C. T. U. come to this office, of which the following from Mrs. Addie B. Edsall, Plainfield, N. Y.: "After many years of suffering and blindness, my mother, Catherine R. Ball, of Newark, N. J., has left us for the Golden City, in her seventy-fourth year. Among her things was found a little purse containing one dollar, evidently laid away for a special purpose. I want mother's name to be the first of a veteran in band our union." A draft of $71 comes from the following unions in Minnesota: Mrs. E. A. Gordon, Janesville W. C. T. U., $21; Mrs. F. C. Davis, W. Winona, $10; Mrs. H. Witherstine, Rochester, $40. It was a generous-minded Providence that predestined these good sisters to be friends of the Temple. Miss H. Frances Parmelee, Kobe, Japan, says: "I feel in some way I must send my dime; but how can I? I haven't a dime to my name, i. e., a good United States one, so I am just going to send stamps, trusting that the stamp fiend exists in Chicago, and will convert these stamps into money for the Temple. Mind you, these stamps are not ordinary! they are just one issue, in honor of the Imperial twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, March 9. The Japanese have learned from foreigners to make beer and use cigarettes, and foreign wines and liquors have come in on us like a flood; so we wait eagerly for Miss Willard and Lady Henry." Here is the chance of a prize for the boy collector; call at 1113, The Temple. From N. Muskegon, Mich., union, comes $10 to be used for the Neal Dow window, half of it from mite-boxes, the rest the result of an entertainment. These women always take a mite-box to our union meetings, and many a penny drops in. That's a "taking" idea—we pass it on. The W. C. T. U of St. Johns, Newfoundland, sends $5-a gift.

***

Winchester, Va., W. C. T. U., sends $21.90, third installment on $100; Westerly, R. I., W. C. T. U. forwards $50 on its pledge, and Cuba, N. Y., $43, second payment on $100; Mrs. Sarah C. Moore, Champaign county, O., Temple superintendent, sends $42 on its pledge, and $35 comes from Oscaloosa, Ia., W. C. T. U., on the in memoriam tablet for Mrs. Mary J. Cook. Mt. Carmel, Pa., wants $20 credited on its pledge. Bradford, Pa., sends $28.74 to apply on $100,—$10 of the amount being for a full Baby Band. The genial sympathy that comes with the check goes to the depths of spirit. Rockford, Ill., union, delights us with $20 on its pledge, and $15 on $100 from Wrightstown, Pa., is welcomed.

***

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

THE HOUR'S NEED.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

Life is a struggle, view it as we may,
Against the powers that be; the poisoned weeds,
The evil thoughts, that nurture evil deeds,
And choke the right and truth along our way.
We are such moral cowards that we pray
At morn, then wrap ourselves in selfish creeds.
And secretly, at night, we sow the seeds,
Whose tangled growth we wrestle with all day.

We need true hearts, which can forget themselves,
Their harvest, in this barren human field;
The purpose stern, to garner truth again;
The willing hand of brotherhood, that delves
But for the common good, the common yield;
God give us now, true women, and brave men.

Pittsburg, Kan.

THE LARGER POSSIBILITIES.

BY LILIAN WHITING.

'Tis heaven alone that is given away;
'Tis only God may be had for the asking.
—LOWELL.

It touches one to realize how many girls all over the land are longing for collegiate privileges and are unable to enjoy them. Sometimes a girl can make a way, as heroic Lucy Stone did, but largely with women, as with men, the opportunities of college study are more usually those opened by some degree of wealth rather than by the personal desire of the student. Of course, with a majority of college students, opportunity and desire meet; with some the desire has fairly created the opportunity, for, as Emerson tells us, "When a god wishes to ride every stick and stone will bud and shoot out winged feet to carry him"; and again a few have been forced into college life by parents or guardians who regard a Harvard diploma as the pledge and promise of social prestige.

There is, however, a distinctive class of women with unlimited aspirations and limited means of realization that appeal to one's thought, and might we not consider, for a moment, if life does not offer to them something far removed from defeat and denial? Education is too frequently held to include merely the instruction of class-room privileges, and the term "higher education" of women is almost invariably used as the synonym for college study. Never was there a greater misnomer. Instruction and culture are two very different things, and both should be comprehended under the term higher education. Unfortunately, it is only the instruction, as a rule, that is meant.

This certainly implies an instructor, a class-room, paraphernalia, apparatus,—what you will. And I am not decrying the invaluable nature of all these when I venture to affirm that the best, or some of the best results of culture are attainable in the humblest home. Of spiritual culture, its supreme form, of course this is seen to be true; but of intellectual culture it is largely true. We must distinguish here between the purely intellectual and the artistic. Paintings, sculpture and lyric and dramatic art are inseparable from the large cities. Occasional pictures from the best artists, or pieces of statuary that may be owned in a private home do not offer that range for knowledge and comparison that is afforded by the public art galleries of a city; and opera and the theatre must of necessity exist in the larger centers. So that artistic culture is conditioned, while intellectual culture is free and unlimited.

Many are the cultured women who are not college women; and many are the college women who have very little genuine culture. Those who combine the college training with extended culture are not few, but the one does not in all cases presuppose the other. Now culture, in all its intellectual and spiritual phases, is attainable by any one in any place. Given some of the best books, —the essential thought of the world lies in a few of the great authors,—and a mind open to spiritual influences, and the very inflorescence of fine culture may be achieved. We find women of college training who do not know, in any deep and intimate sense their Holmes from their Hawthorne, or their Emerson from their Lowell, who have never steeped themselves in the marvelous depths of thought or caught the vision that is in Dante, Shakespeare, Goethe, Mazzini, the Brownings; who have never learned to recognize the exquisite literary quality in St. Bernot and Matthew Arnold; the fire and intensity of vision in Balzac; the strength in John Morley; the vital sympathy and fine philosophy of George Eliot. They have never felt the magnetic power of Coleridge, the exquisite charm of Shelley and Keats, or studied the perfect art of Henry James and Mrs. Humphry Ward. They are familiar with all these authors and many others in an academic way, it is true; but the child who browses, at will, among books because he loves them, and who grows up absorbing their atmosphere and influence in a kind of unconscious way, has far more true literary culture than the college graduate who has only acquired a kind of perfunctory academic acquaintance with literature.

Artistic culture is necessarily largely technical; but the literature of art—as regards pictures and sculpture and the drama and opera librettos—can be acquired as literature; and it is wonderful to what degree thorough ground in this enables one to rapidly acquire critical appreciation and discrimination between different schools of art and methods of artists.

Life may be narrow by circumstances quite beyond our own control, but it may always be deep and high. It may have profundity and uplifting, and these are the essentials. The best gifts of life are those most universal.

"'Tis heaven alone that is given away,
'Tis only God may be had for the asking."

The names of four American women whose youth antedates the period of college privileges for girls, stand out as examples of preëminent culture: Elizabeth Peabody, Margaret Fuller, Julia Ward Howe and Sarah Holland Adams. Miss Peabody had not only the exceptional culture of philosophy, but was at home in several languages and literatures. Margaret Fuller, the classical scholar and the most original thinker of this century, acquired all this culture without the special means and methods of university opportunities. Mrs. Howe, the brilliant and idolized daughter of wealth and luxury, had the best private masters of the day, but how little would they have availed had her mind not teemed with exalted ideas and her energies been never tiring? Sarah Holland Adams, one of the most scholarly and exquisitely cultured women of the day, laid the foundation of it all in the refined and intellectual atmosphere of a book-loving home. Miss Adams has just returned to Boston after many years' absence in Europe, where she lived chiefly in Berlin, and her charm of personality makes one realize the divine nature and influence of extended and symmetrical culture. While abroad Miss Adams translated the works of Prof. Herman Grimm (the son of the one and the nephew of the other of "Brothers Grimm") the works including the lives of Goethe and of Raphael and a volume of literary essays on Emerson, Voltaire and several other men or events.

So many are the women and young girls who, from the limits of what may be for the time a narrow life and restricted outlook, are looking and longing for something higher and better, for the magic touch that shall bring them into clearer vision and larger sympathies with the intellectual progress of the day, that one would be sad in thinking of them if it were not for the way out. But culture liberates; and culture in its finest and broadest and divinest sense is possible to each and all who earnestly strive for the beautiful life that is lived in the spirit.

The Brunswick, Boston, Mass.

MOTHERS' CLUBS.

VII.

Our Children's Birthdays.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

The day was gloomy and a rain was pouring, but the gossamers and umbrellas that found their way to Mrs. Stacy's at the appointed hour proved conclusively that the interest of the women was not to be dampened by a little rain. Nearly every mother had complied with the request made at the previous meeting to bring the names and birthdays of their children plainly written out. To such as had neglected or forgotten the request, paper and pencil were furnished, and it was asked that each name be written on a separate slip.

In one corner of the room sat a plainly dressed woman, who seemed to hold no communication with the others, and who, when the paper and pencil were passed to her shook her head in refusal. Those who sat near and saw her action did not wonder that Mrs. Hall did not wish to register the name of her son, for Jim Hall was the "worst boy in town." Only thirteen, yet he was the acknowledged captain in all mischief. He led the raids on henroosts, was ringleader in Hallowe'en mischief; in short, if a window were broken, a gate taken from its hinges or a pet cat missing, the blame was laid to Jim Hall. His mother, a widow, was a little woman who fretted over his misdemeanors and scolded him out of the house in her attempts to lead him to better things.

After all the names were collected the president said: "We have here a book which has been divided into twelve sections. At the head of each section is the name of a month, and under the appropriate heading the name of each child and its birthday will be inscribed. At each meeting hereafter the list of those children whose birthdays will occur during the next two weeks will be read, and every woman will make it a point to pray especially for these during these two weeks. As far as possible each child shall be more particularly remembered on its own birthday. We have been led to see more clearly than ever before that we are not only responsible for our own children, but that we have duties concerning our neighbors' children. Not the duty of finding fault with their misdeeds, but the duty of loving them and helping them to overcome their faults. It is very easy to criticise other people's children, and other people's methods of training, but that is not Christ-like. We are to be united as a community of mothers to work for the best interests of all the children in our town, and one way is to unite in praying for each child as if it were our own."

While she was speaking Mrs. Smith, sitting next to Mrs. Hall, saw her lip quiver, and divining her feelings, whispered to her: "You did not send up your boy's name, did you?"

"No," was the hesitating reply, "and it's his birthday, too."

Mrs. Smith did not hesitate, but rising said: "Madam President, we do not need to wait till next time to begin praying for our children on their birthday. To-day is the birthday of Mrs. Hall's son James. It seems to me I never realized the full blessedness of this mother's work as I do to-day. Mine, you all know," and there was a tremor in her voice, "mine is a childless home and I have felt that I had been shut out of the privileges of motherhood, but this plan just proposed opens to me the cheering thought that I, too, can have a mother's right to pray for my children, mine, because my Heavenly Father's."

The president rose, her sweet face radiant with joy. She said: "I am so glad we can begin this part of our work at once; glad that Mrs. Hall has given to us the opportunity to ask God's especial blessing upon one of our children. Let us pray."

For a moment silence reigned and then the gentle tones continued: "Dear Father, we are glad to come to thee today with one of our loved ones to commend him to thy especial care. We know thou dost care for him, for he is thine more than he is ours. We do not need to recount to thee either his good or bad deeds. Thou canst read his heart, and where we might misjudge, thou alone knowest of a truth, all the motives that move him to action. But, dear Father, we thank thee that thou hast given him a clear intellect, and we believe that thou wilt come at length to be acknowledged by him as the ruler of that intellect. We thank thee that he has so much of courage, and we trust that it may ever be displayed in the right direction. This dear boy is one of our coming citizens and as such we pray that he may have a due appreciation of his own great value. Give to each one of us the opportunity and the wisdom to be to him a wise, true, loving friend. We ask it in His name who is our Elder Brother. Amen."

The tears of the mother were falling fast, but they were blessed tears. Her boy had not been held up to the Almighty as an irreclaimable reprobate, but tenderly had he been presented to the merciful Father as a child, beloved and hoped for. The prayer had been to many a revelation of the purpose of the proposed plan. It was not to give them an opportunity to find fault with naughty children, but to love them and pray for them as for their own. Mrs. Hall's eyes were not the only ones moist with tears as the prayer ended.

At its close Mrs. Stone was presented, who spoke but a few words in opening the discussion upon the topic.

"HOW SHALL WE TEACH TRUTH TO OUR CHILDREN?"

"My time is limited, and the topic unlimited. I shall therefore simply touch upon one or two points which we can each elaborate ourselves. The first and best method of teaching children to be truthful is for every one who deals with them to be truthful. Threats made and left unfulfilled are not only lessons in disobedience but in untruthfulness. The oft-repeated threat, 'I'll surely punish you if you do not mind,' not only loses its significance, but becomes a direct lesson in falsehood. All promises made and broken are lessons in untruthfulness, and a threat is a promise, a bad one, to be sure, but a promise nevertheless. If you say a bad promise is better broken than kept, I reply, 'a bad promise should never be made,' and threats can be avoided, or if made should be fulfilled. A mother told a restless child on the train that the conductor would cut off her nose. The little one was frightened, but after the conductor has passed and repassed without harming her she looked up into her mother's face and said, 'Mamma, you lied.' Such lies are being told daily by conscientious mothers who have never stopped to think that such threats, which they know can never be verified, are lessons in untruthfulness.

"Unkind criticism of absent friends who are, when present, treated with especial kindness are lessons in the conventional white lie, which is neither necessary nor pardonable. All deception practiced upon a child, the slipping away while protesting that you are not going anywhere, telling the child that the medicine does not taste bad, or that it will not hurt to have the tooth pulled, giving false answers to the child's honest inquiries, are all methods of teaching untruthfulness. These few thoughts will suggest the manifold ways in which we teach our children to do the thing for which we punish them afterwards with a great assumption of our own superior purity and goodness."

It would be pleasant to continue the report from the experience of this Mothers' Club, but it may not be. With one recital of a result from this especial meeting our record will close.

Toledo, O.

BOYS AND GIRLS.

Time will bear you fast and free,
On the wings no eye can see,
To the years that are to be—
Boys and girls.
Thro' your spring-time buds and flowers,
Thro' your summer's fruitful bowers,
Thro' your autumn's winds and showers—
Girls and boys.

May truth and knowledge follow pain,
Weaving in life's mystic chain,
Golden links of good and gain—
Boys and girls.
There is work enough to do,
Work for me but more for you,
Who must warp and weave the new—
Girls and boys.

Seer nor sibyl can foretell,
On what lofty parallel,
You may do your life work well—
Boys and girls.
Battling in misrule's despite,
For the good, the true, the right
'Gainst every form of lawless might,
Girls and boys.

—Sarah T. Bolton.

MISS WILLARD'S MESSAGE TO THE PUPILS OF THE INDIANAPOLIS HIGH SCHOOL.

DEAR CHILDREN OF THE "DAWN":—You mustn't mind my writing this way, because, you see, I am getting to be "old folks," and very glad of it. In a cosmos where two hundred and fifty million worlds have been already estimated (and more to follow) it is good to go on, and on, and ever on.

The dawn of being here predicts the day elsewhere. I suppose that just one thing, and one only, is important, that we should start right on the race, knowing, loving and keeping the laws of God. For this reason I have dedicated the dawning years on this little planet, earth, to helping hold that sacred thing, the human brain, in its integrity. For behind everything there is a thought, behind every thought there is a thinker, and the thinker plays upon the brain like human hands upon a key-board. Alcoholics hurt the brain and harm the home, so I am for total abstinence and home protection.

In a High School where the brain is so much used—or ought to be—these thoughts will not, I hope, be otherwise than welcome.

We must remember the motto: "Each for the other and God for us all."

Also that only the Golden Rule can bring the Golden Age.

To the girls, let me give this: "Womanliness first; afterward, what you will."

To the boys: "Dedicate your brave young lives to the chivalry of justice rather than of romance."

I am

Yours "For God and Home and Native Land."

London, England. Frances E. Willard.

MORE CAT CORRESPONDENCE.

A PUNNY CAT.

DEAR SIR TOOTS:—I belong to the Columbian Y in Spain and yet do not feel fur away from you, as we have the same interest in temperance.

I learned from a claws in your letter that you *pur*pose to sell your photograph to help the cause.

Miss Anna Gordon told me a tail about you, when she was here from which I learned that you are not at all puss-illani*mouse*.

I hope you will put my name in the *cat*alogue of temperance cats. It will amews people to see it.

Like you, I am always willing to be a cat's-paw in any good work.

If you consider me meat please *rat*ify my proposition to enter the *cat*egory of workers.

I must now paws or these hastily scratched lines will not catch the post in time!

Yours *feline*ly,

DUQUE DE SAN SEBASTIAN.

Postscratch:—I put my nine lives and my *pur(r)*se at your disposal.

San Sebastian, Spain.

FROM AN ENGLISH CAT COUSIN.

MY DEAR TOOTS WILLARD:—I have been shown your portrait in THE UNION SIGNAL, and as I am also a Persian cat (tabby), and live at "Evanston," London, I think we must be cousins, at least. I send you my portrait and should like yours, and I also send a mite towards the L. T. L. work.

Do you know, Toots, I think you and I ought to be very thankful that we live in teetotal homes, for I gather from what I hear read that many people who drink even ill-treat their children, so what it must be for cats, not to say cats of refinement, I shudder to imagine!

I am now seven, and I made my mark to the total abstinence pledge when I was six months old. If you would like to know how handsome I am, you just ask Miss Anna Gordon, who has visited our Evanston, but as she is in England, I should like you to ask Mr. and Mrs. John G. Woolley, who are great friends of mine, and, at the same time, by the way, you may whisper to them that we should all be very glad if they would come to England again. There is plenty of work for Mr. Woolley to do here among the Christian churches, at least I am always hearing my mistress say so. My young mistress (we used to call her little mistress till she grew taller than the other one) always reads THE UNION SIGNAL and says it is the best paper going. I am afraid that one of these days she will visit America; then she will, of course, want to see you; but I hope if she does you will soon let her come back.

I do not write much (though I like to sit on the papers while my young mistress plays a machine that clicks all the time; they call it a typewriter), so we will say good-by. Yours purringly, FLUFFIE OSBORN.

P. S.—On Christmas day I received from a great admirer a present of a box of sardines, addressed "Sir Fluffie Osborn, Prohibitionist, Evanston."

His mark.

Evanston, London.

DOLLY'S NAME.

A recitation for a little girl.

I've brought my dolly to show you;
Don't you think she's a pet?
A prettier dolly, I feel sure,
You've never seen as yet.

And I've had to give her a name, you know;
Oh, dear! 'twas a nuisance—quite!
There are plenty of names to be had, of course,
But none of them seemed quite right.

But I've had a bright idea now—
I thought of it yesterday—
I shall call my dolly "Temperance,"
Because, you see, they say,

At Band of Hope, that if fathers drink
Too much of beer or wine,
Their children can't have pretty clothes,
Nor dollies dear, like mine.

And I'm a Band of Hope girl now,
And always want to be,
So I'll call my dolly "Temperance,"
Then I shan't forget, you see.

B. E. S.

BRAVERY.

Some years ago an uneducated Indian recounted the accomplishments of his youth which he considered marks of bravery. He said:

"To resist the raging storm.

"To defy the roaring billows of the prairie fire.

"To run down a wild turkey and fawn.

"To treat my friends to wondrous barbecues of birds.

"To outlast the swimmers under water.

"To be struck a dozen blows on the forehead without blinking.

"To walk with contempt barefooted in the sandburrs.

"To run an arrow-shot without heaving breath.

"To know all that passed in medicine-lodge or council.

"To never know discouragement or pain. These were the accomplishments I loved."

And the speaker was at the time of his death one of the bravest Indians of the southwest, adds The Young Idea.

The educated Indian of the present day, seeing the ruin that "fire-water" has wrought in his race, might well consider the strength to resist alcoholic drinks an accomplishment better than all the above put together.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Good news! There's no longer need for any of our Cozy Cornerers to write, "I would like to belong to the L. T. L., but there is none in our town." Just read the following message from the lady who does so much to help our good work by superintending the movements of the great Loyal Temperance Legion of America:

"Please say through your columns to any boy or girl who would like to be a Loyal Temperance Legioner, but finds no local company to join, that if he will write to the L. T. L. superintendent of his own state she will make him a member-at-large, provided he is prepared to sign and keep the triple pledge. She will also give him instructions in regard to the diploma course if he desires to become a graduate of the Legion. Please say also that the address of any state superintendent may be obtained from your own editor, or from the National L. T. L. superintendent.

"We should be glad to count all the boys and girls of our land, of whatever age, color or nationality, in our blessed army.

"HELEN G. RICE, Nat. Supt.

"1597 Washington St., Boston, Mass."

Now isn't that a splendid plan? By following these simple directions you can become a member of the noble Legion.

Our "Toots" is becoming well known in foreign lands as you will see by his interesting correspondence on our page. A supply of his pictures can still be procured at twenty-five cents each by sending to Miss Anna Gordon, Evanston, Ill. Your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

A. M. Grant, Maryland.
Lola Spikeman, Michigan.
Charlotte A. Talbott, W. Virginia.
Edna Munford, Iowa.
Mary Bishop, New York.
Mollie M. Kelso, Virginia.
Myrtle Painter, South Dakota.
Blanche E. Webb, } Illinois.
Z. Menia Beswick. }
Wayne Bond, Indiana.

I hope you will let me be one of your nieces. I have four brothers and no sisters. I have a cat and I call him Toots. I named him after Toots Willard.

Milton, Ill. HILA R. BROCK.

There are four saloons in our town. We are all temperance people at our house. We all enjoy reading THE UNION SIGNAL and I especially enjoy the Cozy Corner and wish to belong to it. We have no L. T. L. in our town but I used to belong to a good one when we lived in Redwood Falls. GENEVIEVE C. WILLIAMS.

Chatfield, Minn.

My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. My papa is a strict temperance man, and my brother and I belong to the L. T. L. We have no saloon in our town.

Plainfield, Wis. EDWARD A. SPARKS.

I am a friend of THE UNION SIGNAL and hope that I may be admitted into the Cozy Corner.

Watertown, N. Y. ALMON KNOWLES. (Fourteen years old.)

I am a little girl ten years old and would like to be numbered with your nieces. I am a member of the L. T. L. and have graduated in four of L. T. L. manuals. Our graduating exercises were held in connection with the county convention at Mt. Pleasant. EDNA LYMAN.

New London, Ia.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

294.

CONVERTED GRAINS.

[Example.—Change corn to meal in four moves. Answer: corn, morn, moan, mean, meal. Change only one letter at each move.]

1. Change wheat to flour in ten moves.
2. Change oats to rice in four moves.
3. Change malt to feed in four moves.
4. Change bran to seed in four moves. J. A. S.

295.

BEHEADING.

My whole is a day of rest.
Behead to contract the features and leave eight furlongs.
Behead to lift up and leave to estimate or value.
Behead not far away and leave that by which sound is perceived.
Behead to inhabit and leave a spring.
Behead the seed of a tree and leave a small hard particle.
Behead a plant of a thousand leaves and leave a weapon of offense. R.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 12.

287. April.
288. C-harm.

Correct answers: Genevieve C. Williams; Earle S. Montgomery.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
OFFICE EDITOR—MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS { LADY HENRY SOMERSET. MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE. Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS. Portland, Me.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Susan B. Anthony. By Harriet Francene Crocker 2
Her Wedding Journey. By Emma Playter Seabury 2
"Our National Dilemma." By W. Jennings Demorest. 2
Temperance and the Bible. By Rev. Henry Burton, M. A. 3
An English Law Court. By Frances E. Willard 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
Editorial Correspondence 4
Our Washington Letter 4
How Iowa Manages 5
A Word for Everybody 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, The Hour's Need. By Emma Playter Seabury 6
The Larger Possibilities. By Lilian Whiting 6
Mothers' Clubs. VII. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D. 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Boys and Girls 7
Miss Willard's Message to the Pupils of the Indianapolis High School 7
More Cat Correspondence 7
Poem, Dolly's Name 7
Bravery 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER:
Soft-Shelled Nuts 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Church and the Masses 8
The Sabbath was Made for Man 8
International Arbitration 9
THE WATCH TOWER 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Ohio—Oregon—Rhode Island—Nebraska—District of Columbia 10, 11
News in a Nutshell 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Temperance Hospital—Announcement 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES 12
TREASURER'S CORNER 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE 13
Temple Receipts 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 14, 15
SIGNAL NOTES 16

One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.—Eph. 4:6.

THE CHURCH AND THE MASSES.

Our subject is significant of the times. In itself it is a nineteenth century evolution. The church was once believed to exist only for the masses, of the masses, and by the masses. To-day the two are as universally conceded to be divorced each from the other. Regardless of the fact that the church, if it exist at all, must be made up of units taken from "the masses"; regardless of the fact that both are "of one blood," we speak and write as if between them there were a great gulf fixed; a middle wall of partition built up; while the one problem with which the church spasmodically and erratically is dealing is "how to reach the masses."

What does it mean? Something radically wrong somewhere. With the "church" or with the "masses"? Unquestionably with both. There is danger that the subject be viewed from one standpoint alone. In a realization of the failure of the church to rise to its point of privilege and duty, we are quite apt to condemn it for faults which exist, not primarily with the church but with those whose mission it is to reach.

We cannot ignore the too patent fact that "the masses" are largely opposed to "the church," from innate love of that which the church, from the very fact of its existence, must oppose—evil. Though our doors were thrown open by day and by night; though our music were divine; though men and women preached with the eloquence of an Apollos and the tenderness of a John; though kindliest welcome were given to all, of whatever social grade; though rags and misery were a patent of nobility, entitling their possessors to the best seats and the most considerate attention, who can believe that the church of Christ would, even under such conditions, prove sufficiently attractive to lure the masses, as a whole, from the saloon, from the gambling den, from the brothel, or even from the home, with its ease and its Sunday newspaper?

We are in sore danger of eliminating from our consideration of the problems of to-day the factor which Paul so clearly recognized when he declared that "the world, through wisdom (worldly), knew not God," as well as ignoring the reason given by the same astute thinker why his gospel was not universally accepted. "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not." Sin as an obstructing force in the work of the church cannot be ignored. Nor, until the church more clearly recognizes its sphere of action and is better equipped for its work, can it be removed.

